calendar years in question should be taken as a basis for determining the "average six months' rate of promotion" during said years. It would be contrary to the letter and spirit of the law to take as a basis "the rate of duly slated promotions, which would include both actual promotions made and promotions that were due to be made but were not owing to failure of officers to qualify therefor," resignations, retirements, etc. The latter method would not furnish a correct basis for determining the average "rate of promotion," which necessarily implies the consummated advancement of officers to higher grades. (File 26521-40, June 11, 1912.)

Ensign A became due for promotion, was examined and suspended in the latter part of the fiscal year 1911; Ensign B, his junior, became due for promotion, was examined, and suspended in the early part of the fiscal year 1912. In consequence it was necessary to count different periods of five years in computing the loss of numbers which these officers were to sustain. As a result, Ensign A lost 34 numbers, while Ensign B, his junior, lost only 33. This produced the apparent injustice of making Ensign B rank Ensign A in the higher grade when promoted, thereby becoming senior to the officer who originally ranked him. However, this result necessarily follows from the wording of the law, and can be remedied only by Congress. (File 26521-40, June 11, 1912.)

Date of rank on promotion after suspension.—An officer due for promotion after a specified period of service, who is suspended from promotion for a period of six months should, if afterwards promoted, be given rank from a date six months later than that on which he first became due for promotion. (File 26260-2605:2, Aug. 17, 1915.)

An officer due for promotion by reason of seniority who is suspended from promotion for a period of six months should, if afterwards promoted, be given rank from the date on which the vacancy occurred which he is promoted to fill, provided such vacancy did not occur during the six months' period of suspension. (File 26260-2605:2, Aug. 17, 1915.)

An officer due for promotion by reason of seniority who is suspended from promotion for a period of six months should, if afterwards promoted, be given rank from the date that the period of suspension expired, where the vacancy which he is promoted to fill occurred during the six months' period of suspension. (File 26260-2605:2, Aug. 17, 1915.)

In the case of ensigns who are promoted in due course after three years' service from date of commission as such, it is proper in routine cases that the date from which they are to take rank on promotion to lieutenant (junior grade) should be three years later than the date from which they took rank in the grade of ensign. Where, however, an ensign fails on examination for promotion it is expressly stipulated by law that he "shall be suspended from promotion for a period of six months from the date of approval of said examination." The effect of this is to postpone the officer's right to promotion for a period of six months, and consequently to fix a later date from which he is to take rank if finally promoted than would have been the case had he qualified in due course when first examined. If the first examination of such officer has been delayed without fault on his part, in justice and fair dealing the date from which he should take rank when ultimately promoted may be fixed as six months later than the date from which he would have been promoted had he been found qualified when first examined, or as three years and six months later than the date from which he took rank in the grade of ensign. But in no case could an officer who has been suspended from promotion on account of failing in his professional examination be entitled to take rank from the same date when promoted to the higher grade as though he had not been suspended. (File 26268-475, May 14, 1915.)

Two classes of cases arise under this section, viz, first, those in which promotions depend upon length of service, and, secondly, those in which promotions depend upon seniority. In file 26266-475, of May 14, 1915, it was held that the effect of section 1505 as applied to the case of an ensign who failed on examination for promotion to lieutenant (junior grade) was to delay the right of such ensign to promotion for a period of six months, and that when ultimately promoted he is entitled to take rank only from the date he completed three years and six months service in the grade of ensign. On reconsideration this conclusion affirmed as the only interpretation of the law which would give effect to its purpose and letter as applied to these cases in which promotions depend upon length of service and not upon the officer's position in the Navy list. As to the second class, where promotions are made by seniority, if the loss of numbers is executed by reducing the officer in the lower grade [see above, "Method of executing loss of numbers"] his right to promotion depends upon the occurrence of a vacancy after he has again reached the top of the list, and he should be promoted to fill said vacancy, if found qualified, and should take rank from the date of its occurrence. (File 26260-2605:2, Aug. 17, 1915.)

Should an officer due for promotion by seniority to a grade limited in number by law, be suspended from promotion and the loss of numbers in his case executed by reducing him in the lower grade [see above, "Method of executing loss of numbers"], he might again reach the top of his grade prior to the expiration of his six months' period of suspension; in such event, the next vacancy occurring after he reaches the top of the list should be held open for him until the expiration of his period of suspension; but should he be promoted at the end of that period he should take rank from the date that his six months' period of suspension expired. In other words, the officer's promotion in such case depends upon his position in his grade; when he reaches the top of the list he is entitled to the next vacancy, whether or not his six months' period of suspension has expired; however, under the express terms of the law his promotion can not actually be accomplished during the period of six months and inasmuch as the delay in his examination is due to fault on his part and therefore is not a case covered by section 1562, Revised Statutes, when he is in fact promoted the earliest date which he may be given in his commission is that on which

When an officer due for promotion by seniority to a grade limited in number by law is suspended and subsequently is promoted to fill a vacancy occurring after the expiration of his period of suspension, there is no warrant of law for giving him a date of rank prior to the occurrence of such vacancy. An officer may be given any date subsequent to the occurrence of the vacancy which he is promoted to fill but can not be given a date prior thereto. Accordingly in such cases, where the vacancy occurs during the six months' period of suspension, and the officer's loss of numbers has been executed by reducing him in the lower grade [see above, "Method of executing loss of numbers"], his date of promotion may legally be fixed to correspond with the date that the period of suspension expired, but where the vacancy occurred after the expiration of the six months' period of suspension, the officer when promoted can not legally be given a date prior to the occurrence of the vacancy. (File 26260-2605:2, Aug. 17, 1915.)

An officer became due for promotion after three years' service in grade. At that time he was absent on distant duty, by reason of which his examination for promotion was delayed for a period of about ten months. He then failed professionally and was suspended from promotion for six months, after which he was examined, found qualified, and promoted: Held that under section 1505, Revised Statutes, as amended, the officer when promoted was entitled to take rank in the higher grade from a date six months later than that on which he originally became due for promotion. "We should not impose a greater penalty than the statute fixes, as would be done if he is charged with the long delay for which he was not at fault." (Toulon v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 87, 96.)

The Court of Claims can not accept the view of the Comptroller of the Treasury that because of an officer's failure to qualify professionally in his first examination, and because of the suspension for six months demanded by section 1505, as amended, he became ineligible for promotion until after he had successfully passed a second examination and that therefore he was not and could not be advanced in grade or rank pursuant to law prior to that date. This construction of the statute would not only suspend the officer's right to promotion for the six months stated in the act but also would defeat or wipe out the fact that he had been eligible to promotion for some ten or more months extending from the termination of his three years' service to the beginning of the six months' period of suspension, though the delay in his first examination was owing to an enforced absence and was wholly without his fault. On the contrary we think that the officer became eligible for promotion to the higher grade and rank when he had served three years in the grade of assistant surgeon and there was added to that term a period of six months, covering the time of his suspension under the statute. In other words on account of his failure to qualify when first examined the length of service in his grade required of him before he was eligible for promotion to the next higher grade was the equivalent of three years and six months instead of the three years which would otherwise have sufficed and in fixing the date of his eligibility to promotion in rank these three years and six months are properly taken as a continuous period of time. (Toulon v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 87, 90; see in this connection 22 Comp. Dec., 623, disallowing claim of S. R. Canine for pay as lieutenant (junior grade) from date stated in his commission, and 52 Ct. Cls., 532, allowing said claim without opinion.)

The requirement of the statute that the suspension shall be for a period of six months "from the date of approval of said examination" is evidently intended to remove any uncertainty which would otherwise arise if the question were whether the suspension dated from the time of examination or the approval by the President of the examining board's report. A considerable time could arise between these two events, and the statute makes certain the date. Manifestly such suspension should operate equally upon the officer's actual appointment and any advancement in grade or rank. But it would operate unequally if he should be suspended from appointment for six months and suspended from advancement in grade or rank for the sixteen months between the date when he first became eligible and the time of his reexamination. The six months' period of suspension can operate equally on the two features of promotion by withholding in one instance any appointment during the said period, and in the other instance by moving forward the date of eligibility to promotion for six months, or, what amounts to the same thing, by adding six months to the three years of service. The officer was eligible to promotion when he took his first examination, and he was still eligible to promotion because of his original three years' service when the time for his reexamination arrived; but he had been required to serve six months longer, and the length of service exacted in his case was three years and six months. (Toulon v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 87, 94, 95, 96.)

In the Toulon case (51 Ct. Cls., 87), the court decided against the claim of the officer for pay from the date stated in his commission for the reason that the date so stated was not three years and six months after the date he originally became due for promotion, but was approximately three years and four months after said date. Subsequently a new commission was issued to the officer with date of rank three years and six months after the date that he originally became due for promotion, and the Court of Claims thereupon allowed his claim for pay from the date stated in said commission. (Toulon v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 333; see file 26280-68, Mar. 18, 1916.)

An officer was commissioned as ensign to rank from June 6, 1910, and was commissioned as lieutenant (junior grade) to rank from June 6, 1913, although in the meantime he had been suspended from promotion for six months pursuant to section 1505 as amended. Upon the facts stated he was not legally entitled to rank from June 6, 1913, in the grade of lieutenant (junior grade), but his right to promotion under the law did not accrue until December 6, 1913. (File 26268-475, May 14, 1915.) Where an officer is promoted after six months' suspension, there is no legal obstacle to assigning him a date later than that from which officers below him take rank; under such circumstances section 1505, as amended, fixes the position to which the officer is entitled in the higher grade regardless of the date stated in his commission; but in such case a reference note in the Navy Register to section 1505, as amended, would be desirable as explaining his status in this respect. (File 26260-2605:2, Aug. 17, 1915; 26268-475, May 14, 1915.)

One year's pay when dropped from the service.—Section 1454, Revised Statutes, providing for one year's pay to officers wholly retired from service, has no application to the case of an officer of the Navy who is dropped from the service under section 1505, Revised Statutes, because of his professional disqualifications to perform the duties of the position for promotion to which he has been examined. There is no provision of law authorizing the payment of one year's pay in such case. (12 Comp. Dec., 97; Elmer v. U. S., 45 Ct. Cls., 90. NOTE.—These decisions were rendered prior to the amendment of sec. 1505, R. S.)

Section 1505, as amended, providing that where an officer of the Navy fails in an examination for promotion in the way specified therein he shall be dropped from the service with not more than one year's pay, is indefinite, and authority is not given to the accounting officers to determine how much pay, if any, shall be received by said officer; but the discretion in determining the amount is left to the Executive through the administrative department. In this case the President's approval of the examining board merely directs that the officer "be dropped from the service, in accordance with the provisions of section 1505 of the Revised Statutes," without directing that any pay be given him. Therefore, no specific direction as to pay having been given, none can be allowed by the accounting officers. (18 Comp. Dec., 922.)

Special act of Congress restoring rank.—When a lieutenant (junior grade) has been suspended from promotion under section 1505, and subsequently passes a reexamination and is promoted to fill a vacancy, a later act of Congress directing the Secretary of the Navy to restore him to his original number to receive rank from the time when his loss of date began does not entitle such officer to the pay of the higher grade during the period of suspension from promotion. (16 Comp. Dec., 557.)

Suspension of action by President distinguished from suspension from promotion.—The suspension of an officer from promotion for one year under section 1505, or for four months under that section as amended by the act of March 11, 1912 (37 Stat., 73), because of not having been found professionally qualified for promotion, is a suspension occurring after action by the President approving such finding of disqualification, and is therefore clearly differentiated from the President's suspension of action approving or disapproving the findings of the board for the periods of one year and six months, respectively, prior to his approval thereof. (22 Comp. Dec., 153; compare Hopper v. U. S., 53 Ct. Cls., 90.)

Delay in holding examination.—It is important that in all cases where it is not absolutely impossible to do so examinations for promotion be held prior to the occurrence of the vacancy, as is required by express provisions of law with reference to promotions in the Army and Marine Corps. (File 26260-2605:2, Aug. 17, 1915.)

Revocation of President's action.—See note to section 1456, Revised Statutes, under "Revocation of President's action."

Section 1505, as amended, provides that any officer to whom that section applies, if found not professionally qualified, "shall be suspended from promotion for a period of six months from the date of approval of said examination, and shall suffer a loss of numbers equal to the average six months' rate of promotion to the grade for which said officer is undergoing examination during the five fiscal years next preceding the date of approval of said examination, and upon the termination of said suspension from promotion he shall be reexamined, and in case of his failure upon such reexamination he shall be dropped from the service with not more than one year's pay." This legislation is construed by the Judge Advocate General as vesting no discretion in the Executive with reference to the suspension of an officer who has been found not professionally qualified for promotion, but as mandatory that under such circumstances the officer shall be suspended for the period stated; after approval of the finding of the board, no power exists in the Secretary of the Navy to review same and to revoke his approval. (File 26260-6133, Apr. 26, 1919; for contrary precedents, see record of examining board in case of Lieut. (junior grade) Harold W. Scofield, and note to sec. 1456, R. S., under "Revocation of President's action.")

For other cases, see note to section 1500, Revised Statutes, under "Correction of action taken where officer not accorded the right to be present."

Sec. 1506. [Advancement in number.] Any officer of the Navy may, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be advanced, not exceeding thirty numbers in rank, for eminent and conspicuous conduct in battle or extraordinary heroism; and the rank of officers shall not be changed except in accordance with the provisions of existing law, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.—(21 April, 1864, c. 63, s. 6, v. 13, p. 54. 24 Jan., 1865, c. 19, s. 1, v. 13, p. 424.)

This section was expressly amended and reenacted by act of June 17, 1878 (20 Stat., 144), the amendment consisting in the addition of the words following the semicolon as reproduced above.

By sections 1605 and 1606, Revised Statutes, provision is made for the Marine Corps similar to sections 1506 and 1507, relating to the Navy; by acts of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1108), and June 16, 1906 (34 Stat., 296), officers so advanced are to be carried as additional to the numbers of each grade in which they serve. Other provisions for advancement of officers are contained in sections 1508-1510, Revised Statutes. Retired officers detailed for the command of squadrons or single ships in time of war may be restored to the active list if they receive a vote of thanks of Congress for their services and gallantry in action against the enemy (sec. 1465, R. S.).

Advancement of officer not subject to revision by subsequent administration.—A rational interpretation of this section is that Congress has left to the discretion of the President the determination of what acts of heroism should be recommended to the Senate for reward, and in providing that the Senate must advise and consent to the advancement has indicated the only forum which may inquire into the wisdom with which that discretion has been exercised. The nomination for the advancement being in regular form, as also the resolution of the Senate and the commission, and the advancement being an accomplished fact and within the terms of section 1506, it is not in the power of the President to inquire what was the act of heroism, or when and where it was committed, which induced his predecessor and the Senate to advance the officer in numbers; their action in that matter is conclusive upon the executive department and therefore is not subject to reexamination or revision by the President. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 76. In this case an officer of the Pay Corps was twice advanced 15 numbers and it was afterwards insisted that both advancements were for the same act of heroism and that the eminent and conspicuous conduct in battle occurred at such a time as would not entitle the officer to the benefits of the law.)

Date of vacancy created by advancement to higher grade.—The advancement of a commander to the grade of captain under section 1506, to rank from August 10, 1898, did not create a vacancy in the grade of commander until December 14, 1898, when such advancement was confirmed by the Senate. A lieutenant commander was promoted to be a commander in the place of the aforesaid officer, also with rank from August 10, 1898. As there were no vacancies on August 10, 1898, when these officers took rank according to their commissions, the act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 191; see sec. 1561, R. S.), did not apply so as to entitle them to pay in the higher grades from the time they took rank, respectively. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 30.)

Date increased pay commences in higher grade.—The advancement of an officer to a higher grade pursuant to section 1506, Revised Statutes, is not a promotion in course to fill a vacancy, within the meaning of section 1561, Revised Statutes, allowing increased pay on promotion from date of rank; and accordingly the increased pay in such cases commences, not at the date from which he takes rank in the higher grade but at the date of his appointment as an officer of that grade. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 319; see also 23 Op. Atty. Gen., 30, noted above, and Young v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 145. As to pay from date of rank in all cases of officers advanced pursuant to law, see act of Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 892.)

Advancement under ad interim commission.—The advancement and promotion of officers pursuant to section 1506, Revised Statutes, can not be accomplished by the President alone, and ad interim commissions issued to such officers did not create vacancies in their offices, as such advancement and promotion can be only with the advice and consent of the Senate. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 30, approving 6 Comp. Dec., 7; see also Peck v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 125.)

The last clause of section 1506 forbids that the rank of any officer be changed except with the advice and consent of the Senate. Therefore as the advancement of certain officers under section 1506 would change their respective grades and ranks, it could not be made by the President alone. The Constitution, Article II, section 2, authorizing the President to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, does not confer upon the President the power to create such vacancies. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 30.)

Rear Admiral William T. Sampson was advanced eight numbers and appointed a rear-admiral in the Navy under the provisions of section 1506, Revised Statutes, from the 10th day of August, 1898, and an ad interim commission was issued to him from that date. This advancement the Senate failed to confirm prior to adjournment. Advancement in numbers under this section does not create a vacancy within the meaning of the Constitution from the time when the President decides to recommend such advancement, nor is any vacancy created prior to the date when the Senate concurs in the President's recommendation. Accordingly held that no authority exists for paying him as rear admiral from the date when he was commissioned as such, the Senate not having consented to the advancement. (6 Comp. Dec., 7.)

Consent of the Senate indirectly given.—A commander in the Navy, Bowman H. McCalla, was nominated by the President for advancement five numbers and appointed as a captain; at the same time a lieutenant commander, John E. Pillsbury, was nominated "to be a commander from the 10th day of August, 1898, vice Commander Bowman H. McCalla, advanced and promoted;" the Senate confirmed the nomination of Pillsbury without acting upon the nomination of McCalla. Held, that the confirmation of Pillsbury operated as the advice and consent of the Senate to the advancement and promotion of McCalla. No particular form, set phrase, or language is required by which the Senate shows its assent to a presidential appointment; the President had already nominated McCalla to be a captain and all that was necessary to make him such and to cause a vacancy in his office of commander was that the Senate consent thereto; and when the Senate confirmed another officer, expressly asserting that it was to fill the place of McCalla, promoted, and which promotion could not be without its consent, it necessarily and thereby asserted its consent to his promotion; as the Senate could not increase the number of commanders, its confirmation of Pillsbury to be a commander necessarily either removed McCalla or promoted him, and the Senate said that it was in the place of McCalla advanced and promoted. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 30.)

Capt. Francis J. Higginson was nominated by the President for advancement in numbers pursuant to section 1506, so as to place him at the head of the list of captains; he was then nominated for promotion to commodore "vice Commodore Winfield S. Schley, advanced and promoted," to rank from August 10, 1898. On December 14, 1898, the Senate confirmed Capt. Higginson's promotion to the grade of commodore, but took no action upon the proposed advancement in numbers, either in his case or that of Commodore Schley. The confirmation of Capt. Higginson's promotion not only made him a commodore from the date of the Senate's action, but in effect advanced Commodore Schley so as to make a vacancy which the promotion operated to fill. (8 Comp. Dec., 7; see also 8 Comp. Dec., 302.)

Capt. Francis J. Higginson was nominated by the President for advancement in numbers pursuant to section 1506, so as to place him at the head of the list of captains; he was then nominated for promotion to commodore to fill a vacancy. On December 14, 1898, the Senate confirmed Capt. Higginson's promotion to the grade of commodore, but took no independent action upon the nomination for his advancement in numbers in the grade of captain. Under the law as construed by the Navy Department Capt. Higginson was not entitled to and there was no authority for his promotion to be a commodore at the time he was so promoted except according to seniority; and as he would not be at the head of the captain's grade, entitled by seniority to promotion to commodore, unless the Senate concurred in his advancement in numbers in the grade of captain, the Navy Department was of opinion that when the Senate confirmed the promotion of Higginson to fill a vacancy to which he could only be entitled upon its confirmation of his advancement in numbers, it necessarily and thereby asserted its consent to his advancement in numbers: Held, that "it must be assumed that the Senate in confirming the nomination of Capt. Higginson to be a commodore intended to do everything necessary to that confirmation, and that it intended to act strictly in accordance with law;" accordingly, when the Senate confirmed Capt. Higginson's nomination to be a commodore it thereby consented to and confirmed his nomination for advancement in numbers in the grade of captain, which was necessary to legally accomplish his promotion to the grade of commodore. (8 Comp. Dec., 302, modifying 8 Comp. Dec., 7.)

was not entitled to the pay of captain from August 10, 1898, the date stated in his commission, but only from December 14, 1898, when the Senate indirectly consented to his advancement, this notwithstanding the fact that in the meantime a vacancy occurred in the grade of captain by reason of retirement for which Commander McCalla would have been eligible by seniority had he not been advanced under section 1506, and which would have entitled him to increased pay as captain from a date prior to December 14, 1898; and in fact an officer junior to Commander McCalla was promoted to said vacancy with pay from a date prior to that on which Commander McCalla was held entitled. It thus happened that the officer intended to be rewarded was in effect punished by the postponement of his pay as captain to a later date than the date from which he would have been promoted in due course; while there is much equity in this consideration, it can not affect the results of the transaction which actually occurred. (7 Comp. Dec., 865.)

Precedence of officer advanced in numbers.—Where an officer is advanced above 30 officers, who were his seniors, it is convenient to insert in his commission a date between that of the commission of the highest of the 30 officers whom he is to outrank and that of the lowest next above him, in order to indicate his position and rank with reference to the other officers of his grade. This might be otherwise expressed, to wit, by inserting the names of the two officers between whom he is to take his new rank. However, while the commission may thus be given a retroactive effect for purposes of precedence, the "date of commission" in such cases for purposes of computing longevity pay under the statute which says "five years after date of commission," is the true date of the instrument, which is the day of its execution. (Young v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 145, 152; see in this connection note to sec. 1467, R. S.)

Sec. 1507. [Promotion when grade is full.] Any officer who is nominated to a higher grade by the provisions of the preceding section, shall be promoted, notwithstanding the number of said grade may be full; but no further promotions shall take place in that grade, except for like cause, until the number is reduced to that provided by law.—(24 Jan., 1865, c. 19, s. 2, v. 13, p. 424. 22 June, 1874, c. 392, v. 18, p. 191.)

See note to section 1506, Revised Statutes.

Additional number officers in grade of rear admiral.—On February 26, 1901, Capts. Robley D. Evans and Henry G. Taylor were confirmed by the Senate for advancement in numbers and promotion to rear admiral pursuant to section 1506, Revised Statutes. Under the law these officers are not to be treated as occupying numbers among the 18 rear admirals allowed for the grade, but are carried as additional to the numbers of that grade. The addition to the grade of rear admiral by reason of advancement under section 1506 does not advance the officers already in the lower half of that grade to the upper half, so as to affect their pay. The act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1005), fixing the pay of the lower half of the grade of rear admiral at the same rate as that received by brigadier generals of the Army, had particular reference to the 9 lower numbers of the 18 rear admirals provided for in that act.

Accordingly held that a rear admiral of the 9 lower numbers was not advanced in numbers by the addition to the grade of rear admiral of Evans and Taylor but is still in the 9 lower numbers of that grade as constituted by the act of March 3, 1899, notwithstanding that as a result of these appointments there are more than 9 rear admirals lower in number than he. (8 Comp. Dec., 7.)

The advancement of an officer in the grade of rear admiral from the lower half of that grade to the upper half is a promotion within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1108). Rear Admiral Evans, being carried as an additional number pursuant to the act of March 3, 1901, is advanced contemporaneously with the officer next above him in rank and should be paid as a rear admiral of the upper half from the date when the officer next above him is so advanced in regular course. (8 Comp. Dec., 689.)

Sec. 1508. [Officers receiving thanks of Congress.] Any line officer, whether of volunteers or of the regular Navy, may be advanced one grade, if, upon recommendation of the President by name, he receives the thanks of Congress for highly distinguished conduct in conflict with the enemy or for extraordinary heroism in the line of his profession.—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 9, v. 12, p. 584. 24 Jan., 1865, c. 19, s. 2, v. 13, p. 424. 25 July, 1866, c. 231, s. 1, v. 14, p. 222.)

Thanks of Congress, effect of: See sections 1365, 1446, 1465, 1509, 1510, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1509. [Effect of vote of thanks.] A vote of thanks by Congress to any officer of the Navy shall be held to affect such officer only; and whenever, as an incident thereof, an officer who would otherwise be retired is retained on the active list, such retention shall not interfere with the regular promotion of others who would otherwise have been entitled by law to promotion.—(1 July, 1870, Res. 96, s. 1, v. 16, p. 384.)

See note to preceding section, and section 1446, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1510. [Vacancies occasioned by death, &c., of officers thanked.] No promotion shall be made to fill a vacancy occasioned by the final retirement, death, resignation, or dismissal of an officer who has received a vote of thanks, unless the number of officers left in the grade where the vacancy occurs shall be less than the number authorized by law.—(1 July, 1870, Res. 96, s. 1, v. 16, p. 384.)

Sec. 1511. [Where established.] The Naval Academy shall be established at Annapolis, in the State of Maryland.—(21 May, 1864, c. 93, s. 4, v. 13, p. 85.)

Historical note.—The first statutory provision for a naval academy was made by act of Congress, August 10, 1846 (9 Stat., 100, 101), when the modest sum of $28,200 was appropriated "for repairs, improvement, and instruction at Fort Severn, Annapolis, Maryland." Prior to that time instruction had been given to midshipmen in the naval service in a desultory manner—sometimes on shipboard and sometimes at various places on shore when they were not on sea duty, and this seems to have been done without direct authority of Congress, but by what a writer has termed "wise departmental legislation." During the first few years of the Naval Academy its students were taken directly from midshipmen in the Navy, some of whom had been several years in the service. The act of January 2, 1813 (2 Stat., 789), authorizing the construction of four 74-gun ships, provided that each of them should carry a schoolmaster, and each ship had 20 midshipmen who were presumably under the instruction of this schoolmaster. Our Naval Academy is a growth and an evolution, and in that respect somewhat different from the Military Academy. Its first pupils were officers already in the naval service, holding their warrants from the President. They have gradually ceased to be midshipmen in the active service belonging to the line, and are now naval students the same as cadets at the Military Academy are military students. (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324.)

Regulations of the Naval Academy.—The Naval Academy, whose existence is due to a wise act of mere departmental administration on the part of Secretary Bancroft in 1845, owes its organization substantially to regulations adopted from time to time by him and his successors. The act of July 16, 1862, chapter 183, is the earliest legislation that concerns the interior management of the Academy, and what has been since enacted touches that management only here and there incidentally. Inasmuch, therefore, as Congress has authorized the successive heads of the Navy Department to govern the academy by regulations, and has interfered therewith only, so to say, desultorily, the rule of statutory construction, which forbids any disturbance of previously existing statutory or common law by a new statute further than is necessary to its reasonable operation, must be applied here so as to prevent any unnecessary disturbance of previously existing regulations by statutory enactment. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 637.)

Where regulations are issued by the Secretary of the Navy relating to examinations at the Naval Academy, it can not for a moment be doubted that the existence of such regulations was known to Congress when enacting legislation referring to the "final graduating examination" of midshipmen, and they afford a clear explanation of the use by Congress in such legislation of the words "final graduating examination." (Benjamin v. U. S., 10 Ct. Cls., 474.)

The Secretary of the Navy has plenary authority over the regulations of the Naval Academy. He makes the regulations and can modify or change them at will, providing no statute is thereby trenching upon. The regulations of the Naval Academy do not, strictly speaking, form a part of the regulations for the government of the Navy; they are not embodied therein and do not come under section 1547, Revised Statutes, giving to Navy regulations the force of law. The regulations of the academy are not directly approved by the President, as are the Navy Regulations. (36 J. A. G. letter book, 195, Mar. 19, 1907.)

The Naval Academy regulations are not issued under any explicit statute. The Academy being under naval control is administered by the Secretary of the Navy, and it is assumed that he makes the regulations of the Academy under his general powers as Secretary; but there are certain clauses in the statutes touching more or less directly upon the matter, such as sections 1515 and 1526, Revised Statutes, etc. Duly formulated regulations being essential to the proper administration of such an establishment as the Naval Academy, the effect of the statutes on the subject is to place the power of making such regulations in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy, subject to the general direction of the President. Such regulations must, of course, be made in furtherance and not in violation or disregard of statutory provisions. (36 J. A. G. letter book, 195, Mar. 19, 1907; see also sec. 161, R. S., and notes thereto.)

Under section 1547, Revised Statutes, the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President, may issue regulations and instructions for the Navy, and the regulations of the Naval Academy providing for the dismissal of midshipmen were presumably made pursuant to such power. (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324.)

Board of Visitors, to visit the Naval Academy, the date of the annual visit to be fixed by the Secretary of the Navy, is provided for by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 608). Said board is to consist of 7 persons appointed by the President; 4 Senators and 5 Members of the House of Representatives, appointed respectively by the Vice President and Speaker; and of the chairmen of the Committees on Naval Affairs of the Senate and House.

Naval Academy Band, composed of enlisted men of the Navy, was authorized by acts of April 12, 1910 (36 Stat., 297), and July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 152); see also act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 153), as to competition of the band as then organized with local civilian musicians, and act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 602, sec. 6), as to temporary increase in pay.

Naval Academy Chapel.—Restrictions upon use of crypt and window spaces for memorials are contained in act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 773).

Superintendent of Naval Academy.—See note to section 1556, Revised Statutes, under "Additional pay for special duty."

Sec. 1512. [Title of students.] The students at the Naval Academy shall be styled cadet midshipmen.—(15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 12, v. 16, p. 334.)

A separate class of students at the Naval Academy, to be styled "cadet engineers," was provided for by sections 1522-1524, Revised Statutes. By act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), the title of all undergraduates at the academy was changed to "naval cadets," and by act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 686), the title "naval cadet" was changed to "midshipman."

Midshipmen were first provided for in the act of Congress providing a naval armament, March 27, 1794 (1 Stat., 350), and they were therein denominated "warrant officers." By the act of July 16, 1862 (12 Stat., 583), midshipmen were made ninth in grade in the active list of line officers of the Navy. (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324, U. S. v. Cook, 128 U. S., 254.)

The first pupils of the Naval Academy were officers already in the naval service, holding their warrants from the President. They have gradually ceased to be midshipmen in the active service belonging to the line, and are now naval students the same as cadets at the Military Academy are military students. (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324.)

Section 1 of the act of July 16, 1862 (12 Stat., 583), created the grade of midshipman as one of the nine grades of the active list of line officers of the Navy, and section 11 of the same act declared that students at the Naval Academy shall be styled midshipmen. (U. S. v. Baker, 125 U. S., 646.)

Acting midshipmen.—By act of July 14, 1862, section 8 (12 Stat., 563), the President was authorized "to annually appoint ten acting midshipmen for education at the Naval Academy," who shall be selected from the sons of officers or enlisted men in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps; by act of July 28, 1866, section 8 (14 Stat., 322), it was provided that "midshipmen and acting midshipmen in the Navy of the United States shall be entitled to one ration, or commutation therefor." (See sec. 1577, R. S.) It had previously been provided, by act of August 31, 1852, section 1 (10 Stat., 100), that "no appointment of midshipmen, acting midshipmen, or pupil, at any naval school in the Navy, shall be made, unless recommended by the member of Congress representing the district in which the applicant resides," etc.

Cadet-midshipmen.—Section 12 of the act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat., 321), later embodied in section 1512 of the Revised Statutes, changed the title of students at the Naval Academy to "cadet-midshipmen." That act divided the grade of midshipman on a marked and convenient line, and styled all below that line as cadet-midshipmen, but relative to their new status it was entirely silent. This might with much reason be regarded, nothing to the contrary appearing, as the creation of a new grade in the line of the Navy for cadet midshipmen. A failure, however, to enumerate it as such in the list of grades in that act, and also in the subsequent list of the Revised Statutes, precludes that construction. It left them, however, with the same duties, the same pay, the same mode of appointment, and subject to the same naval discipline and control as before. Whatever doubt might arise as to the particular status of students under the new title, it is quite certain that they still constituted, in some capacity, a part of the Navy. (Baker v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 181; affirmed, 125 U. S., 646.)

After the 12th section of the act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat., 334), students at the Naval Academy were to be styled "cadet-midshipmen," and after graduation were to be appointed midshipmen and promoted to the grade of ensign as vacancies might occur. Prior to that act students at the Naval Academy were styled midshipmen. The form of appointment was the same before and after the act; in both cases it was signed by the Secretary of the Navy, by direction of the President, and the positions and duties were precisely the same. Calling the student a cadet midshipman instead of a midshipman, without changing his position or his duties, did not make his status different from what it was before. (U. S. v. Cook, 128 U. S., 251.)

If the law designates a cadet as a midshipman, the designation is an official one. The qualification of cadet-midshipman was used for the sake of distinction, to distinguish one kind of midshipman from another, a midshipman at school from a midshipman aboard ship. (U. S. v. Cook, 128 U. S., 251.)

Prior to section 12 of the act of July 15, 1870, (16 Stat., 334), the form of appointment issued to a midshipman at the Naval Academy stated that he was "appointed to the grade of midshipman in the United States Navy." After the passage of that act the form of appointment was changed by striking out the words, "appointed to the grade of midshipman," and inserting the words, "appointed a cadet-midshipman." (U. S. v. Baker, 125 U. S., 616.)

Naval cadets.—The act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 284), provided "that hereafter there shall be no appointments of cadet-midshipmen or cadet-engineers at the Naval Academy, but in lieu thereof naval cadets shall be appointed from each Congressional district and at large, as now provided by law for cadet-midshipmen, and all the undergraduates at the Naval Academy shall hereafter be designated and called 'naval cadets.'" One main object of this act was to abolish the distinctions previously made by law between cadet-engineers and cadet-midshipmen, and for the future to merge both classes in the new designation of naval cadets. The previous differences between them grew out of the separate provisions as to their number, their manner of appointment, their course and term of study, and their pay after their four years' course at the Academy. (U. S. v. Redgrave, 116 U. S., 474.)

The purpose of the act of 1882 was to abolish the distinction in name between cadet-engineers and cadet-midshipmen, and to provide for the two but one classification, known to the law as "naval cadets." (Harmon v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 132.)

The act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 284), effected a change in the name of students at the Naval Academy, but did not alter their legal status, which remained the same as before. (8 Comp. Dec., 410.)

Congress has the power to change the name of students at the Naval Academy and to modify the scope of their duties, as it did by the act of 1882; by so doing it did not undertake to name the incumbent of any office and assume the power of appointment thereto, which belonged to the Executive. (Crenshaw v. U. S., 134 U. S., 99.)

Title of midshipman revived.—Section 1362 of the Revised Statutes of 1878 named the active list of officers of the Navy, and made midshipmen the eleventh of the list of the different grades therein provided for. The naval appropriation act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 472), changed the title of "midshipman" to "ensign," the effect of which was to discontinue the grade of midshipman in the Navy. The act of June 26, 1884 (23 Stat., 60), provided that all graduates of the Naval Academy on the completion of the six years' course should be commissioned as ensigns in the Navy, and the grade of junior ensign was therein abolished. Section 7 of the act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), known as the Navy personnel act, named the list of line officers of the Navy, including ensigns, and the name of midshipman is not found therein. The act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 686), changed the title of "naval cadet" to "midshipman." It thus appears that since the act of March 3, 1883, there has been no such rank as midshipman in the United States Navy, except as that title has been given to students at the Naval Academy. (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324.)

Status of students at the Naval Academy.—A cadet student at the Naval Academy is an officer of the Navy within the meaning of the provision in the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 473), respecting the longevity pay of officers and enlisted men in the Army or Navy. (U. S. v. Cook, 128 U. S., 254, following U. S. v. Baker, 125 U. S., 646, and U. S. v. Hendee, 124 U. S., 309. But see act of Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 891, providing that "hereafter the service of a midshipman at the United States Naval Academy, or that of a cadet at the United States Military Academy, who may hereafter be appointed to the United States Naval Academy, or to the United States Military Academy, shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer in the Navy or in the Marine Corps.")

That a midshipman is an officer has been understood ever since there was a Navy. He is not one of the common seamen. His name indicates a middle position, between that of a superior officer and that of the common seaman. (U. S. v. Cook, 128 U. S., 254.)

It is not to be doubted that a midshipman is an officer, and this has been authoritatively decided respecting undergraduates at the Naval Academy under various laws for the benefit of "officers of the Navy." (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 579.)

It is true that a student is at the Naval Academy only for education, but the education is at the request and for the benefit of the Government rather than of himself. A raw recruit is not sent to the front until he has had a course of instruction, discipline, and drill in camp. That the time thus spent would constitute service in the Army no one would doubt. Education at the Academy, though of a higher order, is required and justified by the same principle. (Baker v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 181; affirmed, 125 U. S., 646.)

Both cadets in the Army and cadets in the Navy are appointed in pursuance of the Constitution, Article II, section 2, providing that Congress may vest the appointment of inferior officers in the President alone or in the heads of departments; those in the Army by reason of express authority conferred on the President (sec. 1315, R. S.), those in the Navy by reason of authority conferred on the Secretary of the Navy (sec. 1514 R. S.). The status of military cadets the same as that of naval cadets is that of "officers" in the Constitutional sense of the word as distinguished from employees. (10 Comp. Dec., 795. See also note to sec. 1514, R. S.)

They are not merely students being educated at the expense of the Government, but are officers in the naval service, and as such their salary, fixed by law, can no more be increased or diminished than can the salary of any other officer in the naval service which is fixed by law. Accordingly, where granted leave of absence by the Secretary of the Navy for sickness or other cause, they are still entitled to pay during the period of such leave at the same rate they were receiving at the academy. (8 Comp. Dec., 410.)

It is impossible not to conclude that the claimant continued to be, after the passage of the act of 1870, as he was prior to its passage, an officer of the Navy, on the active list, and serving as such an officer by virtue of his having been appointed a midshipman and continuing to be a student in the Naval Academy, even though he might have been properly styled, after the passage of the act of 1870, a cadet-midshipman. (U. S. v. Baker, 125 U. S., 646.)

Whatever doubt may arise as to the particular status of students under the new title, it is quite certain that they still constitute, in some capacity, a part of the Navy. (Baker v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 181; affirmed, 125 U. S., 646.)

In the computation of their longevity pay, officers of the Naval Reserve Force are entitled to credit for previous service in the Navy as cadet-engineer. (24 Comp. Dec., 629.)

A naval cadet traveling under orders is entitled to mileage under the laws providing mileage for officers of the Navy traveling under orders. (Fitzpatrick v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 332.)

Midshipmen at the Naval Academy are not enlisted in the service, but are appointed as midshipmen at the Naval Academy for training. Not being enlisted, they can not therefore be classified as "soldiers, sailors, or marines" within the meaning of laws granting preference in appointment to the civil service of honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, or marines. (File 5252-131, Oct. 11, 1919. Compare file 28762-649: 2, Apr. 9, 1920, holding that the act of July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 37, respecting preference in civil service appointments, is broad enough to include all members of the military forces of the United States who serve on active duty as such.)

meaning of the proviso in the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), which allows a gratuity of six months' pay to be paid to the widow or other designated beneficiary upon the death of an officer on the active list of the Navy. (15 Comp. Dec., 39.)

The Naval Academy is part of the machinery of the Navy. The midshipmen are appointed by the Secretary of the Navy by direction of the President. They are required to engage to serve for eight years unless sooner discharged by competent authority (but see note to sec. 1514, R. S.). They must take an oath and bind themselves to bear true faith and allegiance to the United States, and that they will serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies, and that they will obey the orders of the President of the United States and the orders of the officers appointed over them according to the rules and articles for the government of the United States Navy. They are required to wear the uniform prescribed by the naval authorities. They are subject to naval discipline. They are borne upon the Navy Register as a part of the active list of the line of the Navy. They are upon the pay roll; their salary is fixed by law, and they are paid from the appropriation, "Pay of the Navy." That they are in the naval service is not thought questionable. They are by law officers in a qualified sense. They are not now and never were commissioned officers. While they are not officers within the meaning of article 36, section 1624, Revised Statutes, as was decided in the case of Weller v. U. S. (see note to sec. 1519, R. S.), yet, following the reasoning of the Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Cook (above noted), held, that they are officers on the active list of the Navy within the meaning of the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), providing for payment of death gratuity. (20 Comp. Dec., 39.)

Students at the Naval Academy, designated as midshipmen by the act of July 1, 1902, are officers of the Navy within the meaning of section 1586, Revised Statutes, which prohibits the allowance of expenses incurred by any officer of the Navy for medical attendance, unless the attendance of a naval medical officer could not have been had. (9 Comp. Dec., 375.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 1514, 1519, and 1520, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1513. [Number of midshipmen.

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1513. There shall be allowed at said Academy one cadet midshipman for every Member or Delegate of the House of Representatives, one for the District of Columbia, and ten appointed annually at large."—(2 Mar., 1867, c. 174, s. 8, v. 14, p. 517. 15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 12, v. 16, p. 334.)

It was expressly amended by act of June 17, 1878 (20 Stat., 143), to read as follows:

"Sec. 1513. There shall be allowed in said Academy one cadet-midshipman for every Member or Delegate of the House of Representatives, one for the District of Columbia, and ten appointed at large: Provided, however, That there shall not be at any time more in said Academy appointed at large than ten: but the provisions of this section shall not be construed to apply to cadet-midshipmen appointed at large now in said Academy."

Subsequent amendments were made by the following laws:

Act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 686): "That until the year nineteen hundred and fourteen, in addition to the naval cadets now authorized by law (the title having been changed by this act to midshipmen), the President shall appoint five midshipmen, and there shall be appointed from the States at large, upon the recommendation of Senators, two midshipmen for each State."

Act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1197): "There shall be allowed at the Naval Academy two midshipmen for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress, two for the District of Columbia, and five each year at large * * *. That the provisions of this Act for the increase of appointments of midshipmen to the Naval Academy shall continue in force until the thirtieth day of June, nineteen hundred and thirteen; and thereafter one midshipman, as now provided by law, shall be appointed for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress."

Act of July 9, 1913 (38 Stat., 103): "That after June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and thirteen, and until June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and thirteen, there shall be allowed at the Naval Academy, two midshipmen for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress, one for Porto Rico, two for the District of Columbia, and ten appointed each year at large."

Act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 410): "Hereafter in addition to the appointments of midshipmen to the United States Naval Academy as now prescribed by law, the Secretary of the Navy is allowed fifteen appointments annually from the enlisted men of the Navy who are citizens of the United States and not more than twenty years of age on the date of entrance to the Naval Academy, and who shall have served not less than one year as enlisted men on the date of entrance: Provided, That such appointments shall be made in the order of merit from candidates who have in competition with each other passed the mental examination now or hereafter required by law for entrance to the Naval Academy, and who passed the physical examination required before entrance under existing law."

All the above laws were repealed and superseded by the act of February 15, 1916 (39 Stat., 9), which provided as follows:

"That hereafter there shall be allowed at the United States Naval Academy three midshipmen for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress, one for Porto Rico, two for the District of Columbia, ten appointed each year at large, and fifteen appointed annually from enlisted men of the Navy as now authorized by law.

"Sec. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

Amendments to the act of February 15, 1916, were contained in the following laws:

Act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576): "Hereafter in addition to the appointment of midshipmen to the United States Naval Academy, as now prescribed by law, the President is hereby allowed fifteen appointments annually instead of ten as now prescribed by law, and the Secretary of the Navy is allowed twenty-five appointments annually, instead of fifteen as now prescribed by law, the latter to be appointed from the enlisted men of the Navy who are citizens of the United States, and not more than twenty years of age on the date of entrance to the Naval Academy, and who shall have served not less than one year as enlisted men on the date of entrance: Provided, That such appointments shall be made in the order of merit from candidates who have in competition with each other passed the mental examination now or hereafter required by law for entrance to the Naval Academy, and who passed the physical examinations required before entrance under existing laws."

Act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1182): "Hereafter, in addition to the appointment of midshipmen to the United States Naval Academy, as now prescribed by law, the Secretary of the Navy is allowed one hundred appointments annually, instead of twenty-five as now prescribed by law, to be appointed from the enlisted men of the Navy who are citizens of the United States, and not more than twenty years of age on the date of entrance to the Naval Academy, and who shall have served not less than one year as enlisted men on the date of entrance: Provided, That such appointments shall be made in the order of merit from candidates who have, in competition with each other, passed the mental examination now or hereafter required by law for entrance to the Naval Academy, and who passed the physical examination before entrance under existing laws."

Act of April 25, 1917 (40 Stat., 38).

"That, in addition to the number of midshipmen now authorized by law, there shall be appointed during the period from the date of passage of this act until September first, nineteen hundred and eighteen, one additional midshipman for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress. Nominations shall be made for these vacancies by the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates concerned for any regular or special examination that may be ordered before that date."

The act of February 15, 1916, and amendments thereto (except the act of March 4, 1917) were repealed and superseded by the act of December 20, 1917 (40 Stat., 430), which provided as follows:

"That hereafter there shall be allowed at the United States Naval Academy five midshipmen for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress, one for Porto Rico, two for the District of Columbia, fifteen appointed each year at large, and one hundred appointed annually from enlisted men of the Navy, as now authorized by law.

The act of December 20, 1917, was expressly amended by the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 140), which provided as follows:

"Section 1 of the act entitled 'An Act to increase the number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy,' approved December 20, 1917, is hereby amended so as to read as follows: That hereafter there shall be allowed at the United States Naval Academy five midshipmen for each Senator, Representative, Delegate in Congress, and Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, and five for the District of Columbia, fifteen appointed each year at large, and one hundred appointed annually from enlisted men of the Navy, and members of the Naval Reserve Force on active duty, as now authorized by law."

Midshipmen appointed from Porto Rico.—The act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1198), provided as follows: "That hereafter there shall be at the Naval Academy one midshipman from Porto Rico, who shall be a native of said island, and whose appointment shall be made by the President on the recommendation of the Governor of Porto Rico."

The act of March 3, 1903, was not repealed by the act of February 15, 1916 (39 Stat., 9), which increased the number of midshipmen and provided for the appointment of "one for Porto Rico," but did not provide that the appointee should be a native of the island or that he should be nominated by the Governor of Porto Rico as provided by the act of 1903. The two provisions are not inconsistent and should be construed as authorizing the appointment of one midshipman from Porto Rico in addition to the native of the island who must be recommended by the Governor. The language of the act of February 15, 1916, "one for Porto Rico," was repeated in the act of December 20, 1917, which latter act also did not repeal the act of March 3, 1903, relating to the appointment of a midshipman from Porto Rico. As a consequence, from March 3, 1903, until February 15, 1916, only one midshipman from Porto Rico was authorized by law; he could be appointed only upon recommendation of the Governor and was required to be a native of the island. From February 15, 1916, until July 11, 1919, two midshipmen were authorized, one required to be a native of the island and to be appointed only on the recommendation of the Governor. On the last mentioned date Congress amended the act of December 20, 1917, so as to provide for the appointment of five midshipmen on the recommendation of the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico. The result of this amendment is to authorize a total of six midshipmen from Porto Rico, five of whom are to be appointed on the nomination of the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico and need not be natives of the island, the other to be a native of Porto Rico appointed under the act of March 3, 1903, on the recommendation of the Governor. (File 5252-126, Aug. 1, 1919.)

Students from the Philippine Islands.—The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576), contained the following provision: "That hereafter the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to permit not exceeding four Filipinos, to be designated, one for each class, by the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, to receive instruction at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland: Provided, That the Filipinos undergoing instruction, as herein authorized, shall receive the same pay, allowances, and emoluments, to be paid out of the same appropriations, and shall be subject to the same rules and regulations governing admission, attendance, discipline, resignation, discharge, dismissal, and graduation as are authorized by law and regulation for midshipmen appointed from the United States, but the Filipino midshipmen herein authorized shall not be entitled to appointment to any commissioned office in the United States Navy by reason of their graduation from the Naval Academy."

The above-quoted provision of the act of August 29, 1916, relating to Filipino students, is not repealed by the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 140), or any other law, relating to the number of midshipmen to be allowed at the

Students from foreign countries.—The act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 577), contained the following: "No person shall be admitted for instruction at the Naval Academy at Annapolis from any foreign country except upon authority of law hereafter enacted."

A public resolution approved February 15, 1916, authorized the Secretary of the Navy to permit a designated "citizen of Cuba" to "receive instruction at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis," provided he first passed the examinations prescribed for candidates from the United States: Held, that said resolution did not authorize the admission of the party named therein as a midshipman or authorize his admission into the naval service in any status whatever; he is not while at the Naval Academy subject to the laws and regulations for the government of the Navy, and is not liable to trial by court-martial and dismissal for misconduct. He is not to be regarded as a member of the naval forces but simply as a student at the Naval Academy, whose presence there is authorized by law. He is ineligible for a commission in the Navy under section 1428 of the Revised Statutes. However, he may be graduated from the Naval Academy and given a diploma as evidence of such graduation. (File 5252-120, May 13, 1919; C. M. O. 186, 1919.)

The act of June 29, 1906, above quoted, is a legislative declaration that unless Congress itself makes an exception to the rule the privileges of the Naval Academy are restricted to citizens of the United States. (File 313-26, Dec. 20, 1906. Overruled by subsequent decisions noted under section 1428, R. S., which hold that aliens may legally be appointed to the Naval Academy as midshipmen, but can not be commissioned upon graduation as officers of the Navy unless naturalized.)

Midshipmen appointed from enlisted men of the Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Naval Reserve Force.—The appointment of midshipmen from "boys enlisted in the Navy" was authorized by acts of July 16, 1862 (12 Stat., 585, sec. 11), and March 2, 1867 (14 Stat., 517, sec. 8). By act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat., 334, sec. 12), which changed the title of students at the Naval Academy to "cadet-midshipmen," it was provided that the said act "shall not be construed to authorize the appointment of cadet-midshipmen from among boys enlisted in the Navy." (File 5252-59, Feb. 6, 1914.) The act of June 30, 1914, and later laws above noted, authorized the appointment of midshipmen from enlisted men of the Navy.

Enlisted men of the Marine Corps may be appointed to the Naval Academy in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy under the authority conferred by the act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 410), which authorizes such appointments from "enlisted men of the Navy." (File 5252-66, May 13, 1915; C. M. O. 20, 1915.)

Even when the Coast Guard is operating "as a part of the Navy" in time of war, as provided by the act of January 28, 1916 (38 Stat., 800), enlisted men of the Coast Guard are not eligible for appointment to the Naval Academy under the act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 410), which authorizes such appointments from "enlisted men of the Navy." (C. M. O. 141, 1918, citing file 28762-457, Oct. 10, 1918. Compare later decisions noted under sec. 1492, R. S., holding that enlisted men of the Coast Guard when operating "as a part of the Navy" are "enlisted men of the Navy.")

Members of the Naval Reserve Force in enlisted ratings are not eligible, even when on active duty, for appointment to the Naval Academy under the act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 410), as amended by act of December 20, 1917 (39 Stat., 9), which authorizes such appointments to be made from "enlisted men of the Navy." (C. M. O. 174, 1918, citing file 5252-92:1. But see act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 140), above quoted, which authorizes such appointments from "members of the Naval Reserve Force on active duty, as now authorized by law.")

Miscellaneous decisions.—The act of July 14, 1862, section 8 (12 Stat., 565), which authorized the President to appoint annually ten acting midshipmen for education at the Naval Academy, to be selected from the sons of officers or men in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps who distinguished themselves in the service of the United States, was not repealed by the act of July 16, 1862, section 11 (12 Stat., 585), which provided for the number to be allowed at the Naval Academy and the method of appointment thereto. The number to be appointed "at large" by the President under the latter act were in addition to the number to be appointed under the former act, whose appointments were not to be "at large" but confined to a comparatively small class. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 315.)

Under the 11th section of the act of July 16, 1862, which provided that the nomination of candidates for admission into the Naval Academy should be made upon recommendation of Members and Delegates from actual residents of their districts, it was held that the Secretary of the Navy had the power and it was his duty to fill vacancies in the Naval Academy that might exist from any district when it was clearly impracticable to obtain the recommendation of the Member or Delegate in Congress from that district, as when the district was not represented in Congress; that the words, "two for every Member and Delegate of the House of Representatives," meant to establish as the standard for appointment, not the actual number of Members and Delegates who happened to be entitled to seats in the House, but the number of districts which were entitled to representation by Members and Delegates, and not to make the number of students to be allowed at the Naval Academy an uncertain quantity varying with the accidents of non-election or death of Members or the like; that the provision in said act that if a Member or Delegate neglects to recommend a candidate by the first of July, it shall be the duty of the Secretary to fill the vacancy, clearly showed the intent of Congress that the school should be kept full up to the standard before stated. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 494, modifying 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 315, which in part held that "midshipmen can not lawfully be appointed for a district which is not represented in Congress." By act of Mar. 2, 1865, 13 Stat., 466, sec. 2, it was provided "that no midshipman shall be appointed for any district not represented in Congress.")

The act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1177, 1197), providing that "there shall be allowed at the Naval Academy two midshipmen for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress," did not entitle a representative to have at the academy two midshipmen of his own nomination when there was already one there upon the nomination of his predecessor; under that enactment, no congressional district was entitled to have at the Naval Academy at any one time more than two midshipmen. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 333.)

The act of July 9, 1913 (38 Stat., 103), quoted above, was construed to mean that two midshipmen were allowed for the office of Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress, and not allowed to the individual holding such office; that, accordingly, if a Senator or Representative had two appointments to the Naval Academy made on his recommendation, his successor could not, while such appointees were at the Academy, be allowed to have two additional appointments made to the Academy on his recommendation. (File 5252-67:1, July 12, 1915; C. M. O. 27, 1915.)

Sec. 1514. [Nomination of candidates. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1514. The Secretary of the Navy shall, as soon after the 5th of March in each year as possible, notify, in writing, each Member and Delegate of the House of Representatives of any vacancy that may exist in his district. The nomination of a candidate to fill said vacancy shall be made upon the recommendation of the Member or Delegate, if such recommendation is made by the first day of July of that year; but if it is not made by that time, the Secretary of the Navy shall fill the vacancy. The candidate allowed for the District of Columbia and all the candidates appointed at large shall be selected by the President."—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 11, v. 12, p. 585. Benjamin's Case, 10 C. Cls., 474.)

It was expressly amended by act of July 26, 1894 (28 Stat., 136), to read as follows:

"The Secretary of the Navy shall, as soon after the fifth of March in each year as possible, notify in writing each Member and Delegate of the House of Representatives of any vacancy that may exist in his district. The nomination of a candidate to fill said vacancy shall be made upon the recommendation of the Member or Delegate, if such recommendation is made by the first day of July of that year; but if it is not made by that time, the Secretary of the Navy shall fill the vacancy by appointment of an actual resident of the district in which the vacancy exists, who shall have been for at least two years immediately preceding the date of his appointment an actual and bona fide resident of the district in which the vacancy exists and of the legal qualification under the law as now provided. The candidate allowed for the District of Columbia, and all the candidates appointed at large, shall be selected by the President."

It was superseded by the following provision in the act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1197):

"The Secretary of the Navy shall as soon as practicable after the fifth day of March in each year notify in writing each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress of any vacancy which may be regarded as existing in the State, District, or Territory which he represents, and the nomination of a candidate to fill such vacancy shall be made upon the recommendation of the Senator, Representative, or Delegate. Such recommendation shall be made by the first day of June of that year, and if not so made the Secretary of the Navy shall fill the vacancy by the appointment of an actual resident of the State, District, or Territory in which the vacancy exists, who shall have been for at least two years immediately preceding his appointment an actual bona fide resident of the State, District, or Territory in which the vacancy exists and shall have the qualifications otherwise prescribed by law."

The act of March 3, 1903, was superseded by the following provision in the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 578):

"Hereafter the Secretary of the Navy shall, as soon as possible after the first day of June of each year preceding the graduation of midshipmen in the succeeding year, notify in writing each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress of any vacancy that will exist at the Naval Academy because of such graduation, or that may occur for other reasons and which he shall be entitled to fill by nomination of a candidate and one or more alternates therefor. The nomination of a candidate and alternate or alternates to fill said vacancy shall be made upon the recommendation of the Senator, Representative, or Delegate, if such recommendation is made by the fourth day of March of the year following that in which said notice in writing is given, but if it is not made by that time the Secretary of the Navy shall fill the vacancy by appointment of an actual resident of the State, Congressional district, or Territory, as the case may be, in which the vacancy will exist, who shall have been for at least two years immediately preceding the date of his appointment an actual and bona fide resident of the State, Congressional district, or Territory in which the vacancy will exist and of the legal qualification under the law as now provided. In cases where by reason of a vacancy in the membership of the Senate or House of Representatives, or by the death or declination of a candidate for admission to the academy there occurs or is about to occur at the academy a vacancy from any State, district, or Territory that can not be filled by nomination as herein provided, the same may be filled as soon thereafter and before the final entrance examination for the year as the Secretary of the Navy may determine. The candidates allowed for the District of Columbia and all the candidates appointed at large, together with alternates therefor, shall be selected by the President within the period herein prescribed for nomination of other candidates: Provided, That the President may select a candidate for the District of Columbia for the year nineteen hundred and eight."

Recommendation of Senator, Representative, or Delegate advisory only.—The notification from the Secretary and the recommendation from the Member are parts of the machinery of appointment, but they are only, under the statute, means to an end and not so essential as to defeat the purpose of the statute in cases where their observance may be impossible. Where observance is possible, the statutory direction should be obeyed; but the act of the Member or Delegate is simply advisory; it implies no power to compel the appointment of the person recommended, and the Secretary may refuse to accept the recommendation and require another. If the right to recommend involved the right of absolute control over the appointment, it would be equivalent to the power of appointment itself, which Congress could not vest in Members or Delegates, but which under the Constitution is vested in the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, and may be conferred by law only upon the President alone, the courts of law, or the heads of departments. Any statute which in terms or effect vested the power of appointment of pupils at the Naval Academy in the Members and Delegates of Congress would be in contravention of the Constitution and void. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 494; see also 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 350.)

Appointments made by Secretary of the Navy.—Under the act of August 31, 1852 (10 Stat., 658), which provided that "no appointment of midshipman, acting midshipman, or pupil at any naval school in the Navy shall be made unless recommended by the Member of Congress representing the district in which the applicant resides, in the same manner that cadets at West Point are now appointed," held, that a Member of Congress has no power to "appoint" a midshipman, nor even to "nominate" one, according to the common acceptation of that word; the word used in the statute is "recommended," not "nominated," by the Member; the statute only makes the recommendation of a Member of Congress a prerequisite to appointment; the Secretary of the Navy has power to appoint as a midshipman anyone who stands recommended by a Member of Congress who was, at the time he recommended, representing the district in which the applicant resides; and if more than one be so recommended, the Secretary has a right to choose among them. The Member of Congress may, if he will, decline to choose among his young constituents, and recommend them all, thus leaving the appointing power to choose among them. Accordingly, where a Member of Congress recommends for appointment a person resident in his district, and his predecessor while representing the same district had recommended for appointment another person residing within the district, held, that the present Member is not precluded from his right to recommend because his predecessor had exercised the same right before; and that the Secretary of the Navy has a perfect right to choose between them. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 46; modified by 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 621, holding that a Member of Congress had not the right in January, 1879, to recommend a candidate for examination in June, 1879, but that such recommendation could not lawfully be made until after the 5th day of March, 1879. See also 21 Op. Atty. Gen., 342, noted below under "Recommendation of Member of Congress later unseated.")

Admission or appointment to the Naval Academy is the act of the Secretary of the Navy, both as to candidates "recommended" by Members of Congress and those "selected" by the President. In the one case the Member or Delegate recommends, and the President in the other selects, but neither appoints the naval cadet; the "nomination" based on the "recommendation" or the "selection" is made to the Naval Academy or to the examining committee selected from the academic board of the academy by the superintendent of the academy under paragraph 37 of the Regulations. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 350.)

According to sections 1513-1515, Revised Statutes, the following steps are necessary to the appointment of naval cadets—that is to say, each one, according as he resides in a State or Territory, must, except as to 11 of them, be recommended by a Member or Delegate of the House of Representatives from the congressional district or Territory of which the proposed candidate is a resident, and upon such recommendation he must be nominated to fill a vacancy in the academy, or in case of a failure by a Member or Delegate to make such recommendation the Secretary of the Navy shall fill the vacancy; and in the 11 excepted cases the persons to fill vacancies shall be "selected by the President." (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 350.)

The power of appointing midshipmen is vested in the Secretary of the Navy. Under sections 1513-1515, Revised Statutes, and the act of July 26, 1894, section 1 (28 Stat., 136), the Member or Delegate to Congress "recommends" or the President "selects," but the Secretary of the Navy "appoints," in pursuance of the power of Congress to vest the appointment of inferior officers in the heads of departments. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 579, affirming 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 351.)

The power to accept a resignation, like the power to remove from office, is deduced from the power to appoint, and is as firmly established as the power of removal. In the case of cadets at the Naval Academy the power of appointment is vested in the Secretary of the Navy, and therefore the acceptance by him of the resignation of a cadet creates a vacancy in the academy. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 350.)

Both cadets in the Army and cadets in the Navy are appointed in pursuance of the Constitution, Article II, section 2, providing that Congress may vest the appointment of inferior officers in the President alone, or in the heads of departments; those in the Army by reason of express authority conferred on the President (sec. 1315, R. S.), those in the Navy by reason of authority conferred on the Secretary of the Navy (sec. 1514, R. S.). (10 Comp. Dec., 795.)

Appointments made by the President.—

The statutes are silent as to who shall make the appointments of midshipmen in the Naval Academy, except that if Members of Congress fail to nominate to fill vacancies such vacancies shall be filled by the Secretary of the Navy (sec. 1514, R. S.). It has been the universal practice for the Secretary of the Navy to make the appointments of midshipmen "by direction of the President" with the exception above stated. (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324.)

The first act providing for midshipmen in the Navy gave their selection, like other naval officers, to the President (1 Stat., 350), and it was not until by act of Congress, August 31, 1852 (10 Stat., 102), that provision was made for their recommendation by Members of Congress. This fact doubtless accounts for the present silence of the Revised Statutes with reference to their appointments, in contrast with the provisions relating to cadets at the Military Academy (sec. 1315, R. S.). (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324.)

Neither a midshipman at the Naval Academy nor a cadet at the Military Academy holds either a commission or a warrant; both are appointed by the President. (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324, 342.)

The form used by the Secretary of the Navy in the appointment of a midshipman is as follows: "By direction of the President of the United States you are hereby appointed a midshipman in the United States Navy from —." (15 Comp. Dec., 39.)

The midshipmen are appointed by the Secretary of the Navy by direction of the President. (15 Comp. Dec., 39, 44.)

When appointment takes effect.—Cadets admitted to the Naval Academy on 10 May and 4 September, 1886, respectively, became naval cadets in the full sense of the term upon the dates named; they had on those dates, respectively, been duly nominated to the place, accepted the nomination, passed successfully the examination required by law, taken the oath prescribed for naval cadets, been assigned to and entered upon the discharge of the duties pertaining to the position, and from those dates their salaries commenced. Their appointments, although not issued until the 11th of October, 1886, related back by express recitals to these dates respectively, and are conclusive evidence of the appointments at the dates aforesaid. The appointments accordingly took effect on 10 May and 4 September, 1886, so as to render them liable to trial by court-martial. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 507.)

Obligation assumed by midshipmen to serve in the Navy.—Formerly midshipmen, at the time of executing their oath of office and as part of the same paper, signed an agreement by which they engaged to "serve in the Navy of the United States for eight years, unless sooner discharged by competent authority" (see 15 Comp. Dec., 43). This agreement was neither required nor expressly authorized by law, but was the creature of administrative action and may be wholly omitted or changed in any manner, not conflicting with law, as may be desired. Thus it would be legal to require that candidates in acknowledging receipt of the Department's permission to report for examination embody in their letter of acknowledgment an engagement that, should they receive an appointment as a midshipman, they "will serve in the Navy of the United States during the pleasure of the President of the United States, unless sooner discharged by competent authority," said letter and agreement to be expressly approved thereon by their parents or guardians. (File 5252-77, July 20, 1915.) In accordance with the above, it was directed by the Secretary of the Navy, April 12, 1916, that form letters be prepared, to be signed by candidates for the Naval Academy and their parents or guardians, obligating such candidates, if appointed, to serve during the pleasure of the President of the United States, instead of for a specified period of eight years. (File 5252-77, Apr. 12 1916.)

Reinstatement of midshipman.—The Secretary of the Navy can not revoke his action in accepting the resignation of a naval cadet after the resignation has taken effect. The cadet having declared his purpose to resign, and the Secretary of the Navy having signified his acquiescence in that purpose, the result was a complete severance of the cadet's connection with the Academy, and as much a vacancy there as if the cadet had died. The consent of the parties to the act of resignation could not be recalled except by the reappointment of the same person as cadet in conformity to sections 1514 and 1515, Revised Statutes. It follows that the attempted consent of the Secretary of the Navy to the withdrawal of the cadet's resignation after acceptance thereof did not reinstate and restore such cadet to the Academy, but had no legal effect whatever. (19 Op. Att'y. Gen., 350.)

The appointment of a midshipman was revoked because of accumulated demerits, and the revocation duly promulgated. An officer who has resigned or been dismissed can not be restored to the office formerly held by him except by reappointment. Accordingly, held that the Secretary of the Navy has no authority to reinstate to the Naval Academy a midshipman whose appointment has been revoked because of accumulated demerits and the revocation thereof duly promulgated. (25 Op. Att'y. Gen., 579.)

For other cases see notes to sections 1515, 1517, and 1519, Revised Statutes.

Recommendation of Member of Congress later unseated.—The notice provided for by section 1514, Revised Statutes, as amended, was intended to be given to the Member of Congress actually sitting, and the recommendation provided for by said section was intended to be made by such member, and action duly taken thereon should not be affected by any subsequent event except the failure of the nominee to pass his examination. Accordingly, held that a cadet nominated to the Naval Academy upon the recommendation of a Member of the House of Representatives who, since the recommendation and nomination, has been unseated by contest of election can not be lawfully deprived of his place if he passes his examination. The Secretary of the Navy is not authorized to revoke such a nomination and notify the newly seated Member that a vacancy exists. He has no right to call for a new recommendation except under section 1516, Revised Statutes, when the candidate fails to pass his examination. Until a decision is made which unseats them, Members of Congress whose seats are contested are considered to be in all respects endowed with the same rights, powers, and privileges as other members. Even if the Secretary had not acted upon the recommendation until after the Member who made it was unseated, his nomination thereon would be perfectly legal and valid. This was held in 10 Op. Att'y. Gen., 46, in which it was said that the Secretary has power to appoint any one who stands recommended by a Member of Congress who was, at the time he recommended, representing the district in which the applicant resides. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 342.)

Date of notice and recommendation.—Section 1514, Revised Statutes, was amended by act of July 26, 1894, providing that notice shall be given by the Secretary of the Navy "as soon after the fifth of March in each year as possible." The date named in the statute was undoubtedly chosen with reference to the meeting of Congress. The requirement of prompt notice was due to manifest reasons of public policy. The object was not so much to confer a privilege on the Members of Congress as to insure full classes of cadets. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 342.)

Beginning with the foundation of the Government, never departed from and now having the force of law, the life of each Congress comes to an end at noon on the 4th day of March. An act approved March 2, 1895, authorized Members of Congress to recommend cadets to fill vacancies existing at the Naval Academy, such nominations to be made on or before March 4, 1895. This act was intended to apply to Members of the then existing Fifty-third Congress. To be valid it was essential that a recommendation should be made before 12 o'clock noon of March 4, 1895. Accordingly, held that three recommendations, dated March 4, 1895, but not received at the Navy Department until March 5, 1895, were ineffective, notwithstanding that one of said recommendations was signed at 11.30 a. m. and handed to the Assistant Secretary of the Navy about 9 o'clock in the evening of March 4, 1895; therefore said recommendations did not deprive the successors in office of the signers of the general privileges granted to them by Revised Statutes, sections 1513 and 1514. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 164.)

March 6, 1878, a Member of Congress was informed, as required by section 1514, Revised Statutes, of a vacancy at the Naval Academy for the appointment of a cadet midshipman from his district and was requested to recommend a candidate to fill the vacancy; he did so and the candidate failed in June, 1878, to pass the required examination. On June 29, 1878, the Member of Congress was, as required by section 1516, Revised Statutes, informed of the failure of said candidate to pass the required examination and was requested to recommend another to be examined in September following; he did so recommend and the candidate failed on examination in September, 1878. The times for the examination of candidates as fixed by the Regulations are

June 11 and September 22 of each year. Held, that the next recommendation of a cadet-midshipman for the vacancy in question should be made after March 5, 1879. Section 1515, Revised Statutes, is to be read as if the dates fixed by the Regulations of the Academy had been expressly inserted therein; accordingly, the season for recommendations and nominations of cadet-midshipmen begins after March 5 and expires on September 22 of each year; although a casual perusal of section 1514 might suggest that the date, "fifth day of March," therein contained applies only to the notice spoken of and does not prevent the recommendation from being made sooner, in case the member has otherwise been informed of the vacancy. While it may be conceded that a previous notification is not essential to the validity of a recommendation, it seems that the date is so. The effect of the law was to postpone the operation of the enactment until the coming-in of a new Congress, and to establish a process by which the Members of that Congress, and of all others, might control the appointment of cadet-midshipmen made during their respective terms of office. Accordingly, held that in this case the Member of Congress has not the right, prior to March 5, 1879, to recommend another candidate for examination in June, 1879, or for examination at once. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 621, modifying 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 46.)

The naval appropriation act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 578), relating to appointments to the Naval Academy, provided that "the candidates allowed for the District of Columbia and all the candidates appointed at large, together with alternates therefor, shall be selected by the President within the period herein prescribed for nomination of other candidates," that is, by the 4th day of March of the year following that in which written notice is given, etc. This clause was followed by a proviso that "the President may select a candidate for the District of Columbia for the year nineteen hundred and eight." This additional authority granted by the proviso was exercised by the President by selecting a candidate for the District of Columbia for the year 1908. Held that the power of the President, granted by this proviso, was thereby exhausted, and the candidate having failed on his examination the President is not authorized, by virtue of that clause, to reappoint him or to otherwise exercise the power conferred upon him by that proviso. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 420.)

Recommendation of alternates.—Under the system followed by the Navy Department the nomination of alternates by a Representative in Congress is limited to vacancies for which designated by the Representative. Accordingly, where the principal and all alternates nominated for one vacancy failed upon examination, new nominations are required and the vacancy can not be filled by the appointment of a successful alternate designated by the same Representative for another vacancy, where such alternate was not also designated as alternate for the vacancy first mentioned. Where two vacancies exist at the same time the same alternates can be designated for each principal candidate, but unless this is done the alternates have no claim to consideration for any vacancy other than that for which designated. In this case the candidate and his three alternates having failed, and in the meantime the Representative who made the nomination having gone out of office, the vacancy was properly filled upon nomination of his successor, and the candidate finally appointed should be entered in the records as having been appointed upon the recommendation of the latter, notwithstanding it so happened that the successful candidate was one of the alternates designated by the former Representative to fill a different vacancy. (File 5252-128, Oct. 17, 1919.)

Oath of office.—The form of oath to be taken by midshipmen is that prescribed by section 1757, Revised Statutes, and not that prescribed by article 2 of the Articles of War (sec. 1342, R. S.) for enlisted men of the Army, which is made applicable to enlisted men of the Navy by section 25 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004). (File 5252-28: 1, Aug. 25, 1909.)

Sec. 1515. [Examination of candidates.] All candidates for admission into the Academy shall be examined according to such regulations and at such stated times as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe. Candidates rejected at such examination shall not have the privilege of another examination for admission to the same class, unless recommended by the board of examiners.—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 11, v. 12, p. 585. 17 April, 1866, c. 45, s. 5, v. 14, p. 38.)

Time of examination.—Section 1515, Revised Statutes, is to be read as if the dates fixed by the regulations of the Academy had been expressly inserted therein. Where the dates fixed by the regulations were June 11 and September 22 of each year, and under section 1514, Revised Statutes, as amended, the date for notifying Representatives of vacancies to be filled was "as soon after the fifth of March in each year as possible," the result was that the season for recommendations and nominations began after March 5 and expired on September 22, of each year; accordingly held that a Member of Congress whose candidate had failed on examination in September, 1878, did not have the right in January, 1879, to recommend another candidate for special examination at once, or for the regular examination in June, 1879, but that such recommendation could not be made until after March 5, 1879. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 621, modifying 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 46.)

Where the regulations of the Academy provided for mental examinations to be held in April and June of each year, and a physical examination for those who qualified mentally, held that a special examination in February would be in advance of the time provided under the statute; accordingly a number of midshipmen who were dropped as a result of the semiannual examination at the Academy could not be, although renominated, reappointed in February upon passing a successful physical examination and granted leave of absence with pay until the summer course at the Academy beginning the 1st of July. (File 313-20, Feb. 14, 1907.)

Power of Secretary of the Navy with respect to examinations.—By section 1515 of the Revised Statutes full power is given the Secretary of the Navy over examinations for admission. So far as the details of the examinations are concerned, the Secretary may, if he chooses, fix them. (36 J. A. G. letter book, 195, Mar. 19, 1907.)

Conformably to the authority granted the Secretary of the Navy by section 1515, Revised Statutes, it has been made a requirement that candidates for appointment must "be of good moral character." In the case of a midshipman who had been dismissed from the Naval Academy for "intoxication and inaptitude," and who had other reports on record against him, the question of his eligibility for reappointment upon a new nomination is not one of law but of fact, viz, whether or not his dismissal from the Naval Academy and the cause thereof, together with his record while at the institution, indicates that he is not of sufficiently "good moral character" to be readmitted as a midshipman. (File 5252-43, Oct. 5, 1911.)

Reinstatement of midshipmen.—An appointee is none the less a "candidate for admission" subject to examination under sections 1515 and 1516, Revised Statutes, and the regulations, because he has already been a member or inmate of the Academy. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 585.)

Where the resignation of a naval cadet has taken effect, he can not be reinstated except by reappointment as cadet in conformity to sections 1514 and 1515, Revised Statutes. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 350.)

In the matter of reappointment, midshipmen who were dropped as a result of the semiannual examination at the Academy, and are renominated, stand on the same footing as candidates for first appointment to the Academy. (File 313-20, Feb. 14, 1907.)

Whether a midshipman dismissed from the Naval Academy is eligible for reappointment so far as his moral character is concerned is a question of fact to be ascertained upon examination pursuant to the requirements prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy under section 1515, Revised Statutes. (File 5252-43, Oct. 5, 1911.)

For other cases see notes to sections 1514, 1517, and 1519, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1516. [Second recommendation.] When any candidate who has been nominated upon the recommendation of a Member or Delegate of the House of Representatives is found, upon examination, to be physically or mentally disqualified for admission, the Member or Delegate shall be notified to recommend another candidate, who shall be examined according to the provisions of the preceding section.—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 11, v. 12, p. 585. 17 July, 1866, c. 45, s. 5, v. 14, p. 38.)

Second recommendation authorized only in cases specified.—Where a cadet was nominated to the Naval Academy upon the recommendation of a Member who was later unseated by contest of election, the Secretary of the Navy can not revoke such nomination and notify the newly seated Member that a vacancy occurs; he has no right to call for a new recommendation, except under section 1516, Revised Statutes, when the candidate fails to pass his examination. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 342.)

or of such Member contended that the appointment was null and void for the reason that the appointee did not possess the statutory qualifications, held that if this contention could be sustained and the midshipman removed, the vacancy thus existing could be filled, under the statute, only by the selective appointment of the Secretary; there would happen no case for nomination or recommendation by the Representative from the district to which such midshipman had been credited. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 180.)

Sec. 1517. [Qualifications.] Candidates allowed for congressional districts, for Territories, and for the District of Columbia must be actual residents of the districts or Territories, respectively, from which they are nominated. And all candidates must, at the time of their examination for admission, be between the ages of fourteen and eighteen years, and physically sound, well formed, and of robust constitution.—(14 July, 1862, c. 164, s. 9, v. 12, p. 565. 16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 11, v. 12, p. 585. 1 April, 1864, c. 47, s. 2, v. 13, p. 39.)

Amendments to this section were made by act of March 2, 1889, section 2 (25 Stat., 879), which provided that "after the fourth day of March, eighteen hundred and eighty-nine, the minimum age of admission of cadets to the academy shall be fifteen years and the maximum age twenty years;" by act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1198), which provided that "after January first, nineteen hundred and four, all candidates for admission to the Naval Academy at the time of their examination must be between the ages of sixteen and twenty years;" and by act of May 14, 1918 (40 Stat., 550), which provided that "hereafter all candidates for admission to the Naval Academy must be not less than sixteen years of age nor more than twenty years of age on April first of the calendar year in which they enter the academy: Provided, That the foregoing shall not apply to candidates for midshipmen designated for entrance to the academy in nineteen hundred and eighteen."

Qualifications for appointments from enlisted men of the Navy: See laws noted under section 1513, Revised Statutes.

Not mandatory that candidate possessing required qualifications be appointed.—While the law says that a candidate must have undergone a successful examination and possess certain other qualifications before he can be admitted to the academy, it does not say that a candidate possessing those qualifications must be admitted. It is by the act and permission of the Secretary alone that a candidate having all the qualifications is admitted to the academy. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 350. See also note to sec. 1514, R. S.)

Reinstatement of midshipman.—The ages prescribed by law for admission to the Naval Academy apply as well to one who has already been a member of the Naval Academy as to a new appointee. (File 5252-43:1, May 7, 1913.)

A midshipman at the Naval Academy who, being found deficient in studies, presented his resignation, which was accepted, can not be reappointed to fill the vacancy thus created if he is above the statutory age limit for original appointment. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 585.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 1514, 1515, and 1519, Revised Statutes.

Qualifications can not be reexamined after appointment.—A nominee for the office of midshipman in the Navy, whose qualifications have been regularly certified to by a Representative in Congress, who has passed the necessary mental and physical examinations and received and accepted the appointment, can not, in the absence of fraud, be deprived of that office on the ground that he was not an actual resident of the congressional district whence he was appointed, although it should afterwards appear that he was not such an actual resident. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 180.)

The eligibility of a nominee having been determined by a former Secretary of the Navy, that action, in the absence of fraud, must be regarded as final and not subject to reexamination under a subsequent administration. (28

Op. Atty. Gen., 180; see also note to sec. 417, R. S.)

A statute which empowers an officer or tribunal to appoint a person having certain qualifications confers upon that officer or tribunal the power to determine the qualifications and eligibility of the appointee. In this case the law gives the Secretary of the Navy sole jurisdiction to hear, determine, and adjudge all questions of qualifications, and his decision is final in the absence of some provision for appeal or review. When the decision of the Secretary of the Navy is made and promulgated, his determination becomes final and is res judicata of all that is involved. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 180.)

Age requirements can not be waived.—As the age qualifications are fixed by law, the executive is without authority to waive the statutory provisions on the subject. If it could be shown that action had been taken in any case contrary to law, such action could not be regarded as a precedent. (File 5252-43:1, May 7, 1913.)

Determination of qualifications by Representative making recommendation.—The statutory requirements as to residence and age are as much directed to and obligatory upon the Representative making the nomination as they are with respect to the Secretary of the Navy in making the appointment. His infinitely better means and greater facilities for ascertaining whether the nominee is a resident of his district recommends this practice; and his interest in his constituents, many of whom would desire this place for their young sons, should insure due care that no mere squatter or sojourner by his recommendation should step into the place to which one of them is entitled. Accordingly, the Secretary of the Navy is not derelict in duty when he assumes that such Representative has performed his duty and reported correctly upon the qualifications and eligibility of the nominee; and it is not an unreasonable practice for the Navy Department to devolve upon the Representative in Congress the duty of ascertaining and reporting with his nomination that the nominee has the required qualifications, including that of residence; and to act upon his statement unless something to the contrary appears. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 180.)

Requirements as to residence.—The words, "an actual and bona fide resident of the State, Congressional district, or Territory in which the vacancy will exist," employed in the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 578—noted under sec. 1514, R. S.), providing for the nomination of midshipmen for admission to the Naval Academy, require the appointee to be "actually domiciled" in the State where he is appointed; this, however, does not necessarily mean actual physical presence. A naval officer whose home is at Athens, N. Y., but who has for some time past been stationed in Portsmouth, N. H., is a legal resident and voter in Athens, N. Y., which is also the actual bona fide residence of his minor son, notwithstanding the latter has for several years been living with his father and physically present at Portsmouth, N. H. The son is therefore eligible for nomination upon recommendation of the Senator from New York, by whom this question was raised. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 41.)

Section 1517, Revised Statutes, requires that candidates must be "actual residents" of the districts or territories from which they are nominated. The act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 578), provides that candidates shall be "actual and bona fide" residents of the State, congressional district, or Territory in which the vacancy will exist. It is manifest that the main purpose of this requirement of residence is the fair distribution of these appointments among the several States, Territories, congressional districts, and the District of Columbia, and to that end to prohibit the filling of a vacancy in one by a resident of another. But the statutes require that candidates must be between specified ages, so that the question is confined to the residence of an infant. It is well settled that the residence of a minor son is that of his father, and that this continues even after the death of the father until the minor acquires in some way another legal residence. Therefore, if the father of a nominee is a resident of the locality in which the vacancy is about to occur, that residence is also the residence of his minor son. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 41.)

The minor son of an Army officer stationed for the last two years at Governor's Island, N. Y., who has been physically present and attending school in New York City, is not an actual and bona fide resident of the State of New York, but of Virginia, which is the legal residence of his parent, unless he has become entitled to or attempted to establish an actual residence separate and apart from his father; and is not, therefore, eligible for nomination upon recommendation of the Senator from New York, by whom this question was raised. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 41.)

Requirements as to age.—The words "between the ages of fourteen and seventeen," in the act of July 16, 1862, section 11, regulating appointments to the Naval Academy, are unambiguous and too plain for construction. A boy who happens to be below 14 years of age or above 17 is certainly not between those ages; there is no "rigor" in the case, but only a fixing of a qualification of age, as the Constitution does in regard to the President and the members of both houses of Congress; accordingly all who have "attained to seventeen years of age" are excluded from appointment. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 315; see also note to sec. 1370, R. S., concerning age of candidates for appointment as naval officers.)

Sec. 1518. [Appropriations, how applied.] No money appropriated for the support of the Naval Academy shall be applied to the support of any midshipman appointed otherwise than in strict conformance with the provisions of this chapter.—(21 May, 1864, c. 93, s. 1, v. 13, p. 84.)

Sec. 1519. [Midshipmen found deficient.] Cadet midshipmen found deficient at any examination shall not be continued at the Academy or in the service unless upon the recommendation of the academic board.—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 11, v. 12, p. 585. 23 June, 1874, c. 453, v. 18, p. 203.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of June 5, 1920 (41 Stat., 1028), which provided "that until otherwise provided by law no midshipman found deficient at the close of the last and succeeding academic terms shall be involuntarily discontinued at the Naval Academy or in the service unless he shall fail upon reexamination in the subjects in which found deficient at an examination to be held at the beginning of the next and succeeding academic terms, and the Secretary of the Navy shall provide for the special instruction of such midshipmen in the subjects in which found deficient during the period between academic terms."

"Cadet-midshipmen," title changed to "naval cadets" and later changed to "midshipmen" by laws noted under section 1512, Revised Statutes.

Court-martial of midshipmen.—By act of June 23, 1874 (18 Stat., 203), it was provided that "in all cases where it shall come to the knowledge of the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, at Annapolis, that any cadet-midshipman or cadet-engineer has been guilty of the offense commonly known as hazing, it shall be the duty of said Superintendent to order a court-martial, composed of not less than three commissioned officers, who shall minutely examine into all the facts and circumstances of the case and make a finding thereon; and any cadet-midshipman or cadet-engineer found guilty of said offense by said court shall, upon recommendation of said court be dismissed; and such finding, when approved by said Superintendent, shall be final; and the cadet so dismissed from said Naval Academy shall be forever ineligible to reappointment to said Naval Academy."

Court-martial of midshipmen.—By act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 838), it was provided "that the Secretary of the Navy shall have power to convene general courts-martial for the trial of naval cadets, subject to the same limitations and conditions now existing as to other general courts-martial, and to approve the proceedings and execute the sentences of such courts, except the sentences of suspension and dismissal, which, after having been approved by the Superintendent, shall not be carried into effect until confirmed by the President."

Court-martial of midshipmen.—By act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1198), it was provided "that the superintendent of the Naval Academy shall make such rules, to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy, as will effectually prevent the practice of hazing; and any cadet found guilty of participating in or encouraging or countenancing such practice shall be summarily expelled from the Academy, and shall not thereafter be reappointed to the corps of cadets or be eligible for appointment as a commissioned officer in the Army or Navy or Marine Corps until two years after the graduation of the class of which he was a member." (See 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 543, noted below.)

Dismissal without court-martial.—By act of April 9, 1906, section 1 (34 Stat., 104), it was provided "that it shall be the duty of the Superintendent of the United States Naval Academy, whenever he shall believe the continued presence of any midshipman at the said academy to be contrary to the best interests of the service, to report in writing such fact, with a full statement of the facts upon which are based his reasons for such belief, to the Secretary of the Navy, who, if after due consideration of the said report he shall deem the superintendent's said belief reasonable and well founded, shall cause a copy of the said report to be served upon the said midshipman and require the said midshipman to show cause, in writing and within such time as the said Secretary shall deem reasonable, why he should not be dismissed from the said academy; and after due consideration of any cause so shown the said Secretary may, in his discretion, but with the written approval of the President, dismiss such midshipman from the said academy. And the truth of any issue of fact so raised, except upon the record of demerit, shall be determined by a board of inquiry convened by the Secretary of the Navy under the rules and regulations for the government of the Navy."

Hazing, punishment for.—The act of April 9, 1906 (34 Stat., 104, 105), contains the following provisions: "Sec. 2. That so much of the Acts approved June twenty-third, eighteen hundred and seventy-four, and March third, nineteen hundred and three, as requires the Superintendent of the United States Naval Academy to convene a court-martial in all cases when it shall come to the knowledge of the said superintendent that any midshipman has been guilty of the offense commonly known as 'hazing,' and declares the finding of a court-martial so convened, when approved by the said superintendent, final, and directs that any midshipman found guilty by such court-martial shall be summarily dismissed from the said academy, and also all other Acts or parts of Acts inconsistent with the present Act are hereby repealed, and that the offense known as 'hazing' may hereafter be proceeded against, dealt with, and punished as offenses against good order and discipline and for violation and breaches of the rules of said academy. But no midshipman shall be dismissed for a single act of hazing except under the provisions of section three of this Act.

"Sec. 3. That the Superintendent of the United States Naval Academy may, in his discretion and with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, cause any midshipman in the said academy to be tried by court-martial for the offense of hazing, as provided by the Act approved June twenty-third, eighteen hundred and seventy-four, and such court-martial, upon conviction, may sentence such midshipman to any punishment authorized by the said Act or by the Act approved March third, nineteen hundred and three, or authorized for any violation or breach of the rules of the said academy by the said rules, or, in cases of brutal or cruel hazing may, in addition to dismissal, sentence such midshipman to imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year: Provided, That such midshipman shall not be confined in a military or naval prison or elsewhere with men who have been convicted of crimes or misdemeanors; and such finding and sentence shall be subject to review by the convening authority and by the Secretary of the Navy, as in the cases of other courts-martial.

"Sec. 4. That the offense of 'hazing,' as mentioned in this Act, shall consist of any unauthorized assumption of authority by one midshipman over another midshipman whereby the last-mentioned midshipman shall or may suffer or be exposed to suffer any cruelty, indignity, humiliation, hardship, or oppression, or the deprivation or abridgment of any right, privilege, or advantage to which he shall be legally entitled.

"Sec. 5. That it shall be the duty of every professor, assistant professor, academic officer, or any cadet officer or cadet petty officer, or instructor, as well as every other officer stationed at the United States Naval Academy, to promptly report to the superintendent thereof any fact which comes to his attention tending to indicate any violation by a midshipman or midshipmen of any of the provisions of this Act or any violation of the regulations of the said academy. Any naval officer attached to the academy who shall fail to make such report as provided in this section shall be tried by court-martial for neglect of duty and if convicted he shall be dismissed from the service. Any civilian instructor attached to the academy who shall fail to make such report as provided in this section shall be dismissed by the superintendent of the academy upon the approval of the Secretary of the Navy."

Act of June 5, 1920, construed.—The act of June 5, 1920 (above quoted), in so far as it is not retroactive, is amendatory of section 1519, Revised Statutes, and provides for a second examination of the midshipmen found deficient at the examination at the close of the term, before the Academic Board shall pass upon the question of whether they shall be continued at the academy. It applies equally to the annual and semiannual examinations for the expression

"term" and not "year" is used in the act. (32 Op. Att'y. Gen., 294.)

Under the Naval Academy Regulations the period intervening between the first term and second term of the academic year amounts to one day, which is Sunday, so that the amount of special instruction which could be imparted to midshipmen found deficient at the semiannual examination would be practically negligible, but an interpretation of the act requires that they be allowed to take a second examination. (32 Op. Att'y. Gen., 294.)

Midshipmen found deficient at the annual examinations at the close of the academic term, held May 24-29, 1920, whose retention at the academy or in the service had not been recommended by the Academic Board and whose resignations had been duly submitted and accepted by the Secretary of the Navy on June 1, 1920, are not entitled to the benefits of the act of June 5, 1920. The reinstatement of such midshipmen could not take place otherwise than by appointment by the Secretary of the Navy, and in so far as it is intended to affect such midshipmen the said act is contrary to the Constitution relating to appointment of officers of the United States (32 Op. Att'y. Gen., 294, citing 19 Op. Att'y. Gen., 350, U. S. v. Germaine, 99 U. S., 508, U. S. v. Monat, 124 U. S., 303, 307).

Academic Board.—The Academic Board was not of statutory creation. Like many other things connected with the Naval Academy it was a piece of "departmental legislation," but it has since been recognized by law. The "Regulations of the United States Naval Academy, 1867," page 10, chapter 2, under the heading, "Academic Board," declared that "the Academic Board shall be composed of the following officers: The superintendent; the commandant of midshipmen; four senior assistants to the commandant of midshipmen; and the heads of the departments of mathematics; steam engineering; astronomy, navigation, and survey; natural and experimental philosophy; ethics, and English studies; French language; Spanish language; drawing." It further provided that the Academic Board should be convened for the transaction of business at the call of the superintendent; that a majority of the voting members should constitute a quorum. Its duties were defined and appertained generally to the internal management of the Academy and the prosecution of studies. Among the statutes recognizing the Academic Board is section 1519, Revised Statutes, which is based upon an act passed July 16, 1862. (File 5146, June 23, 1906.)

Jurisdiction of Academic Board and Secretary of the Navy.—Sections 1519 and 1525, Revised Statutes, leave no right in the Secretary of the Navy to continue at the Academy cadets who have been found, at any examination, deficient in their studies, without the recommendation of the Academic Board. These sections appear to be wise and according to the reason of the thing; and in their absence it would only be in very rare and hardly conceivable instances that the "care and supervision" intrusted by article one (Regs. 1876) to the Secretary of the Navy could authorize an unrecommended revision of a sentence for deficiency. Pro re nata intervention by the Secretary would lead to insubordination on the part of students, and would become a fruitful parent of discord amongst the authorities of the Academy. (15 Op. Att'y. Gen., 634.)

Sections 1519 and 1525, Revised Statutes, expressly provide that cadet midshipmen and cadet engineers, or naval cadets as they are now all designated, "found deficient at any examination," shall not be continued at the Academy or in the service "except" or "unless" upon the recommendation of the Academic Board. A regulation of the Naval Academy to the same effect had been in force for some years when the legislation now embodied in those sections was enacted, and the reason for this interference of Congress was, no doubt, to prevent the bad effect on the discipline of the institution produced by the occasional, and perhaps not always well considered, interferences of the Navy Department with the operation of that executive regulation. (19 Op. Att'y. Gen., 302.)

Where certain naval cadets were found deficient at the semiannual examinations held at the Naval Academy in January 1889, and without the recommendation of the Academic Board were granted leave of absence by the Secretary of the Navy with permission to report to the Superintendent of the Academy to join the next fourth class: Held, that the Secretary had no power to continue these cadets in the Academy without the recommendation of the Academic Board. (19 Op. Att'y. Gen., 302.)

Whenever a midshipman is found deficient in his studies as the result of any examination, the determination of the Academic Board is final and conclusive. (File 5146-1, July 13, 1906.)

By section 1515, Revised Statutes, full power is given the Secretary of the Navy over examinations for admission: Held, that he also has power of final control over all other examinations. In the first instance the details of the examinations are naturally under the supervision of the Academic Board, which is a body recognized by the statutes. Clearly the Secretary has not the power to order the Academic Board to recommend the retention of a midshipman found deficient at any examination; but it would seem that, so far as the details of the examinations are concerned, the Secretary may, if he choose, fix them. (36 J. A. G. letter book, 195, Mar. 19, 1907.)

Deficiency in conduct.—It has been customary for the Academic Board to recommend the dropping, turning back, or retention of midshipmen by reason of conduct, simultaneously with similar recommendations founded upon proficiency or the reverse in their studies; but, while in the latter case the midshipmen are subjected to an examination and the results of this examination are highly material in determining the recommendations of the board, in the former case these recommendations are founded entirely upon the records of the midshipmen and no one is in fact "found deficient" in conduct "at any examination." Held, therefore, to be doubtful whether section 1519 ever applied to midshipmen found deficient in conduct; further held that, if applicable to such case, the act of April 9, 1906, section 1 (34 Stat., 104, quoted above), must be considered as repealing, pro tanto, section 1519. (File 5146-1, July 13, 1906.)

Whenever a midshipman is found deficient in his studies as the result of any examination, the determination of the Academic Board is final; when found deficient in conduct, the procedure prescribed by the act of April 9, 1906, must be followed. (File 5146-2, Feb. 13, 1907.)

It seems quite clear from the act of April 9, 1906, that among the grounds on which Congress expected midshipmen to be dismissed was an excess of demerits, since in the words of that act provision is evidently made for that very contingency. Nothing is said in this law as to the dismissal of midshipmen through the action of the Academic Board, but unless provision for such dismissal had been made in express and unequivocal terms in some law existing at the time of the enactment of said act, it would seem clear that, upon established principles of statutory construction, this method of dismissal for misconduct and the procedure incident thereto were intended by Congress to be exclusive of any others. (File 5146-1, July 13, 1906.)

Dismissal for accumulated demerits has always been treated by the Navy Department as dismissal for misconduct. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 579.)

Physical deficiency.—Under Revised Statutes, section 1519, providing that cadet midshipmen found deficient at any examination shall not be continued at the Academy unless upon the recommendation of the Academic Board, a cadet found physically ineligible for appointment in the Navy or Marine Corps has no right to remain at the Academy unless upon recommendation of the Academic Board. Where, under such circumstances, the Academic Board found the cadet proficient for the six years' course and complimented him with a certificate of graduation, he having served nearly the required six years, and the Secretary of the Navy discharged him from the service on the same date on account of physical disability, he is technically a graduate but not entitled to one year's pay under the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 284, quoted under sec. 1522, R. S.), notwithstanding there was at the time of his discharge a surplus of graduates for whom no vacancies existed in the lower grades. (Potter v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cls., 13.)

A midshipman found deficient in any examination and not having the recommendation of the Academic Board has no right to remain at the Academy. One who graduated from the Academy after the act of March 7, 1912 (37 Stat., 73, reducing the course to four years), but "on leave of absence awaiting physical reexamination to determine fitness for commission as ensign," is in the pay status of a midshipman at the Academy and entitled to pay at $600 per annum, provided he is continued in the service upon the recommendation of the Academic Board. (20 Comp. Dec., 141.)

A midshipman completed the six years' course and was found proficient by the Academic Board on examination for final graduation, but deficient by the medical examining board, and was continued in the service until it could be determined whether his disability was of a permanent or temporary nature. He finally passed his physical examination and was appointed ensign. Paragraph 169 of the Regulations of the United States Naval Academy, 1909, enumerates the subjects which the examination for final graduation shall embrace, but such enumeration does not include a physical examination. Paragraph 167 provides that "no midshipman shall pass from a lower to a higher class, perform the two years' service afloat, or be appointed in the lower grades of any branch of the service until he shall have been examined by a board of not less than three medical officers of the Navy and pronounced physically qualified to perform all his duties." Held, that the successful passing of a physical examination is not a prerequisite to the final graduation of a midshipman, but is merely a condition precedent to his promotion or appointment in the lowest grades of the line of the Navy and Marine Corps, and therefore in this case the midshipman finally graduated with his class at the termination of his six years' course, and that the date of his final graduation was the same date as the final graduation of his class. (16 Comp. Dec., 734.)

Naval cadets who were found mentally and professionally qualified upon the graduating examination of their class are entitled to a certificate of graduation notwithstanding that they were reported as physically disqualified for the naval service. There is no authority in the law for stating their physical disqualification in the certificates to be given them, for the reason that physical condition does not enter into the idea of graduation except in so far as graduation presupposes a sound physical condition at the time of admission to the Academy. Such a statement would be objectionable as out of place, which is alone a good reason for omitting it. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 358.)

See below, "Deficiency upon examination for commission."

Deficiency upon examination for commission.—The recommendation of the Academic Board, that a midshipman found deficient upon examination for appointment as ensign be dropped from the service, is not final. The laws providing for the appointment of ensigns do not confer exclusive powers upon the Academic Board; section 1519, Revised Statutes, is properly limited to "academic examinations," and does not extend to the final examination which is to determine the midshipman's fitness for a commission in the Navy. That section was passed in the interest of efficient administration and internal discipline of the Naval Academy, and should not be read into the laws providing for the appointment of ensigns. A contrary conclusion would deprive the constitutional appointing power of all jurisdiction over the qualifications of candidates for appointment as ensigns. Held, therefore, that the recommendation of the Academic Board in this case may be disapproved and the midshipman continued in the service until further reports on fitness in his case may be received and considered by the department. (File 5252-36, May 5, 1910.)

A midshipman who develops a physical defect, which it is anticipated might in the future incapacitate him for duty in the Navy, may legally tender his resignation, undated, and place same in the hands of the department with request that same be dated and accepted if he should be subsequently found incapacitated for service or for promotion by reason of said physical defect or the sequelæ thereof; and upon so tendering his undated resignation said physical defect may be waived and a commission issued to him as ensign. The dating and accepting of said resignation upon the occurrence of the condition stated would be entirely legal. (File 5252-50, May 14, 1912, citing Mimmack's Case, 12 Op. Atty. Gen., 555, 10 Ct. Cls., 584, 97 U. S., 426. See also file Nos. 13261-163-170 concerning waivers of rights to pensions, retirement, etc., by candidates for appointment as second lieutenants in the Marine Corps.)

The final graduation of midshipmen occurs two years from the date of their formal graduation from the four years' course, and a midshipman who, when the date of final graduation arrived, was qualified for final graduation aside from a failure to pass in some subjects of professional examination, and who subsequently qualified in those subjects and was given a certificate of final graduation became a graduated midshipman from said date of final graduation. (17 Comp. Dec., 298.)

See above, "Physical deficiency."

Suspension of midshipman without pay.—Where it is within the power of the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President, to dismiss a midshipman, he may, with the approval of the President, suspend such midshipman for one year without pay for due cause. Since the power to suspend is derived from the power to dismiss absolutely, only such midshipmen as may be subject to dismissal can be so suspended. (C. M. O. 31-1915, citing file 5252-72, Sept. 20, 1915.)

A midshipman suspended for one year under an order of the Secretary of the Navy, with the written approval of the President, which order stated that said suspension was "without pay," is debarred from all the privileges and benefits of his office during said period, including commutation of rations; during the year of suspension the midshipman is practically in the status of one dismissed. (Comp. Dec., Nov. 13, 1915, 177 S. and A. Memo., 3830.)

The Secretary of the Navy, with the approval in writing of the President, may suspend a midshipman for one year without pay for due cause, but only such midshipmen as are subject to dismissal can be so suspended. A midshipman can not be suspended for one year without pay except in mitigation of a legally authorized punishment involving dismissal. The law expressly provides that a midshipman can be dismissed for a single act of hazing only pursuant to the sentence of a court-martial. Since the Secretary of the Navy, acting for the President, can not directly dismiss a midshipman for one act of hazing without sentence of court-martial, it follows that he can not accomplish such dismissal by any indirect means; and if it were legal to suspend a midshipman without pay for one year in such case, it would be legal to suspend him without pay indefinitely, which would amount in effect to a dismissal. (File 5252-72 : 1, Sept. 21, 1915, affirming file 5252-72, Sept. 20, 1915.)

Where a cadet at the Military Academy had been recommended by the Academic Board to be discharged on account of deficiency in studies, the Secretary of War had power to grant such cadet leave of absence without pay; under the circumstances he might lawfully have discharged the cadet absolutely, and the placing of him on leave of absence was a minor exercise of the power of dismissal. The cadet's status thereby became that of an officer continued on the rolls without pay, instead of that of an officer dismissed absolutely and drawing no pay. (10 Comp. Dec., 795.)

See note to section 416, Revised Statutes, under "Suspension of employees."

Dismissal without court-martial.—Section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 36, restricting dismissal of officers of the Navy, does not extend to cadets at the Naval Academy, who may accordingly be dismissed from the Academy and from the naval service for misconduct without trial by court-martial. There are three sorts of officers known to the Navy, viz, commissioned, warrant, and petty (sec. 1410, R. S.); and inasmuch as petty officers may be discharged from the service with bad conduct discharge by sentence of a summary court-martial (sec. 1624, R. S., art. 30), it seems that by "officers" in article 36 is meant at most only warrant and commissioned officers. Cadets at the Naval Academy have neither warrants nor commissions; the object of the studies and discipline to which they are subjected during the whole of the course at the Academy is to fit them for appointment as midshipmen (sec. 1521, R. S.), the lowest commissioned grade of officers of the line (sec. 1362, R. S.), or as second assistant engineers (sec. 1394, R. S.), the lowest grade of officers of the Engineer Corps (sec. 1476, R. S.). They are themselves, by statutory definition, not to be included in general in legislation confined to "officers" of the Navy. In the early days of the Academy, when the students were merely a collection of midshipmen, this was different. The meaning of the word "cadet" is to the same effect. As a cadet-midshipman is, ex vi termini, not a midshipman, and a cadet-engineer not an engineer, so a cadet officer or a cadet, simply, is not an officer. Cadets at Annapolis are not liable to court-martial except under the act of 1874 for hazing (citing 1 Op. Atty. Gen., 276, holding that cadets at West Point are subject to court-martial only where expressly authorized by law), and therefore are not entitled to a privilege which, under article 36, is evidently given only to such as are liable in general to the jurisdiction of courts-martial. Accordingly, held that a regulation of 1876, providing that cadets are to be dismissed by the Secretary of the Navy for offenses other than hazing, is valid. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 634.)

The President has power to dismiss a delinquent midshipman from the Naval Academy for violation of the regulations, and that power is not restricted by sections 1229 and 1624 of the Revised Statutes. (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct.

(Cls., 324.) The Secretary of the Navy's action on February 7, 1905, in dismissing a midshipman from the Naval Academy for continued violation of the regulations regarding the use of tobacco, is presumed to have been the action of the President; particularly as the President appointed another to fill the vacancy, which appointment was signed by the Secretary of the Navy by direction of the President. (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324.)

Under the act of March 2, 1895, the Secretary is given power to convene courts-martial for the trial of naval cadets, but it is not mandatory, and the President has the power and authority to dismiss naval cadets, or "midshipmen," as they are now styled, without the intervention of trial by court-martial. (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324.)

The act of March 2, 1895, and the other laws relating to the Naval Academy have for many years been construed by the Navy Department to authorize the dismissal of students without trial by court-martial, which has often been done. Where the meaning of a statute is doubtful, the uniform and long-continued construction placed upon it by the department officers charged with its execution is entitled to much weight. (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324.)

It will not be contended that a midshipman at the Naval Academy can not be dismissed, or "not continued therein," which is the same thing, for deficiency at an examination without a trial by court-martial; and if the Academic Board can do this, the President can dismiss a midshipman because of a deficiency in conduct, as insubordination or disobedience of orders, particularly when the regulations so provide. (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324.)

That students at the Naval Academy are and always have been in the naval service in some capacity has never been doubted, and it was decided in Cook v. United States (128 U. S., 254) that they were "officers" of the United States within the meaning of the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 473), respecting longevity pay of officers of the Navy. In the case of Morton v. United States (112 U. S., 1), under a similar statute providing longevity pay, it was held that the time of service of a military cadet at West Point is to be regarded as "actual service in the Army." In Hartigan v. United States (196 U. S., 169, 38 Ct. Cls., 346) the claimant was summarily dismissed from the West Point Military Academy for misconduct, and it was held, both in the Court of Claims and in the Supreme Court that he was not an officer within the meaning of section 1229, Revised Statutes, and hence could be dismissed without trial and conviction by court-martial. It is not believed that the law, properly construed, makes any distinction in this respect between midshipmen at the Naval Academy and cadets at the Military Academy. Neither of them holds either a commission or a warrant; both are appointed by the President; those at the Military Academy are called cadets, and those at the Naval Academy are now called midshipmen. There may have been a time in the history of the Government when a midshipman should have been regarded as an officer within the meaning of section 1229, Revised Statutes, and when the students at the Naval Academy were on a different footing in that regard than the students at the Military Academy; but now there are no midshipmen except those appointed to the Naval Academy and undergoing instruction therein or in connection therewith. Under section 1519 midshipmen found deficient at any examination may be dropped from the service. Under section 1547 the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President, may issue regulations and instructions for the Navy, and the regulations of the Naval Academy providing for the dismissal of midshipmen were presumably made pursuant to such power. (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324.)

In the case of Hartigan v. United States (196 U. S., 169, 38 Ct. Cls., 346), which held that a cadet at the Military Academy was not an officer within the meaning of section 1229, both courts in their opinions point out a clear distinction between service at the Academy and in the Army, and that while the military cadets are a part of the Army they are not officers of the Army, but rather are undergoing instruction to become such; and in the opinion of the Court of Claims this significant expression occurs: "These appointments (to the Academy) are made by the President without the advice and consent of the Senate, and it seems plain that Congress did not intend by any legislation that had been enacted to withhold from him the power of summary dismissal for the good of the academy, for such a power can wisely be left to his discretion." (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324.)

The case of Perkins v. United States (116 U. S., 483, 20 Ct. Cls., 438), where the claimant entered the academy as a cadet-engineer and after graduation therefrom was held by both courts to be an officer within the meaning of section 1229, Revised Statutes, differs from that of an undergraduate midshipman at the Naval Academy, in that the former was appointed pursuant to sections 1522-1525, Revised Statutes, then in force, which required some technical knowledge before admission; that he had graduated from the Naval Academy and had served in the Navy two years under orders; that the course then prescribed for cadet-engineers was four years (sec. 1524, R. S.), so that he was no longer a cadet and necessarily must have been an officer of some grade, and by his pay had been so recognized. It should also be remarked that it was conceded in the Perkins case that the claimant might have been dismissed for misconduct, under the provisions of section 1525, Revised Statutes, entirely independent of section 1229. (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324.)

In the case of Baker v. United States (125 U. S., 646), which held that the service of a midshipman at the Naval Academy was service as an "officer in the Navy," within the meaning of the statute providing for longevity pay, the Supreme Court in its opinion lays great stress upon the fact that the claimant at the time of his appointment to the Naval Academy was named as a "midshipman" pursuant to the law then in force, and that according to law then in force midshipmen were ninth in grade in the active list of the officers of the Navy. (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324.)

The controlling statutes on the subject relative to the Military Academy are not practically the same as those affecting the Naval Academy, but are essentially analogous and equivalent. As to both appointees it may, therefore, be said that the laws relating to courts-martial do not prevent dismissal for deficiency in studies or for misconduct. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 579.)

Prior to the act of April 9, 1906, a right to summarily dismiss midshipmen had been asserted and even exercised by successive Secretaries of the Navy, although it had recently been disputed. Almost simultaneously, however, with this enactment, the Court of Claims, in the case of Weller v. United States, decided April 2, 1906, sustained this right. It seems to the Navy Department quite clear that Congress intended by this law to limit the discretionary power of the Secretary of the Navy to summarily dismiss midshipmen, and to provide one uniform method of procedure by which midshipmen should be dismissed from the academy for misconduct. (File 5146-1, July 13, 1906.)

The Secretary of the Navy, with the written approval of the President, has the power to dismiss midshipmen for due cause in any case except that in which the cause consists in a "single act of hazing." A midshipman who is recommended for punishment for a "single act of hazing" is thus in the unique position, as compared with other offenses against Naval Academy regulations, of being protected by statute against dismissal except by sentence of a court-martial. (File 5252-72, Sept. 20, 1915; C. M. O. 31-1915.)

The Secretary of the Navy, acting for the President, has the power to dismiss a midshipman for insubordination. This power, as sustained by the Court of Claims in the case of Weller v. United States, was not taken from him by the act of April 9, 1906 (34 Stat., 104), providing for the trial of midshipmen by court-martial for hazing. Furthermore, said act relates only to midshipmen "at the Naval Academy," and in this case the midshipman had completed his four years' course at the academy and was undergoing the two years' course at sea prior to final graduation. The dismissal of the midshipman in this case being legal, the records can not be changed so as to show that his resignation was accepted. (File 5252-60, Feb. 14, 1914.)

Section 1229 and article 36 of section 1624 of the Revised Statutes did not deprive Congress of power to make any provision for the removal of an officer, even by the Executive who appointed him. It is not within the power of a legislature to deprive its successor of the power of repealing an act creating a public office. (Crenshaw v. U. S., 134 U. S., 99.)

See above, under "Deficiency in conduct."

Court-martial of midshipmen for hazing, etc.—Cadets at Annapolis are not liable to court-martial except under the act of 1874, for hazing. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 634, citing 1 Op. Atty. Gen., 276, holding that cadets at West Point are subject to court-martial only as expressly authorized by law.)

The commands of the law of 1874 (June 23, 18 Stat., 203), are imperative and require that in all cases where it shall come to the knowledge of the superintendent of the Naval Academy that any midshipman is guilty of the offense commonly known as hazing, "it shall be the duty of said superintendent to order a court-martial." Under these circumstances, the superintendent has not the right to exercise a discretion as to whether he shall order a court-martial for the trial of certain midshipmen in whose case it has come to his knowledge, as the result of a preliminary examination through a board of officers, that they are guilty of the offense of hazing. It therefore only remains for him to order a court-martial for the purpose of trying them, and should they be either convicted or acquitted by such court-martial the responsibility resting upon the superintendent under the law will have been fully discharged. A determination of the question whether or not such conviction or acquittal could be successfully pleaded in bar of a criminal prosecution, instituted in the civil courts for an assault or other crime involved in the offense of hazing, could not in any possible manner aid the superintendent in the execution of the law. The superintendent or the Secretary might, without the least impropriety, after such trials are had, bring all the facts to the attention of the United States attorney for the district of Maryland, in which event the question of jurisdiction of the civil authorities would become a question for the consideration of the Department of Justice. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 543.)

The act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1198), does not confer upon the superintendent of the Naval Academy or the Secretary of the Navy, or upon both conjointly, the power summarily to dismiss from the Academy without trial by court-martial a midshipman found guilty of the offense of hazing. That act is to be read in connection with the act of June 23, 1874 (18 Stat., 203), requiring the superintendent of the Naval Academy to order a court-martial in all cases of hazing which may come to his attention, and there is nothing in the later act showing a purpose upon the part of Congress to dispense with the formality of requiring a court-martial for the trial of a midshipman upon the charge of hazing. The phrase, "found guilty," appearing in the act of 1903, when read in connection with the act of 1874, refers to the finding of a court-martial and not of the superintendent or a board of officers other than a court-martial. This opinion should not be applied to cases other than hazing; it is unnecessary to decide that a midshipman may not, under certain circumstances, be summarily dismissed from the Naval Academy without first being tried by court-martial. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 543.)

The act of June 23, 1874 (18 Stat., 203), was in terms mandatory that a "court-martial" be ordered by the superintendent of the Naval Academy in any case of hazing which came to his knowledge; that the finding of such court, when approved by the superintendent, should be final; and that the accused, if found guilty, "shall, upon the recommendation of said court, be dismissed." The act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1198), required the superintendent of the Naval Academy to "make such rules, to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy, as will effectually prevent the practice of hazing;" and provided that any cadet "found guilty" of participating in, or encouraging or countenancing such practice, "shall be summarily expelled from the academy and shall not thereafter be appointed to the corps of cadets or be eligible for appointment as a commissioned officer in the Army or Navy or Marine Corps until two years after the graduation of the class of which he was a member." The effect of these statutes was to deprive the proper administrative officer of discretion in dealing with the offense of hazing at the Naval Academy; and to require that midshipmen charged with hazing be brought to trial by court-martial, to be followed upon conviction by summary dismissal. (File 26283-925, Sept. 4, 1915.)

By act of April 9, 1906 (34 Stat., 104), Congress repealed "so much of the acts approved June twenty-third, eighteen hundred and seventy-four and March third, nineteen hundred and three, as requires the superintendent of the United States Naval Academy to convene a court-martial in all cases when it shall come to the knowledge of the said superintendent that any midshipman has been guilty of the offense commonly known as 'hazing,' and declares the finding of a court-martial so convened, when approved by the said superintendent, final, and directs that any midshipman found guilty by such court-martial shall be summarily dismissed from the said Academy." By said act of 1906 it was further provided that "the offense known as 'hazing' may hereafter be proceeded against, dealt with, and punished as offenses against good order and discipline and for violation and breaches of the rules of said Academy." Thus Congress has removed the distinction previously made between hazing and other offenses committed by midshipmen. But one restriction is placed upon the discretion of the administrative officers in dealing with the offense of hazing, as distinguished from other offenses committed by midshipmen, and that is that "no midshipman shall be dismissed for a single act of hazing except under the provisions of section three of this act," viz, pursuant to the sentence of a court-martial as provided by the act of June 23, 1874. (File 26283-925, Sept. 4, 1915.)

Trial by court-martial is not now required in any case of hazing, it being left entirely to the discretion of the superintendent whether such trial shall be had. If the superintendent, in the exercise of the discretion thus expressly vested in him by the act of 1906, decides that a midshipman should be tried by court-martial for hazing, then the superintendent's decision must be approved by the Secretary of the Navy before the superintendent would be authorized to proceed under the act of 1874 to order a court-martial and cause the accused midshipman to be brought to trial. If the Secretary of the Navy approves the superintendent's decision that a trial be had, then the court-martial is not required, under the act of 1906, to impose a sentence of dismissal, but may sentence the accused, if convicted, to any punishment authorized by the act of June 23, 1874 or by the

If the accused is charged with only "a single act of hazing," and the superintendent decides not to bring him to trial by court-martial, or the Secretary of the Navy does not approve the superintendent's recommendation that such trial be had, then the law of 1906 says explicitly that he shall not be dismissed. He may, however, be punished by the superintendent in accordance with the rules of the academy, otherwise than by dismissal. (File 26283-925, Sept. 4, 1915.)

If the accused is guilty of more than "a single act of hazing," he may be dismissed without trial by court-martial; but in that event he must be proceeded against in accordance with section one of the act of 1906, which details the procedure to be followed in any case in which the superintendent "shall believe the continued presence of any midshipman at the said Academy to be contrary to the best interests of the service;" that is, there must be a written report by the superintendent, a reference of the report to the accused by the Secretary of the Navy, with opportunity for the accused to make written reply thereto, and the written approval of the President before the dismissal may be executed. In addition, if any issue of fact is raised by these proceedings, there must be a "board of inquiry" convened by the Secretary of the Navy to pass thereupon. (File 26283-925, Sept. 4, 1915.)

The words, "a single act of hazing," are to be taken in their literal sense. If an accused was guilty of but one "act" of hazing he can not be dismissed without trial, notwithstanding that several different persons may have been victims of the "single act." Thus, one order obeyed by several midshipmen would be only a "single act" of hazing, although it might legally be more than one offense. On the other hand, if one midshipman in hazing another gives several orders which are obeyed, this would constitute several "acts" although there was only one victim and the several distinct transactions occurred at the same place and very near each other in one continuing attempt to defy the law. (File 26283-925, Sept. 4, 1915.)

A midshipman who, while absent in a distant and foreign station, was nominated and confirmed to be an ensign, "subject to examination," but who was never examined, never became an ensign; and having in the meantime been brought to trial by court-martial, was properly tried as a midshipman. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 550.)

Cadets admitted to the Naval Academy on 10 May and 4 September, 1886, respectively, became naval cadets in the full sense of the term upon the dates named; they had, on those dates respectively, been duly nominated to the place, accepted the nomination, passed successfully the examination required by law, taken the oath prescribed for naval cadets, been assigned to and entered upon the discharge of the duty pertaining to the position and from those dates their salaries commenced. Their appointments, although not issued until the 11th of October, 1886, relate back by express recitals to these dates respectively, and are conclusive evidence of the appointments at the date aforesaid. The appointments accordingly took effect on 10 May and 4 September, 1886, so as to render them liable to trial by court-martial. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 507.)

The minority of some of the members of a court-martial which tried a midshipman and sentenced him to dismissal from the Navy does not invalidate the proceedings of the court-martial, notwithstanding that at common law minority might have been such an objection as would invalidate the verdict of a jury or a judgment thereon. Whatever effect this fact would have in a common law court, it has nothing to do with the action of a court-martial which exists by virtue of statute and regulations conformable thereto. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 550.)

To constitute the offense of hazing at the Naval Academy, under the act of June 23, 1874, chapter 453, it is essential that the victim should be a new cadet of the fourth class. The act does not define the offense against which the penalty is denounced. This is not unusual. Congress frequently affixes a penalty to a common law offense by name, without defining it. In such cases resort must be had to the common law to ascertain the ingredients of the offense. In this case the statute is local to the Naval Academy, and the offense named is unknown, either to the common or statutory law of the land. Naval cadets could not be guilty of an "offense" unless there was some rule or regulation prescribed by competent authority to be offended. Reference must therefore be had to the rules and regulations in force at the Naval Academy for a definition of the "offense commonly known as hazing." An exhaustive examination of the rules, regulations, and orders on the subject shows that to constitute the offense of hazing as understood at the time of this enactment it was essential that the victim of the maltreatment should be a new cadet of the fourth class. Accordingly, held that, unless the charge on which the cadet is arraigned alleges that the victim of the maltreatment or hazing was a new cadet of the fourth class, a court-martial organized under the statute would not have jurisdiction to try it. If the charge makes the allegation and the proof fails to maintain it, the court-martial should acquit the accused. A charge alleging that the victim of a cadet's maltreatment was a candidate for admission would not come within the jurisdiction of a court-martial organized under this statute, nor would proof that the victim was a candidate authorize conviction on a charge properly drawn. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 292.)

The act of 3 March, 1903 (32 Stat., 1198), provides that the superintendent of the Naval Academy shall make such rules "as will effectually prevent the practice of hazing," and that a "cadet found guilty of participating in or encouraging or countenancing such practice shall be expelled from the Academy." Hazing has such a well-known meaning that it need not be defined by rules under this statute; accordingly, the dismissal of a midshipman pursuant to a sentence of court-martial upon the charge of hazing was legal, the particular acts set forth as constituting such offense being enumerated in the specifications under said charge. (Melvin v. U. S., 45 Ct. Cls., 213.)

The regulations of the Naval Academy of 1876 described hazing as "molesting, annoying, ridiculing, maltreating, or assuming unauthorized authority over the new cadets of the fourth class" by the older cadets. A charge preferred against a midshipman for violation of the act of June 23, 1874, to prevent hazing at the Naval Academy was within the jurisdiction of the court-martial convened pursuant thereto, the specifications of the charge setting forth that the offense was committed upon "a cadet of the fourth class," named therein, and consisted of "pulling the nose" and "otherwise maltreating" and "striking at" and "otherwise annoying" the said cadet; it elsewhere appearing in the record that the person charged with the offense was then a cadet of the second class. Conceding that the case was one of "personal rencounter or fight" between the parties, and that the facts in evidence make out a case of that sort, this would go only to show that the decision of the court was wrong in convicting the accused, not that it acted without jurisdiction; but it was the duty of the court to determine the truth or falsity of the charge upon the testimony adduced, and its decision when regularly approved by the proper authority has the effect of a final judgment which can not be collaterally brought into question. Whether the decision was correct or erroneous could not affect the validity of the court's finding when regularly approved. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 376.)

A member of the fourth class at the Naval Academy who failed to pass his examinations and who was reappointed to the same class the following year was, during said year, as much an "older cadet" within the definition of the offense of "hazing" as a cadet who originally entered at the same time and had been advanced to a higher class. All who are not "new cadets of the fourth class" and therefore liable to be victims of "hazing," should be held to be "old cadets" and capable of being the perpetrators of the offense. The length of service at the Academy which takes a cadet out of the one category and into the other can not be determined by any general rule but must be governed by the local customs and traditions and the popular meaning of the terms. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 507.)

President's approval of sentence of dismissal or suspension.—The act of 23 June 1874 (18 Stat., 203), providing for the court-martial of cadet-midshipmen at the Naval Academy is not repealed by the act of 2 March 1895 (28 Stat., 838), which provides that sentences of suspension and dismissal approved by the superintendent "shall not be carried into effect until confirmed by the President." Accordingly, held that the dismissal of a midshipman upon sentence of a court-martial convened under the act of 1874, approved by the superintendent, was legal. (Melvin v. U. S., 45 Ct. Cls., 213.)

As a midshipman is neither a commissioned nor a warrant officer, a sentence of dismissal imposed by court-martial convened by the commander-in-chief of the Atlantic Fleet need not be submitted to the President for confirmation, but may be carried into execution upon confirmation of the officer ordering the court, as provided by article 53, Articles for the Government of the Navy (sec. 1621, R. S.); neither the President nor the Secretary of the Navy has lawful authority to approve or disapprove the sentence in such a case (citing 11 Op. Atty. Gen., 251). (File 26262-198, Nov. 13, 1908.)

As a midshipman is neither a commissioned nor warrant officer, it seems that he may be dismissed pursuant to a sentence of a court-martial without the express approval thereof by the President, unless there be some explicit statutory provision requiring such executive approval. (16 Op. J. A. G., 70, Nov. 2, 1911.)

In the case of a midshipman tried by general court-martial by order of the commander-in-chief of the Atlantic Fleet and sentenced to dismissal, the commander-in-chief having approved the proceedings, findings, and sentence, and stated that, "in conformity with article 53 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy (section 1624 of the Revised Statutes), the record is respectfully referred to the Secretary of the Navy for transmittal to the President," the action of the convening authority was approved by the Secretary of the Navy, October 6, 1909, with the statement that reference to the President is "unnecessary in the case of midshipmen." (G. C. M. Order No. 36, Oct. 13, 1909.)

It is to be noted that the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 838), which authorized the trial of midshipmen by "general courts-martial" (convened by the Secretary of the Navy) for any offense, provided that sentences of suspension and dismissal must be confirmed by the President before being executed. It may be contended that approval of the President is necessary before such sentences may be executed in hazing cases, where the court-martial is convened by the superintendent under the act of 1874. It would be advisable to have such sentences so confirmed, thus avoiding any question on this ground, although this is not believed to be necessary. (File 26283-925, Sept. 4, 1915; C. M. O. 31-1915.)

The notice to a midshipman by the Secretary of the Navy that the President had approved the sentence of a court-martial in 1868 dismissing him from the Navy is evidence both of approval and promulgation. The President acts through the Secretaries of War and of the Navy in such matters; a promulgation is not necessarily a publication in a newspaper. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 550.)

In the case of a midshipman tried by general court-martial by order of the commander in chief of the North Atlantic Fleet and sentenced to be dismissed from the United States naval service, the proceedings, findings, and sentence were approved by the convening authority and the record was submitted by the department to the President "in conformity with article 53 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy (sec. 1624, R. S.), with the recommendation that the sentence be confirmed, but that, in view of the fact that the court unanimously recommended clemency it be commuted to the punishment set forth below," viz, that he "be turned back into and become a member of the next lower class of midshipmen, the present first class at the United States Naval Academy; to continue in the meantime on probationary sea duty; to take temporary rank at the head of the class to which he is reduced; and, finally, to take rank as a member of that class upon its graduation at the end of the prescribed six years' course, in accordance with the requirements for determining the same as applied to members of that class"; which action was accordingly taken by the President as recommended. (G. C. M. Order No. 77, Sept. 1, 1905. Note: On March 1, 1909, the sentence of dismissal imposed by a general court-martial convened by the commander in chief of the Pacific Fleet for the trial of a midshipman was mitigated by the Secretary of the Navy in the same manner as set forth above, without submission to the President; see G. C. M. Order No. 10, Mar. 1, 1909. In another case, on the same date, the Secretary of the Navy, without reference to the President, mitigated a sentence of dismissal imposed by a general court-martial convened by the commander in chief of the Pacific Fleet, so that the accused midshipman, if commissioned at the completion of his final examination, "will be commissioned as next to the lowest number in his class"; see G. C. M. Order No. 9, Mar. 1, 1909.)

When sentence of dismissal is executed.—Where the commander in chief who convened a court-martial approved a sentence of dismissal imposed by said court upon a midshipman, but concluded with the statement that "the record is respectfully referred to the Secretary of the Navy," held that this action did not show an intention on the part of the convening authority to execute the sentence at the time, but implied that the record was forwarded to the Secretary of the Navy in order that the midshipman might be dismissed and the sentence executed by the department; accordingly, mere publication by the commander in chief of his action did not operate to dismiss the midshipman from the service, but the sentence remained unexecuted and subject to mitigation by the President in the exercise of his pardoning power. (File 26262-198, Nov. 13, 1908. Note: In this case the President issued a formal pardon to the midshipman in question, on condition that he take rank at the foot of his class and if commissioned be commissioned as the lowest number therein.)

Arrest of midshipman pending investigation and action.—A midshipman may properly be placed under arrest pending action on a recommendation by the superintendent of the Naval Academy for his dismissal. The fact that a court of inquiry may be ordered to investigate the allegations against him does not of itself require his being released from arrest. (C. M. O. 22—1915, citing file 28028-203:1, June 8, 1915.)

Minor punishments imposed without court-martial.—The act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 838), did not deprive the proper administrative officers of the power to impose punishment other than dismissal for violation of Naval Academy regulations, where the officers of the academy consider that the best interests of the institution will be promoted by the imposition of minor punishments by themselves, without the intervention of a court-martial or without resorting to the power of dismissal. (File 26283-925, Sept. 4, 1915.)

Effect of dismissal.—There is no law prohibiting the appointment of a former midshipman as an officer of the Navy because of his dismissal from the Naval Academy on September 30, 1915, such dismissal not having been for hazing nor pursuant to sentence of a court-martial, but in accordance with section 1 of the act approved April 9, 1906 (34 Stat., 104), upon investigation of charges consisting principally of false swearing. Accordingly, the question whether such appointment should be made is one of policy and not of law. (File 26283-925:4, Aug. 7, 1916.)

The only offense, if any, which creates a statutory disqualification for reappointment of a midshipman is that of hazing. The spirit of the laws is, however, against the reappointment of any person who has been dismissed from the Navy, as will be seen by reference to section 1441, Revised Statutes. (File 5252-43, Oct. 5, 1911.)

The act of June 23, 1874 (18 Stat., 203), provided for the trial by court-martial and dismissal of any midshipman guilty of hazing, and concluded, "and the cadet so dismissed from said Naval Academy shall be forever ineligible to reappointment to said Naval Academy." The act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1198), provided that any midshipman found guilty of participating in or encouraging the practice of hazing should be summarily expelled from the Academy and should not thereafter be reappointed to the Academy or be eligible for appointment as a commissioned officer in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps "until two years after the graduation of the class of which he was a member." The act of April 9, 1906 (34 Stat., 104), provides that no midshipman shall be dismissed for a single act of hazing except after trial and conviction by court-martial and expressly repeals portions of the two laws above cited, but says nothing about ineligibility for reappointment of midshipmen dismissed for hazing, which appears, therefore, to continue in effect. (File 5252-43, Oct. 5, 1911.)

The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 589), provides that "all former officers of the United States naval service, including midshipmen, who have left that service under honorable conditions * * * and who shall have enrolled in the Naval Reserve Force, shall be eligible for membership in the Fleet Naval Reserve." Held, that a midshipman who was dismissed by sentence of court-martial is not eligible for membership in the Fleet Naval Reserve, although he has been pardoned for the offense for which dismissed. (File 26282-287:4, Mar. 16, 1918; C. M. O. 30-1918; 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 225.)

A midshipman having been legally dismissed, the records can not be changed to show that his resignation was accepted. (File 5252-60, Feb. 14, 1914.)

The act of June 23, 1874 (chapter 453), to prevent hazing at the Naval Academy and providing that a cadet-midshipman dismissed pursuant thereto "shall be forever ineligible to reappointment to said Naval Academy" was designed to cut off all chance of reinstatement or reappointment from such cadet; accordingly, without considering very carefully what the effect of a pardon by the President might be, or whether after an unconditional pardon a reappointment is strictly legal or not, held that the President would not be justified in abrogating the clear intent and plain meaning of the statute, and the Attorney General wishes strongly to advise against any such course as will tend, by indirection, to nullify the statute; the parties who consider themselves aggrieved should apply to Congress for a change of the law; while the statute remains in force the President should not interfere to relieve the party found guilty. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 80. See 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 225, noted under sec. 1441, R. S.)

The question whether a dismissed midshipman is eligible to vote depends upon the laws of the State in which he claims the right, and is not one under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department. The question whether a dismissed midshipman is eligible to hold a State office is similarly not under the cognizance of the Navy Department. With reference to his eligibility to hold a Federal position, under the civil service rules and regulations any person who has been dismissed from the military or naval service is, it is understood, barred from examination for the United States civil service within one year from the date of such dismissal. Likewise it is provided by the Federal statutes that any officer who has been dismissed from the Navy by sentence of court-martial shall never again become an officer of the Navy. Also, with specific reference to midshipmen it is provided by law that any midshipman summarily expelled from the Academy for hazing shall not thereafter be reappointed or be eligible for appointment as a commissioned officer in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps until two years after the graduation of the class of which he was a member. (File 5252-79, June 19, 1916.)

Reinstatement of midshipmen.—A midshipman who has been dismissed for misconduct by order of the President pursuant to law can not be legally reinstated in his former position by revocation of the order of dismissal. The only way in which such a former midshipman can legally obtain readmission to the Naval Academy would be by new appointment in the manner provided for any other candidate. The President's action can not, upon the submission of additional evidence, be reconsidered and revoked, and the midshipman thereby reinstated in his former position. (File 5252-72, Sept. 27, 1915; affirmed, 5252-73, Oct. 1, 1915; sustained by Attorney General, Oct. 15, 1915, 30 Op. Atty. Gen., 457.)

The President is not authorized to reopen the case of a midshipman who has been dismissed from the Naval Academy with a view to revoking the order of dismissal and reinstating him. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 457, following 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 579.)

A midshipman who has satisfactorily completed the course for the first year at the Naval Academy but who in the following year is found deficient and allowed to resign need not be required, when given a new appointment, to go over the course for the first year a second time, but may legally recommence the course for the second year, provided that such action is recommended by the Academic Board. (C. M. O. 12—1915, citing file 5252-65, Mar. 12, 1915.)

For other cases see notes to sections 1514, 1515, and 1517, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1520. [Academic course.] The academic course of cadet midshipmen shall be six years.—(3 Mar., 1873, c. 230, s. 1, v. 17, p. 555.)

Amendments to this section were made by the laws noted under section 1512, Revised Statutes, which changed the title of students at the Naval Academy to "midshipmen;" and by act of March 7, 1912 (37 Stat., 73), which provided "that the course at the Naval Academy shall be four years."

By act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1182), it was provided that "the President, in his discretion, is authorized to reduce the course of instruction at the Naval Academy from four to three years for a period of two years from the date of the approval of this act, and may during said two years graduate classes which have completed a three-year course."

By act of April 2, 1918 (40 Stat., 501), it was provided "that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, until August first, nineteen hundred and twenty-one, to reduce, in his discretion, the course of instruction at the United States Naval Academy from four to three years and to graduate classes which have completed such reduced courses of instruction."

By act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), it was provided "that the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe a special course of study and training at home or abroad for any naval cadet;" as to change of title from "naval cadet" to "midshipman" see note to Section 1512, Revised Statutes.

By act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 891), it was provided that "hereafter the service of a midshipman at the United States Naval Academy, or that of a cadet at the United States Military Academy, who may hereafter be appointed to the United States Naval Academy, or to the United States Military Academy, shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer in the Navy or in the Marine Corps."

By act of May 20, 1886 (24 Stat., 69), provision was made for instruction at the Naval Academy as to the effect of alcoholic drinks and narcotics, and for the removal of any officer, superintendent or teacher who shall refuse or neglect to comply with this provision.

Sea service as part of six-year course.—As shown by the regulations governing the Naval Academy, sea service for several years, and "other than in practice ships," has uniformly been a part of the academic course at the Naval Academy since its establishment until now. Naval education before the establishment of the academy was, of course, obtained in great measure whilst the student (midshipman) was undergoing sea service. The earliest appointees to the academy (excluding the midshipmen who were at first collected from service and sent thither), which appointees were designated acting midshipmen, after a partial course on shore were sent to sea for several years, and then returned to Annapolis and finished their studies there. These appointees at the close of the earlier course on shore received a certificate which testified to their fitness to go to sea; and before the end of their sea service they became midshipmen, continuing, however, to be students of the academy. Subsequently (1851) the two previous courses on shore pursued by appointees to the academy, one before and the other after sea service, were consolidated into a single term of four years preliminary to sea service. This system has continued in existence ever since; the act of July 16, 1862 (ch. 183), in the meantime requiring students to be styled midshipmen throughout the whole course, and this style having been again changed to that of cadet-midshipmen by the act of 1870. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 637; see sec. 1512, R. S., and note thereto.)

The regulation issued by the Secretary of the Navy requiring the students or midshipmen at the Naval Academy, after the completion of their purely academic studies, to perform a term of duty on shipboard in order to acquaint themselves with practical navigation and seamanship, is a perfectly valid regulation; and the act of July 11, 1862, section 11 (12 Stat., 585), providing that students at the Naval Academy shall be commissioned ensigns if successful upon their final graduating examination, should be construed as giving distinct legislative sanction to the regulation of the department, then in force, by which that examination was required to be taken after completion of this period of instruction on shipboard. It must be assumed that Congress, when it made the law of 1862, had in mind the regulations which had been prescribed and enforced under its own authority, and which, so long as they were in operation and remained unchanged by competent authority, had, as Congress well knew, the efficiency of a statute. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 158.)

The last two years of the academic course of cadet-midshipmen were spent at sea in other than practice ships. After four years at the academy they were temporarily detached from that institution, by orders of the Navy Department, and were sent to sea singly or in squads. On shipboard they performed such active duties as were assigned to them. At the end of the two years they were required to return and did return to the Naval Academy, where they were subjected to a "final graduating examination" before the Academic Board. If successful at such examination they received appointments as midshipmen, and were thereafter classified in the Navy Register as having "graduated" at that date; and they were never so designated, either in the Navy Register or elsewhere, until after they had passed such examination at the end of the six years' course. (U. S. v. Redgrave, 116 U. S., 474, 475.)

The words "final graduating examination" in section 11 of the act of July 16, 1862, chapter 183, and "graduating examination" in section 12 of the act of July 15, 1870, chapter 295, signify that examination which under the regulations of the Naval Academy takes place after the prescribed term of sea service has been performed. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 637; reconsidered and affirmed, 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 296.)

The "final graduating examination" referred to by the act of July 16, 1862 (12 Stat., 583), which provided that midshipmen passing such examination shall be commissioned ensigns, was not the final academic examination of the Naval Academy, but the last examination referred to in the regulations existing at the time when the act was passed, and which required a final examination after certain sea service. (Benjamin v. U. S., 10 Ct. Cls., 474.)

The statute in express terms provides that "the academic course of cadet-midshipmen shall be six years." If the Navy Department had assumed to make any regulations by which the final graduation should take place in less time, such regulations would have been void. But it did not so assume. It arranged for a two-year course afloat as a part of the academic course, and exacted a preliminary examination to test the cadet's qualifications therefor. But the cadet afloat was a member of the academy. He still was subject to a final examination at that institution, and without such examination successfully sustained never became a graduate. He was not so denominated until then, either in the Navy Register or elsewhere; and it was not until that final test had been sustained that, either by the practice of the academy or by the provision of the statute, he did or could receive his certificate of graduation. There is a very plain distinction between his case and that of a cadet-engineer, fully explained in United States v. Redgrave (116 U. S., 474, noted below). (Crenshaw v. U. S., 134 U. S., 99.)

The regulations prescribing the qualifications for appointment of cadet-engineers fixed a higher average age by two years for cadet-engineers entering the academy than was required by law for cadet-midshipmen so entering. After completing the four-year course, cadet-engineers were permanently detached from the academy, and were never required to return to that institution. They remained in active service at sea, or upon other duty, two or three years or longer, until vacancies occurred in the grade of assistant engineer, when they were ordered, singly or in groups, for examination for promotion, under the provisions of section 1392 of the Revised Statutes, before a board of engineer officers which held its sessions at Philadelphia. (U. S. v. Redgrave, 116 U. S., 474, 475.)

The certificate given to the midshipman at the end of four years spent in the academy differed in its terms from the certificate issued to the cadet-engineer in the words "preparatory to the two years' course afloat." Cadet-engineers were not undergraduates when they were performing the service incident to the two years following their study at the academy, but were then in the discharge of the duties incident to a period between graduation and promotion. The cadet-midshipman at the end of the two years' course afloat was required to return to the academy, subjecting himself again to some extent to the jurisdiction of the institution in order that an academic board might determine whether his acquirement afloat was sufficient, in connection with his scholarship at the institution, to justify his certificate of graduation. His education was theoretical and practical; the one he acquired in the immediate institution, the other on the high seas; but each acquirement came within the course of study covered by a period of six years. According to the decision of the Supreme Court the term of service of a cadet-engineer was but four years. (Harmon v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 132.)

Sea service eliminated by reduction of course to four years.—Prior to the act of March 7, 1912 (37 Stat., 73), the course at the Naval Academy was six years (sec. 1520, R. S.), the first four of which were spent in pursuing the academic studies at the academy, and the remaining two years at sea, upon the successful termination of which, as determined by a final examination, the midshipmen were commissioned ensigns. The four years at the academy constituted an undergraduate course, and the two years' service at sea was in the nature of a postgraduate course. The act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), made two pay grades for midshipmen by providing that those at the academy, that is, those in the undergraduate course, should receive pay at the rate of $600 per annum, and that after graduation from the academy, that is, after completing the four years' undergraduate course and while performing the two years' service at sea—the postgraduate course—they should receive pay at the rate of $1,400 per annum. The effect of the act of March 7, 1912, was to eliminate the two years' service at sea—the postgraduate course—and also the pay grade provided for those thus previously serving. It follows, therefore, that the only grade of midshipmen now authorized by law is that for those pursuing the four years' course at the academy. (20 Comp. Dec., 141. Note: The act of May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 128, contained the following provision, which is that referred to in this decision: "The pay of midshipmen shall hereafter be six hundred dollars per annum while at the Naval Academy, and one thousand four hundred dollars per annum after graduation from the Naval Academy.")

The effect of the act of March 7, 1912 (37 Stat., 73), was to eliminate the two years at sea and also the pay grade provided for those previously serving at sea. It follows, therefore, that the only pay for midshipmen now authorized by law is that for those pursuing the four years' course at the Naval Academy, viz, $600 per annum, and this is the base pay of midshipmen within the meaning of the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 587), establishing the Naval Reserve Force and providing that "the annual retainer pay of officers of the Fleet Naval Reserve shall be two months' base pay of the corresponding rank in the Navy." (23 Comp. Dec., 279.)

For laws governing pay of midshipmen, see note to Section 1556, Revised Statutes.

Sea service may be made part of four-year course.—Under existing laws the curriculum at the Naval Academy may be so changed by the Secretary of the Navy as to permit of the following: "To send one undergraduate class of midshipmen to sea for one year and have them pursue a course on board ship—at the end of the year return them to the Naval Academy for examination in the studies pursued; the Academic Board to lay out a course to be pursued and the subjects in which to be examined. The course to be entirely practical in its nature and include navigation, ordnance and gunnery, seamanship, and engineering." (File 5252-76, Apr. 1, 1916.)

The course of instruction for midshipmen, whether pursued at the Naval Academy or elsewhere, is a matter of regulation in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy; there is nothing contained in the laws relating to midshipmen which would preclude the Secretary of the Navy from sending one class of midshipmen to sea for a year. (File 5252-76:1, May 1, 1916; affirmed, file 5252-76:2, May 3, 1916.)

Former midshipmen not required to repeat course on reappointment.—A midshipman who has satisfactorily completed the course for the first year at the Naval Academy but who, in the following year, is found deficient and allowed to resign, need not be required, when given a new appointment, to go over the course for the first year a second time, but may legally recommence the course for the second year provided that such action is recommended by the Academic Board. (C. M. O. 12—1915, citing file 5252-65, Mar. 12, 1915.)

Leave of absence during course.—A midshipman granted a temporary leave of absence while attached to and serving on a vessel at sea in other than practice ships was not thereby detached from duty at sea on board said vessel and continued entitled to the higher rate of pay provided by law for such duty. (14 Comp. Dec., 208.)

Midshipmen are not merely students being educated at the expense of the Government, but are officers in the naval service and as such their salary, fixed by law, can no more be increased or diminished than can the salary of any other officer in the naval service which is fixed by law. Accordingly, where granted leave of absence by the Secretary of the Navy for sickness or other cause, they are still entitled to pay during the period of such leave at the same rate they were receiving at the academy. (8 Comp. Dec., 410.)

For other cases see note to section 1519, Revised Statutes, under "Suspension of midshipman without pay."

Whether service of midshipmen during course at academy is "service" in Navy.—The question involved is whether plaintiff, while he was a midshipman, was serving as an officer or enlisted man in the Navy, within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 473), providing for crediting officers with the actual time that they may have "served" as officers or enlisted men in the Regular or Volunteer Army or Navy, or both. The Government contended that it was immaterial whether as a student he is or is not to be regarded as an officer of the Navy, because he did not, whilst a student at the Naval Academy, "serve" either as an officer or an enlisted man in the sense of the act of 1883. It was denied by the United States that the entry of a pupil into the academy is his entry into the naval service, or that the period of his pupilage is actual service within the meaning of the act of 1883; and it was argued that he does not enter into actual service until he is appointed either in the line of the Navy, the Marine Corps, or the Engineer Corps; that as a student he does not serve but is preparing to serve; that he does not render service to the Government but is receiving favors from it; that he can only commence serving after his graduation, such service depending upon his graduating merit; and that compensation is given him not as a payment for service rendered but as a gratuity and an allowance made to him for his support in his preparation for service to be rendered: Held, that claimant is entitled to be credited, under the act of March 3, 1883, with the time he so served as a midshipman, on the ground that service as a midshipman at the Naval Academy was service as an officer in the Navy. (U. S. v. Baker, 125 U. S., 646. Note: In this case the claimant was appointed a midshipman on Sept. 30, 1867, and continued to serve as such after the act of July 15, 1870, sec. 12, 16 Stat., 334, which changed the designation of students to "cadet-midshipmen." The decision in this case was followed in U. S. v. Cook, 128 U. S., 254, in the case of a cadet-midshipman appointed after the act of July 15, 1870. See Morton v. U. S., 112 U. S., 1, holding that the time of service of a military cadet at West Point is to be regarded as "actual service in the Army," under a statute providing longevity pay. See also note to sec. 1512, R. S.)

It is true that a student is at the Naval Academy only for education, but the education is at the request and for the benefit of the Government rather than of himself. A raw recruit is not sent to the front until he has had a course of instruction, discipline, and drill in camp. That the time thus spent would constitute service in the Army no one would doubt. Education at the academy, though of a higher order, is required and justified by the same principle. (Baker v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 181; affirmed, 125 U. S., 646.)

In the computation of their longevity pay, officers of the Naval Reserve Force are entitled to credit for previous service in the Navy as cadet-engineers. (24 Comp. Dec., 629.)

In the case of Moser v. United States (42 Ct. Cls., 86), it was decided that a student at the Naval Academy under instruction during the Civil War "served" during the Civil War within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1899, section 11 (30 Stat., 1007), relating to the rank and pay of retired officers who served during the Civil War. This decision followed the doctrine laid down in Baker v. United States (125 U. S., 646). In the case of Jasper v. United States (43 Ct. Cls., 368), it was decided that, under identical conditions, the claimant did not "serve" during the Civil War while a student at the Naval Academy, and that the decision in the Moser case had been erroneously made, in ignorance of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), which limited the benefits of Civil War service to any officer who served during the Civil War "otherwise than as a cadet." Held, that no appeal having been taken from the decision in the Moser case that decision, notwithstanding that it may have been in error, is final and binding upon the Government and entitles the claimant, so long as he may be on the retired list of the Navy, to the pay benefits provided by law for retired officers who "served" during the Civil War; that the law of a case may sometimes be settled wrong, but when it is once settled it is none the less final; that the court could not have been right in both the Moser and the Jasper cases, but that its conflicting decisions "made the law" in each of the two cases; and accordingly that Moser is entitled to increased pay on the retired list in accordance with the former decision in his case for periods subsequent to that covered in the former suit and for which the accounting officers of the Treasury had refused to allow such increased pay. (Moser v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 285.)

The decision of the Court of Claims that a retired officer who was a student at the Naval Academy during the Civil War is entitled to the increased pay provided for retired officers who "served" during the Civil War by the act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), does not estop the Secretary of the Navy from denying such officer the increased rank on the retired list provided by the same law; the Navy Department being of opinion that time spent by students at the Naval Academy under instruction was not service in the Navy within the meaning of the law. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 352.) The Secretary of the Navy can not be compelled by mandamus proceedings to place the name of the officer in question upon the retired list with the rank of rear admiral. (U. S. ex rel. Moser v. Meyer, 38 App. D. C., 13.)

A cadet serving in the Coast Guard Academy when the Coast Guard is operating as a part of the Navy in time of war is a person "serving in the naval forces of the United States" within the meaning of the act of February 24, 1919 (40 Stat., 1151, sec. 1406), providing for payment of $60 on resignation or discharge. (26 Comp. Dec., 419. Compare, 26 Comp. Dec., 236, holding that "a cadet of the United Military Academy while in training there as a student is not a person 'serving in the military or naval forces of the United States' within the meaning of section 1406 of the act of Feb. 24, 1919, 40 Stat., 1151, and therefore is not entitled to the $60 war service payment provided by said act when honorably discharged.")

A midshipman at the Naval Academy is a "person serving in the naval forces of the United States," and one resigning from the naval service under honorable conditions is entitled to the allowance of $60 authorized by the act of February 24, 1919. (File 26543-224:11, May 9, 1919; 26543-224:34, Aug. 25, 1919.)

The act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), provided "that hereafter, during the existence of war or of a national emergency declared by the President to exist, any commissioned or warrant officer of the Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard of the United States on the retired list may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be ordered to active duty at sea or on shore; and any retired officer performing such active duty in time of war or national emergency, declared as aforesaid, shall be entitled to promotion on the retired list to the grade or rank, not above that of lieutenant commander in the Navy or major in the Marine Corps or captain in the Coast Guard, and shall thereafter receive the pay and allowances thereof, which his total active service as an officer both prior and subsequent to retirement, in the manner rendered by him, would have enabled him to attain in due course of promotion had such service been rendered continuously on the active list during the period of time last past." Held that the words "total active service as an officer" mean active service as an officer of the kind previously defined in the same provision, viz, a "commissioned or warrant officer of the Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard," and that service as a midshipman at the Naval Academy, or service as a midshipman at sea after graduation from the academy, should not be considered in determining the amount of "total active service as an officer." (File 26509-225:11, July 12, 1918; affirmed, file 26509-225:16, Nov. 6, 1918, and 26509-225:17, Jan. 21, 1919.)

By act of March 4, 1913, (37 Stat., 891), it was provided that "hereafter the service of a midshipman at the United States Naval Academy, or that of a cadet at the United States Military Academy, who may hereafter be appointed to the United States Naval Academy, or to the United States Military Academy, shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer in the Navy or in the Marine Corps."

Sec. 1521. [Appointments on graduation.] When cadet midshipmen shall have passed successfully the graduating examination at the Academy, they shall receive appointments as midshipmen and shall take rank according to their proficiency as shown by the order of their merit at date of graduation.—(15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 12, v. 16, p. 334.)

Amendments to this section were made by act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), which changed the title of all undergraduates at the Naval Academy to "naval cadets," provided for appointment of naval cadets, on completion of the six years' course, "to fill vacancies in the lower grades of the line and Engineer Corps of the Navy and of the Marine Corps," and provided that "so much of section fifteen hundred and twenty-one of the Revised Statutes as is inconsistent herewith is hereby repealed;" by act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 472), which changed the title of "midshipmen" to "ensigns (junior grade);" by act of June 26, 1884 (23 Stat., 60), which provided "that from and after the passage of this act all graduates of the Naval Academy who are assigned to the line of the Navy, on the successful completion of the six years' course, shall be commissioned ensigns in the Navy," and that "the grade of junior ensign in the Navy is hereby abolished"; by act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 878), which provided for a division of the first class, commencing their fourth year at the Naval Academy, into two divisions, who were to pursue, respectively, separate courses to fit them for the line of the Navy and of the Marine Corps, and for the Engineer Corps of the Navy, and provided that from the final graduates of the line and Marine Corps division at the end of their six years' course, "appointments shall be made hereafter as it shall be necessary to fill vacancies in the lowest grades of commissioned officers of the line of the Navy and Marine Corps," and that "vacancies in the lowest grades of the commissioned officers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy shall be filled in like manner by appointments from the final graduates of the Engineer division at the end of their six years' course," and that "not less than two shall be appointed annually to the Engineer Corps of the Navy, nor less than one annually to the Marine Corps;" by act of July 26, 1894 (28 Stat., 124), which provided that when necessary the Secretary of the Navy should select final graduates in the engineer division or in the line division, as the case might require, "and such final graduates shall be appointed to fill vacancies in the grade of ensign in the Navy or in the grade of assistant engineer in the Navy, respectively;" by act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), which abolished the Engineer Corps of the Navy; by act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 686), which changed the title "naval cadet," to "midshipman;" by act of March 7, 1912 (37 Stat., 73), which provided that "midshipmen on graduation shall be commissioned ensigns;" by act of July 9, 1913 (38 Stat., 103), which provided "that midshipmen on graduation shall be commissioned ensigns in the Navy, or may be assigned by the Secretary of the Navy to fill vacancies in the lowest commissioned grades of the Marine Corps or Staff Corps of the Navy;" and by act of May 22, 1917, section 5 (40 Stat., 86), re-enacted by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 716), which provided that "the class of midshipmen graduated from the Naval Academy on March twenty-ninth, nineteen hundred and seventeen, and the classes to be graduated hereafter, may be commissioned effective from date of graduation."

The act of August 5, 1882, above cited, provided that the appointments therein provided for were to be made "from the graduates of the year, at the conclusion of their six years' course, in the order of merit as determined by the Academic Board of the Naval Academy; the assignment to the various corps to be made by the Secretary of the Navy upon the recommendation of the Academic Board;" the act of March 2, 1889, above cited, provided that the appointments therein provided for were to be made "from the final graduates of the year, in the order of merit as determined by the Academic Board of the Naval Academy, the assignment to be made by the Secretary of the Navy upon the recommendation of the Academic Board at the conclusion of the fiscal year then current;" the act of July 26, 1894, above cited, provided that the appointments therein authorized were to be made from final graduates "who shall be reported as proficient and be recommended thereto by the Academic Board," and that such appointees should take rank "among themselves according to merit as determined by the Academic Board."

The act of March 3, 1899, section 19 (30 Stat., 1008), relating to the Marine Corps, provided "that the vacancies existing in said corps after the promotions and appointments herein provided for shall be filled by the President from time to time, whenever the actual needs of the naval service require it, first, from the graduates of the Naval Academy in the manner now provided by law," etc.; the act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1198), authorized an increase in the number of officers in the Marine Corps, and provided that "vacancies in the grade of second lieutenant shall be filled, first, as far as practicable, from graduates of the Naval Academy each year on completing the prescribed course at the Naval Academy, exclusive of the probationary tour of sea service before final graduation," etc.

The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 611) provided "that no midshipman at the United States Naval Academy or cadet at the United States Military Academy who fails to graduate therefrom shall be eligible for appointment as a commissioned officer in the Marine Corps until after the graduation of the class of which he was a member."

With reference to rank and precedence of graduates of the Naval Academy, see section 1483, Revised Statutes, and note thereto; as to pay of midshipmen commissioned within six months after graduation, see act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 716), which allows the pay of the grade in which commissioned from the date of rank stated in the commission to the date of qualification and acceptance of commission.

Prior laws superseded.—The act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), providing for appointments from the graduates of the Naval Academy to fill vacancies in the lower grades of the line and engineer corps of the Navy and of the Marine Corps, was superseded by the act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 878). Next came the act of July 26, 1894 (28 Stat., 124), which was a provision intended to meet exceptional conditions which can not now arise in view of the act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), transferring the engineer corps to the line; it may therefore be regarded as repealed by the act last cited. (File 5252-36, May 5, 1910.)

Vacancies must remain unfilled where insufficient graduates.—Under the act of March 2, 1889 (ch. 396), the vacancies in the lowest grades of commissioned officers in the line and Marine Corps must be filled from the final graduates of the line and Marine Corps divisions at Annapolis; so also as to vacancies in the engineer corps. Vacancies in the line and Marine Corps can not be filled from the engineer corps division or vice versa. If in any year there are more vacancies in the line and Marine Corps than there are final graduates of the six years' course in the line and marine division, the vacancies must remain unfilled until the following year; and the same rule applies to vacancies in the engineer corps. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 615; by act of July 26, 1894, above noted, provision was made for filling vacancies in the line from the engineer division, and vacancies in the engineer corps from the line division. See also later laws above noted.)

Law does not require that graduates be commissioned.—The act of July 9, 1913 (38 Stat., 103), providing that "midshipmen on graduation shall be commissioned ensigns in the Navy, or may be assigned by the Secretary of the Navy to fill vacancies in the lowest commissioned grades of the Marine Corps or staff corps of the Navy," could not be held to require the appointment of any midshipman upon graduation as an ensign in the Navy. No act of Congress can compel the President to appoint a midshipman to the office of ensign in the Navy unless he chooses to make such an appointment. (File 5252-120, May 13, 1919; C. M. O. 186-1919.)

If a midshipman were entitled to be commissioned ensign and the President should refuse to issue his commission, no action would lie for the salary of the office which he does not possess. His becoming an ensign depended not upon the operation of law but upon his being nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate for that office; neither of which things might ever be done. For reasons deemed sufficient, the President might not nominate or the Senate might not confirm him for the position; or after nomination and confirmation the President might, on grounds considered adequate, decline to commission him. In either case he would not be an ensign. The issue of the commission is that which confers the office and the right to its pay. However clear and strong his legal right might have been to be commissioned as such when he passed the academic examination, the fact remains that he was not so commissioned, and the law gave him no right to the salary until he got the commission. (Benjamin v. U. S., 10 Ct. Cls., 474.)

The term of office of a naval cadet expires with the completion of his six years' course. If not appointed to another office he ceases to be an officer of the Navy and goes out of office by the expiration of the tenure as limited by law. Where a naval cadet was erroneously discharged upon expiration of his six years, due to an error of law, he can not be regarded as still in the service and entitled to recover pay, either as a naval cadet or as the incumbent of a commissioned office to which he might and should have been appointed; a person can not recover the salary of an office which he does not hold. The case of a naval cadet is to be distinguished from that of a cadet engineer, as the latter could under the law, after graduation, continue in the service in the status of a cadet engineer and, where erroneously discharged, could recover the pay of a cadet engineer as though such discharge had not been issued. (Grambs v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 420.)

Graduates can not be commissioned unless vacancies exist.—Under the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), a naval cadet who completed his six years' course subsequent to that year was legally discharged, there being no vacancy to which he could be appointed, notwithstanding the obligation assumed by him upon entering the Academy to "serve in the Navy of the United States for eight years, unless sooner discharged by competent authority." The discharge in this case was in strict pursuance of law, by an executive officer of the Government, authorized by statute to perform that function. Obligations are not always mutual in the liability of the parties to perform. They are often unilateral, giving a right to one to declare the obligation at an end, while the other party is bound to a full performance. The number of men in the Army and Navy is dependent upon the will of Congress. A naval cadet has no vested right to the office, and Congress may prescribe new terms and conditions upon which he may remain in the service after graduation. (Harmon v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 132.)

The provision in the naval appropriation act of August 5, 1882, section 1 (22 Stat., 284, 285), which directs in certain cases the honorable discharge of naval cadets from the Navy with one year's sea pay, is not in conflict with the contract clause of the Constitution of the United States. An officer in the Army or Navy does not hold his office by contract but at the will of the sovereign power. Even if it were true as to other officers of the Navy that their term of office is for life, this would not be true as to a naval cadet appointed under a statute fixing the academic course at six years and who when he entered the service executed a bond to serve for eight years unless discharged by competent authority, thus recognizing his liability to be discharged. (Crenshaw v. U. S., 134 U. S., 99.)

The act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), providing for the discharge of surplus graduates of the Naval Academy, is constitutional. (Harmon v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 406.)

Midshipmen graduated from the Naval Academy and assigned to the Marine Corps can not be appointed as second lieutenants in the Marine Corps if the grade of second lieutenant is filled to the number fixed by law, notwithstanding that the total number of officers allowed by law in the Marine Corps would not be exceeded by their appointment owing to certain vacancies existing in upper grades. There being five vacancies in the Marine Corps on the date of graduation which would result in the promotion of five second lieutenants from the date said vacancies occurred, and six midshipmen having been assigned to the Marine Corps, held that five of said midshipmen may be appointed to the grade of second lieutenant upon the occurrence of the five vacancies in said grade, and if commissioned therein within six months from the date of their graduation may be given rank from said date of graduation pursuant to the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 716). The appointment of the sixth midshipman as a second lieutenant should not be made until a vacancy exists for him in the grade of second lieutenant, and there does not appear to be any authority of law for dating his rank prior to the date that a sixth vacancy occurs in the Marine Corps. (File 3261-486, June 8, 1916.)

Status of graduates pending occurrence of vacancies.—The act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1182), authorizes the graduation of midshipmen, during a limited period, who have completed a three-year course at the Naval Academy; the number of officers in the grades of lieutenant (junior grade) and ensign is limited by act approved August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 576, 577); a sufficient number of vacancies will not exist in the line of the Navy to permit of commissioning all graduates of the Naval Academy prior to July 1, 1917: Held, that in the meantime such graduates may be appointed as acting ensigns; or may be commissioned as ensigns in the Naval Reserve Force; or may be ordered to duty as "midshipmen after graduation." (File 5252-83, Mar. 20, 1917.)

See acts of May 22, 1917, section 5, and July 1, 1918, noted above.

Appointment made subject to examination.—A midshipman who, while absent in a distant and foreign station, was nominated and confirmed to be ensign "subject to examination" but who was never examined, never became an ensign and having in the meantime been brought to trial by court-martial was properly tried as a midshipman. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 550.)

Sec. 1522. [Cadet engineers. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1522. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to make provision, by regulations issued by him, for educating at the Naval Academy, as naval constructors or steam engineers, such midshipmen and others as may show a peculiar aptitude therefor. He may, for this purpose, form a separate class at the Academy, to be styled cadet engineers, or otherwise afford to such persons all proper facilities for such a scientific mechanical education as will fit them for said professions."—(4 July, 1864, c 252, s. 1, v. 13, p. 393.)

It was repealed by the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), which provided "that hereafter there shall be no appointments of cadet-midshipmen or cadet-engineers at the Naval Academy, but in lieu thereof naval cadets shall be appointed from each congressional district and at large, as now provided by law for cadet-midshipmen, and all the undergraduates at the Naval Academy shall hereafter be designated and called 'naval cadets,' and from those who successfully complete the six years' course appointments shall hereafter be made as it is necessary to fill vacancies in the lower grades of the line and Engineer Corps of the Navy and of the Marine Corps: And provided further, That no greater number of appointments into these grades shall be made each year than shall equal the number of vacancies which has occurred in the same grades during the preceding year; such appointments to be made from the graduates of the year, at the conclusion of their six years' course, in the order of merit, as determined by the academic board of the Naval Academy; the assignment to the various corps to be made by the Secretary of the Navy upon the recommendation of the academic board. But nothing herein contained shall reduce the number of appointments from such graduates below ten in each year, nor deprive of such appointment any graduate who may complete the six years' course during the year eighteen hundred and eighty-two. And if there be a surplus of graduates, those who do not receive such appointment shall be given a certificate of graduation, an honorable discharge, and one year's sea-pay, as now provided by law for cadet-midshipmen; and so much of section fifteen hundred and twenty-one of the Revised Statutes as is inconsistent herewith is hereby repealed. * * * That the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe a special course of study and training at home or abroad for any naval cadet."

Later laws relating to this subject are as follows:

Act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 878): "That the Academic Board of the Naval Academy shall on or before the thirtieth day of September in each year separate the first class of naval cadets then commencing their fourth year into two divisions, as they may have shown special aptitude for the duties of the respective corps, in the proportion which the aggregate number of vacancies occurring in the preceding fiscal year ending on the thirtieth day of June in the lowest grades of commissioned officers of the line of the Navy and Marine Corps of the Navy shall bear to the number of vacancies to be supplied from the Academy occurring during the same period in the lowest grade of commissioned officers of the engineer corps of the Navy; and the cadets so assigned to the line and Marine Corps division of the first class shall thereafter pursue a course of study arranged to fit them for service in the line of the Navy, and the cadets so assigned to the Engineer Corps division of the first class shall thereafter pursue a separate course of study arranged to fit them for service in the Engineer Corps of the Navy, and the cadets shall thereafter, and until final graduation, at the end of their six years' course, take rank by merit with those in the same division, according to the merit marks; and from the final graduates of the line and Marine Corps division, at the end of their six years' course, appointments shall be made hereafter as it shall be necessary to fill vacancies in the lowest grades of commissioned officers of the line of the Navy and Marine Corps; and the vacancies in the lowest grades of the commissioned officers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy shall be filled in like manner by appointments from the final graduates of the Engineer division at the end of their six years' course: Provided, That no greater number of appointments into the said lowest grades of commissioned officers shall be made each year than shall equal the number of vacancies which shall have occurred in the same grades during the fiscal year then current; such appointments to be made from the final graduates of the year, in the order of merit as determined by the Academic Board of the Naval Academy, the assignment to be made by the Secretary of the Navy upon the recommendation of the Academic Board at the conclusion of the fiscal year then current; but nothing contained herein or in the naval appropriation act of August fifth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, shall reduce the number of appointments of final graduates at the end of their six years course below twelve in each year to the line of the Navy, and not less than two shall be appointed annually to the Engineer Corps of the Navy, nor less than one annually to the Marine Corps; and if the number of vacancies in the lowest grades aforesaid, occurring in any year shall be greater than the number of final graduates of that year, the surplus vacancies shall be filled from the final graduates of following years, as they shall become available * * *.

Act of July 26, 1894 (28 Stat., 124): Provided for appointments to the line of the Navy from the engineer division, and to the Engineer Corps of the Navy from the line division, when necessary.

Act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004): Abolished the Engineer Corps of the Navy and provided for transfer of engineer officers to the line.

Act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 580): Provided for appointment to the line of the Navy, as "acting ensigns for the performance of engineering duties only," of persons who "have received a degree of mechanical or electrical engineer from a college or university of high standing," or who are "graduates of technical schools approved by the Secretary of the Navy * * *."

Act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 945): Provided that appointments to the grade of assistant naval constructor may be made by transfer from officers of the line of the Navy who have had not less than three years' service in the grade of ensign and have taken, or are taking, satisfactorily, a post-graduate course in naval architecture under orders from the Secretary of the Navy. By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577), it was provided that "vacancies in the Construction Corps shall be filled in the manner now prescribed by law," and that "hereafter ensigns of not less than one year's service as such shall be eligible for transfer to the Construction Corps." It had previously been provided by section 1403, Revised Statutes, that "cadet engineers who are graduated with credit in the scientific and mechanical class of the Naval Academy may, upon the recommendation of the academic board, be immediately appointed as assistant naval constructors;" and by act of July 9, 1913 (38 Stat., 103), that "midshipmen on graduation * * * may be assigned by the Secretary of the Navy to fill vacancies in the lowest commissioned grades of the * * * staff corps of the Navy."

Sec. 1523. [Number and appointment of. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1523. Cadet engineers shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy. They shall not at any time exceed fifty in number, and no persons, other than midshipmen, shall be eligible for appointment unless they shall first produce satisfactory evidence of mechanical skill and proficiency, and shall have passed an examination as to their mental and physical qualifications."—(4 July, 1864, c. 252, ss. 3, 4, v. 13, p. 393. 2 Mar., 1867, c. 174, s. 2, v. 14, p. 516. 22 June, 1874, c. 392, s. 3, v. 18, p. 192.)

It was amended by act of June 22, 1874, section 3 (18 Stat., 192), which provided that "so much of the act entitled 'An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to provide for the education of naval constructors and steam-engineers, and for other purposes,' approved

July 4, 1864, as provides that cadet-engineers, not to exceed fifty in number, shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, is hereby repealed; and cadet-engineers shall hereafter be appointed annually by the Secretary of the Navy, and the number appointed each year shall not exceed twenty-five; and that all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby repealed." (See United States v. Redgrave, 116 U. S., 474, 478.)

It was repealed by act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), quoted under section 1522, Revised Statutes, which expressly prohibited any further appointments of cadet-engineers. See also later laws noted under section 1522, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1524. [Academic course of. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1524. The course for cadet engineers shall be four years, including two years of service on naval steamers."—(4 July, 1864, c. 252, s. 5, v. 13, p. 393. 3 Mar., 1873, c. 230, s. 1, v. 17, p. 555. 24 Feb., 1874, c. 35, v. 18, p. 17.)

It was amended to read as above by act of February 24, 1874, section 2 (18 Stat., 17), which provided that "from and after the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and seventy-four, the course of instruction at the Naval Academy for cadet-engineers shall be four years, instead of two as now provided by law; and this provision shall first apply to the class of cadet-engineers entering the academy in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-four, and to all subsequent classes; and that all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and are hereby, repealed." This amendment had the effect of requiring four years of instruction at the Naval Academy in addition to the two years' service on naval steamers. (See United States v. Redgrave, 116 U. S., 474, 478.)

It was repealed by act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), quoted under section 1522, Revised Statutes, which expressly prohibited any further appointments of cadet-engineers. See also later laws noted under sections 1522 and 1520, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1525. [Examinations of. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1525. Cadet engineers shall be examined from time to time, according to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, and if found deficient at any examination, or if dismissed for misconduct, they shall not be continued in the Academy or in the service except upon the recommendation of the academic board."—(4 July, 1864, c. 252, s. 4, v. 13, p. 393.)

It was repealed by act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), quoted under section 1522, Revised Statutes, which expressly prohibited any further appointments of cadet-engineers. See also later laws noted under section 1522, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1526. [Studies not to be pursued on Sunday.] The Secretary of the Navy shall arrange the course of studies and the order of recitations at the Naval Academy so that the students in said institution shall not be required to pursue their studies on Sunday.—(15 July, 1870, c. 294, s. 21, v. 16, p. 319.)

Sec. 1527. [Store-keeper at the Academy.] The store-keeper at the Naval Academy shall be detailed from the Paymaster's Corps, and shall have authority, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, to procure clothing and other necessities for the midshipmen and cadet engineers in the same manner as supplies are furnished to the Navy, to be issued under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.—(2 Mar., 1867, c. 174, s. 4, v. 14, p. 516.)

Amendments to this section were made by the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 147), which provided that "hereafter the Pay Corps shall be called the Supply Corps;" by act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), quoted under section 1522, Revised Statutes, which expressly prohibited any further appointments of cadet-engineers; and by act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 153), which provided that "the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to close and balance as expended the sum of twenty-four thousand five hundred dollars now standing on the books of the Treasury under the appropriation 'Pay of the Navy,' which was advanced by direction of the Secretary of the Navy in eighteen hundred and sixty-seven and eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, and has heretofore been used as a midshipmen's store fund at the Naval Academy: Provided, That hereafter the storekeeper at the Naval Academy, authorized by section fifteen hundred and twenty-seven of the Revised Statutes, shall render quarterly returns of property to the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe. A full report shall be made annually of receipts and expenditures by the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts to the Secretary of the Navy: And provided further, That an inspection of the storekeeper's accounts shall be made quarterly by the general inspector of the Pay Corps [now Supply Corps], with such recommendation as he may deem necessary, to the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts."

Midshipmen's store fund.—Prior to 1867 a civilian storekeeper provided for the needs of the midshipmen under an arrangement made between himself and the officials of the Academy. This arrangement was not satisfactory, and in 1867 and 1868, by direction of the Secretary of the Navy, the sum of $24,500 was advanced for the purpose of taking over the said store and of carrying it on. This was done from the appropriation, "Pay of the Navy." Held, that the sum of $24,500 aforesaid is public money and that said sum and the accumulated profits, if any, should be covered into the Treasury; that the establishment of said fund and the present manner of conducting the store at the Naval Academy are without authority of law, it being provided by the act of June 19, 1878 (20 Stat., 167), section 2, that "Pay of the Navy" shall hereafter be used only for its legitimate purpose, as provided by law," and by act of July 26, 1886, section 2 (24 Stat., 157), that "all balances of money appropriated for pay of the Navy or pay of the Marine Corps for any year existing after the accounts for said year shall have been settled shall be carried into the Treasury." Held, further, that by section 1527 of the Revised Statutes it was clearly the intention of Congress that the supplies for the Naval Academy store should be procured in the same manner as other naval stores. (14 Comp. Dec., 680. But see act of May 13, 1908, quoted above.)

Naval Academy dairy.—Provisions for purchase of land and establishment of dairy thereon were contained in act of March 4, 1913

(37 Stat., 904), which provided that appropriation therein made for the purpose should be treated as an advance to the midshipmen's store fund, to be ultimately repaid to the United States, and that expenditures therefrom should be reported by the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts to the Secretary of the Navy.

Midshipmen's commissary fund.—Such additional payments from this fund as the Superintendent may deem necessary may be made to servants authorized in the commissary department. (Act Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 907. See also note to sec. 236, R. S., under "H. Jurisdiction of Accounting Officers," subheading "Public Money.")

Sec. 1528. [Professors of ethics, Spanish, and drawing.] Three professors of mathematics shall be assigned to duty at the Naval Academy, one as professor of ethics and English studies, one as professor of the Spanish language, and one as professor of drawing.—(21 May, 1864, c. 93, s. 3, v. 13, p. 85.)

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577), it was provided that "hereafter no further appointments shall be made to the corps of professors of mathematics, and that corps shall cease to exist upon the death, resignation, or dismissal of the officers now carried in that corps on the active and retired lists of the Navy." (See secs. 1399-1401, and notes thereto, with reference to the number of professors of mathematics, their appointment, duties, etc.)

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 607), it was provided that "the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ at the Naval Academy such number of professors and instructors, including one professor as librarian, as, in his opinion, may be necessary for the proper instruction of the midshipmen; and that professors and instructors so employed shall receive such compensation for their services as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided further, That the total amount so paid shall not exceed $175,000 annually: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report to Congress each year the number of professors and instructors so employed and the amount of compensation prescribed for each." (It had previously been provided by act Mar. 2, 1895, 28 Stat., 837, that "any assistant professor at the Naval Academy who served as such for five years shall have the title and pay of a professor," and by act Mar. 3, 1897, 29 Stat., 661, that "the proper pay officer of the Navy be, and is hereby, authorized to pay the professors at the Naval Academy, whose compensation was affected by the Act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-six, approved March second, eighteen hundred and ninety-five, at the rate of compensation fixed by that Act from July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-six.")

By act of May 18, 1920, section 7 (41 Stat., 603), the Secretary of the Navy was authorized in his discretion to readjust the prevailing rates of pay of civilian professors and instructors at the Naval Academy, said readjustment to be effective from January 1, 1920, and not to involve an additional expenditure in excess of $55,000 for the remainder of the current fiscal year.

Commissioned as professors of mathematics.—Although the title conferred by law is a misnomer, held that the heads of the departments of ethics and English studies, of Spanish and other modern languages, and of drawing, should be commissioned as professors of mathematics under section 1528, Revised Statutes, after passing the examinations required by the act of January 20, 1881 (21 Stat., 317). The purpose that persons known to the law and the Navy Register as "professors of mathematics" should be engaged in teaching other branches of learning is too obvious for construction. That the name did not indicate the sole duties of the office is further apparent from the express declaration of the act of August 3, 1846, section 12 (now secs. 1399-1401, R. S.), "that the number of professors of mathematics in the Navy shall not exceed twelve; that they shall be appointed and commissioned by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall perform such duties as may be assigned them by order of the Secretary of the Navy at the Naval School, the Observatory, and on board ships of war in instructing the midshipmen of the Navy, or otherwise." Section 1528 shows that, certainly as to three of these professors, the duties to be assigned were not to be mathematical in their nature. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 103.)

Sec. 1529. [Classification and command of vessels. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1529. The vessels of the Navy of the United States shall be divided into four classes, and shall be commanded as nearly as may be as follows:

"First rates, by commodores; second rates, by captains; third rates, by commanders; fourth rates, by lieutenant-commanders."—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 3, v. 12, p. 583.)

It was superseded by act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1133), which provided as follows:

"That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish, and from time to time to modify, as the needs of the service may require, a classification of vessels of the Navy, and to formulate appropriate rules governing assignments to command of vessels and squadrons."

A classification of vessels of the Navy was established by General Order No. 541 of July 17, 1920.

"Vessels" defined.—See section 3, Revised Statutes.

Lost vessels.—How date of loss to be determined: See section 286, Revised Statutes.

Authority of officers over crew after loss of vessel: See section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 21.

Accounts of seamen on lost vessels, compensation for personal effects lost, etc. See sections 287–290, Revised Statutes.

Collisions.—Claims for damages occasioned by collisions for which vessels of the Navy are responsible, to be adjusted by the Secretary of the Navy, where amount does not exceed $500. (Act June 24, 1910, 36 Stat., 607.)

Ocean mail vessels.—To be constructed with particular reference to their prompt conversion into auxiliary cruisers. (Act Mar. 3, 1891, sec. 4, 26 Stat., 831.)

Suits by or against commanding officers of naval vessels.—See note to section 189, Revised Statutes, and note to Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 13.

Retired officers may be assigned to command vessels and squadrons in time of war. (Secs. 1463–1465, R. S.)

Officers and men not to be shipped for service on United States auxiliary vessels unless members of the Naval Reserve Force. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 589.)

Employment of naval vessels.—Secretary of the Navy to execute the orders of the President relating to employment of vessels of war. (Sec. 417, R. S.)

Vessels of the United States and their commanders may be directed by the President to examine vessels registered under the laws of the United States which are believed to be engaged in the coolie trade, and in proper cases to cause any vessel so examined to be delivered with her officers and crew to a United States marshal. (Sec. 2163, R. S.)

Officers of the Navy may be detailed to make arrests and seize vessels and sponges in enforcement of law regulating sponge trade in Gulf of Mexico or Straits of Florida. (Act Aug. 15, 1914, sec. 5, 38 Stat., 692.)

Vessels of the Navy may be used to protect merchant vessels against piratical vessels. (Sec. 4294, R. S.)

May be used to patrol waters frequented by seal herds and sea otter, and search and seize vessels violating law relating thereto. (Act Aug. 24, 1912, sec. 9, 37 Stat., 501.)

Not to receive goods or merchandise for freight, except gold, silver, or jewels, without authority from President or Secretary of the Navy. (Sec. 1624, R. S., art. 13.)

Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, at the request of the National Board of Health, place gratuitously at the disposal of the Commissioners of Quarantine or the proper authorities at any of the ports of the United States, to be used by them temporarily for quarantine purposes, such vessels belonging to the United States as are not required for other uses of the National Government, subject to such restrictions and regulations as he may deem necessary to impose for the preservation thereof. (Act June 14, 1879, 21 Stat., 50.)

Vessels may be loaned, upon written application of the governor of the State, to nautical schools at Boston, Philadelphia, New York, Seattle, San Francisco, Baltimore, Detroit, Saginaw, Mich., Norfolk, and Corpus Christi. (Act Mar. 4, 1911, 36 Stat., 1353.)

The President was authorized to employ public vessels in surveying the coast of the United States, by section 4686, Revised Statutes. (See note to sec. 264 R. S.)

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to place the vessels of the United States Fish Commission on the same footing with the Navy Department as those of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, by act of May 31, 1880. (21 Stat., 151, see note to sec. 264, R. S.)

One fully equipped man-of-war's cutter may be loaned, upon application of the governor, to one well-established military school in any State having seacoast line or bordering on one or more of the Great Lakes. (Act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1440, amended by acts June 29, 1906, 34 Stat., 620, and June 24, 1910, 36 Stat., 613.)

For other laws, see section 1536, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Expenses incurred by vessels rendering services for other departments.—See note to section 1437, Revised Statutes.

Jurisdiction over vessels of the Navy.—Freedom from State interference. (See notes to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, clauses 13 and 14; and note to sec. 355, R. S.)

Command of hospital ships by medical officers.—See note to section 1488, Revised Statutes.

Power of President as Commander in Chief.—The act of March 3, 1901 (quoted above), is plainly intended to amend the previous statutes on the subject, and is designed to allow the President to reclassify the vessels of the Navy that had theretofore been fixed by section 1529, Revised Statutes, and to authorize him to assign the command of vessels, omitting all restrictions. He is by that act given the full power contemplated in that provision of the Constitution which makes him Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. The act of March 3, 1901, is a complete substitute for prior laws or customs. The language of that act is clear and unambiguous, and was enacted with a full knowledge of the conditions brought about by prior laws and of the necessity of a new and elastic system by which the President could from time to time make such regulations as the necessities of the changing conditions in the service should require. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 571.)

Under previous laws it was held that, when the rate of a ship of war has been fixed by statute, it can not be changed by an order of the Navy Department in so far as to affect the compensation of an officer of the Navy; that it is the established course of the legislation of the United States to designate the rate of ships of war when authorizing their construction; that of all this, Congress has jurisdiction, which it exercises in its constitutional discretion; that it may affix to certain ships of the Navy, by express names, a specified rate, and to others a different rate, which rates bind the Secretary of the Navy in so far as they are employed by the statutes for any statutory object, such as to measure of pay, although they may not for other objects, which the statute leaves to the discretion of the executive; that in general, and as the apparently settled legislative policy of the Government, Congress reserves itself the power of designating the character as well as the number of vessels of the Navy; that if the legislative nomenclature be an anomaly Congress may change same, if it will, but that to do so exceeds the power of the executive. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 503, Mar. 3, 1857; compare 10 Comp. Dec., 516; see also 10 Comp. Dec., 122, and 12 Comp. Dec., 373.)

For other cases, as to the power of Congress and of the President as Commander in Chief, see note to Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 1.

Ownership of vessel not accepted by the Government but in possession of the builders.—Where a vessel is on her trial trip prior to acceptance, and still within the possession and control of the builders, the United States, however, having, by the payment of installments, acquired 49 out of 50 parts of the vessel, she must be regarded as practically the property of the Government. (Williams v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 186.)

The Attorney General defers answering the question as to the right of the Secretary of the Navy, under the direction of the President, to employ the military forces of the Government to obtain possession of the cruiser Galveston, in course of construction under contract with the Wm. R. Trigg Co., of Richmond, Va., which company has gone into the hands of a receiver appointed by the chancery court of Virginia, for the reason that a method of procedure in such cases is provided for by section 3753, Revised Statutes, and occasion for the exercise of this power is not likely to arise if the stipulation authorized by that section is filed. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 679.)

It is not to be doubted for a moment that the United States is entitled to the undisturbed possession and control of its property and of property in which it is interested to the extent of that interest, and that this possession and control are exempt from the process of every court. Yet, in order to avoid unseemly clashing and hostile demonstration upon the part of creditors or claimants, Congress has by the law embodied in sections 3753 and 3754, Revised Statutes, provided an orderly and peaceful solution of controversies that may arise between parties claiming adversely to the United States, under the terms of which the utmost rights of all claimants are preserved without the functions of the Government being in the slightest disturbed. However, this law is not mandatory in its provisions, and in a palpable case of improper interference with the Government's rights the strong Executive arm may be relied upon for the protection of its sovereignty. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 679, 683.)

Quite apart from the statute, and because of the nature of the case, it is impossible, on primary grounds, to yield assent at all to the idea that any instrumentality of the Government—in this case an instrumentality of prime importance—may be taken into custody and held under any adverse authority whatever. This view applies whether the adverse custody should assume to attach upon the instrumentality as a completed thing or upon one in process of creation. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 679, 682.)

For other cases as to the freedom of Federal instrumentalities from State interference, see note to Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 13.

Sec. 1530. [Rating of vessels. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1530. Steamships of forty guns or more shall be classed as first rates, those of twenty guns and under forty as second rates, and all those of less than twenty guns as third rates."—(12 June, 1858, c. 153, s. 5, v. 11, p. 319.)

It was superseded by act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1133), quoted above under section 1529, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1531. [Rule for naming vessels. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1531. The vessels of the Navy shall be named by the Secretary of the Navy, under the direction of the President, according to the following rule:

"Sailing-vessels of the first class shall be named after the States of the Union, those of the second class after the rivers, those of the third class after the principal cities and towns, and those of the fourth class as the President may direct.

"Steamships of the first class shall be named after the States of the Union, those of the second class after the rivers and principal cities and towns, and those of the third class as the President may direct."—(3 Mar., 1819, c. 7, s. 1, v. 3, p. 538. 12 June, 1858, c. 153, s. 5, v. 11, p. 319.)

It was superseded by the act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1133), quoted above, under section 1529, Revised Statutes, which expressly authorized the President to establish a classification of vessels of the Navy, and from time to time to modify such classification, thereby superseding the provisions of this section which established rules for naming vessels according to the classification prescribed by sections 1529 and 1530, Revised Statutes. (See file 26255-614, Aug. 9, 1920, and 26255-614:10, Jan. 21, 1921.)

Other provisions for naming vessels were embodied in the act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 390), as follows: "Hereafter all first-class battle ships and monitors owned by the United States shall be named for the States, and shall not be named for any city, place, or person until the names of the States, shall have been exhausted: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to interfere with the names of States already assigned to any such battle ship or monitor."

The act of May 4, 1898, was modified by act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 159), which provided that so much of said act of May 4, 1898, "as provides that monitors owned by the United States shall be named for the States, and shall not be named for any city, place, or person until the names of the States shall have been exhausted, is hereby repealed, and monitors now owned by the United States or hereafter built may be named as the President may direct." (See file 26255-614, Aug. 9, 1920, and 26255-614:10, Jan. 21, 1921.)

Gifts to vessels from States, municipalities, or others, presented in accordance with custom, may be accepted by the Secretary of the Navy. (Act May 20, 1908, 35 Stat., 171.)

Sec. 1532. [Two vessels not to bear the same name.] Care shall be taken that not more than one vessel in the Navy shall bear the same name.—(3 Mar., 1819, c. 7, s. 1, v. 3, p. 538. 12 June, 1858, c. 153, s. 5, v. 11, p. 319.)

Sec. 1533. [Names of purchased vessels.] The Secretary of the Navy may change the names of any vessels purchased for the Navy by authority of law.—(5 Aug., 1861, c. 51, s. 2, v. 12, p. 316.)

When in the opinion of the President the prices asked for the charter of vessels for the transportation of fuel for the Navy are excessive, he is authorized to purchase vessels suitable for the purpose, and if money is not otherwise available to pay for them from the appropriation "Fuel and transportation." (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 730.)

Sec. 1534. [Vessels kept in service in time of peace.] The President is authorized to keep in actual service in time of peace, such of the public armed vessels as, in his opinion, may be required by the nature of the service, and to cause the residue thereof to be laid up in ordinary in convenient ports.—(21 April, 1806, c. 35, s. 2, v. 2, p. 390.)

Sec. 1535. [Vessels, how officered and manned.] Vessels in actual service, in time of peace, shall be officered and manned as the President may direct, subject to the provisions of section fifteen hundred and twenty-nine.—(21 April, 1806, c. 35, s. 3, v. 2, p. 390.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of March 3, 1901, quoted above, under section 1529, Revised Statutes, which act superseded section 1529 and thereby superseded the words, "subject to the provisions of section fifteen hundred and twenty-nine," appearing in this section.

In time of war retired officers may be assigned to the command of vessels and squadrons. (Secs. 1463–1465, R.S.)

Sec. 1536. [Vessels to assist distressed navigators.] The President may, when the necessities of the service permit it, cause any suitable number of public vessels adapted to the purpose to cruise upon the coast in the season of severe weather and to afford such aid to distressed navigators as their circumstances may require; and such public vessels shall go to sea fully prepared to render such assistance.—(22 Dec., 1837, c. 1, v. 5, p. 208.)

By act of March 3, 1905 (33 Stat., 1164), it was provided that "the President in his discretion may temporarily detail any vessel or vessels of the Navy to remove or destroy derelicts in the course of vessels at sea," etc.

By act of May 12, 1906 (34 Stat., 190), the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to have constructed a vessel "for the purpose of blowing up or otherwise destroying or towing into port wrecks, derelicts, and other floating dangers to navigation."

Section 2759, Revised Statutes, provided that "the revenue cutters on the northern and northwestern lakes, when put in commission, shall be specially charged with aiding vessels in distress on the lakes."

By act of April 19, 1906 (sec. 2, 34 Stat., 123), the construction was authorized, under the supervision of the Revenue-Cutter Service, of a first-class ocean-going tug for service in saving life and property in the vicinity of the north Pacific coast of the United States, to be equipped with modern life and property saving appliances useful in assisting vessels and rescuing persons and property from the perils of the sea.

By resolution of October 31, 1893 (28 Stat., 13), it was provided that "the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to make, with the several Governments interested in the navigation of the North Atlantic Ocean, an international agreement providing for the reporting, marking, and removal of dangerous wrecks, derelicts, and other menaces to navigation in the North Atlantic Ocean outside the coast waters of the respective countries bordering thereon."

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 705), it was provided "that hereafter the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to cause vessels under his control adapted to the purpose, to afford salvage service to public or private vessels in distress: Provided, That when such salvage service is rendered by a vessel specially equipped for the purpose or by a tug, the Secretary of the Navy may determine and collect reasonable compensation therefor."

By section 4642, Revised Statutes, it is provided that all salvage accruing or awarded to any vessel of the Navy shall be distributed and paid to the officers and men entitled thereto in the same manner as prize money, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy. The laws relating to prize were contained in sections 4613–4652, Revised Statutes. By act of March 3, 1899, section 13 (30 Stat., 1007), it was provided that "all provisions of law authorizing the distribution among captors of the whole or any portion of the proceeds of vessels, or any property hereafter captured, condemned as prize, or providing for the payment of bounty for the sinking or destruction of vessels of the enemy hereafter occurring in time of war, are hereby repealed."

By act of April 28, 1908 (35 Stat., 69), it was provided that the authority therein conferred upon the Secretary of Commerce to make and enforce regulations to promote the safety of life on navigable waters during regattas or marine parades may be transferred for any special occasion to the head of another department by the President whenever in his judgment such transfer is desirable.

By act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 475), the Secretary of the Navy was authorized to constitute and introduce, as a portion of the equipment of the Navy, the life-saving dress adopted and approved by the Life-Saving Service of the United States. (By act of Jan. 28, 1915, 38 Stat., 800, the Life-Saving Service and the Revenue-Cutter Service were amalgamated under the name of the "Coast Guard.")

Salvage.—Under section 1536, Revised Statutes, it is a part of the duty of the Navy to assist vessels in distress. In an opinion rendered as early as July 8, 1856 (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 756), the Attorney General remarked that "officers and crews of the public ships of the United States are not entitled to salvage, civil or military, as of complete legal right," and that "the allowance of salvage, civil or military, in such cases, like the allowance of prize money on captures, is against public policy, and ought to be abolished in the sea service as it was long ago in the land service." The distribution of prize money has since been abolished by statute (see note above), but there has been no late legislation respecting salvage. (Naval Dig. 1916, p. 557, citing file 4496-79, Oct. 17, 1907. But see act July 1, 1918, noted above.)

In the recent history of the Navy no claim has been allowed for salvage, the Navy Department having taken the ground, in a number of cases, that such claims should not be made. In one or two instances, where a bonus was voluntarily tendered for distribution among the officers and men of a naval vessel, such gift has been informally accepted. (Naval Dig. 1916, p. 557, citing file Nos. 4496-79, Oct. 17, 1907; 7173; 27601-116; 2, May 17, 1915; 27673-342, Dec. 23, 1915.)

In a recent salvage case the actual cost of certain salvage services rendered a merchant vessel by a naval vessel was collected and deposited to the credit of the United States. (Naval Dig. 1916, p. 557, citing file 27601-116.)

Sec. 1537. [Patented articles connected with marine engines.] No patented article connected with marine engines shall hereafter be purchased or used in connection with any steam-vessels of war until the same shall have been submitted to a competent board of naval engineers, and recommended by such board, in writing, for purchase and use.—(18 July, 1861, c. 8, s. 3, v. 12, p. 268.)

No application for patent shall be regarded as abandoned which has become the property of the Government of the United States and which is important to the armament or defense of the United States. (Sec. 4894, R. S., amended by act July 6, 1916, 39 Stat., 348.)

Patent may be granted to public officers without payment of any fee where the invention is used or to be used in the public service without payment of royalty. (Act Mar. 3, 1883, 22 Stat., 625.)

Suit for compensation may be brought against the United States in Court of Claims for use of patented inventions without lawful authority, except where patentee is in the service of the United States, and except where the invention was made by an employee of the United States during the time of his employment or service. (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 705, amending act June 25, 1910, 36 Stat., 851. See also note to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, clause 8.)

Suit may also be brought for use of invention by the United States prior to issuance of patent, where the grant of a patent was withheld by order of the President in the interest of the public safety or defense. (Act Oct. 6, 1917, sec. 10, 40 Stat., 422.)

The Secretary of the Navy was authorized, by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 570), to construct, equip, and operate a laboratory for experimental and research work on the subject, among others, of "improvement and development in submarine engines," and such other necessary work for the benefit of the Government service.

Sec. 1538. [Repairs on hull and spars.] Not more than three thousand dollars shall be expended at any navy-yard in repairing the hull and spars of any vessel, until the necessity and expediency of such repairs and the probable cost thereof are ascertained and reported to the Navy Department by an examining board, which shall be composed of one captain or commander in the Navy, designated by the Secretary of the Navy, the naval constructor of the yard where such vessel may be ordered for repairs, and two master workmen of said yard, or one master workman and an engineer of the Navy, according to the nature of the repairs to be made. Said master workmen and engineer shall be designated by the head of the Bureau of Construction and Repair.—(21 Feb., 1861, c. 49, s. 1, v. 12, p. 147.)

The naval appropriation act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1184), and the appropriation acts in previous years, under the title, "construction and repair of vessels," contained the following provisions which have since been omitted: "Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repair of any wooden ship when the estimated cost of such repairs, to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers, shall exceed ten per centum of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material: Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repair of any other ship when the estimated cost of such repairs, to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers, shall exceed twenty per centum of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall deprive the Secretary of the Navy of the authority to order repairs of ships damaged in foreign waters or on the high seas, so far as may be necessary to bring them home."

The urgent deficiency act of June 15, 1917 (40 Stat., 212), and the naval appropriation acts of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 730), and July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 149), contained the following provision, which has since been omitted: "That the limitations imposed by existing law relative to repairs to vessels of the Navy shall not apply to the expenditure of funds made available in this act."

The act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1195), required the Secretary of the Navy to report to Congress, at the commencement of each regular session, the number of vessels and their names upon which any repairs or changes are proposed which in any case shall amount to more than $200,000, expenditures for such repairs or changes to be made only after appropriations in detail are provided by Congress. By act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 769), the Secretary was required to report to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, in addition to the report required by the act of March 2, 1907, a detailed statement showing the amount expended from each of the appropriations for the repair of every ship, where such repairs exceed for any one ship the sum of $200,000 in any one fiscal year. By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 605), the statutory limit of $200,000 for repairs and changes to capital ships, as provided in the act of March 2, 1907, was changed to $300,000.

Sec. 1539. [Repairs on sails and rigging.] Not more than one thousand dollars shall be expended in repairs on the sails and rigging of any vessel, until the necessity and expediency of such repairs and the estimated cost thereof have been ascertained and reported to the Navy Department by an examining board, which shall be composed of one naval officer, designated by the Secretary of the Navy, and the master rigger and the master sail-maker of the yard where such vessel may be ordered.—(21 Feb., 1861, c. 49, s. 1, v. 12, p. 147.)

See note to section 1538, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1540. [Sale of vessels unfit to be repaired.] The President may direct any armed vessel of the United States to be sold when, in his opinion, such vessel is so much out of repair that it will not be for the interest of the United States to repair her.—(21 April, 1806, c. 47, s. 3, v. 2, p. 402.)

By act of September 7, 1916, section 6 (39 Stat., 730), it was provided that the President may transfer to the Shipping Board such vessels belonging to the Navy Department as are suitable for commercial uses and not required for naval use in time of peace.

See notes to sections 418 and 1541, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1541. [Sale of unserviceable vessels and materials.] The Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to sell, at public sale, such vessels and materials of the United States Navy as, in his judgment, can not be advantageously used, repaired, or fitted out; and he shall, at the opening of each session of Congress, make a full report to Congress of all vessels and materials sold, the parties buying the same, and the amount realized therefrom, together with such other facts as may be necessary to a full understanding of his acts.—(23 Mar., 1872, c. 195, s. 2, v. 17, p. 154.)

By act of June 30, 1890 (26 Stat., 194), the Secretary of the Navy was authorized to sell, after advertisement, condemned naval supplies, stores, and materials, either by public auction or by advertising for sealed proposals.

By act of August 5, 1882, section 2 (22 Stat., 296), the sale or exchange was prohibited of old material of the Navy "which can be profitably used by reworking or otherwise in the construction or repair of vessels, their machinery, armor, armament, or equipment"; it was required that such old material which can not be profitably used as aforesaid "be appraised and sold at public auction after public notice and advertisement shall have been given according to law under such rules and regulations and in such manner as the Secretary may direct"; and it was further required that the Secretary of the Navy annually report in detail to Congress the proceeds of all such sales. The same act and section required that the Secretary of the Navy cause to be examined by competent boards of officers all vessels on their return from foreign stations, and all vessels in the United States as often as once in three years, if practicable, and strike from the Navy Register and report to Congress the name of such vessels as said board, with his concurrence, shall ascertain to be unfit for further service, or, if unfinished in any navy yard, which can not be finished without disproportionate expense. By act of March 3, 1883, section 5 (22 Stat., 599), the Secretary was required to have appraised all vessels stricken from the Navy

Register pursuant to the act of August 5, 1882, and in his discretion to sell any such vessel for not less than its appraised value, after advertising in newspapers for sealed proposals and complying with other detailed provisions of said act; the same act prohibited the sale of any vessel in the future in any manner other than as therein provided, "unless the President of the United States shall otherwise direct in writing."

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 605), the Secretary of the Navy was authorized to sell any or all of the auxiliary ships of the Navy, classified as colliers, transports, tenders, supply ships, special types, and hospital ships which are 18 years and over in age, which he deems unsuited to present needs of the Navy, and which can be disposed of at an advantageous price, not less than 50 per cent of their original cost.

Exchange of worn-out motor-propelled vehicles of the Naval Establishment as part of purchase price of new ones, was authorized by act of August 29, 1916. (39 Stat., 565.)

President authorized to make regulations for purchase, preservation, and disposition of all articles, stores, and supplies for persons in the Navy. (Sec. 1549, R. S.)

Sale of useless papers in the Navy Department, on naval vessels, and at navy yards is authorized by acts of February 16, 1889 (25 Stat., 672); March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 933); February 16, 1909, section 14 (35 Stat., 622); August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 329); and March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 929).

Transfer of naval ordnance and ordnance material to the War Department was authorized by act of July 8, 1918 (40 Stat., 817).

For reference to other laws relating to the sale, exchange, and loan of vessels or other property belonging to the naval service, see note to section 418, Revised Statutes.

Mandamus proceedings to compel delivery of vessel to highest bidder.—The United States, as the owner in possession of a naval vessel, can not be interfered with behind its back; nor can the courts compel the Secretary of the Navy, who has the custody of such vessel, to surrender it in a mandamus proceeding to which the United States is not and can not be made a party. (Goldberg v. Daniels, 231 U. S., 218.)

Mandamus will not lie at the instance of one who, in response to advertisement, has made the highest bid for a vessel, to compel the Secretary of the Navy to deliver the vessel. (Goldberg v. Daniels, 231 U. S., 218.)

The discretion of the Secretary of the Navy is not ended by receipt and opening of bids for a condemned naval vessel, even though they satisfy the conditions prescribed. Mandamus will not lie to compel him to accept the highest bid. (Goldberg v. Daniels, 231 U. S., 218, affirming U. S. v. Meyer, 37 App. D. C., 282.)

Delivery of public property to contractor as part payment on contract.—Sections 1541 and 3618, Revised Statutes, confer upon the Secretary of the Navy the only authority by which he can dispose of the materials of the United States Navy. When in the judgment of the Secretary they can be advantageously used they must be used; when they can not be so used they must be sold at public sale and the proceeds covered into the Treasury. No officer of the Navy Department had any authority, therefore, to deliver to a contractor the materials of the Navy to be sold by him and to allow him to put the proceeds into his own pocket. (Steele v. U. S., 113 U. S., 128, 133.)

A private sale of old material arising from the breaking up of a vessel of war, made by an officer of the Navy Department to a contractor for repairs of a war vessel and machinery, is in violation of the provisions of section 1541, Revised Statutes. (Steele v. U. S., 113 U. S., 128.)

The allowance of the estimated value of such material in the settlement of the contractor's accounts is a violation of the provisions of section 3618, Revised Statutes. (Steele v. U. S., 113 U. S., 128.)

A settlement of such accounts at the Navy Department and at the Treasury, in which the contractor was debited with the material at the estimated value, does not preclude the United States from showing that the estimates were far below the real value, and from recovering the difference between the amount allowed and the real value. (Steele v. U. S., 113 U. S., 128.)

Delay in enforcing a claim arising out of an illegal sale of the property of the United States at a value far below its real worth can not be set up as a bar to the recovery of its value. (Steele v. U. S., 113 U. S., 128.)

An officer of the Government can not trade off to a contractor, in payment of the money due him on his contract, old materials belonging to the United States, when in the judgment of the officer they can not be advantageously used. The delivery of such old material to a contractor, with or without the authority of the Navy Department, if it was intended to vest in the contractor any title to the material, was without authority of law. Where the property so delivered was charged to the contractor at about one-fourth its actual value, the United States is entitled to recover the difference between the amount charged and its real value. The whole transaction was illegal, and the contractor is chargeable with knowledge of the fact. It was in effect a private sale of the property of the United States at a grossly inadequate price. The fact that the account had been settled by the officers of the Navy Department did not cure the unauthorized acts. Both the disposition of the property and the settlement of the account were without authority of law and not binding on the Government. (Steele v. U. S., 113 U. S., 128, 133.)

Exchange of vessels.—The Secretary of the Navy can not exchange a vessel belonging to the Navy, which has been condemned as unfit for naval purposes, for another vessel, notwithstanding the exchange might be of advantage to the public service. The disposition of such vessel is controlled by the act of May 23, 1872, section 2 [now sec. 1541, R. S.]. The Secretary of the Navy can only dispose of vessels and materials belonging to the United States and under the control of his department in manner as prescribed in said section. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 369.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 161, 355, and 418, Revised Statutes.

Loan of public property.—The head of a department has no power to turn over Government property to States or individuals, to be used for any purpose not authorized by some act of Congress, any more than he has power to give such property away absolutely. The property, real and personal, of the United States is dedicated by law to the uses and purposes of the United States, and nothing short of an act of Congress can authorize its application to any other uses and purposes. The question is one of power, and that must come from Congress and is not to be inferred from the fact that what is recommended would be highly beneficial to the United States. Whether the proposed application of Government property to State purposes is advisable or not is a question for the legislative and not the executive department of the Government. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 93, 96, citing Steele v. U. S., 113 U. S., 128.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 161, 355, and 418, Revised Statutes.

Disposition of vessel where bids are less than appraised value.—The act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 599), provides for the advertisement and sale of condemned vessels of the Navy and that no such vessel shall be sold for less than the appraised value. Where the Secretary of the Navy has endeavored to comply with that statute, but no one is willing to pay the appraised value, the case is one not specifically covered by any statute. In the absence of any such statute, the Secretary, by virtue of his office and because of his general duty to care for and preserve the property of the Government under his control, has the right to reject all bids submitted and to dispose of such condemned vessel in such way as may seem to him to be most advantageous to the Government. He may, therefore, very properly utilize such portion of the vessel as is of value, and destroy that which remains and which is valueless. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 470.)

It is customary to remove from condemned naval vessels before sale such articles of outfit and equipment as may still be serviceable to the Government. This custom does not depend upon any statute authorizing it, but is based upon the exercise of the general official power which the Secretary of the Navy has, in virtue of his office, to properly care for and protect the public property committed to his control and to prevent unnecessary waste of Government property. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 470.)

The Secretary of the Navy may legally remove the engine and boiler from a naval barge for future use by the Government, since the vessel has been found unfit for further service, and the highest bid received for the vessel was much less than the value of the engine and boiler. The hull, being valueless, may be sunk or destroyed. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 470.)

Status of vessel stricken from the Navy Register.—Although a board to examine vessels of the Navy, under the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 296, sec. 2), finds a vessel "unfit for further service as a cruiser," and her name is stricken from the list of ships in the Navy Register, that does not necessarily muster her out of the service. A vessel condemned by a board as unfit for a cruiser, but subject to the usual naval routine and put to kindred uses, her officers being subject to the same rules as before she was condemned, remains, as to those serving on her, as much a vessel of the Navy as before. (Pierce v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cls., 294.)

Sec. 1542. [Commandants of navy-yards.] The President may select the commandants of the several navy-yards from officers not below the grade of commander.—(2 Aug., 1861, c. 36, v. 12, p. 285. 5 July, 1862, c. 134, s. 2, v. 12, p. 510.)

Military command by staff officers: See section 1488, Revised Statutes.

Marine officers not to command navy yards. See section 1617, Revised Statutes.

Commandant must be line officer.—The grade of commander exists only in the line of the Navy, therefore the words, "officers not below the grade of commander," used in this section, require that the commandants of the several navy yards be officers of the line. (File 5038-20.1, Jan. 18, 1915. See note to secs. 1404 and 1390, R. S.)

"Navy yard" defined.—Where the Commonwealth of Virginia ceded to the United States jurisdiction over certain public lands for the purpose of a navy yard, by "navy yard" was meant not merely the land on which the Government does work connected with ships of the Navy, but the waters contiguous necessary to float the vessels of the Navy while at the navy yard. (Ex parte Tatem, 23 Fed. Cas., No. 13759; see art. 5354, Naval Institutions, 1913.)

Transfer of property between navy yards.—When specifically appropriated for to be used at a designated navy yard, can not be transferred to another without legislative authority. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 511, as to floating dry dock; 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 594, as to machinery and tools.)

Abolishing navy yards.—Whether this may be done without legislative authority, quare. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 594, 596.)

Sec. 1543. [Master workmen.] The persons employed at these several navy-yards to superintend the mechanical departments, and heretofore known as master mechanics, master carpenters, master joiners, master blacksmiths, master boiler-makers, master sail-makers, master plumbers, master painters, master calkers, master masons, master boat-builders, master spar-makers, master block-makers, master laborers, and the superintendents of rope-walks shall be men skilled in their several duties and appointed from civil life, and shall not be appointed from the officers of the Navy.—(17 June, 1868, c. 61, s. 1, v. 15, p. 69.)

Sec. 1544. [Laborers, how selected.] Laborers shall be employed in the several navy-yards by the proper officers in charge with reference to skill and efficiency, and without regard to other considerations.—(23 May, 1872, c. 195, s. 1, v. 17, p. 146.)

No enlisted men or seamen, not including commissioned and warrant officers, on battleships of the Navy, when such battleships are docked or laid up at any navy yard for repairs, shall be ordered or required to perform any duties except such as are or may be performed by the crew while at sea or in a foreign port. (Act Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 355.)

Moral character considered.—Taken literally, section 1544 might require a disregard for good character or personal morals on the part of an applicant for employment if his skill in his trade and efficiency as a mechanic were notable and undoubted. Such was not the intention of Congress, and this section should be read as though the word “primarily” or the words “first of all” were interpolated between the words “reference” and “to”; or as though the words “suggesting the choice of those less efficient and skillful” had been appended after the word “considerations.” (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 184, 189.)

Political considerations.—There can be no doubt that the “considerations” which Congress had in mind refer to general complaints which had been made by reason of the alleged employment of workmen at navy yards for political considerations and through the influence of politicians in order to secure expected partisans or personal advantage. This section intended to lay down, as a rule for the guidance of officers at the several navy yards, the principle that workmen should be employed for the benefit of the Government and not for any other reason. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 184, 189.)

Nature of tests to determine fitness.—The Secretary of the Navy may direct by what reasonable and appropriate tests fitness or comparative fitness may be ascertained, and in the absence of any law, rule, or order on the subject, that matter would be left to the discretion of the appointing power. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 184.)

Persons discharged from military service.—Section 1544, Revised Statutes, must be construed in connection with 1754, Revised Statutes, which provides that persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service by reason of disability, etc., incurred in the line of duty, shall be preferred for appointments to civil offices where they are found to possess the necessary business capacity to properly discharge the duties of such office. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 184.)

should provide that persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty, if fitted physically, mentally, and morally to discharge with reasonable skill and efficiency the duties of the position to be filled, are entitled to be selected in preference to others, although the latter may possess greater skill and efficiency. As between persons within this privileged class relative skill and efficiency should be decisive as to the right of employment, and all other considerations should be subordinated thereto. With respect to all other persons, including those honorably discharged on account of expiration of enlistment or reasons other than disability incurred in the line of duty, superior fitness for the employment should be the decisive consideration; but where there is no appreciable difference in this respect between two applicants, then an honorably discharged soldier, sailor, or marine would be entitled to preference in conformity with the intentment of section 1755, Revised Statutes. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 184.)

Preference for employment.—“Persons employed in the clerical, drafting, and inspection force at navy yards and stations discharged for lack of work or insufficiency of funds shall for one year thereafter be preferred for employment in such navy yards and stations in the clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger forces.” (Act Mar. 3, 1909, 35 Stat., 755.)

Classified service.—Civilian employees at navy yards, other than laborers or workmen, are included within the classified service and are not exempted from competitive examination by the terms of section A of the Civil Service Rules, but in so far as they come within the provisions of section 3 of Rule III are subjected to special tests of fitness to be prescribed in accordance with the terms of the latter rule. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 184.)

Mandamus will lie to compel the members of the Board of Labor Employment at the United States Navy Yard, Washington, D. C., to register an applicant for examination for employment as mechanic or laborer, where the refusal of the board is based solely upon the citizenship of the applicant and in this respect he is eligible under Rule 5 of the Civil Service Commission, promulgated by the President on April 15, 1903, which modified previous regulations of the Navy Department. (U. S. v. Bowyer, 25 App. D. C., 121. See note to sec. 417, R. S.)

Sec. 1545. [Salaries; per diem compensation. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1545. Salaries shall not be paid to any employes in any of the navy-yards, except those who are designated in the estimates. All other persons shall receive a per diem compensation for the time during which they may be actually employed."—(14 July, 1862, c. 16 § 4, s. 1, 12, p. 564.)

It was expressly repealed by act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 755), which act made the following new provision on the same subject (35 Stat., 754, 755): "That hereafter the rates of pay of the clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger force at navy-yards and naval stations and other stations and offices under the Navy Department shall be paid from lump appropriations and shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Navy on a per annum or per diem basis as he may elect; that the number may be increased or decreased at his option and shall be distributed at the various navy-yards and naval stations by the Secretary of the Navy to meet the needs of the naval service * * *; that the total amount expended annually for pay for such clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger force shall not exceed the amounts specifically allowed by Congress under the several lump appropriations, and that the Secretary of the Navy shall each year, in the annual estimates, report to Congress the number of persons so employed, their duties, and the amount paid to each."

(See act of Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 558, as to lump-sum employees.)

Leaves of absence.—By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 617), it was provided "that each and every employee of the navy yards, gun factories, naval stations, and arsenals of the United States Government is hereby granted thirty days' leave of absence each year, without forfeiture of pay during such leave: Provided further, That it shall be lawful to allow pro rata leave only to those serving twelve consecutive months or more: And provided further, That in all cases the heads of divisions shall have discretion as to the time when the leave can best be allowed: And provided further, That not more than thirty days' leave with pay shall be allowed any such employee in one year: Provided further, That this provision shall not be construed to deprive employees of any sick leave or legal holidays to which they may now be entitled under existing law."

The act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 755), which was modified by the above-quoted provisions in the act of August 29, 1916, contained the following with reference to per diem employees at navy yards and naval stations and other stations and offices under the Navy Department: "That such per diem employees may hereafter, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be granted leave of absence not to exceed fifteen days in any one year, which leave may, in exceptional and meritorious cases, where such an employee is ill, be extended, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, not to exceed fifteen days additional in any one year."

"All officers and employees of the United States and of the District of Columbia who shall be members of the National Guard shall be entitled to leave of absence from their respective duties, without loss of pay, time or efficiency rating, on all days during which they shall be engaged in field or coast-defense training ordered or authorized under the provisions of this Act." (Act June 3, 1916, sec. 80, 39 Stat., 203.)

The naval appropriation act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 893), provided that "employees while taking their leaves of absence shall not receive compensation for services rendered during the period of such leave of absence in addition to leave pay."

The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 557), provided that "hereafter any civilian employee of the Navy Department who is a citizen of the United States and employed at any station outside the continental limits of the United States may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, after at least two years' continuous, faithful, and satisfactory service abroad, and subject to the interests of the public service, be granted accrued leave of absence, with pay, for each year of service, and if an employee should elect to postpone the taking of any or all of the leave to which he may be entitled in pursuance hereof such leave may be allowed to accumulate for a period of not exceeding four years, the rate of pay for accrued leave to be the rate obtaining at the time the leave is granted."

Holidays.—"The employees of the Navy Yard, Government Printing Office, Bureau of Printing and Engraving, and all other per diem employees of the Government on duty at Washington, or elsewhere in the United States, shall be allowed the following holidays, to-wit: The first day of January, the twenty-second day of February, the fourth day of July, the twenty-fifth day of December, and such days as may be designated by the President as days for national thanksgiving, and shall receive the same pay as on other days." (Res. Jan. 6, 1885, 23 Stat., 516. See 21 Comp. Dec., 337, noted below under "Pay at navy yards for work on holidays.")

"All per diem employees of the Government, on duty at Washington or elsewhere in the United States, shall be allowed the day of each year, which is celebrated as 'Memorial' or 'Decoration Day' and the fourth of July of each year, as holiday, and shall receive the same pay as on other days." (Res. Feb. 23, 1887, 24 Stat., 644.)

"The first Monday of September in each year, being the day celebrated and known as Labor's Holiday, is hereby made a legal public holiday, to all intents and purposes, in the same manner as Christmas, the first day of January, the twenty-second day of February, the thirtieth day of May, and the fourth day of July are now made by law public holidays." (Act June 28, 1894, 28 Stat., 96.)

Every Saturday after 12 o'clock noon is a holiday in the District of Columbia under the following provision of the District of Columbia Code, section 1389 (act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1404), as amended by act of June 30, 1902 (32 Stat., 520): "The following days in each year, namely, the first day of January, commonly called New Year's Day; the twenty-second day of February, known as Washington's Birthday; the Fourth of July; the thirtieth day of May, commonly called Decoration Day; the first Monday in September, known as Labor's Holiday; the twenty-fifth day of December, commonly called Christmas Day; every Saturday, after twelve o'clock noon; any day appointed or recommended by the President of the United States as a day of public fasting or Thanksgiving, and the day of the inauguration of the President, in every fourth year, shall be holidays in the District for all purposes."

Holidays falling on Sunday are observed on the following day in the District of Columbia under section 1389 of the Code (cited above), which contains the following clause: "Whenever any day set apart as a legal holiday shall fall on Sunday, then and in such case the next succeeding day shall be a holiday * * *." The Navy Regulations, article 1289, after providing that January 1, February 22, May 30, July 4, the first Monday in September, December 25, "and such other days as may be designated by the President (including the day for National Thanksgiving) shall be regarded as holidays on board ships of the Navy and at naval stations," further provides that "whenever any of the above-designated dates falls on Sunday, the following Monday shall be observed as a holiday." General provision to the same effect with reference to employees of the Federal Government was made by Executive order of May 22, 1909.

Civilian employees traveling from United States to duty in insular possessions and return.—"The Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, is authorized to pay all civilian employees appointed for duty in the Philippine, Hawaiian, and Samoan islands, the island of Guam, and the island of Porto Rico, from the date of their sailing from the United States until they report for duty to the officer under whom they are to serve, and while returning to the United States by the most direct route and with due expedition, a per diem compensation corresponding to their pay while actually employed; and in cases where the appointee is not to fill an existing vacancy his pay while traveling may be charged to the annual appropriation of the bureau concerned." (Act July 1, 1902, 32 Stat., 663.)

Pay at navy yards for work on holidays.—"Where employees of the Navy Department are required to perform labor in the District of Columbia on Saturday afternoon, which is a legal holiday in the District of Columbia for all purposes, they are entitled to be paid therefor at the ordinary rate of pay under Revised Statutes, section 1545. (Adams v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 192.)

The work in a navy yard is under the control of the Secretary of the Navy, and where he directs work to be performed by per diem employees on holidays, a regulation fixing pay operates as a contract if it does not contravene some law. (Adams v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 192.)

An order issued by the Secretary of the Navy, requiring employees to render service on Saturday afternoons with no other compensation than such as shall be due by reason of the extension of hours, is presumed to be issued with the approval of the President under section 1547, Revised Statutes. (Adams v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 192.)

Where a statute gives to certain employees pay without work on holidays, and they are required by the head of the department to render service on holidays, he may make provision by regulation or contract for extra pay for services so performed. (Adams v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 192.)

Exemption from work on holidays does not carry with it the right to pay. If Congress makes no provision for payment to per diem employees on holidays, their compensation is limited to the time they are actually employed. (Adams v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 192.)

Actual service is the basis for pay, and where there is no law giving pay without work, the per diem employee is not entitled to be paid. (Adams v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 192.)

Per diem employees of the Government at navy yards and stations which are not in the United States are entitled to be paid on holidays as provided in article 382, Naval Instructions, as amended July 6, 1914. By section 1545, Revised Statutes, per diem employees in navy yards were allowed compensation only for time actually employed, but this statute was repealed by the act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 753, 755), and there is no existing law which said article of the Naval Instructions contravenes (21 Comp. Dec., 337).

Hawaii is in the United States within the meaning of the joint resolution of January 6, 1885 (23 Stat. 516), and its provisions as to pay for certain holidays are applicable to per diem employees at navy yards within that territory (21 Comp. Dec., 337).

Suspension of work for part of day under Executive order.—On April 6, 1899, the Washington navy yard being closed at noon pursuant to an Executive order, in connection with ceremonies attending the interment of the bodies of soldiers and sailors whose lives were lost in the War with Spain, the per diem employees of the yard should receive compensation for the entire day. Section 1545, Revised Statutes, does not restrict the employees under such circumstances to compensation for the time they were actually engaged in doing work. The employees did not cease work on their own motion, nor were they discharged from the Government service for the remaining part of the day. They had severally begun a day's work under a contract with the Government, and had continued to work until the authorities of the shop closed the navy yard, shut up its workshops, and arbitrarily required them to stop. They were still actually in the employment of the Government, though instead of laboring in the navy yard they were engaged, by direction of the President, in doing honor to the heroes who gave their lives for the country in a foreign war. While the statute of the United States provides that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics who may be employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, there is no rule of law which exempts the Government from the same obligation to its employees as that which rests upon a private individual. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 472).

Employee suspended by order of commandant.—One who is employed at a navy yard at a per diem compensation is not entitled to compensation except for the time during which he actually renders services; and the fact that, after being suspended by the commandant, he holds himself ready to perform such services, gives him no claim against the Government. The suspension of such an employee by the commandant is in effect his discharge; and the fact that, after his suspension, a board is appointed to investigate charges against him is no recognition of his status as an employee, and gives him no right to compensation, nor to a recovery of sums expended in traveling to attend before the board. (Murphy v. U. S., 79 Fed. Rep., 255. For other cases, see note to sec. 416, R. S.).

Sec. 1546. [Requiring contributions for political purposes.] No officer or employé of the Government shall require or request any working man in any navy-yard to contribute or pay any money for political purposes, nor shall any working man be removed or discharged for political opinion; and any officer or employé of the Government who shall offend against the provisions of this section shall be dismissed from the service of the United States.—(2 Mar., 1867, c. 172, s. 3, v. 14, p. 492.)

By act of June 30, 1876 (19 Stat., 69), it was provided that "no increase of the force at any navy yard shall be made at any time within sixty days next before any election to take place for President of the United States, or members of Congress, except when the Secretary of the Navy shall certify that the needs of the public service make such increase necessary at that time which certificate shall be immediately published when made."

Civil Service Commission is to prepare rules on the subject of political contributions and services by persons in the public service, and preventing the coercion of any person's political action by persons in the public service. (Act Jan. 16, 1883, sec. 2, 22 Stat., 403.)

Detailed records of political contributions required to be kept and filed, etc., by political committees. (Act June 25, 1910, 36 Stat., 822, as amended by act Aug. 19, 1911, 37 Stat., 25.)

Punishment of persons in the United States service for directly or indirectly soliciting or receiving political contributions from officers or employees of the United States is provided for by United States criminal code, act of March 4, 1909, sections 118, 122 (35 Stat., 1110).

Punishment of any person for soliciting in any manner whatever or receiving any political contribution in any room or building occupied in the discharge of official duties by any employee of the United States, or in any navy yard, fort, or arsenal, is provided for by United States criminal code, act of March 4, 1909, sections 119, 122 (35 Stat., 1110).

Punishment of any officer or employee of the United States for discharging, promoting, or degrading, or changing the official rank or compensation of any other officer or employee, or promising or threatening to do so, for giving or withholding any political contribution, is provided for by United States criminal code, act of March 4, 1909, sections 120, 122 (35 Stat., 1110).

ing any political contribution to any other person in the United States service, is provided for by United States criminal code, act of March 4, 1909, sections 121, 122 (35 Stat., 1110).

Purpose of section.—The evident purpose of Congress in all this class of enactment has been to promote efficiency and integrity in the discharge of official duties, and to maintain proper discipline in the public service. Clearly such a purpose is within the just scope of legislative power. If contributions from those in public employment may be solicited by others in official authority, it is easy to see that what begins as a request may end as a demand, and that a failure to meet the demand may be treated by those having the power of removal as a breach of some supposed duty growing out of the political relations of the party. The law contemplates no restrictions upon either giving or receiving, except in so far as may be necessary to protect in some degree those in the public service against exactions through fear of personal loss. This purpose of the restriction and the principle on which it rests are most distinctly manifested in section 1546, Revised Statutes. If there were no other reasons for legislation of this character than such as relate to the protection of those in the public service against unjust exactions, its constitutionality would be clear. But there are other reasons equally good. If persons in public employ may be called on by those in authority to contribute from their personal income to the expenses of political campaigns, and a refusal may lead to putting good men out of the service, liberal payments may be made the ground for keeping poor ones in. Also, if part of the compensation received for public services must be contributed for political purposes, it is easy to see that an increase of compensation may be required to provide the means to make the contribution, and that in this way the Government itself may be made to furnish indirectly the money to defray the expenses of keeping the political party in power that happens to have for the time being the control of the public patronage. (Ex parte Curtis, 106 U. S., 371.)

Sec. 1547. [Regulations.] The orders, regulations, and instructions issued by the Secretary of the Navy prior to July 14, 1862, with such alterations as he may since have adopted, with the approval of the President, shall be recognized as the regulations of the Navy, subject to alterations adopted in the same manner.—(14 July, 1862, c. 164, s. 5, v. 12, p. 565.)

See note to section 161, Revised Statutes, for collection of decisions on the subject of executive regulations.

Valid regulations have the force of law.—It is a well-settled rule of judicial construction that the regulations issued by the Secretary of the Navy, in conformity with section 1547 of the Revised Statutes, are valid and have the force of law when they are not inconsistent with the statute under which they are issued by the Secretary. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 270, 274. (See below, "Proceedings of courts-martial.")

Must be consistent with law.—"The authority of the Secretary to issue orders, regulations and instructions, with the approval of the President, in reference to matters connected with the naval establishment, is subject to the condition, necessarily implied, that they must be consistent with the statutes which have been enacted by Congress in reference to the Navy. He may, with the approval of the President, establish regulations in execution of, or supplemental to, but not in conflict with, the statutes defining his powers or conferring rights upon others. The contrary has never been held by this court." (U. S. v. Symonds, 120 U. S., 46, 49; Glavey v. U. S., 182 U. S., 595, 605.)

The orders, regulations, and instructions issued by the Secretary of the Navy under Revised Statutes, section 1547, must be in accordance with law and upon a subject which the law has not determined, adjusted, or defined. A regulation of an executive department must conform to the law, if a law exists upon the subject of the regulation. The Secretary of the Navy can not change the character of an officer's service from sea service to shore service by simply ordering that it be so regarded; sea service is defined by section 1571, Revised Statutes, and the final construction of the statute is vested in the judiciary. (Symonds v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 148; affirmed, 120 U. S., 46.)

For other cases, see specific rulings noted below.

Detachment of officers from Marine Headquarters.—Article 4141 of the Navy Regulations, approved May 14, 1913, is in contravention of existing statutes and therefore invalid, in that it permits officers of the staff departments of the Marine Corps to be detached permanently from the headquarters of the commandant, and gives the power to the commandant of the corps to impose duties upon these staff officers inconsistent with their staff functions. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 234.)

Regulations of a legislative character.—Prior to the act of July 14, 1862 (now section 1547, R. S.), it was held by the Attorney General that a code of regulations issued by the President, February 15, 1853, for the government of the naval service, entitled "System of Orders and Instructions," was without legal validity; that said system was neither more nor less than rules for the government and regulation of the naval forces, "that precise thing which the Constitution empowers Congress to make;" and that, even if it be conceded, "what might well be questioned," that Congress can delegate to others the power to make a law, said system could not lay claim to legality by virtue of any power delegated to the President by Congress, as there was no act of Congress authorizing same to be issued or thereafter adopting same. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 10, reviewing history of Navy Regulations.)

It is not intended to say that the President, as Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces, has not some power to issue directions and orders; so also has a commodore in command of a squadron, or a general in the field. But such orders and directions, when issued by the President, must be within the range of purely executive or administrative action. Cases may be supposed in which it is not easy to draw the line between what is legislative and what is executive or administrative; and so it is in regard to every such question of the distinction of powers. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 10.)

The Army Regulations derive their force from the power of the President as Commander in Chief, and are binding upon all within the sphere of his legal and constitutional authority. (Kurtz v. Moffitt, 115 U. S., 487, 503.)

The act of 1862 (now sec. 1547, R. S.), was only intended to recognize the power of the President to alter regulations which he was originally competent to adopt and promulgate without express authority of Congress; no just rule of construction would authorize giving to this provision the force and effect of a general delegation of legislative authority to the executive at his pleasure to pass upon and regulate subjects which were in their own nature exclusively subjects of legislative action and cognizance, or which Congress had previously fixed by law and which the regulations thereby recognized had not undertaken to modify or alter. (13 Op. Att'y. Gen., 10.)

Regulations specifically adopted by Congress can not be altered by President.—Congress, by acts of August 5, 1854, chapter 268, section 4, and March 3, 1859, chapter 76, section 2, specifically adopted certain orders of the Secretary of the Navy, dated August 31, 1846, May 27, 1847, and January 13, 1857, upon relative rank; this fact gave to such orders the character of legislative acts; they thereby ceased to be orders or regulations of the executive and were incorporated into the statute law as laws of Congress. Accordingly, the act of July 14, 1862, section 5 (now sec. 1547, R. S.), which authorized the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President, to adopt alterations in "orders, regulations, and instructions" theretofore issued by the Secretary of the Navy, can not properly be treated as comprehending or embracing the above-mentioned orders, which had been previously recognized and established by legislation as regulations of Congress on the subject of the relative rank of staff officers of the Navy. (13 Op. Att'y. Gen., 10, overruling 10 Op. Att'y. Gen., 413, noted below.)

The executive has no power, without express authority of law, to fix the relative rank of the line and staff officers of the Navy. However, the fifth section of the act of July 14, 1862, recognizing the orders of the Secretary of the Navy theretofore issued as regulations of the Navy Department and authorizing alterations thereof, confers on the Secretary of the Navy, with the approbation of the President, power to alter any orders issued by him before the passage of the act fixing the relative rank of the line and staff officers of the Navy. If, therefore, the head of the Navy Department, as the Minister of the President, has at any former period, by any order or regulation, fixed the relative rank of the line and staff officers of the Navy, it is competent for him, with the approbation of the President, under authority of the provision cited, to make such alterations in such order or regulation as in his judgment the good of the service may require. (10 Op. Att'y. Gen., 413; overruled by 13 Op. Att'y. Gen., 10, noted above.)

Certain regulations issued by the Secretary of the Navy, with the approbation of the President, on 13 March, 1863, establishing and increasing the relative rank of the staff officers of the Navy, and modifying previous orders which had been specifically adopted by Congress, held not founded upon valid authority of law. (13 Op. Att'y. Gen., 10.)

Precedence of line and staff officers.—Article 21 of the Navy Regulations, 1893 (art. 1009, Navy Regs., 1913), fixing the order in which officers of the line and different staff corps shall take precedence when of the same date, is within the authority conferred upon the Secretary of the Navy, by Revised Statutes, section 1547. (21 Op. Att'y. Gen., 46.)

Rank of aids to rear admirals.—Section 1547, Revised Statutes, provides that the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President, can make necessary regulations for the Navy, and when the law provides for additional pay of aids to admirals it would seem both proper and necessary for the regulations to provide under what circumstances such aids should be appointed and what should be their rank. There is no other branch of the Government service interested in the rank of officers to be detailed for such service, and there is no law prohibiting the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President, from determining that matter. When such regulations are promulgated, they have the force of law. (Jones v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 16; compare Knox v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 22, 28.)

Command of hospital ships.—The Navy Regulations, edition of 1909, article 37, paragraph 2, approved by the President, provide for the command of hospital ships by a medical officer not below the grade of surgeon. The law provides that such regulations, when so approved, shall be the regulations of the Navy, and they have the force of law when not inconsistent therewith. The orders preceding this regulation and the regulation itself were issued and adopted in accordance with law. The regulation referred to may at any time be changed or modified by the President or by the Secretary of the Navy with the approval of the President. (27 Op. Att'y. Gen., 571.)

Proceedings of courts-martial.—The Orders, Regulations, and Instructions for the Administration of Law and Justice in the United States Navy, issued by the Secretary of the Navy under authority of the President in 1870, were recognized and given the sanction of law by section 1547 of the Revised Statutes, passed since the adoption of such regulations. Accordingly, section 127 of the said regulations, providing that "when the offense is a disorder or neglect not specially provided for, it should be charged as 'scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals,'" is a valid regulation conferring upon a court-martial jurisdiction over a charge of scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals, and it is not important to inquire in a specific case whether such charge should be considered as made under the concluding words of the first clause of article 8, section 1624, Revised Statutes, punishing "profane swearing, falsehood, drunkenness, gambling, theft, or any other scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals," or under article 22, section 1624, Revised Statutes, punishing "all offenses committed by persons belonging to the Navy which are not specified in the foregoing articles," for in either view it should, under the regulations of 1870, recognized and sanctioned by Congress, be charged as "scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals." (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167.)

"Regulations for the administration of law and justice," issued April 15, 1870, which provided for revision by naval courts-martial of their proceedings and sentence when directed by the convening authority, were authorized by section 1547, Revised Statutes, and have the force of law. (Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S., 13.)

Congress in establishing courts-martial provided that the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to establish "regulations of the Navy," with the approval of the President (12 Stat., 565; R. S., sec. 1547). Pursuant to this authority, "Regulations for the Administration of Law and Justice" were issued on the 15th of April, 1870. It has been held that such regulations have the force of law. (Gratiot v. U. S., 4 How., 80; Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S., 22.) Thus the legislative power is not exercised in detail, but a court is established in pursuance of the power conferred upon Congress and the Secretary of the Navy is clothed with the power of making regulations to control the court. This is one of the many instances in which it is essential for the operations of a great government that matters of detail be intrusted by the legislative department to executive officers for the purpose of giving effect to legislative acts. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 430, 441.)

Manual for the Government of Naval Prisons.—Articles 81 of the Manual for the government of Naval Prisons, issued by the Judge Advocate General of the Navy with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, pursuant to authority contained in article 901, Navy Regulations, 1913, and article 604, Naval Instructions, 1913, is a regulation authorized by section 1547, Revised Statutes. (24 Comp. Dec., 740, 757. Compare 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 270, 275, noted below.)

Checkages of pay for lost property.—See note to section 1549, Revised Statutes.

Refund of enlistment bounty on discharge.—Where an act of Congress "authorized" the Secretary of the Navy to furnish as a bounty to apprentices enlisting in the Navy when first received on board of a training ship an outfit of clothing not to exceed in value the sum of $45 (act Mar. 1, 1889, 25 Stat., 751), the language, although permissive in form, is to be construed as imposing upon the Secretary of the Navy an imperative obligation and not merely discretionary power. Congress undoubtedly did not intend that the Secretary of the Navy should have such discretionary power with respect to furnishing the bounty authorized by the act as would enable him to furnish it in one case and in another case decline to furnish it. Neither does the law contain any language from which the inference could be drawn that apprentices discharged within one year after date of enlistment shall refund any part of the clothing outfit previously furnished them as a bounty.

Accordingly, held that regulations issued by the Secretary of the Navy, July 1, 1901, are inconsistent with law and void in so far as they require a refund of the bounty or any portion of it in case an apprentice is discharged within one year after his enlistment for disability not incurred in the line of duty. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 270; see also 11 Comp. Dec., 193. NOTE.—Refund of enlistment bounty in case of discharge was afterwards specifically provided for by statute; see act June 29, 1906, 34 Stat., 556; and Mar. 2, 1907, 34 Stat., 1176.)

Duties of disbursing officers.—Regulations made by the Commissioners of the Navy in 1817, with the consent of the Secretary of the Navy and approved by the President of the United States, were binding upon pursers in the Navy, who were thereby required to make disbursements in accordance therewith, without other compensation than their regular pay as purser, unless when the disbursements were made there was an agreement or understanding between them and the Secretary of the Navy or other officer competent to make such an agreement that they should receive compensation therefor in addition to their regular and fixed pay as purser. (U. S. v. Fitzgerald, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15107; see also notes to secs. 161, 285, and 419, R. S.)

Disposition of effects of deceased persons.—The Navy Regulations on the subject of payments to administrators and under wills are to be construed as binding only upon the officers and seamen of the Navy; they are not applicable to nor binding upon the accounting officers of the Treasury Department in the settlement of naval accounts, and it was not intended that they should control those officers. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 494, 498.)

The character of all the regulations in question indicates that they were not intended to affect any persons except those subject to the orders of the Secretary of the Navy. Unless they are thus construed, it would seem that a power to legislate was assumed independently of the Federal and State law. For the purpose of protecting the rights of heirs and relatives of deceased seamen, the regulations of the Navy may well require that if the disbursing officer pays the money to an administrator he shall establish facts additional to those which he would ordinarily be required to do. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 494, 496.)

See below, "Whether regulations are binding upon accounting officers of the Treasury."

Whether regulations are binding upon accounting officers of the Treasury.—The Navy Regulations are published by the Secretary of the Navy "for the government of all persons attached to the naval service." This statement accurately indicates the objects and the limits of the naval regulations, which are for the government of persons attached to the naval service in the conduct of their several duties, and the violation of which would subject such persons to official rebuke. It would be going too far to hold that because the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President, has a quasi legislative power in prescribing the mode in which the subordinates of the naval department should perform their duties, and the rules by which they should be governed, he could also prescribe a rule which would control the action of the accounting officers upon the same subject. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 494, 495.)

While in general terms it is often said that the Army and Navy regulations have the force and effect of law, this can only be properly so where we are dealing with a person or subject matter over which the Secretary has official control (citing Gratlot v. U. S., 4 How., 117). Nor can it be said that the fact that Congress has adopted the regulations gives them the force of law in the general sense. It gives them the force of law only so far as they assume to control those to whom the regulations were applicable. Were it otherwise, it would be necessary to hold that, inasmuch as the Secretary with the authority of the President has a right to alter these regulations, Congress has parted with its legislative power so far as the Navy is concerned, and has conferred it upon the Secretary of the Navy. That which it has conferred upon the Secretary of the Navy is not any portion of its general power of legislation, but only the right to make appropriate regulations for the performance of their duties by those whom Congress has placed under his official control. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 494, 497.)

The decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury, declaring invalid article 3991, Navy Regulations 1913, limiting the responsibility of pay officers of shore stations for errors in pay rolls, are not conclusive upon the Navy Department; said regulation is valid, at least to the extent of protecting a pay officer who, in good faith, pays items that on the face of the roll are apparently legal expenditures. The regulation in question, as a valid order of the head of an executive department, has binding force upon the accounting officers of the Government. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 376.)

Regulations not approved by the President.—Regulations issued by the Secretary of the Navy may safely be held invalid where it does not appear that they ever received the approval of the President, as required by section 1547, Revised Statutes, for all regulations issued since July 14, 1862. Such approval, in terms prescribed by the law, is manifestly essential to give validity to regulations as having the force of law. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 270, 275; but see sec. 161, R. S., and note thereto; and compare 24 Comp. Dec., 740, 757, noted above.)

Under Revised Statutes, section 1547, the orders, regulations, and instructions issued by the Secretary of the Navy are presumed to be issued with the approval of the President, and this presumption extends to an order requiring employees to render service on Saturday afternoons with no other compensation than such as shall be due by reason of the extension of the hours of service. (Adams v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 192.)

Regulations enter into contract of navy-yard employees.—The work in navy yards and naval stations is under the control and direction of the head of the Navy Department, and the employment and pay of per diem employees at such yards and stations, paid from lump-sum appropriations, are also under the direction and control of the head of the department. Under these circumstances regulations are important and necessary instruments in the administration of the duties involved in these cases, and the regulation often operates as a contract or enters into the contracts of employment. This is the effect of such regulations where they do not contravene some law. (21 Comp. Dec., 337, holding that per diem employees of the Government at navy yards and stations which are not in the United States are entitled to be paid on holidays as provided by Navy Regulations.)

Effect of regulations upon interpretation of later statutes.—The naval regulations are recognized by Congress in section 1547, Revised Statutes, and those in force when a particular statute was passed may properly be considered in construing it, because the presumption is that Congress enacted the law with the knowledge of and in the light of such regulations. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 589, 591.)

Regulations superseded by subsequent statutes.—The Navy Regulations of 1818, prescribing the official duties of pursers and Navy agents, were repealed by the act of August 26, 1842 (5 Stat., 535), requiring purchases of supplies for the use of the Navy to be made with the public moneys appropriated for the purpose, under such directions and regulations as the executive may prescribe, the effect of which law was to require new "directions and regulations" in the place of the old regulations. (Strong v. U. S., 6 Wall., 788.)

Inasmuch as Congress has authorized the successive heads of the Navy Department to govern the Naval Academy by regulations, and has interfered therewith only, so to say, desultorily, the rule of statutory construction, which forbids any disturbance of previously existing statutory or common law by a new statute further than is necessary to its reasonable operation, must be applied so as to prevent any unnecessary disturbance of previously existing regulations by a subsequent statute. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 637.)

Sec. 1548. [Copy to be furnished to officers.] The Secretary of the Navy shall cause each commissioned or warrant officer of the Navy, on his entry into the service, to be furnished with a copy of the regulations and general orders of the Navy Department then in force, and thereafter with a copy of all such as may be issued.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 19, v. 12, p. 610.)

Sec. 1549. [Regulations of supplies.] It shall be the duty of the President to make, subject to the provisions of law concerning supplies, such regulations for the purchase, preservation, and disposition of all articles, stores, and supplies for persons in the Navy, as may be necessary for the safe and economical administration of that branch of the public service.—(26 Aug., 1842, c. 206, s. 2, v. 5, p. 535; 3 Mar., 1847, c. 48, s. 1, v. 9, p. 171.)

Exchange of worn-out typewriting and computing machines for the naval establishment as part of the purchase price of new ones, was authorized by act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 346).

Loan of medical and other equipment to the American Red Cross for instruction and practice, for the purpose of rendering aid to the Army and Navy in war, was authorized by resolution of May 8, 1914 (38 Stat., 771), amended by resolution of May 18, 1916 (39 Stat., 164).

Settlement of property accounts is provided for by act of March 29, 1894 (28 Stat., 47); with reference to jurisdiction of Comptroller of the Treasury over property accounts, see note to section 236, Revised Statutes, under "III. Limitations upon jurisdiction."

Ship's stores in the Navy may charge profit on sales, such profit to be expended for the amusement, comfort, and contentment of the enlisted force. (Act June 24, 1910, 36 Stat., 619.)

See note to sections 161, 355, 418, 1540, and 1541, Revised Statutes, concerning purchase, sale, exchange, etc., of property belonging to the Navy.

Checkages of pay for lost property.—If a regulation shall be made providing that the willful or negligent damage or destruction of public property by persons in the Navy be charged against the pay of the individual responsible for such damage or destruction, ascertained by a board of survey or other fair method, then such amount or amounts may lawfully be so charged. (15 Comp. Dec., 491.)

In an opinion of the Judge Advocate General, December 8, 1909 (file 3980-452:2), it was concluded that, in the absence of statutory authority, there is no warrant of law for checking the pay of an officer or enlisted man for loss or damage to Government property, notwithstanding the contrary decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury, above noted. Pursuant to said opinion, article 1260 (5), published in Changes in Navy Regulations Circular No. 4 of June 25, 1909, was revoked by the President upon recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy. (Naval Dig., 1916, p. 447, citing S. & A. ind., May 10, 1916, No. 186-362 and file 26834-594; see also Smith v. Jackson, 241 Fed. Rep., 747, 246 U. S., 388 as to jurisdiction of accounting officers.)

There is no authority of law under which an officer of the Navy, who is not required to render return for property in his possession, can be checked for the value of missing property. In this connection attention is invited to the fact that there is no legal obstacle in the way of such officer's depositing to the credit of the United States, if he is willing to do so, a sum sufficient to cover the cost of missing property for which he has been held responsible. (Naval Dig., 1916, p. 447, citing file 18140-35, July 25, 1916.)

There is no authority of law to check the pay of an officer or enlisted man for the loss of a library book (file 2657-04, Apr. 5, 1904; 3980-452:2, Dec. 8, 1909); or for loss or damage to public property (14 J. A. G., 230); or for a boat taken without permission and lost (file 170-04, Jan. 21, 1904); or for careless enlistments by recruiting officers of the Navy (file 5942-34); or for windows broken through carelessness (file 18140-16, Feb. 27, 1912). (Naval Dig., 1916 p. 448.)

The practice of having enlisted men attached to a receiving ship checked in their pay accounts for the loss or destruction of Government property, upon their request, in lieu of being punished for the offense involved therein, is wholly unauthorized by law. (Naval Dig., 1916, p. 448, citing file 3773-149, Dec. 26, 1912.)

Sec. 1550. [Appointment of persons to disburse money on foreign stations.]

No person shall be employed or continued abroad, to receive and pay money for the use of the naval service on foreign stations, whether under contract or otherwise, who has not been, or shall not be, appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.—(17 June, 1844, c. 107, s. 4, v. 5, p. 703.)

The senior officer present may make an acting appointment of any fit person to perform the duties of paymaster or assistant paymaster on foreign stations when such office becomes vacant by death or otherwise, until another paymaster or assistant paymaster shall report for duty. (Secs. 1381 and 1564, R. S.)

Sec. 1551. [Insane of the Navy.] The Secretary of the Navy may cause persons in the naval service or Marine Corps, who become insane while in the service, to be placed in such hospital for the insane as, in his opinion, will be most convenient and best calculated to promise a restoration of reason. And he may pay to any such hospital, other than the Government Hospital for the Insane in the District of Columbia, the pay which may from time to time be due to such insane person, and he may, in addition thereto, pay to such institution, from the annual appropriation for the naval service, under the head of contingent enumerated, any deficiency of a reasonable expense, not exceeding one hundred dollars per annum.—(3 Aug., 1848, c. 121, s. 13, v. 9, p. 272. 2 July, 1864, c. 210, s. 2, v. 13, p. 348.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of July 1, 1916, section 1 (39 Stat., 309), which provided that “after the passage of this act the Government Hospital for the Insane shall be known and designated as Saint Elizabeths Hospital.”

For general provisions relating to the Government Hospital for the Insane, see sections 4838–4858, Revised Statutes.

With reference to habeas corpus proceedings in cases of persons in the naval service committed to the Government Hospital for the Insane, see note to section 761, Revised Statutes, under “Appeal from decision of court or judge granting writ,” and “Arrest of petitioner after discharge.”

Allotments of pay.—A warrant officer of the Navy confined in the Government Hospital for the Insane is not authorized by law or regulations to register an allotment, even though mentally competent to take such action, for the reason that he is ashore within the United States (Navy Regs., 1909, art. 1094); the wife of such an officer desiring to secure a portion of his pay should have a guardian or committee appointed to take charge of his affairs. (File 8528–327.1; see also 8528–111; compare Navy Regs., 1913, art. 4472.)

The Secretary of the Navy has no power to increase a naval officer's allotment of pay in favor of his wife without his consent, and if the Secretary makes such increase without his consent, he may recover the illegal excess. (Melville v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 74.)

Where an enlisted man of the naval service is a patient at the Government Hospital for the Insane, and it has been certified by the naval medical officer at, and the superintendent of, said hospital that he is mentally competent to receive and dispose of his pay, he is legally competent to make an allotment or assignment of wages in accordance with Navy Regulations, 1913, articles 4471 and 4472. (File 10060–67, Aug. 18, 1915; see also 8528–340; 1802–04; 8528–399, Oct. 29, 1913; C. M. O. 29, 1915.)

See also section 1430, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Comfort and welfare of patients.—Where certain articles are essential for the comfort and welfare of general court-martial prisoners confined in the Government Hospital for the Insane, the naval medical officer is authorized to forward a certificate, setting forth the articles desired, to the commandant of the navy yard, Washington, D. C.; the commandant has authority to approve the purchase of such articles, not to exceed $3 per month, the amount excepted by the court-martial sentence for “necessary prison expenses”; if there is no money due such prisoners, these articles will be charged to “Pay, Miscellaneous,” in accordance with the act of February 16, 1909, section 3 (35 Stat., 622). Naval patients not undergoing punishment, when competent to sign pay receipts for such articles, will be allowed to draw the same from pay due, and the commandant is authorized to approve such purchases upon certification of the naval medical officer that such patients are competent to sign pay receipts for nominal amounts necessary to the comfort and welfare of such patients. There is no authority whereby patients not undergoing sentence, and who are legally incompetent to sign such pay receipts, can draw such sums unless a guardian or committee has been appointed. (C. M. O. 22–1915, citing file 10060–61, June 3, 1915; see also 8528–410, June 4, 1914; 10060–14, Jan. 30; 1911; 10060–46, June 12, 1914.)

Payment of service pensions due inmates.—Allowances under sections 4756 and 4757, Revised Statutes, which accrue to inmates of Saint Elizabeths Hospital, should be paid to the superintendent of the hospital, notwithstanding such inmates are represented by a legal guardian or committee. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 354.)

Jurisdiction of civil authorities.—The only provision for a judicial inquiry into the mental status of any persons, previous to their admission to Saint Elizabeths Hospital, is in the case of indigent persons residing in the District of Columbia. An enlisted man who was discharged from the Army because of insanity was properly admitted to said hospital upon the order of the Secretary of the Treasury as an insane patient of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and as he does not come within the class of indigent persons residing in the District of Columbia, no judicial inquiry prior to his admission is necessary. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 431.)

Sec. 1552. [Coal depots. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

“Sec. 1552. The Secretary of the Navy may establish, at such places as he may deem necessary, suitable depots of coal, and other fuel, for the supply of steamships of war.”—(31 Aug., 1842, c. 279, s. 7, v. 5, p. 577.)

It was repealed by act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 898).

Sec. 1553. [Enticing persons to desert. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

“SEC. 1553. Any person who shall entice or procure, or attempt to entice or procure, any seaman or other person in the naval service of the United States, or who has been recruited for such service, to desert therefrom, or who shall in anywise aid or assist any such seaman or other person in deserting, or in attempting to desert from such service, or who shall harbor, conceal, protect, or in anywise assist any such seaman or other person who may have deserted from said service, knowing him to have deserted therefrom, or who shall refuse to give up and deliver such person on the demand of an officer authorized to receive him, shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than three years, and by fine of not more than two thousand dollars, to be enforced in any court of the United States having jurisdiction."—(1 July, 1864, c. 204, v. 13, p. 343.)

It was repealed by the Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909, section 341 (35 Stat., 1153), and was reenacted, with amendments, by section 42 of the same act (35 Stat., 1097), which also reenacted, with amendments, section 5455, Revised Statutes.

Punishment by court-martial of persons in the naval service who receive or entertain deserters is provided for by section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 8, paragraph 22.

Attorney not guilty because of advice given client.—An attorney employed by the father of a soldier, 16 years old, who had enlisted without the father's consent, to obtain his release on the ground of nonage, by advising the soldier, who was then a deserter, to remain away from the authorities until notified, held, not to have "harbored, concealed or assisted" the deserter within Criminal Code, section 42, which requires, to constitute the offense, some positive, physical act, done with knowledge and intent to aid in the wrongful purpose of the deserter. (Firpo v. U. S., 261 Fed. Rep., 850.)

To "conceal," as used in Criminal Code, section 42, providing for punishment of anyone who shall harbor, conceal, protect, or assist any soldier who has deserted from service, means to hide, secrete, or keep out of sight. (Firpo v. U. S., 261 Fed. Rep., 850.)

To "harbor," as used in Criminal Code, section 42, providing for punishment of anyone who shall harbor, conceal, protect, or assist any soldier who has deserted from service, means to lodge, to care for, after secreting the deserter. (Firpo v. U. S., 261 Fed. Rep., 850.)

Where enlistment not completed.—Under the act of Congress of March 2, 1855, section 11 (10 Stat., 628), making it an offense to entice a seaman who has enlisted in the naval service of the United States to desert therefrom, held, that one who had previously been in the Navy, and whose term of service had expired, and who came to the United States naval rendezvous in Boston to reenlist, and passed through all the necessary steps there, was examined and passed by the surgeon and his descriptive and transcript lists made out and given to the commanding officer of the rendezvous, and who took the oath required by act of Congress, signed the Navy shipping articles which stated, among other things, his "term of enlistment" and "date of enlistment," and received orders to go on board the receiving ship and for advance pay and bounty, and everything necessary to his enlistment, so far as the officer in charge of recruiting at the naval rendezvous was concerned, was completely performed according to the instructions of the Navy Department; and who went to the receiving ship, but when he reached it was so intoxicated that the commanding officer, in pursuance of instructions issued by the Navy Department, declined to receive him until he became sober; and who then left the ship, saying that he would report in the morning; and before the morning was induced by the defendant not to return to the vessel but to enlist in the Army, was not enlisted within the meaning of the aforesaid act, he not having been examined by the surgeon on the receiving ship or accepted there, and not having his name entered on the books of the ship, and it appearing that no recruit coming from any naval rendezvous and who had passed through all the forms there was ever allowed an advance or any pay, or had his name recorded on the paymaster's books, until he had passed the surgeon on board the receiving ship. (U. S. v. Thompson, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16491; see also Tyler v. Pomeroy, 8 Allen (Mass.) 480; and see note to sec. 1418, R. S., under "When enlistment complete.")

Desertion in consequence of inducements made prior to enlistment.—Where the prisoner, in order to induce one H. to enlist, made representations to him as to the means and facilities of deserting, and after he had enlisted received the whole of his bounty money, and at the times when he made such representations and received the money he believed they would be likely to cause H. to desert, and they did cause him to desert, the prisoner may be deemed to have procured or enticed H. to desert within the meaning of the statute of 1812, chapter 14, section 17 (2 Stat., 673). It is not necessary, in order to warrant a conviction, that the prisoner should have wished or intended that H. should desert. (U. S. v. Clark, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14808.)

Sec. 1554. [Captured flags.] The Secretary of the Navy shall cause to be collected and transmitted to him, at the seat of Government of the United States, all such flags, standards, and colors as shall have been or may hereafter be taken by the Navy from enemies.—(18 April, 1814, c. 78, s. 1, v. 3, p. 133.)

Substantially this same provision is contained | upon the same original enactment as this section.

Sec. 1555. [Preservation of, in some public place.] All flags, standards, and colors of the description mentioned in the foregoing section, which are now in the possession of the Navy Department, or may hereafter be transmitted to it, shall be delivered to the President, for the purpose of being, under his direction, preserved and displayed in such public place as he may deem proper.—(18 April, 1814, c. 78, s. 1, v. 3, p. 133.)

1. General rule; amendatory statutes.—As to definition of pay, allowance, pay proper, and emoluments, see notes to sections 1558 and 1569, Revised Statutes.

The Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 13 (30 Stat., 1007), provided that "after June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-nine, commissioned officers of the line of the Navy and of the Medical and Pay Corps [now designated as "Supply Corps," act of July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 147] shall receive the same pay and allowances, except forage, as are or may be provided by or in pursuance of law for the officers of corresponding rank in the Army:

Provided, That such officers when on shore shall receive the allowances, but fifteen per centum less pay than when on sea duty; but this provision shall not apply to warrant officers commissioned under section twelve of this act: Provided further, That when naval officers are detailed for shore duty beyond seas they shall receive the same pay and allowances as are or may be provided by or in pursuance of law for officers of the Army detailed for duty in similar places: Provided further, * * * that all officers, including warrant officers, who have been or may be appointed to the Navy from civil life shall, on the date of appointment, be credited, for computing their pay, with five years' service * * * : And provided further, That no provision of this act shall operate to reduce the present pay of any commissioned officer now in the Navy; and in any case in which the pay of such an officer would otherwise be reduced he shall continue to receive pay according to existing law: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall operate to increase or reduce the pay of any officer now on the retired list of the Navy." (See notes to said act of Mar. 3, 1899, sec. 13, 30 Stat., 1007.)

In the enactment of the Navy personnel act the intention of Congress was evidently to put officers of the Army and Navy on the same footing with respect to their general pay, and to make the act prospective in its application to future legislation, so that if Congress should thereafter raise the general pay of Army officers as fixed by Revised Statutes, section 1261, a like increase should apply to Navy officers. But Congress might thereafter increase the pay of Army officers for services in particular places and under special circumstances without thereby intending such increase to apply to naval officers. (U. S. v. Thomas, 195 U. S., 418.)

The naval personnel act undertook to equalize the pay of naval officers with that of Army officers of equal rank, as to duties properly required of a naval officer, but had no operation to provide pay for services peculiar to the Army. (U. S. v. Crosley, 196 U. S., 327.)

It was the intention of Congress, as shown by the fourth proviso of section 13 of the personnel act, to leave undisturbed the "present pay" of certain Navy officers who were already receiving higher pay than Army officers of the same rank. (U. S. v. Thomas, 195 U. S., 418, 420.) However, this proviso applied only to officers in the Navy at the time the act was passed, and to the pay they were then receiving. (Taylor v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 155, 160.)

By act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 697), section 13 of the personnel act was amended so as to provide "that nothing therein contained shall operate to reduce the pay which, but for the passage of said act, would have been received by any commissioned officer at the time of its passage or thereafter." With reference to this amendment, it was judicially stated: "The original proviso to section 13 excepted from the purview thereof 'the commissioned officers now in the Navy' whose 'present pay' was thereby reduced; while the amendment thereto extends the exception so as to apply to the pay such officers may receive thereafter in case of promotion to higher grades, and as to such officers it is provided that they shall continue to receive pay 'according to existing law.' The evident purpose of section 13, act of March 3, 1899, was to assimilate the pay of officers of the line of the Navy and of the Medical and Pay Corps to the pay and allowances of officers of corresponding rank in the Army, reserving, however, to such officers then in the Navy the right to continue to receive Navy pay in case the assimilated pay under the act was less. * * * The amendment was clearly intended to apply only to commissioned officers in the Navy when the original act was passed and to the pay they might receive thereafter in case of promotion." (Taylor v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 155.) "That officers in the Navy at the time the personnel act was passed should not be reduced in pay was an obvious and just exception; and to have such an exception preserved in all grades is very obvious and just, which thereby prevents the promotion in grade from working a diminution of pay." (Richardson v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 182, 191; Jones v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 344, 354. See also Cromwell v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 432; Terry v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 353; Denig v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 383; Littell v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 22.)

By act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), it was provided that "hereafter all commissioned officers of the active list of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances according to rank and length of service," with the limitation (35 Stat., 128), that "the pay and allowances of chaplains in the Navy shall in no case exceed that provided for lieutenant commanders," and the saving clause that "nothing herein shall be construed so as to reduce the pay or allowances now authorized by law for any commissioned, warrant, or appointed officer * * * of the active or retired lists of the Navy * * *." The said act fixed designated rates of pay for chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department and for the various ranks in the Navy, including midshipmen, warrant officers, and mates, as set forth below; and contained general provisions for increases in pay on account of longevity, sea duty, and foreign service, or shore duty beyond seas, as set forth below.

The said act of May 13, 1908, was construed by the Comptroller of the Treasury as preserving to officers then in the Navy the right to receive pay at the rates they were actually receiving at the date of said act, and also to receive subsequent increases in pay as authorized by prior laws where their pay under former laws would be higher than the rates of pay provided by the act of May 13, 1908. (15 Comp. Dec., 174.) In the specific case presented, the comptroller held that a civil engineer who was in the Navy on May 13, 1908, and who thereafter, on August 29, 1908, completed 15 years' service "after date of appointment," was entitled on and after the date last mentioned to receive the rate of pay provided by section 1556, Revised Statutes, for civil engineers after 15 years from date of appointment, such pay being greater in his case than the new rate of pay provided by the act of May 13, 1908, for a civil engineer of his rank and longevity. In support of this conclusion the comptroller cited the saving clause in the act of May 13, 1908, that nothing therein contained should be construed so as to reduce the pay or allowances "now authorized by law" for any commissioned, warrant, or appointed officer of the active or retired lists of the Navy, and stated that said expression ("now authorized by law") "means something more than the pay the officer or man was actually receiving at the passage of the act."

In the case of Jones v. United States (50 Ct. Cls., 344), it was judicially determined that the saving clause in the act of May 13, 1908, did not entitle a paymaster's clerk to the rate of pay provided by section 1556, Revised Statutes, although higher than that provided by the act of May 13, 1908, where said paymaster's clerk was appointed subsequent to said act; and that said clause applied only to persons who were officers of the Navy on the date of the act, the court remarking in its opinion (50 Ct. Cls., 355): "The reason for the provision against reduction in the act of 1908 is as manifest as was the provision against reduction in the act of 1899 as amended in 1900. Somewhat different language is used, but the reason is the same."

The said act of May 13, 1908, was subsequently construed by the Comptroller of the Treasury as not entitling an officer of the Navy to the rates of pay provided by section 1556, Revised Statutes, for an office which was not held by him on the date of said act but to which he was thereafter promoted, notwithstanding that he was an officer of the Navy when the act of 1908 was enacted, and that the old rate of pay was greater than that provided by said act for the same office. (Comp. Dec., Mar. 8, 1917, 193 S. and A. Memo., 4172, file 26254-2160.) In this case the comptroller specifically decided that the saving clause in the act of 1908 applies to the "reduction of the pay of an officer as distinguished from that of an office," and is "limited in its effect on pay to the pay of the office which the officer held on May 13, 1908, date of its enactment * * * . For such office the old pay, if higher, remains the pay thereof during the period of its occupancy by the then incumbent of it, the taking effect of the new rate of pay in such exceptional cases being, by means of the proviso, postponed until that time."

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 581), it was provided that "hereafter all commissioned officers of the active list of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances according to rank and length of service," omitting the limitation contained in the act of May 13, 1908, with reference to the pay of chaplains. (As to effect of this provision upon pay of chaplains, see below, under "23. Chaplains.") This clause was followed by a proviso that it "shall not be construed to reduce the pay and allowances of commissioned warrant officers as herein authorized." Also in the same act (39 Stat., 579), it was provided that "nothing contained in this act shall be construed to reduce the rank, pay, or allowances of any officer of the Navy or Marine Corps as now provided by law."

By act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 601), temporary increases in pay were authorized, as set forth below, for officers of the Navy with the rank of captain and below, including warrant officers, such increases to remain effective until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, with the proviso that "the increases provided in this act shall not enter into the computation of the retired pay of officers or enlisted men who may be retired prior to July 1, 1922"; and with the further provision (sec. 14) "that nothing contained in this act shall operate to reduce the pay or allowances of any officer or enlisted man on the active or retired list: Provided, That the allowances and gratuities now authorized by existing law are not changed hereby, except as otherwise specified in this act."

By said act of May 18, 1920, it was further provided (sec. 13) "that a special committee, to be composed of five Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the Vice President, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, shall make an investigation and report recommendations to their respective Houses not later than the first Monday in January, 1922, relative to the readjustment of the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the several services herein mentioned."

2-3. Admirals; Vice admirals.—See note to section 1362, Revised Statutes.

By act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), the pay of Admiral was fixed at $13,500 per annum. The grade of "Admiral of the Navy" ceased to exist upon the death of Admiral George Dewey on January 16, 1917. By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 558), the Chief of Naval Operations, while so serving, is given the rank and title of Admiral, with pay at the rate of $10,000 per annum. By act of May 22, 1917, section 18 (40 Stat., 89), the President is authorized to designate six officers of the Navy for the command of fleets or subdivisions thereof, not more than three of whom shall have the rank and pay of Admiral, and the others the rank and pay of Vice Admiral, "from the date of assuming such command until relinquishing thereof," and by the same act it was provided that "the pay of an Admiral shall be $10,000 and the pay of a Vice Admiral $9,000 per annum." This act superseded provisions on the same subject contained in the naval appropriation act of March 3, 1915. (38 Stat., 941, 942.) The latter act was construed as not investing the officers concerned with the offices of Admiral and Vice Admiral, but merely as conferring upon them, temporarily, the rank and pay of those offices, while they continued at the same time to be officers of the grade permanently held by them in the Navy. (21 Comp. Dec., 840.)

An officer serving as commander in chief of a fleet with the rank of Admiral, in accordance with the act of March 3, 1915, was held not entitled, in addition to the pay provided in said act for rear admirals so serving, to 10 per centum increase thereof for sea duty under the act of May 13, 1908. (22 Comp. Dec., 522.)

As to allowances see notes to sections 1487, 1558, and 1578, Revised Statutes.

Increased pay for longevity is authorized by the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), only for officers "below the rank of rear admiral."

4. Rear admirals.—See notes to sections 1362 and 1466, Revised Statutes.

By act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), the pay of "rear admiral, first nine," was fixed at $8,000 per annum, and "rear admiral, second nine," at $6,000 per annum. By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577, 578), it was provided that "hereafter pay and allowances of officers in the upper half of the grade or rank of rear admiral, including the staff corps and including staff officers heretofore permanently commissioned with the rank of rear admiral, shall be that now allowed by law for the first nine rear admirals, and the pay and allowances of officers in the lower half of the grade or rank of rear admiral, including the staff corps, shall be that now allowed by law for the second nine rear admirals."

Increased pay for longevity is authorized by the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), only for officers "below the rank of rear admiral."

As to increased pay for special service, see notes below under "38. Additional pay for special duty," and note to section 1571, Revised Statutes.

As to allowances of rear admirals, see notes to sections 1487, 1558, and 1578, Revised Statutes.

A commodore in the Navy who was commissioned as a rear admiral on March 3, 1899, was entitled to the sea pay of a rear admiral as fixed by section 1556, Revised Statutes, this being higher than the pay of a rear admiral of the lower half as fixed by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, and the act of June 7, 1900, having allowed this officer to receive the old rate of pay where higher than that provided by the act of March 3, 1899. The pay of officers in service at the date of the act of March 3, 1899, and the amendatory act of June 7, 1900, might be increased by the terms of those statutes, but was not to be diminished. (Cromwell v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 432. See above, under "1. General rule.")

Section 7 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), provided that each rear admiral embraced in the nine lower numbers of that grade shall receive the same pay and allowances as then allowed a brigadier general in the Army. Section 13 of the same act provided that officers of the line of the Navy when on shore shall receive the allowances, but 15 per centum less pay than when on sea duty. Held, that this provision as to pay on shore duty applied to rear admirals of the lower nine. (Rodgers v. U. S., 185 U. S., 83.)

Section 1466, Revised Statutes, provides that all rear admirals shall rank with major generals in the Army. Section 13 of the Navy personnel act provided that officers of the line shall receive the same pay as officers of corresponding rank in the Army; but section 7 of the same act provided that rear admirals of the lower nine shall receive the same pay as brigadier generals in the Army. Held, that the provision of section 7 was to be read as an exception to the provision in section 13, and accordingly that rear admirals of the lower nine were not entitled to the pay of major generals, the corresponding rank in the Army, but only to the pay allowed brigadier generals. (Rodgers v. U. S., 185 U. S., 83.)

5. Commodores.—See note to section 1362, Revised Statutes.

The naval appropriation act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), provided that "hereafter all commissioned officers of the active list of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances, according to rank and length of service, and the annual pay of each grade shall be as follows: * * * rear admiral, second nine, or commodore, six thousand dollars." However, there were no commodores on the active list at the time of that enactment, and none have since been appointed, the grade of commodore having been omitted from the active list by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 7. (30 Stat., 1005.) In certain cases officers have since been retired with the rank of commodore. (See note to sec. 1362, R. S.)

As to pay of retired officers, see section 1588, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

6. Captains.—By act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), the pay of captain was fixed at $4,000 per annum, plus 10 per cent increase thereon for each term of five years' service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, with the limitation that "the total amount of such increase for length of service shall in no case exceed forty per centum on the yearly pay of the grade as provided by law," and that "the annual pay of captain shall not exceed five thousand dollars per annum." As to increased pay over and above the amount of this limitation for special service, see note below under "38. Additional pay for special duty," and note to section 1571, Revised Statutes.

By act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 601), the pay of captains in the Navy was increased $600 per annum "in addition to all pay and allowances now allowed by law," such increase to commence January 1, 1920, and to remain effective "until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922."

As to allowances of captains, see notes to sections 1487, 1558, and 1578, Revised Statutes.

7. Commanders.—By act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), the pay of commander was fixed at $3,500 per annum, plus 10 per cent increase thereon for each term of five years' service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, with the limitation that "the total amount of such increase for length of service shall in no case exceed forty per centum on the yearly pay of the grade as provided by law," and that the "annual pay" of commander shall not exceed $4,500 per annum. As to increased pay over and above the amount of this limitation for special service, see note below under "38. Additional pay for special duty," and note to section 1571, Revised Statutes.

By act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 601), the pay of commanders in the Navy was increased $600 per annum, "in addition to all pay and allowances now allowed by law," such increase to commence January 1, 1920, and to remain effective "until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922."

As to allowances of commanders, see notes to sections 1487, 1558, and 1578, Revised Statutes.

8. Lieutenant commanders.—By act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), the pay of lieutenant commanders was fixed at $3,000 per annum, plus 10 per cent increase thereon for each term of five years' service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, with the limitation that "the total amount of such increase for length of service shall in no case exceed forty per centum on the yearly pay of the grade as provided by law," and that the "annual pay" of lieutenant commander shall not exceed

$4,000 per annum. As to increased pay over and above the amount of this limitation for special service, see note below under "38. Additional pay for special duty," and note to section 1571, Revised Statutes.

By act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 601, 602), the pay of lieutenant commanders in the Navy was increased $840 per annum "in addition to all pay and allowances now allowed by law," such increase to commence January 1, 1920, and to remain effective "until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922."

As to allowances of lieutenant commanders, see notes to sections 1487, 1558, and 1578, Revised Statutes.

9. Lieutenants.—By act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), the pay of lieutenants was fixed at $2,400 per annum, plus 10 per cent increase thereon for each term of five years' service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, with the limitation that "the total amount of such increase for length of service shall in no case exceed forty per centum on the yearly pay of the grade as provided by law." As to increased pay for special service, see note below under "38. Additional pay for special duty," and note to section 1571, Revised Statutes.

By act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 602), the pay of lieutenants in the Navy was increased $720 per annum, "in addition to all pay and allowances now allowed by law," such increase to commence January 1, 1920, and to remain effective "until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922."

As to allowances of lieutenants, see notes to sections 1487, 1558, and 1578, Revised Statutes.

10. Masters [lieutenants (junior grade)] and acting lieutenants (junior grade). The grade of master as part of the active list of the line was abolished, and the grade of lieutenant (junior grade) created, by act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 472), which provided that "the masters now on the list shall constitute a junior grade of, and be commissioned as, lieutenants, having the same rank and pay as now provided by law for masters." This had the effect of changing the title "master" to "lieutenant (junior grade)." (See note to sec. 1362, R. S.)

By act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), the pay of lieutenants (junior grade) was fixed at $2,000 per annum, plus 10 per cent increase thereon for each term of five years' service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, with the limitation that "the total amount of such increase for length of service shall in no case exceed forty per centum on the yearly pay of the grade as provided by law." As to increased pay for special service, see note below under "38. Additional pay for special duty," and note to section 1571, Revised Statutes.

By act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 602), the pay of lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy was increased $600 per annum, "in addition to all pay and allowances now allowed by law," such increase to commence January 1, 1920, and to remain effective "until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922."

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 583), provision was made for appointment of acting lieutenants (junior grade) for aeronautic duties only, and by the same act special provision was made for the pay of officers detailed to duty with aircraft involving actual flying. (See below, under "38. Additional pay for special duty.")

As to allowances of lieutenants (junior grade), see notes to sections 1487, 1558, and 1578, Revised Statutes.

11. Ensigns and acting ensigns.—By act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127, 128), the pay of ensigns was fixed at $1,700 per annum, plus 10 per cent increase thereon for each term of five years' service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, with the limitation that "the total amount of such increase for length of service shall in no case exceed forty per centum on the yearly pay of the grade as provided by law." As to increased pay for special service, see note below under "38. Additional pay for special duty," and note to section 1571, Revised Statutes.

By act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 602), the pay of ensigns in the Navy was increased $420 per annum, "in addition to all pay and allowances now allowed by law," such increase to commence January 1, 1920, and to remain effective "until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922."

As to allowances of ensigns, see notes to sections 1487, 1558, and 1578, Revised Statutes.

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 580, 583, 585), provision was made for the appointment of acting ensigns for engineering duties only and for aeronautic duties only. The same act (39 Stat., 581) provided that all commissioned officers of the active list shall receive the same pay and allowances according to rank and length of service and made special provision for the pay of officers detailed to duty with aircraft involving actual flying. (See below under "38. Additional pay for special duty.")

12. Midshipmen.—The grade of midshipman as part of the active list of the line was abolished, and the grade of junior ensign created, by act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 472), which provided that "the midshipmen now on the list shall constitute a junior grade of, and be commissioned as, ensigns, having the same rank and pay as now provided by law for midshipmen." The grade of junior ensign thus created was abolished by act of June 26, 1884, section 2 (23 Stat., 60), which provided that "the junior ensigns now on the list shall be commissioned ensigns in the Navy," and that graduates of the Naval Academy who are assigned to the line of the Navy on the successful completion of their course shall be commissioned ensigns in the Navy. (See notes to secs. 1362 and 1521, R. S.; and see below, under "13. Cadet midshipmen.")

As to pay of ensigns, see above, under "11. Ensigns."

13. Cadet midshipmen.—By section 1512, Revised Statutes, it was provided that "the students at the Naval Academy shall be styled cadet midshipmen." The title of all undergraduates at the Naval Academy was changed to "naval cadets" by act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), and the title "naval cadet" was changed to "midshipman" by act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 686).

By act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), the pay of midshipmen was fixed at $600 per annum while at the Naval Academy, and $1,400 per annum after graduation from the Naval Academy.

Prior to the act of March 7, 1912 (37 Stat., 73), the course at the Naval Academy was six years, the first four of which were spent in pursuing the academic studies at the Academy and the remaining two years at sea. The act of May 13, 1908, made two pay grades for midshipmen. The effect of the act of 1912, which reduced the course at the Naval Academy to four years was to eliminate the two years' service at sea and also the pay grade provided for those thus previously serving. It follows that the only pay for midshipmen now authorized by law is that for those pursuing the four years, course at the Naval Academy, viz, $600 per annum. (20 Comp. Dec., 141; 23 Comp. Dec., 279. Compare note to sec. 1520, R. S.)

By act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 146), it was provided that "the pay of midshipmen shall hereafter be $780 per annum."

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 585), it was provided that "student flyers shall, after receiving a certificate of qualification as an aviator for actual flying in aircraft, rank with midshipmen and shall receive the same pay and allowances as midshipmen, plus fifty per centum thereof."

As to ratings of midshipmen, see note to section 1577, Revised Statutes.

14. Mates.—On the general subject of mates, their status, pay and allowances, etc., see notes to sections 1408 and 1409, Revised Statutes. See also sections 1558, 1569, and 1579, Revised Statutes.

By act of August 1, 1894 (28 Stat., 212), the annual pay of "the twenty-eight officers now serving as mates in the Navy" was fixed at the following rates: "When at sea, twelve hundred dollars; on shore duty, nine hundred dollars; on leave or waiting orders, seven hundred dollars."

By act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), the pay of "all" mates was increased 25 per cent. The pay of mates under section 1556, Revised Statutes, clause 14, as amended by said acts of August 1, 1894, and May 13, 1908, is as follows: Mates who were serving as such on August 1, 1894—when at sea, $1,500; on shore duty, $1,125; on leave or waiting orders, $875. Mates who were rated as such since August 1, 1894—when at sea, $1,125; on shore duty, $875; on leave or waiting orders, $625.

By act of May 18, 1920, section 6 (41 Stat., 602), it was provided that, "commencing January 1, 1920, the following shall be the rate of base pay for each enlisted rating: * * * chief petty officers with permanent appointments and mates, $126 per month"; and by section 13 of the same act this rate of pay was to remain effective "until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922." It was further provided by section 6 of this act "that the rates of base pay herein fixed shall not be further increased ten per centum as authorized by an act approved May 13, 1908, nor by the temporary war increases as authorized by section 15 of the act approved May 22, 1917, as amended by the act approved July 11, 1919."

The act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), to which reference is here made, authorized an increase of 10 per cent in the pay of "all active and retired enlisted men of the Navy," but this did not include mates, whose pay, as above stated, was increased 25 per cent by the same act. No provision is contained in the act of May 18, 1920, with reference to the inclusion or exclusion of this 25 per cent increase in the computation of the pay of mates as therein fixed. (But see Comp. Dec., noted below.)

The act of May 22, 1917, section 15 (40 Stat., 87), to which reference is also made in the provision last quoted from the act of May 18, 1920, provided that "commencing June first, nineteen hundred and seventeen, and continuing until not later than six months after the termination of the present war, all enlisted men of the Navy of the United States in active service," should receive certain increase in pay, including the following: "Those whose base pay is $45 or more per month, an increase of $6 per month." The act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 140), also referred to in the provision last quoted from the act of May 18, 1920, provided that the rates of pay prescribed in section 15 of the act approved May 22, 1917, "are hereby made the permanent rates of pay of enlisted men of the Navy during their present current enlistment and for those who enlist or reenlist prior to July 1, 1920, for the term of such enlistment or reenlistment."

Prior to May 18, 1920, the "base pay" of mates (rated as such since Aug. 1, 1894) had been held to be at the rate of $875 per annum, consisting of their shore duty rate under section 1556, Revised Statutes ($700 per annum), with the 25 per cent increase allowed thereon under the act of May 13, 1908. The act of May 18, 1920, supersedes or substitutes for said former existing base pay rate that of $126 per month, or $1,512 per annum, a yearly increase of $637 per annum. As the old base rate of $875 per annum, which the $126 per month supersedes, included the 25 per cent additional, the act of May 18, 1920, operates to repeal the provision for the 25 per cent increase to mates in the act of May 13, 1908. Accordingly, held, that the base pay of mates fixed by section 6 of the act of May 18, 1920, at $126 per month, is not to be increased 25 per cent thereof. (27 Comp. Dec., 175, citing 23 Comp. Dec., 279.)

The act of May 18, 1920, section 14 (41 Stat., 604), provided that "nothing contained in this act shall operate to reduce the pay or allowances of any officer or enlisted man on the active or retired list: Provided, That the allowances and gratuities now authorized by existing law are not changed hereby, except as otherwise specified in this act."

Mates who are honorably discharged from the Navy at the expiration of their enlistment and reenlist in the rating of mate within four months from such discharge are entitled to the four months' gratuity pay provided by section 1573 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act of March 3, 1899, section 16 (30 Stat., 1008), such honorable-discharge gratuity to be computed on the pay they were receiving at the time of their discharge (14 Comp. Dec., 457). By act of May 18, 1920, section 10 (41 Stat., 603), it was provided that "any enlisted man or apprentice seaman who shall reenlist in the Navy within one year from the date of his discharge therefrom shall, upon such reenlistment, be entitled to and shall receive the same benefits as are now authorized by law for reenlistment within four months from date of last discharge from the service: Provided, That this section shall become inoperative six months after the date of the approval of this act."

Because of the prohibition contained in section 1558, Revised Statutes, mates are not entitled, upon reenlistment in accordance with section 1573, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 3, 1899, section 16 (30 Stat., 1008), to continuous-service pay as provided therein for enlisted men who reenlist pursuant to said statutes (14 Comp. Dec., 457); and for the same reason, the pay fixed for mates by the act of May 18, 1920, is not to be increased for continuous service (27 Comp. Dec., 175).

Mates being specifically excepted from the provisions of section 1569, Revised Statutes, under authority of which extra compensation for good-conduct medals and bars, seaman gunner's certificates, and petty officer's certificates, is provided, they are not entitled to such extra compensation (14 Comp. Dec., 457). Nor does the act of May 18, 1920, operate to grant to mates in the Navy the right to permanent additions to their base pay that are authorized for enlisted men of the Navy generally under General Order No. 34 for continuous service and for good-conduct medals. Inasmuch as mates possessed no right to said permanent additions to their pay previously to May 18, 1920, differing in this respect from enlisted men generally, they could not become invested by the act of May 18, 1920, with a right to said permanent additions without express legislation to that effect. The mere change of their base pay rating, along with that of changes in the base pay of other enlisted ratings, did not in itself confer on mates the independent right to said permanent additions to base pay which the other enlisted ratings already possessed. (27 Comp. Dec., 175.)

For other decisions, see note to section 1408, Revised Statutes.

As to allowances of mates, see notes to sections 1558 and 1578, Revised Statutes.

15. Fleet officers.—See notes to sections 1373, 1382, and 1393, Revised Statutes, on the general subject of fleet officers.

An officer commissioned after July 1, 1899, is not entitled to the pay provided by section 1556, Revised Statutes, for fleet engineers. The pay provided by that section, including the pay of fleet engineers, is the old Navy pay, and this old Navy pay is reserved to officers who were in the Navy on June 30, 1899. As to other commissioned officers of the line and of the Medical and Pay Corps, the act of March 3, 1899, section 13, provided that they shall receive the "same" pay and allowances, except forage, as officers of the corresponding rank in the Army. The word "same" in this provision means "identical, not different or other." (Comp. Dec., Aug. 14, 1914, 150 S. and A. Memo., 2761; see above, under "1. General Rule.") Compare, U. S. v. Thomas, 195 U. S., 418, 421, holding that the act of March 3, 1899, extended to naval officers only the general pay authorized for the Army, and not the pay of Army officers "for services in particular places or under special circumstances"; and see 12 Comp. Dec., 185, 188, holding that "an engineer of the fleet is a member of the fleet staff of a flag officer, and as such has special duties to perform, in consideration of which he receives increased pay. The position is somewhat analogous in this respect to that of aid, who is a member of the personal staff of the flag officer, and who receives additional pay for the additional services performed as such."

The act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 697), which provides that the naval personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 13, shall not operate so as to reduce the pay which but for the passage of that act would have been received by any commissioned officer at the time of its passage or thereafter, extends to pay which officers may subsequently become entitled to receive and to the pay of a fleet engineer as prescribed by section 1556, Revised Statutes. (Denig v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 383.)

As to increased pay for special service as aid, see note below under this section.

16. Medical directors and inspectors; pay directors and inspectors.—See notes to sections 1368, 1376, 1474, and 1475, Revised Statutes.

Under the acts of May 13, 1908, and August 29, 1916, all officers of the Navy receive the same pay and allowances according to rank and length of service, except in certain cases where the old Navy pay is higher than that provided for officers of the same rank and longevity. (See above, under "1. General Rule.")

Medical directors and pay directors have the rank of rear admiral and captain in each grade, and medical inspectors and pay inspectors have the rank of commander. (See notes to sections 1474 and 1475, R. S.) As to the pay of rear admirals, captains, and commanders, see notes above, under this section.

17. Surgeons, paymasters, and chief engineers.—See notes to sections 1368, 1376, 1390, 1474-1476, Revised Statutes.

Under the acts of May 13, 1908, and August 29, 1916, all officers of the Navy receive the same pay and allowances, according to rank and length of service, except in certain cases where the old Navy pay is higher than that provided for officers of the same rank and longevity. (See above, under "1. General Rule.")

Officers of the Medical Corps below the grade of medical inspector, viz, surgeons, passed assistant surgeons, and assistant surgeons, have the rank of lieutenant commander, lieutenant, and lieutenant (junior grade), depending upon their length of service, original appointments being made with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), and thereafter advancements in rank up to and including the rank of lieutenant commander being made "with the officers of the line with whom or next after whom they take precedence under existing law." (See note to sec. 1474, R. S.)

Officers of the Supply Corps below the grade of pay inspector, viz, paymasters, passed assistant paymasters, and assistant paymasters, have the rank of lieutenant commander, lieutenant, lieutenant (junior grade), and ensign, depending upon their length of service, original appointments being made with the rank of ensign, and thereafter advancements in rank up to and including the rank of lieutenant commander being made "with the officers of the line with whom or next after whom they take precedence under existing law." (See note to sec. 1475, R. S.)

The Engineer Corps was abolished by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004). (See note to sec. 1390, R. S.)

As to the pay of the various ranks, see notes above, under this section.

"Mounted pay" is not an allowance but pay proper; the officer to whom it is assigned by statute receives it whether he is actually mounted or not; where a surgeon in the Army is entitled to it, a surgeon in the Navy receiving Army pay under the act of March 3, 1899, is entitled to it also. (Richardson v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 182.)

18. Passed assistant surgeons, passed assistant paymasters, and first assistant engineers.—See note above, under "17. Surgeons, paymasters, and chief engineers." See also note to sections 1368 and 1371, Revised Statutes, concerning the status and pay of passed assistant surgeons.

19. Assistant surgeons, acting assistant surgeons, assistant paymasters, second engineers.—See note above, under "17. Surgeons, paymasters, and chief engineers."

Under section 13 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), and the acts of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 697), March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1167), and May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), the pay of acting assistant surgeons was enhanced and assimilated to that of assistant surgeons and did not remain fixed as regulated by section 1556, Revised Statutes. The rank of assistant surgeons having been raised from ensign to lieutenant (junior grade), an acting assistant surgeon was entitled to pay and allowances provided by law for assistant surgeons at the time his services as acting assistant surgeon were rendered, and where he was allowed pay and allowances only at the rate fixed for assistant surgeons at the time the act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 369, 380), was passed, he was entitled to recover the difference. (Plummer v. U. S., 224 U. S. 137, overruling Taylor v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 155, and Nelson v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 157. See note to sec. 1411, R. S.)

By act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 602), the pay of acting assistant surgeons was increased $600 per annum, "in addition to all pay and allowances now allowed by law," such increase to commence January 1, 1920, and to remain effective "until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922."

20. Assistant surgeons qualified for promotion.—See note above, under "17. Surgeons, paymasters, and chief engineers." See also notes to sections 1368 and 1371, Revised Statutes, concerning the status of passed assistant surgeons, and the promotion of assistant surgeons.

21-22. Naval constructors; assistant naval constructors.—Under the acts of May 13, 1908, and August 29, 1916, all officers of the Navy receive the same pay and allowances, according to rank and length of service, except in certain cases where the old Navy pay is higher than that provided for officers of the same rank and longevity. (See above, under "1. General Rule.")

As to the rank of naval constructors and assistant naval constructors, see note to section 1477, Revised Statutes; as to the organization of the Construction Corps, see notes to sections 1402 and 1403, Revised Statutes; as to the pay of the various ranks, see notes above, under this section.

23. Chaplains and acting chaplains.—See notes to sections 1395-1398 and 1479, Revised Statutes.

By act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), it was provided that "all chaplains now in the Navy above the grade of lieutenant shall receive the pay and allowances of lieutenant commander in the Navy according to length of service under the provisions of law for that rank, and all chaplains now in the Navy in the grade of lieutenant shall receive their present sea pay when on shore duty." The same act further provided that "naval chaplains hereafter appointed shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy until they shall have completed seven years of service, when they shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of lieutenant in the Navy; and lieutenants shall be promoted, whenever vacancies occur, to the grade of lieutenant commander, which shall consist of five numbers, and when so promoted shall receive the rank, pay, and allowances of lieutenant commander in the Navy: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to increase the number of chaplains as now authorized by law or to reduce the rank or pay of any now serving."

By act of May 13, 1908 (see above, under "1. General rule"), all officers of the Navy were given the same pay and allowances, according to rank and length of service, with the limitation that "the pay and allowances of chaplains in the Navy shall in no case exceed that provided for lieutenant commanders," and the saving clause that "nothing herein shall be construed so as to reduce the pay or allowances now authorized by law for any commissioned, warrant, or appointed officer * * * of the active or retired lists of the Navy."

By act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 404), the grade of acting chaplain was created with the rank, pay, and allowances of lieutenant (junior grade), and provision was made for promotion of acting chaplains to the grade of chaplain with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), and for the advancement of chaplains to higher ranks to and including the rank of captain, with the proviso "that no provision of this section shall operate to reduce the rank, pay, or allowances that would have been received by any person in the Navy except for the passage of this section." (See note to sec. 1479, R. S.)

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 581), it was provided that "hereafter all commissioned officers of the active list of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances according to rank and length of service," omitting the limitation contained in the act of May 13, 1908, with reference to the pay of chaplains. Also in the same act it was provided that "nothing contained in this act shall be construed to reduce the rank, pay, or allowances of any officer of the Navy or Marine Corps as now provided by law." (See above, under "1. General rule.") The effect of the act of August 29, 1916, was to repeal the limitation in the act of May 13, 1908, respecting the pay and allowances of chaplains, and to give to chaplains above the rank of lieutenant commander the pay and allowances of their rank. (Comp. Dec., May 23, 1917, 195 S. and A. Memo., 4251.)

As to rank of chaplains, see note to section 1479, Revised Statutes.

As to the pay of the various ranks, see notes above, under this section.

24. Professors of mathematics, civil engineers, and assistant civil engineers.—See notes to sections 1399–1401 and 1480, Revised Statutes, respecting professors of mathematics; and notes to sections 1413 and 1478, Revised Statutes, respecting civil engineers and assistant civil engineers.

Under the acts of May 13, 1908, and August 29, 1916, all officers of the Navy receive the same pay and allowances according to rank and length of service, except in certain cases where the old Navy pay is higher than that provided for officers of the same rank and longevity. (See above, under "1. General rule.")

As to rank of professors of mathematics, see section 1480, Revised Statutes, and note thereto; as to rank of civil engineers and assistant civil engineers, see note to section 1478, Revised Statutes.

As to the pay of the various ranks, see notes above, under this section.

Further appointments to the corps of professors of mathematics were prohibited by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577), which act provided that "that corps shall cease to exist upon the death, resignation, or dismissal of the officers now carried in that corps on the active and retired lists of the Navy."

25. Warrant officers, acting warrant officers, and commissioned warrant officers.—See notes to sections 1405–1409, Revised Statutes. As to allowances of warrant officers, see note to section 1558, Revised Statutes.

By act of June 17, 1898 (30 Stat., 474, 475), the grade of pharmacist was created in the Hospital Corps of the Navy, "with the rank, pay, and privileges of warrant officers."

By act of March 3, 1899, section 12 (30 Stat., 1007), it was provided that "the pay of boatswains, gunners, carpenters, and sailmakers shall be the same as that now allowed by law."

By the same act of March 3, 1899, sections 14 and 15 (30 Stat., 1007, 1008), the grade of warrant machinist was authorized with the provision that the pay of that grade "shall be the same as that of warrant officers"; and that "warrant machinists shall receive at first an acting appointment, which may be made permanent under regulations established by the Navy Department for other warrant officers." By act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 771), the title of "warrant machinist" was changed to "machinist."

By act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), it was provided that "the pay of all warrant officers * * * is hereby increased twenty-five per cent."

By act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 942), the grade of pay clerk was established as a grade of warrant officers in the Navy, appointments thereto being regularly made by promotion from the grade of acting pay clerk, also created by that act, and it was provided that "pay clerks and acting pay clerks shall have the same pay, allowances, and other benefits as are now or may hereafter be allowed other warrant officers and acting warrant officers, respectively."

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 572), it was provided that "the pharmacists now in the Hospital Corps of the United States Navy or hereafter appointed therein in accordance with the provisions of this act shall have the same rank, pay, and allowances as are now or may hereafter be allowed other warrant officers."

By the same act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), it was provided that "warrant officers shall be allowed such leave of absence, with full pay, as is now or may hereafter be allowed other officers of the United States Navy." Under this provision, a warrant officer granted leave of absence from duty at sea is entitled to full pay at the rate received by him while on sea duty; the words "full pay," as used in this provision, "undoubtedly mean that warrant officers are to be granted leave without any reduction in the pay they are receiving at the time leave is granted." (23 Comp. Dec., 200; but note that the "other officers of the United States Navy," referred to in this enactment, do not, while on leave of absence from sea duty, receive full pay at the rate received by them while on sea duty: see 18 Comp. Dec., 340, and see note below as to leave of absence pay.)

By act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1181), it was provided that "hereafter the pay of warrant officers while on shore duty during the fourth three years' service shall be $1,750 per annum."

By act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 140), warrant officers on shore duty beyond the continental limits of the United States shall, while so serving and from the time of departure from and until the time of return to said limits under orders to or from such foreign-shore duty, receive the same pay as is now or may be authorized by law for warrant officers on sea duty. Prior to this enactment warrant officers were not entitled to increased pay for shore duty beyond seas. (Ollif v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 349; 14 Comp. Dec., 882.)

The grade of sailmaker has become obsolete, no appointment thereto having been made since May 4, 1888. (See note to sec. 1405, R. S.)

Under section 1556, Revised Statutes (clause 25), as amended by the foregoing statutes, the pay of warrant officers, that is, boatswains, gunners, carpenters, machinists, pharmacists, and pay clerks, is as follows: During the first three years after date of appointment, when at sea or on foreign-shore duty, $1,500; on shore duty, $1,125; on waiting orders, $875; during the second three years after such date, when at sea or on foreign-shore duty, $1,625; on shore duty, $1,250; on waiting orders, $1,000; during the third three years after such date, when at sea or on foreign shore duty, $1,750; on shore duty, $1,625; on waiting orders, $1,125; during the fourth three years after such date, when at sea or on foreign-shore duty, $2,000; on shore duty, $1,750; on waiting orders, $1,250; after 12 years from such date, when at sea or on foreign-shore duty, $2,250; on shore duty, $2,000; on waiting orders, $1,500. (The "waiting orders" pay as given in this paragraph is also the leave pay which warrant officers are in practice allowed while on leave of absence in excess of the time authorized by law with full pay.) Acting pay clerks, and machinists holding acting appointments as such, as authorized by statute, and boatswains, gunners, and carpenters holding acting appointments as authorized by Navy Regulations, receive the same rates of pay as above set forth for warrant officers. (See note to sec. 1410, R. S., as to acting officers.)

By act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 602), the pay of warrant officers of the Navy was increased $240 per annum, "in addition to all pay and allowances now authorized by law," such increase to commence January 1, 1920, and to remain effective "until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922."

Special provisions as to pay of retired warrant officers while employed on active duty are contained in act of April 10, 1918 (40 Stat., 516).

By act of March 3, 1899, section 12 (30 Stat., 1007), chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief carpenters, and chief sailmakers were to "rank with, but after, ensign," and to receive "the same pay and allowances as are now allowed a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps."

By act of May 13, 1908 (see above, under "1. General rule"), it was provided that "hereafter all commissioned officers of the active list of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances according to rank and length of service," with the saving clause that "nothing herein shall be construed so as to reduce the pay or allowances now authorized by law for any commissioned, warrant, or appointed officer * * * of the active or retired lists of the Navy." Under this act chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief carpenters, and chief sailmakers, being commissioned officers and having the rank of ensign, became entitled to the same pay and allowances as ensigns in the Navy. (14 Comp. Dec., 883.) As to the pay of ensigns, see notes above, under this section.

By act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 771), it was provided that "no warrant officer, heretofore or hereafter promoted six years from date of warrant, shall suffer a reduction in pay which, but for such promotion, would have been received by him." Under this act the pay which is not to be reduced is the pay attaching to the warrant officer in the lower grade at the time the officer vacates it upon promotion to a higher grade, and does not include any additional pay that may thereafter be made a part of the warrant office thus vacated by subsequent legislation. (26 Comp. Dec., 935.)

By the same act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 771), it was provided that chief machinists shall "have the same pay and allowances as are allowed chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief carpenters, and chief sailmakers."

By act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 345), it was provided that chief pharmacists shall "have the rank, pay, and allowances of chief boatswains." By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 572, 573), it was provided that chief pharmacists shall "have the same rank, pay, and allowances as now or may hereafter be allowed other commissioned warrant officers."

By act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 942), it was provided that chief pay clerks shall "have the rank, pay, and allowances of chief boatswains."

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), it was provided that "hereafter chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief machinists, chief carpenters, chief sailmakers, chief pharmacists, and chief pay clerks, on the active list with creditable records, shall, after six years from date of commission, receive the pay and allowances that are now or may hereafter be allowed a lieutenant (junior grade), United States Navy: Provided, That chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief machinists, chief carpenters, chief sailmakers, chief pharmacists, and chief pay clerks, on the active list with creditable records, shall, after 12 years from date of commission, receive the pay and allowances that are now or may hereafter be allowed a lieutenant, United States Navy." Similar provisions as to pay of retired chief warrant officers while employed on active duty are contained in act of April 10, 1918 (40 Stat., 516.)

"Creditable records" within the meaning of the act of August 29, 1916, relating to the pay of commission warrant officers, does not import distinguished records, but requires only that a record be such that upon examination for promotion it would be found satisfactory. In passing upon the creditability of an officer's record in these cases consideration should be given to all matters therein disclosed, whether pertaining to his mental, moral, or professional qualifications, and it is necessary that an officer be satisfactory in all these respects if his record is to be deemed creditable. (C. M. O. 33, 1916, p. 6, citing file 17789-27, Sept. 21, 1916.)

In determining whether the record of a commissioned warrant officer is creditable, the investigation should ordinarily be limited to a scrutiny of his record in his present grade, and his prior record in the service should not be taken into consideration except in the cases where under existing law this would be done in determining his fitness for promotion. (C. M. O. 33, 1916, p. 6, citing file 17789-27, Sept. 21, 1916.)

When a commissioned warrant officer has the necessary length of service, and it has been decided by the Navy Department that his record is creditable, this definitely fixes the rate of pay and allowances to which he is entitled, and, in the event of his record ceasing to be creditable, his pay and allowances can not be affected except by means of disciplinary action as in the cases of all officers. (C. M. O. 33, 1916, p. 6, citing file 17789-27, Sept. 21, 1916.)

The purpose of the law of August 29, 1916, was clearly to give additional pay to commissioned warrant officers in the nature of the longevity increase to which officers of the Navy are generally entitled. Congress did not intend that, the right to increased pay and allowances once having accrued, the benefit thereof should be lost upon an extra judicial determination by the Navy Department that the officer's record had ceased to be creditable, but rather Congress contemplated that anything of a discreditable nature thereafter occurring should be disposed of by means of the disciplinary instrumentalities which it has placed under the control of the Secretary of the Navy, and which may and should be resorted to for the purpose of reducing the pay and allowances of any officer, or dismissing him from the Navy, or otherwise punishing him as may be appropriate. (File 17789-27, Sept. 21, 1916.)

When the record of a commissioned warrant officer has been held by the Navy Department to be creditable, and a certificate to that effect issued, but subsequently it is established by additional evidence, unknown to the department at the time the certificate was issued, that said certificate was clearly erroneous and that in fact his record was not creditable on the date thereof, because of serious offenses committed by him prior thereto of which he was convicted by general court-martial subsequent to the issuance of the certificate, held, that the cancellation of the certificate was authorized, and that the officer's request that it be returned must accordingly be denied; that the certificate was not cancelled because of matters occurring subsequent to its issuance, and the case therefore is not one covered by the decision of September 21, 1916 (above cited). (File 17789-27: 21, Feb. 28, 1919.)

The question whether an officer's record is creditable within the meaning of the statute must be determined in each specific case as it arises, and such determination must be that of the Secretary of the Navy. The law does not prescribe what method shall be pursued by the Secretary in ascertaining the fact of creditability, and this matter is accordingly left to the Secretary's discretion, in the exercise of which he may avail himself of any appropriate administrative instrumentality. Suggested, that when a commissioned warrant officer has the necessary length of service, his entire record in his existing grade be referred to an examining board for report as to whether or not in the opinion of the board his record is creditable, the board being governed, in arriving at its conclusion, by the same considerations as would influence it in determining whether or not the officer in question would be qualified on his record if undergoing examination for promotion. The personal appearance of the officer before the board would not be required by law, and as an administrative matter might be undesirable as well as expensive and inconvenient. The board might, however, if deemed advisable, call upon the officer to submit evidence, or afford him an opportunity to submit a statement for its consideration. The Secretary would be empowered to approve or disapprove the board's report, or to make an independent decision based upon the evidence adduced. (File 17789-27, Sept. 21, 1916; see also Gen. Order No. 247, Nov. 4, 1916.)

Whether or not a commissioned warrant officer's record is creditable is a question of fact to be determined by the examining board in any case referred to it for report. The period of "twelve years from date of commission," is indivisible and, if his record is not creditable considering the entire period, he is not entitled, on a finding that his record was creditable for the last six years of the period, to the pay and allowances of a lieutenant (junior grade). (File 17789-27:15, Apr. 22, 1918.)

It is not essential that a commissioned warrant officer should have had a creditable record at all times for a period of six years from the date of his commission to entitle him to the pay and allowances of a lieutenant (junior grade), or that he should have had a creditable record at all times for a period of 12 years from the date of his commission to entitle him to the pay and allowances of a lieutenant. The question as to whether his record is creditable is to be determined as of the date his record is examined by the board, either at the end of six years from the date of his commission, or at the end of 12 years from the date of commission. The question whether, considered as a whole, his record is creditable is one for the board to determine; the law does not require that he should have had six years' creditable service, or 12 years' creditable service, as the case may be, but that, at the end of six years, or of 12 years, his record must be creditable before he can receive the pay and allowances of a lieutenant (junior grade) or a lieutenant, as the case may be. (File 17789-27:15, Apr. 22, 1918.)

As to rates of pay received by lieutenants (junior grade), and lieutenants, see notes above under this section.

As to allowances of warrant officers and commissioned warrant officers, see notes to sections 1487 and 1558, Revised Statutes.

26. Secretaries.—See section 1367, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

By act of May 4, 1878 (20 Stat., 50), it was provided that "on and after the first day of July, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, there shall be no appointments made from civil life of secretaries or clerks to the Admiral, or Vice Admiral, when on sea service, commanders of squadrons, or of clerks to commanders of vessels; and an officer not above the grade of lieutenant shall be detailed to perform the duties of secretary to the Admiral or Vice Admiral, when on sea service, and one not above the grade of master [now lieutenant (junior grade)]: see notes above under this section] to perform the duties of clerk to a rear admiral or commander, and one not above the grade of ensign to perform the duties of clerk to a captain, commander, or lieutenant commander when afloat."

The pay of secretary of the Naval Academy has been increased from time to time by appropriations contained in the annual naval appropriation acts. See, for example, naval appropriation act approved June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 828), which contains, under the caption, "Pay, Naval Academy," the following item: "Secretary of the Naval Academy, $2,750."

The position of secretary to the Admiral was necessarily in abeyance until the grade of Admiral was revived. However, when the grade of Admiral was revived, the provisions of law relating to the secretary to the Admiral became again operative. Not being a commissioned officer, his pay was not affected by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899. Accordingly, he is entitled to a salary of $2,500 per annum under section 1556, Revised Statutes, and to the allowances of a lieutenant in the Navy, under section 1367. (6 Comp. Dec., 828.)

See note to section 1362, Revised Statutes, and notes above, under this section, as to Admirals and Vice Admirals in the Navy.

27. Clerks to commanders of squadrons, etc.—See act of May 4, 1878 (20 Stat., 50), quoted above, under "Secretaries."

28. Clerks to commandants of yards and stations.—See section 1416, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

By naval appropriation act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 754), the Secretary of the Navy was authorized to fix the pay of the "clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger force at navy yards and naval stations," on a per annum or per diem basis, as he may elect; the same act repealed "so much of section fifteen hundred and fifty-six of the Revised Statutes as relates to pay of clerks to commandants of navy yards and naval stations," and omitted the specific provision theretofore made in the annual naval appropriation act, under "Pay of the Navy," for such clerks.

29-34. Clerks to paymasters, etc.—The provisions of section 1556, Revised Statutes, fixing the pay of clerks to paymasters, was repealed by the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), which act substituted for the pay specified in said section a provision that "all paymasters' clerks shall, while on duty, receive the same pay and allowances as warrant officers of like length of service in the Navy"; which said provision in the act of May 13, 1908, was amended by act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 606), so as to read that "all paymasters' clerks shall, while holding appointment in accordance with law, receive the same pay and allowances and have the same rights of retirement as warrant officers of like length of service in the Navy." The saving clause in said act of May 13, 1908, that "nothing herein shall be construed so as to reduce the pay or allowances now authorized by law for any commissioned, warrant, or appointed officer or enlisted man of the active or retired lists of the Navy," did not apply to a paymaster's clerk appointed after the enactment of that act; accordingly, a clerk to the paymaster at the navy yard, Mare Island, who was appointed after May 13, 1908, was held not entitled to the pay provided by section 1556, Revised Statutes, for that position, but was correctly allowed pay at the lower rate provided by law for a warrant officer of like length of service in the Navy. (Jones v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 344.)

By act of March 3, 1915, the grades of acting pay clerk, pay clerk, and chief pay clerk were established, and provision was made for the appointment of all paymasters' clerks then in the service to one of said grades. As to the pay and allowances of acting pay clerks, pay clerks, and chief pay clerks, see notes above, under "warrant officers, acting warrant officers, and commissioned warrant officers."

35. Cadet engineers.—The appointment of cadet engineers was prohibited by act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285). See note to section 1522, Revised Statutes.

36. Dental Corps; and Nurse Corps (Female).—By act of August 29, 1916 (39

Stat., 573, 574), as amended and reenacted by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 708-710), it was provided that officers of the Dental Corps (assistant dental surgeons, passed assistant dental surgeons, and dental surgeons) shall have the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), lieutenant, and lieutenant commander, "and shall receive the same pay and allowances as officers of corresponding rank and length of service in the Naval Medical Corps up to and including the rank of lieutenant commander" and that "dental surgeons shall be eligible for advancement in pay and allowances, but not in rank, up to and including the pay and allowances of commander and captain, subject to such examinations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, except that the number of dental surgeons with the pay and allowances of captain shall not exceed four and one-half per centum and the number of dental surgeons with the pay and allowances of commander shall not exceed eight per centum of the total authorized number of dental officers: Provided further, That dental surgeons shall be eligible for advancement to the pay and allowances of commander and captain when their total active service as dental officers in the Navy is such that if rendered as officers of the Naval Medical Corps, it would place them in the list of medical officers with the pay and allowances of commander or captain, as the case may be."

By the same act of August 29, 1916, it was provided that "the senior dental officer now at the United States Naval Academy" shall have "the grade of dental surgeon and the rank, pay, and allowances of lieutenant commander."

By the same it was further provided that "nothing herein contained shall be construed to legislate out of the service any officer now in the medical department of the Navy or to reduce the rank, pay, or allowances now authorized by law for any officer of the Navy."

By act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 602), the pay of "acting assistant dental surgeons in the Navy" was increased $600 per annum, "in addition to all pay and allowances now allowed by law," such increase to commence January 1, 1920, and to remain effective "until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922." (The Navy Register of January 1, 1920, shows only one "acting assistant dental surgeon," being an officer appointed under the provisions of an act of Congress approved August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 344), which act was superseded by the act of August 29, 1916, above cited, containing a saving clause with reference to officers then in the medical department not being thereby legislated out of the service.)

The advancement of dental officers to the pay and allowances of commander and captain should be by the same method that medical officers are promoted; i. e., by selection by the same board of officers as selects medical officers for advancement to the ranks of commander and captain. No other board is qualified to determine whether the service of dental officers "is such that if rendered as officers of the Naval Medical Corps, it would place them in the list of medical officers with the pay and allowances of commander or captain, as the case may be." (File 26509-315:2, Aug. 29, 1919.)

Nurse Corps, Female.—The superintendent, chief nurses, and nurses of the Nurse Corps (Female), U. S. Navy, shall respectively receive the same pay, allowances, emoluments, and privileges as now or hereafter provided by or in pursuance of law for the Nurse Corps (Female) of the Army. (Act May 13, 1903, 35 Stat., 146.) The designation of the "Nurse Corps (Female)" of the Army was changed to "the Army Nurse Corps" by act of July 9, 1918, Chapter V, section 1 (40 Stat., 879), which said act also made provision as to the pay and allowances of the Army Nurse Corps. (See note below.)

Reserve nurses of the Nurse Corps (Female), U. S. Navy, may be assigned to active duty when the necessities of the service demand and when on such duty shall receive the pay and allowances of nurses; but shall receive no compensation except when on active duty. (Act May 13, 1903, 35 Stat., 146.)

Members of the Nurse Corps (Female), U. S. Navy, shall hereafter be paid the same commutation of quarters as is or may be allowed members of the Nurse Corps of the Army. (Act June 15, 1917, 40 Stat., 209.) It had previously been provided by act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 606), that the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, is authorized to allow members of the Nurse Corps (Female) of the Navy $15 per month in lieu of quarters when Government quarters are not available.

The annual pay of members of the Army Nurse Corps was fixed by act of July 9, 1918, Chapter V, section 4 (40 Stat., 879), as amended by act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1211), as follows: Superintendent, $2,400; assistant superintendents and directors, $1,800; assistant directors, $1,500; chief nurses, $360 in addition to the pay of nurses; nurses, $720 for first three years' service, $780 for second three years' service, $840 for third three years' service, $900 for fourth three years' service, $960 after 12 years' service in said corps (including time of service as contract nurses); reserve nurses, when on active duty will receive the same pay as nurses who have served in the corps for periods corresponding to the full period of their active service; all members of said corps, in addition to the foregoing, $10 per month when serving beyond the continental limits of the United States (excepting Porto Rico and Hawaii).

By act of May 18, 1920, section 4 (41 Stat., 602), it was provided that "Commerce January 1, 1920, the pay * * * of members of the Female Nurse Corps of the Army and Navy is hereby increased 20 per centum;" and by section 13 of the same act (41 Stat., 604) it was provided that such increase "shall remain effective until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, unless sooner amended or repealed."

Members of the Army Nurse Corps shall be entitled to cumulative leave of absence with pay at the rate of 30 days for each calendar year of service in said corps, not exceeding, however, 120 days at one time; and in addition thereto sick leave not exceeding 30 days in any one calendar year in cases of illness or injury incurred in the line of duty. (Act July 9, 1918, Chapter V, section 5, 40 Stat., 879.)

Where a member of the Nurse Corps (Female) was upon her own request discharged, but the commanding officer erroneously issued a discharge stating that same was to take effect from date thereof, contrary to the authorization from the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery as approved by the Secretary of the Navy for her discharge to take effect upon the expiration of 74 days' accrued leave of absence, held, that the words "from this date" in the discharge must be disregarded as unauthorized and ineffective; that the discharge was otherwise legal and should be regarded as becoming effective on the date specified in her application therefor as approved by the Surgeon General, the Bureau of Navigation, and the Secretary of the Navy; that if said nurse was absent from duty in the meantime, such absence was by leave of the head of the department and she is accordingly entitled to pay for such period of authorized absence. (File 26477-87, Feb. 6, 1919, citing Reinhard's Case, 10 Ct. Cls., 282.)

The act of July 9, 1918, relating to cumulative leaves of absence, entitles members of the Nurse Corps (Female) to final leave, to the amount accumulated and unused, not to exceed 120 days, prior to honorable discharge. (File 26477-87, Feb. 6, 1919, citing 23 Comp. Dec., 192, 197; 9 Comp. Dec., 606; Hurlburt v. U. S., 30 Ct. Cls., 16; and U. S. v. Barringer, 188 U. S., 577, reversing Barringer v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 1.)

It would seem that if cumulative leave of absence were refused prior to final discharge, the nurse concerned would be entitled to receive pay for such leave due but not granted; however, this question not decided, but should be presented to the accounting officers if such a case should occur. (File 26477-87, Feb. 6, 1919.)

The question of granting leave to members of the Nurse Corps (Female) presents a matter coming under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department and not under the jurisdiction of the Comptroller of the Treasury. (File 26477-102, Feb. 19, 1921.)

Members of the Army Nurse Corps shall receive transportation and necessary expenses when traveling under order and such allowances of quarters and subsistence and, during illness, such medical care as may be prescribed in regulations by the Secretary of War; and when at places where no public quarters are available, commutation in lieu thereof, and of heat and light therefor, at such rates and upon such conditions as are now or shall hereafter be provided by law. (Act July 9, 1918, Chap. V, sec. 6, 40 Stat., 879.) It had previously been provided by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 626), that the superintendent of the Nurse Corps (Female) of the Army should receive such allowances of quarters, subsistence, and medical care during illness as may be prescribed in regulations by the Secretary of War.

By Army appropriation act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 50), provision was made for commutation of rations for members of the Nurse Corps (Female) while on duty in hospital at 40 cents per ration for the ensuing fiscal year; by Army appropriation act of June 5, 1920 (41 Stat., 956), appropriation was made for commutation in lieu of rations for members of the Army Nurse Corps while on duty in hospital, without specifying the amount of such commutation.

By act of June 4, 1920, section 10 (41 Stat., 767), it was provided that "hereafter the members of the Army Nurse Corps shall have relative rank as follows: The superintendent shall have the relative rank of major; the assistant superintendents, director, and assistant directors, the relative rank of captain; chief nurses, the relative rank of first lieutenant; head nurses and nurses, the relative rank of second lieutenant; and as regards medical and sanitary matters and all other work within the line of their professional duties shall have authority in and about military hospitals next after the officers of the Medical Department. The Secretary of War shall make the necessary regulations prescribing the rights and privileges conferred by such relative rank."

The regulations made by the Secretary of War prescribing the "rights and privileges" conferred upon nurses by the relative rank given them by the act of June 4, 1920, were contained in War Department General Orders, No. 49, of August 14, 1920, which provided, among other things, the following: "8. Nurses are entitled to the same allowances and privileges, except mileage, as are prescribed for commissioned officers of grades corresponding to their relative rank, viz: Commutation of quarters when quarters in kind are not available; commutation of heat and light; purchase privileges; insurance privileges; gratuities; and in general all such personal privileges and perquisites, not specifically denied them, as go with commissioned rank and are customarily enjoyed by commissioned officers. 9. Pay and allowances of nurses are set forth in Chapter V of the act of Congress approved July 8, 1918. (40 Stat., 845, 879, Bul. No. 43, W. D., 1918.)"

Payment of compensation to beneficiaries of nurses who die while on the active list of the Regular Navy from wounds or disease not the result of their own misconduct, is provided for by act of June 4, 1920. (41 Stat., 824.)

37. Naval Reserve Force.—Pay for active duty.—By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 588), which created the Naval Reserve Force, it was provided that "all members of the Naval Reserve Force shall, when actively employed as set forth in this act, be entitled to the same pay, allowances, gratuities, and other emoluments as officers and enlisted men of the naval service on active duty of corresponding rank or rating and of the same length of service." This provision was superseded by the following clause in the act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 712): "Members of the Naval Reserve Force when employed in active service, ashore or afloat, under the Navy Department shall receive the same pay and allowances as received by the officers and enlisted men of the regular Navy of the same rank, grades, or ratings and of the same length of service, which shall include service in the Navy Marine Corps, Naval Reserve Force, Naval Militia, National Naval Volunteers, or Marine Corps Reserve."

An officer of the Naval Reserve Force, assigned to active duty, who is thereafter detached from such duty with direction to await further orders, is not thereby returned to a reserve status, but is entitled to the same pay that an officer of similar rank and length of service in the Regular Navy would be entitled to while awaiting orders as directed by the Navy Department. The words "actively employed," and "active service," as used in the statute, refer to service in the Navy under the call of the President in time of war or national emergency, as distinguished from service in reserve. In this case the officer was not discharged from active duty in the sense of being returned to a reserve status. The order of detachment shows conclusively that he was to hold himself in readiness for new duty. (24 Comp. Dec., 626.)

The act of August 29, 1916, providing that members of the Naval Reserve Force when actively employed shall receive the same pay and allowances as officers and enlisted men of the Regular Navy of corresponding rank or rating and of the same length of service, does not limit the pay and allowances of naval reservists when in active service to the pay and allowances provided for members of the Regular Navy at the time said act of August 29, 1916, was approved; but entitles them to the same pay and allowances as are provided by law for members of the Regular Navy at the time their active service with the Navy is rendered; accordingly enlisted personnel of the Naval Reserve Force are entitled while in active service to the increase of pay provided in the act of May 22, 1917, for members of the Regular Navy. (23 Comp. Dec., 773.)

Members of the Naval Reserve Force given provisional rank as officers of the Supply Corps, but who have not been required to execute a bond as required of supply officers in the Navy by sections 1383 and 1560, Revised Statutes, are nevertheless entitled to receive the pay and allowances of their rank on the active list during the period they may be assigned to duty for training with their consent, when not required to make disbursements of public money nor charged with accountability or responsibility for any Government property. (27 Comp. Dec., 228.)

An officer of the Fleet Naval Reserve, when on active duty in time of war or national emergency, placed in a hospital for treatment, is entitled to active duty pay while in hospital under the same circumstances and subject to the same limitations under which officers of the Regular Navy would be entitled. (23 Comp. Dec., 651; see also, 24 Comp. Dec., 626.)

Members of the Fleet Naval Reserve detached from active duty (to which they had been assigned for training on board ship), and transferred to a naval hospital for treatment, are not entitled to active service pay thereafter, except for time necessary to travel to their homes. (Comp. Dec., Feb. 23, 1917, 192 S. and A. Memo., 4157, distinguishing Comp. Dec., Aug. 3, 1916, 186 S. and A. Memo., 4031, in which it was held that a member of the former Naval Reserve, created by the act of March 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 941, was entitled to active duty pay during a period when he was under treatment in a hospital, in that the enlisted man in the latter case was not detached from his ship and sent to a hospital for temporary treatment.)

A member of the Naval Reserve Force in an enlisted rating who, after undergoing treatment in a naval hospital, is ordered on sick leave of absence is in a duty status and entitled to the per diem allowance for subsistence for such period. (26 Comp. Dec., 47.)

"An officer in the Naval Reserve Force serving at sea, who is granted leave of absence, is entitled to full active duty pay for the period of absence." (24 Comp. Dec., 626, 627. See also 21 Comp. Dec., 628, holding that an officer of the former Medical Reserve Corps of the Navy, on authorized leave granted while on active duty, was entitled to pay for the period of such leave, provided the leave granted was not in excess of the leave to the credit of the officer at the time he availed himself of it.)

An officer of the Naval Reserve Force on active duty, who formerly served in the Navy, is entitled to be credited for pay purposes with the five years' constructive service which was credited to him, under the act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), upon his original appointment to the Navy from civil life. (Comp. Dec., Feb. 21, 1918, 204 S. and A. Memo., 4505; see also, 24 Comp. Dec., 168; 24 Comp. Dec., 629.)

Officers of the Naval Auxiliary Reserve of the Naval Reserve Force are not entitled to longevity increase for service rendered in the Naval Auxiliary Service, even though they were entitled to such increase while members of said Auxiliary service. (Comp. Dec., June 27, 1917, 196 S. and A. Memo., 4292.)

In determining the amount of continuous-service pay to which members of the Naval Reserve Force in enlisted ratings are entitled, under the act of July 1, 1918, by reason of naval militia service, all legal active service in enlistments which contain the elements of continuous service prescribed for men in the regular Navy should be counted. (25 Comp. Dec., 154.)

Members of the Naval Reserve Force who are citizens of the United States are entitled to the benefits of General Order No. 34, Navy Department, issued under Executive order of November 27, 1906 (later embodied in art. 4427, par. 25, Navy Regs., 1913), including in the computation thereunder service in the naval militia under reenlistments since November 27, 1906. (25 Comp. Dec., 154.)

The National Guard not being one of the organizations enumerated in the act of July 1, 1918, for the service in which a member of the Naval Reserve Force in active service is entitled to credit, and not being comprehended in the term, "Naval Militia," which is included, an officer of the Naval Reserve Force who has had legal active service in the National Guard to his credit is not entitled to longevity pay therefor. (25 Comp. Dec., 735.)

Enlisted men of the Regular Navy who, upon the expiration of enlistment, are transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve at their request, are entitled as members of the Naval Reserve Force, while on active duty, to continuous-service pay and pay under General Order No. 34 (art. 4427, par. 25, Navy Regs., 1913), the same as if they had accepted discharge from the Navy at the expiration of enlistment and had thereafter enrolled in the Fleet Naval Reserve; but said enlisted men are not entitled upon such transfer to the honorable discharge gratuity. (25 Comp. Dec., 186.)

Retainer pay.—Retainer pay for members of the Naval Reserve Force is based solely on consideration of an obligation assumed by them "to serve in the Navy in time of war or during the existence of a national emergency declared by the President." It is not compensation for services rendered. (26 Comp. Dec., 884.)

"When not actively employed in the Navy, members of the Naval Reserve Force shall not be entitled to any pay, bounty, gratuity, or pension except as expressly provided for members of the Naval Reserve Force by the provisions of this act." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 588.)

An enrolled member of the Naval Reserve Force is not entitled to retainer pay for any period subsequent to the expiration of his term of enrollment and prior to reenrollment, although he may be continued on active duty during such period. (26 Comp. Dec., 900.)

"Retainer pay shall be in addition to any pay to which a member may be entitled by reason of active service." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 588.)

"In time of peace no member of any class of the Naval Reserve Force shall be entitled to retainer pay when assigned to active duty for purposes other than training." (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 711.)

"Retainer pay provided by existing law shall not be paid to any member of the Naval Reserve Force who fails to train as provided by law during the year in which he fails to train." (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 1, 41 Stat., 824.)

"Hereafter the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, withhold any part or all of the retainer pay which may be due to a member of the Naval Reserve Force where such members fail to perform such duty as may be prescribed by law for the maintenance of the efficiency of the Naval Reserve Force: Provided, That any money so withheld shall be credited to the appropriation for organizing and administering the Naval Reserve Force to be used for any purpose that the Secretary of the Navy may consider proper to increase the efficiency of the Naval Reserve Force." (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 9, 41 Stat., 837.)

"Retainer pay shall only be paid to members of the Naval Reserve Force upon their making such reports concerning their movements and occupations as may be required by the Secretary of the Navy." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 588.)

"Any pay which may be due any member of the Fleet Naval Reserve shall be forfeited when so ordered by the Secretary of the Navy upon the failure, under such conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, of such man to report for inspection." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 590.)

"Retainer pay shall be paid annually or at shorter intervals, as the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, may direct." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 588.)

"The retainer pay of all members of the Naval Reserve Force, except the Volunteer Naval Reserve, while enrolled in a provisional rank or rating, and until such time as they shall have been confirmed in such rank or rating, shall be $12 per annum. Thereafter, the retainer pay shall be that prescribed for members in the various classes." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 588.)

"The Volunteer Naval Reserve shall be composed of those members of the Naval Reserve Force who are eligible for membership in any one of the other classes of the Naval Reserve Force, and who obligate themselves to serve in the Navy in any one of said classes without retainer pay and uniform gratuity in time of peace." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 592.)

"The retainer pay of the enrolled men of the Fleet Naval Reserve shall be the same as for the enrolled men of the Naval Reserve and shall be computed in like manner: Provided, That nothing herein shall operate to reduce the retainer pay allowed by existing law to enlisted men who, after sixteen years or more of naval service, are transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve." (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 710.)

"The annual retainer pay of members of the Naval Reserve Force, except officers in the Naval Auxiliary Reserve and transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve, after confirmation in rank; grade, or rating, shall be the equivalent of two months' base pay of the corresponding rank, grade, or rating in the Navy, but the highest base pay upon which the retainer pay of officers of the Naval Reserve Force shall be computed shall not be greater than the base pay of a lieutenant commander." (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 710.)

"The annual retainer pay of members in this class [Naval Auxiliary Reserve] after confirmation in rank or rating shall be for officers, one month's base pay of the corresponding rank in the Navy." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 592.)

"Members of the Fleet Naval Reserve who have, when transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve, completed naval service of sixteen or twenty or more years shall be paid a retainer at the rate of one-third and one-half, respectively, of the base pay they were receiving at the close of their last naval service plus all permanent additions thereto: Provided, That the pay authorized in this paragraph as a retainer shall be increased ten per centum for all men who may be credited with extraordinary heroism in the line of duty or whose average marks in conduct for twenty years or more shall not be less than ninety-five per centum of the maximum." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 590.)

Upon original enrollment members of the Fleet Naval Reserve enrolled in enlisted ratings are entitled to retainer pay computed on the rating given them at the date of such original enrollment. The law specifically exempts members of the Fleet Naval Reserve from the requirement that they be given a provisional rating upon first enrollment, and in actual operation such members are, by direction of the Navy Department, presumed to be given a confirmed rating. As enrolled members of the Fleet Naval Reserve are given a confirmed rating upon enrollment, the law authorizing "after confirmation" a retainer pay to be computed on a basis of "the equivalent of two months' base pay" grants to said members the right to have retainer pay computed on the basis of two months' base pay of the rating in which enrolled. (25 Comp. Dec., 350.)

A former ensign in the Navy enrolled in the Fleet Naval Reserve on May 29, 1918, with the provisional rank of ensign, and thereafter, on November 26, 1919, issued a commissioned and confirmed rank of ensign from May 29, 1918, date of enrollment, is entitled to retainer pay based upon such confirmed rank from the date of his enrollment, and not merely from the date that he established his qualifications for such confirmed rank. (26 Comp. Dec., 758.)

A former midshipman in the Regular Navy who was enrolled in the Fleet Naval Reserve with the provisional rank of ensign on January 15, 1918, and thereafter, on November 26, 1919, was issued a commission in the confirmed rank of ensign from January 15, 1918 (date of enrollment), is entitled to retainer pay based upon such confirmed rank only from the date that the board, duly appointed for that purpose, passed and reported upon his qualifications for confirmation, which in this case was October 1, 1919. (26 Comp. Dec., 668.)

A member of the Naval Reserve Force holding a confirmed rank or rating, who is promoted to a provisional rank, continues to be entitled to the retainer pay based on the confirmed rating until the termination of the enrollment period in which received, but upon reenrollment in the provisional rank which he held at the termination of his last enrollment period he loses the right to receive retainer pay based on the former confirmed rating unless again appointed thereto, and is entitled only to retainer pay based on the provisional rank in which reenrolled. If subsequent to his reenrollment he is again given his former confirmed rating, to date from his reenrollment, he will be entitled to retainer pay based on such confirmed rating from said date. (27 Comp. Dec., 82.)

Upon promotion to a provisional rating, members of the Fleet Naval Reserve enrolled in enlisted ratings are entitled, under the act of July 1, 1918, to retainer pay computed on the confirmed rating given them at date of enrollment. If promotion be to a confirmed rating, retainer pay should be computed on the basis of the confirmed rating thereby acquired. (25 Comp. Dec., 350.)

Members of the Fleet Naval Reserve, upon advancement from one provisional or confirmed rank to a higher confirmed rank, are entitled to retainer pay at the higher rate from the date of confirmation in the higher rank or rating. (25 Comp. Dec., 350.)

Officers of the Naval Reserve Force who, while holding a confirmed rank, are transferred to another class of the Reserve and given a higher provisional rank therein, are entitled to continue in receipt of retainer pay which they were receiving in the confirmed rank held by them. (25 Comp. Dec., 421.)

Transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve are entitled, as retainer pay, to one-third or one-half, respectively, of the base pay they were receiving at the close of their last naval service, and to the full amount of all permanent additions thereto. Thus, where the current rate of pay of a man at the time of his transfer to the Fleet Naval Reserve in September, 1916, after 20 years' service, was $94.53 per month, composed of $70 base pay, plus $24.53 permanent additions, he was entitled as retainer pay to $59.53 per month, being one-half of his base pay, or $35, plus all permanent additions, amounting to $24.53, such permanent additions being composed of $6.44 continuous-service pay, $8 pay under Executive order of November 27, 1906 (art. 4427, par. 25, Navy Regs., 1913), $1.50 for good-conduct medal, and $8.59 as 10 per cent increase of pay under the act of May 13, 1908, said 10 per cent increase being treated as a permanent addition to his base pay and therefore being allowed in full. (See 23 Comp. Dec., 190.)

In computing the retainer pay of members of the Fleet Naval Reserve who have been transferred thereto at the expiration of enlistment after completing 16 years of service in the Regular Navy, the increased rates of pay provided in section 15 of the act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 87), which are made permanent in certain enlistments by the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 140), are considered as establishing new base rates of pay for each rating; while the 10 per cent increase of pay authorized by the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), is to be treated as permanent addition to pay and not as an increase in the base rates thereof. Accordingly, said man will be allowed, in computing his retainer pay, only one-third of the increase provided by the acts of May 22, 1917, and July 11, 1919, while he will be allowed the full amount of increase provided by the act of May 13, 1908. (26 Comp. Dec., 219, explaining 23 Comp. Dec., 190.)

The retainer pay of officers of the Naval Reserve Force is not increased by the temporary increase granted officers of the Navy by the act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 601); such temporary increase was not an increase in the base pay of the various ranks in the Navy, and as the retainer pay of an officer of the Naval Reserve Force is computed only upon base pay of the confirmed rank held by him, the computation of his retainer pay is not affected by said act of May 18, 1920. However, confirmed members of the Naval Reserve Force holding enlisted ratings, and transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve, are entitled to retainer pay computed on the increased rates of pay provided in section 6 of said act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 602), for enlisted men of the Navy; but if such members were not on active duty during any of the period from January 1, 1920, from which said increase in the pay of the Regular Navy took effect, until May 18, 1920, when said act was approved, they are not entitled to such increase prior to the date of said act. (27 Comp. Dec., 274, modifying 27 Comp. Dec., 126.)

A transferred member of the Fleet Naval Reserve of over 20 years' service is entitled to but one 10 per cent increase of his retainer pay, as provided by the act of August 29, 1916, even though he may possess the two qualifications of extraordinary heroism and conduct marks.

The statute authorizes but one 10 per cent increase for the possession by a man of either of two alternative qualifications, and makes his possession of one or other of the qualifications sufficient to entitle him to it. The fact that he may possess both of the qualifications does not operate to entitle him to two 10 per cent increases, only one having been provided for. (Comp. Dec., June 2, 1917, 196 S. and A. Memo., 4266.)

"That the retainer pay of those members of the Fleet Naval Reserve who, pursuant to call, shall return to active duty within one month after the approval of this act and shall continue on active duty until the Navy shall have been recruited up to its permanent authorized strength, or until the number in the grade to which they may be assigned is filled, but not beyond June 30, 1922, shall be computed upon the base pay they are receiving when retransferred to inactive duty, plus the additions or increases prescribed in the naval appropriation act approved August 29, 1916, for members of the Fleet Naval Reserve." (Act May 18, 1920, sec. 5, 41 Stat., 603. By sec. 13 of the same act it was provided that the provisions of sec. 5 thereof "shall remain effective until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, unless sooner amended or repealed.")

"Any member [of the Fleet Naval Reserve] who has failed to perform three months' active service with the Navy in any term of enrollment shall, on the next reenrollment, receive retainer pay at the rate of $12 per annum until such time as he shall have completed three months' active service. The three months' active service with the Navy may be taken in one or more periods, at the election of the member." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 590.)

"Members of the Naval Reserve Force who reenroll for a term of four years within four months from the date of the termination of their last term of enrollment, and who shall have performed the minimum amount of active service required during the preceding term of enrollment, shall, for each such reenrollment, receive an increase of twenty-five per centum of their base retainer pay." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 588.)

"Officers and men enrolling in the Fleet Naval Reserve within four months of the date of the termination of their last naval service or reenrolling within four months of the date of the termination of their last term of enrollment shall receive an increase of twenty-five per centum of their retainer pay for each such enrollment." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 590.)

"Service in the Navy, Marine Corps, National Naval Volunteers, and Naval Militia shall be counted as continuous service in the Naval Reserve Force, both for the purpose of retirement and of computing retainer pay * * * : Provided further, That no retainer pay of any member of the Naval Reserve Force, except those enlisted men transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve after sixteen or twenty or more years' naval service, shall be in excess of the amount authorized to members having had sixteen years' continuous service therein." (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 710.)

"For all purposes of this act a complete enlistment during minority and any enlistment terminated within three months prior to the expiration of the term of enlistment by special order of the Secretary of the Navy shall be considered as four years' service." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 590.)

Any former member of class one of the United States Naval Reserve, established by act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 940), who was serving therein on August 29, 1916, and who upon his own application prior to July 1, 1917, was enrolled in the Naval Reserve Force, shall, for all purposes, be considered as having served continuously in such Naval Reserve Force since August 29, 1916, with due credit for previous and continuous service in the Naval Reserve in the same manner and to the same effect as for equal length of service in the Naval Reserve Force. (Act Mar. 4, 1917, 39 Stat., 1174.)

Under the act of March 4, 1917, an enlisted man of the Navy who enrolled in the former Naval Reserve within four months from the date of his discharge from the Navy was serving in said Naval Reserve on August 29, 1916, and was enrolled in the Fleet Naval Reserve prior to July 1, 1917, upon his own application, is regarded as having served constructively in the Naval Reserve Force from the date of his enrollment in the former Naval Reserve, and therefore as having enrolled in said Naval Reserve Force within four months from the date of termination of his last naval service; he is therefore entitled to 25 per cent increase of retainer pay, as provided by the act of August 29, 1916, for persons enrolling in the Naval Reserve Force within four months of the date of termination of their last naval service. (Comp. Dec., Sept. 29, 1917, 199 S. and A. Memo., 4386.)

Under the act of July 1, 1918, members of the Naval Reserve Force are entitled, for previous service in the Navy, Marine Corps, National Naval Volunteers, and Naval Militia, to credit for such service as provided in the act of August 29, 1916, i. e., for each four years a credit of 25 per cent, within the limitation of 16 years; allowing for members with four, but less than eight years' previous services, a credit of 25 per cent; for eight but less than 12 years, 50 per cent; for 12 but less than 16 years, 75 per cent; and for 16 or more years' service, 100 per cent. (25 Comp. Dec., 504, modifying 25 Comp. Dec., 308.)

Members of the Naval Reserve Force transferred thereto from the National Naval Volunteers, under the provisions of the act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 708), are entitled to increase of 25 per cent of their base retainer pay upon reenrollment in the Naval Reserve Force within four months from termination of their three-year enrollment in which serving when so transferred. (27 Comp. Dec., 221.)

Members of the Naval Reserve Force appointed to commissioned or warrant grades "shall not be deprived of the retainer pay, allowances, or gratuities to which they would otherwise be entitled." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 587.)

Enrolled members of the Fleet Naval Reserve in enlisted ratings, who have been appointed to commissioned, warrant, and chief warrant grades in other classes of the Naval Reserve Force, are not entitled to continue after June 30, 1918, in receipt of retainer pay of their enlisted ratings, computed on the rates established by the act of August 29, 1916, which rates of pay for enrolled members of the Fleet Naval Reserve were abolished and new rates substituted by the act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 710). However, enrolled members of the Fleet Naval Reserve so appointed to offices in other classes of the Naval Reserve Force may, on and after July 1, 1918, be allowed the rate of retainer pay provided by the act of that date for the enlisted rating which they held in the Fleet Naval Reserve. (25 Comp. Dec., 445.)

Pay while holding other offices.—"No existing law shall be construed to prevent any member of the Naval Reserve Force from accepting employment in any branch of the public service, except as an officer or enlisted man in any branch of the military service of the United States or any State thereof, nor from receiving the pay and allowances incident to such employment in addition to his retainer pay." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 588.)

"That no part or parts of any existing law shall be construed * * * to prevent members of the Naval Reserve Force from being or becoming members of the Naval Militia of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia: Provided, That such membership in the Naval Militia shall not interfere with the discharge of duties by such members thereof who are in the Naval Reserve Force." (Act July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 141.)

"That upon their enrollment in the Naval Reserve Force, and not otherwise, until June 30, 1922, the members of said Naval Militia shall have all the benefits, gratuities, privileges, and emoluments provided by law for other members of the Naval Reserve Force; and that with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, duty performed in the Naval Militia may be counted as active service for the maintenance of efficiency required by law for members of the Naval Reserve Force." (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 1, 41 Stat., 818.)

Officers and employees of the Government who are members of the Naval Reserve Force are not entitled to military leave of absence with pay, in addition to their regular annual and sick leave, for the period they are on active duty with the Naval Reserve Force. (27 Comp. Dec., 214.)

Members of the Naval Reserve Force on active duty are prohibited by the provisions of the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 582), from receiving salary of any civil position they may be holding, if the combined amount of such salary and active-duty pay as members of the Naval Reserve Force exceeds the sum of $2,000 per annum, but such limitations do not apply to the retainer pay of members of the Naval Reserve Force. (27 Comp. Dec., 214.)

Uniform gratuity.—"Members of the Naval Reserve Force shall, upon first reporting for active service for training during each period of enrollment, be credited with a uniform gratuity of $50 for officers * * *. Upon reporting for active service in time of war or national emergency the uniform gratuity shall be $150 for officers * * *, or the difference between these amounts and any amounts that may have been credited as a uniform gratuity during the current enrollment." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 589.)

"The uniform gratuity for the members, other than officers, of each class of the Naval Reserve Force shall be the same as that prescribed for enlisted men of the Navy, but in time of peace the Secretary of the Navy shall prescribe the portion of the clothing gratuity to be issued to such members, other than officers, of the Naval Reserve Force." (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 711.)

Enlisted men of the Navy are not entitled to a credit for uniform gratuity but to clothing outfit, or, in other words, to a gratuitous issue of uniform and clothing. Therefore, what the enrolled members of the Naval Reserve Force who first reported for active service on or subsequent to July 1, 1918, became entitled to was not a credit for uniform gratuity but to a gratuitous issue of uniform, not to exceed $100. (25 Comp. Dec., 281.)

Under the act of August 29, 1916, uniform gratuity is payable only to those members of the Naval Reserve Force whose membership is contingent upon a period of enrollment; accordingly, transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve who are not "enrolled" and whose service is not measured by "periods of enrollment" are not entitled to uniform gratuity either under that act or subsequent legislation. (25 Comp. Dec., 318.)

Officers of the Volunteer Naval Reserve of the Naval Reserve Force are entitled when on active duty in time of war to the uniform gratuity of $150 provided by the act of August 29, 1916, for a full term of enrollment, notwithstanding that under said act members of the Volunteer Naval Reserve are not entitled to retainer pay or uniform gratuity in time of peace. (Comp. Dec., Aug. 7, 1917, 198 S. and A. Memo., 4332.)

During the period of any "time of war or national emergency" officers of the Naval Reserve Force who reenroll and report for active service are entitled to be credited with uniform gratuity of not to exceed $150, provided they have the required outfit of uniforms and equipment, and the other members of the Naval Reserve Force so reporting, following a reenrollment, are entitled to uniform gratuity of $100. While the act of July 1, 1918, increases the amount of uniform gratuity over that provided by the act of August 29, 1916, so as to entitle enrolled members other than officers to a uniform gratuity of $100, the latter act does not in any way repeal the provision of the act of August 29, 1916, providing under what conditions the gratuity is payable. The provision of the act of July 1, 1918, "shall be the same as prescribed for enlisted men of the Navy," relates only to the amount of the gratuity. (26 Comp. Dec., 1010.)

A member of the Naval Reserve Force holding an enlisted rating who is promoted, during the term of his enrollment and in time of war, to a commissioned rank is entitled only to the difference between the amount already credited to him as uniform gratuity and the maximum allowed for active service in time of war. (24 Comp. Dec., 433.)

The provision for the crediting of the uniform gratuity is a mandatory one. It is that officers "shall" be credited with it "upon first reporting for active service for training during his period of enrollment," and that said credit "shall" be $150 for said officers "upon reporting for active service in time of war or national emergency." (25 Comp. Dec., 130, 131.)

Should any member of the Naval Reserve Force sever his connection with the service without compulsion on the part of the Government before the expiration of his term of enrollment, the amount so credited [for uniform gratuity] shall be deducted from any money that may be or may become due him." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 589.)

Members of the Naval Reserve Force "shall in time of peace, when no national emergency exists, be discharged upon their own request upon reimbursing the Government for any clothing gratuity that may have been furnished them during their current enrollment." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 587.)

"That no part of the clothing gratuity credited to members of the Naval Reserve Force shall be deducted from their accounts where said members accept or have accepted temporary appointments in the Navy in time of war or other national emergency." (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 711.)

Where an ensign in the Naval Reserve Force receives an order from the Navy Department stating, "You are this day discharged from the U. S. Naval Reserve Force for the convenience of the Government," and the next day accepts a commission as temporary ensign in the Regular Navy, his connection with the service was not severed, within the meaning of the provisions of the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 589), directing the deduction of uniform gratuities of officers who have voluntarily severed their connection with said force. (Price v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 499.)

The act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 711), providing that clothing gratuity credited to members of the Naval Reserve Force shall not be deducted from their accounts where such members accept temporary appointment in the Regular Navy in time of war, would protect a member's account against checkage if such checkage had not already been made; the mere fact that his account had been checked does not deprive him of a right which would be accorded him if the account had not been checked. (Price v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 499.)

Travel allowance.—"The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to assign any member of the Fleet Naval Reserve to active duty for training on board ship upon the application of such member * * * : Provided, That no member shall be entitled to travel allowance unless the period of such active service is for not less than one month, or unless specifically provided for by such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 590.)

By act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1203), it was provided that naval reservists duly enrolled who have been honorably released from active service since November 11, 1918, or who may hereafter be honorably released from active service, shall be entitled to receive travel pay at the rate of five cents per mile from the place where they are released from active duty to their actual bona fide home or residence, or original muster into the service, at their option; but for sea travel, transportation and subsistence only shall be furnished to enlisted men. By act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 836), it was provided that any enrolled man who, since November 11, 1918, has been or shall hereafter be discharged from any branch or class of the naval service for the purpose of re-enlisting in the Navy or Marine Corps, shall be entitled to travel pay as authorized in said act of February 28, 1919.

Enlisted men of the Regular Navy, transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve after 16 or 20 or more years of service, whose rating at the time of transfer entitled them to honorable discharge and who, as reservists, are not retained on active duty, are entitled at the time of transfer to travel allowance at 5 cents per mile from the place of transfer to their actual bona fide home or residence or place of original muster into the service, at their option, as provided by the act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1203). (26 Comp. Dec., 636.)

An officer of the Naval Reserve Force detached from active duty and ordered to his home who, in proceeding to his home, delays beyond the period authorized by the Navy Regulations, is not entitled to mileage in subsequently performing the travel, his active duty status having terminated as of the date of detachment. (26 Comp. Dec., 639, overruled, 27 Comp. Dec., 478, noted below; see also 26 Comp. Dec., 245.)

An officer of the Naval Reserve Force relieved from active duty and ordered to his home occupies a situation analogous to a retired naval officer released from active duty and is accordingly entitled to mileage to his home, provided the journey is performed in obedience to orders within a reasonable time after date of release from active duty. (27 Comp. Dec., 478, overruling 26 Comp. Dec., 639.)

Under the act of February 28, 1919, (40 Stat., 1203), a member of the Naval Reserve Force released from active duty in the interior of a foreign country is entitled to travel allowance at the rate of 5 cents per mile from place of release to port of embarkation, transportation and subsistence for the sea travel involved, and 5 cents per mile in the United States from the port of landing to his bona fide home or residence or place of original muster into the service, at his option. (26 Comp. Dec., 888.)

Transferred members of the Naval Reserve Force, as well as those duly enrolled from civil life, are entitled to travel allowance upon honorable release from active duty under the act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1203). (26 Comp. Dec., 878.)

Courts-martial.—Transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve, when released from active duty, are entitled to be credited, under article 4893, Naval Instructions, 1913, with the amounts deducted from their pay on account of court-martial sentences, in the same manner as though such release from active duty were a discharge from the service. (26 Comp. Dec., 91.) But enrolled members of the Naval Reserve Force are entitled to such credit only upon disenrollment or discharge, their release from active duty not being equivalent to a discharge. (26 Comp. Dec., 818.)

The appropriation, "Pay, miscellaneous," is available for the payment of the cost of subsistence of officers of the Naval Reserve Force on inactive duty, while in confinement awaiting action of the Navy Department or awaiting trial by court-martial. (26 Comp. Dec., 884.)

Deduction of pay.—Deduction of 20 cents per month for the naval hospital fund should be made from the active-duty pay of all members of the Naval Reserve Force during such time as they are on active duty, and also such deduction should be made from the retainer pay of transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve when not on active duty. Under the act of August 29, 1916, enrolled members of the Naval Reserve Force are "subject to the laws, regulations, and orders for the government of the Regular Navy only during such time as they may by law be required to serve in the Navy, in accordance with their obligations, and when on active service at their own request as herein provided, and when employed in authorized travel to and from such active service in the Navy." Under the same act, "men transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve shall be governed by the laws and regulations for the government of the Navy" at all times, and not merely while employed on active duty. One of the laws for the government of the Navy thus made applicable to members of the Naval Reserve Force is that providing for deduction on account of the naval hospital fund. (Comp. Dec., Dec. 27, 1916, 190 S. and A. Memo., 4121; secs. 1614 and 4808, R. S.)

An enrolled member of the Naval Reserve Force holding an enlisted rating and in an active-duty status is not entitled to active-duty pay or allowance for subsistence during unauthorized absence, such case being governed by article 4425, Navy Regulations 1913 (C. N. R. 7), made applicable by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 588), to enrolled members of the Naval Reserve Force while on active duty. (Comp. Dec., June 20, 1918, 208 S. and A. Memo., 4581.)

Retired pay.—Enrolled members of the Naval Reserve Force "who shall have completed twenty years of service in the Naval Reserve Force, and who shall have performed the minimum amount of active service required in their class for maintaining efficiency during each term of enrollment, shall, upon their own application, be retired with the rank or rating held by them at the time, and shall receive in lieu of any pay, a cash gratuity equal to the total amount of their retainer pay during the last term of their enrollment." (Act August 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 588.)

Transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve "may, upon their own request, upon completing thirty years' service, including naval and Fleet Naval Reserve service, be placed on the retired list of the Navy with the pay they were then receiving plus the allowances to which enlisted men of the same rating are entitled on retirement after thirty years' naval service." (Act August 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 591.)

"Service in the Navy, Marine Corps, National Naval Volunteers, and Naval Militia shall be counted as continuous service in the Naval Reserve Force, both for the purpose of retirement and of computing retainer pay: Provided, That no member of the Naval Reserve Force shall be eligible for retirement other than for physical disability incurred in line of duty." (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 710.)

Nothing contained in this act shall operate to deny to enlisted men transferred to the Naval Reserve Force after 16 years or more of naval service, their privilege of retirement upon completing 30 years' naval service as now provided by law. (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 710.)

38. Additional pay for special duty—Superintendent of Naval Academy.—"The pay of the Superintendent of the Naval School at Annapolis shall be at the rate allowed to an officer of his rank, when in service at sea." (Act Sept. 28, 1850, 9 Stat., 515.)

The Superintendent of the Naval Academy, while discharging the duties of that position, is entitled to the sea pay of an officer of his rank, notwithstanding section 13 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), which provides that officers of the Navy "when on shore shall receive the allowances, but fifteen per centum less pay than when on sea duty." The rule is applicable that a general law will not repeal an earlier special act by mere implication; and in this case the Navy personnel act is general in its provisions and does not by implication repeal special acts applicable to particular cases. (6 Comp. Dec., 885; see also 12 Op. Atty. Gen., 81; 18 Comp. Dec., 17.)

Commandant of navy yard, Mare Island.—"The pay of the officer of the Navy assigned to the command of the navy yard at Mare Island, California, shall be the sea pay of his grade." (Joint Res. Mar. 3, 1863, 12 Stat., 825.)

The joint resolution of March 3, 1863, providing that the pay of the officer of the Navy assigned to the command of the Mare Island Navy Yard shall be the sea pay of his grade, is not in conflict with the act of May 13, 1908, and such officer while in that command is entitled to the pay of his grade, fixed by said act of May 13, 1908, with 10 per cent additional allowed for sea duty. The requirement in said act of May 13, 1908, that estimates for "Pay of the Navy" shall hereafter show the amount allowed "for pay at sea rates to officers employed on shore," evidently contemplates that there may be cases under the act where the additional pay for service on sea duty may lawfully be paid to officers employed on shore. (15 Comp. Dec., 36; 18 Comp. Dec., 17.)

Chief of Naval Operations, and commanding officers of fleets and squadrons.—See note above, under "Admirals; Vice Admirals."

Chiefs of bureaus, assistant chiefs of bureaus, and Judge Advocate General.—See note to section 421, Revised Statutes.

Aids to rear admirals.—By act of May 13, 1908, it was provided that "aids to rear admirals embraced in the nine lower numbers of that grade shall each receive one hundred and fifty dollars additional per annum, and aids to all other rear admirals two hundred dollars additional per annum each." (35 Stat., 128.) By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577, 578), the number of rear admirals was increased and the designation of those in the nine lower numbers was changed to rear admirals of the lower half, and the designation of rear admirals of the first nine was changed to rear admirals of the upper half.

A naval officer assigned to duty on the personal staff of a rear admiral, as flag lieutenant, without any other designation, is an aid to such rear admiral and entitled to the additional pay of $200 per annum allowed to an aid of a major general in the Army. (U. S. v. Miller, 208 U. S., 32, construing the law as it existed prior to May 13, 1908, viz, Act of Mar. 3, 1899, sec. 13, 30 Stat., 1004, and secs. 1098 and 1261, R. S.)

A determination of who are aids should be arrived at by a consideration of the nature and character of the duties of the officers constituting the personal staff of a flag officer, and not made to depend upon whether they are technically designated as aids. (U. S. v. Miller, 208 U. S., 32.)

An aid in the Navy is an officer legally ordered to duty with an admiral, vice admiral, or rear admiral, to perform for him strictly personal, confidential, and routine duties. These duties can not be combined with the duties of a fleet ordnance officer or any other officer who has other duties to perform separate and distinct from the duties of an aid. (Knox v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 22, holding that an officers' appointment as fleet ordnance officer did not constitute him an aid of the commander in chief.)

No officer above the rank of lieutenant in the Navy is entitled to pay as an aid to a rear admiral under the act of May 13, 1908, fixing the pay of aids. (Knox v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 22.)

Under Revised Statutes, section 1098, no officer above the rank of captain in the Army could legally become an aid to a major general. It follows (no statute or regulation having changed the qualifications of aids in the Navy) that no officer above the rank of lieutenant in the Navy can be entitled to pay as aid to a rear admiral. Congress, in fixing the pay of aids in the Navy by the act of May 13, 1908, must have had in mind the qualifications which at that time were prescribed for aids in the Army and which up to that time had been the qualifications for aids in the Navy. (Knox v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 22. See also, Tompkins v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 30; Helm v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 32.)

The provision of the Navy pay act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 198), considered in connection with provisions of the Navy Regulations relating to the rank of "aids," is unambiguous, and entitles a naval officer with the rank of lieutenant commander serving at sea as aid to a rear admiral of the senior nine to the additional compensation provided by the act of May 13, 1908. The Navy Regulations may designate the rank of "aids" when the statute has made appropriations for their pay. In this case the regulations then in force allowed an officer with the rank of lieutenant commander to be detailed as aid, and as he complied with the regulations he was entitled to the additional pay notwithstanding that at the time officers of corresponding rank in the Army were not qualified to act as aids to majors general. (Jones v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 16; affirmed, Holmes v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 70.)

Appointments as aids are, under the Navy Regulations, to be made by the Secretary of the Navy. A lieutenant in the Navy ordered by the Secretary to report to a rear admiral, commandant of a navy yard, to perform such duty as the commandant might assign him, and who was assigned by the commandant pursuant to this order of the Secretary to duty as his aid, is entitled to additional pay provided for aids to rear admirals, the order of the Secretary being sufficient authority to the commandant to make such assignment; but the appointment of an aid by the commander in chief of a fleet is void ab initio. The regulations require that in all cases aids must be nominated to the Secretary by the officer under whom they are to serve. He could not become entitled to the additional pay of aid merely by being called an aid by his commanding officer or by having the word "aid" affixed to his name in the Navy Register. (Knox v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 22, distinguishing Frucht v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 570.)

Where a lieutenant of the Navy serves as aid to the commandant of a navy yard under section 1469, Revised Statutes, and such commandant was a rear admiral, held, that the aid is entitled to the additional pay provided for by the act of May 13, 1908. In this case the Secretary of the Navy ordered the lieutenant to report to the commandant of the navy yard for such duty as the latter might assign, and the commandant, a rear admiral, detailed him to duty as his aid. (Frucht v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 570.)

If the commandant happens to be a rear admiral, the aid will be entitled to the additional pay provided by the act of May 13, 1908, and if the commandant happens to be an officer of inferior rank, the aid will not be entitled to such additional pay, the same incongruity appears in regard to aids for officers afloat; a rear admiral in command of a squadron is entitled to an aid who would receive the extra pay provided by the act of May 13, 1908, while a captain exercising the same command would not be so entitled. (Frucht v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 570.)

The commanding officer of a fleet has no power to appoint an aid for a rear admiral commanding a division; while the officer might have to obey an order of his superior officer, he is not thereby entitled to the additional pay provided for those legally detailed as aids. (Knox v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 22; Palmer v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 31.)

A lieutenant in the Navy is entitled to additional pay as aid to a rear admiral during a period that he served as such aid, notwithstanding that upon subsequent promotion to the grade of lieutenant commander he became entitled to the rank and pay of the latter grade retroactively, covering the same period for which he had received aid's pay; while he became constructively a lieutenant commander during that period, he was not such in fact. (Downes v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 237, 243, 327.)

The Secretary of the Navy's assignment of a captain of the Navy to duty with the rank and title of rear admiral, by authority of section 1434, Revised Statutes, does not make such officer a rear admiral within the meaning of the law providing additional pay for aids to rear admirals. (17 Comp. Dec., 54.)

A lieutenant in the Navy serving as flag secretary and aid to a rear admiral designated as commander in chief of a fleet, under the act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 941, 942), is not entitled to pay as an aid to an admiral. The designation of said rear admiral as commander in chief conferred upon him the rank of admiral, but did not invest him with the office of admiral. (21 Comp. Dec., 840.) However, an officer serving as aid to a rear admiral holding the rank of admiral as commander in chief of a fleet is entitled to the additional pay allowed by law for aids to rear admirals. (Comp. Dec., Oct. 13, 1915, 176 S. and A. Memo., 3810.)

An officer of the Navy serving as aid to the Admiral of the Navy is not entitled, under the assimilating provisions of section 13 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), to higher rank and pay as provided by section 1096, Revised Statutes, for aids to the General of the Army. That section had ceased to exist as the result of the nonexistence of the grade of General of the Army years before the re-creation of the office of Admiral in 1899. Furthermore, Congress in the Navy pay act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), in terms specifically provided for the pay of every officer in the Navy, including the Admiral and embracing extra compensation to aids to rear admirals, making no provisions whatever for compensation for services which might be rendered by an officer acting as aid to the Admiral. The incongruity, if any, which might result from providing for extra compensation for an aid to a rear admiral, and not for aids to the higher officer, the Admiral, would be but the consequence of legislative omission, and would not justify to exertion of judicial power for the purpose of re-creating a provision of law concerning aids to the General of the Army which has long since ceased to exist, in order to afford a subject upon which the assimilating provision of the Navy personnel act of 1899 might operate. (Wood v. U. S., 224 U. S., 132. See also Caldwell v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 604; Wood v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 611.)

An officer of the Navy detailed to duty as aid to the Chief of Naval Operations is not entitled, while so serving, to the additional pay provided in the act of May 13, 1908, for aids to rear admirals, although the Chief of Naval Operations holds the office of rear admiral in the Navy and has the rank but not the office of Admiral while so serving. This case differs from one in which an officer is expressly ordered to duty as aid to a rear admiral, in that here the officer's orders were to duty as aid to the Chief of Naval Operations and not as aid to a rear admiral. (24 Comp. Dec., 190.)

Under section 1262, Revised Statutes, and the act of June 30, 1882 (22 Stat., 118), an aid to a rear admiral is not entitled to have his longevity pay calculated upon the additional pay which he receives as aid, that being, under section 1261, Revised Statutes, an allowance in addition to and not a part of the pay of his rank. (U. S. v. Miller, 208 U. S., 32.)

A lieutenant in the Navy serving as aid to a rear admiral was entitled, under the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, to the additional $200 allowed to a lieutenant serving as aid to a major general, under section 1261, Revised Statutes, but not to the mounted pay allowed to the Army lieutenant serving as such aid under section 1301, Army Regulations. (U. S. v. Crosley, 196 U. S., 327.)

An officer of the Navy is entitled to the additional pay allowed an aid when said officer enters upon duty under proper designation as aid to a rear admiral, and is entitled to such pay while on authorized allowance of leave if, during such leave, his designation as aid remains unchanged. (17 Comp. Dec., 104.)

For other cases, see note to section 1469, Revised Statutes.

Aviation duty.—By act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 939), it was provided that "hereafter officers of the Navy and Marine Corps appointed student naval aviators, while lawfully detailed for duty involving actual flying in air craft, including balloons, dirigibles, and aeroplanes, shall receive the pay and allowances of their rank and service plus thirty-five per centum increase thereof; and those officers who have heretofore qualified, or may hereafter qualify, as naval aviators, under such rules and regulations as have been or may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, shall, while lawfully detailed for duty involving actual flying in air craft, receive the pay and allowances of their rank and service plus fifty per centum increase thereof * * *: Provided, That not more than a yearly average of forty-eight officers * * * of the Navy, and twelve officers * * * of the Marine Corps, detailed for duty involving actual flying in air craft, shall receive any increase in pay while on duty involving actual flying in air craft, nor shall any officer in the Navy senior in rank to commander, nor any officer in the Marine Corps senior in rank to major, receive any increase in pay or allowances by reason of such detail or duty."

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 582, 586), it was provided that "the officers detailed and the enlisted men of the Naval Flying Corps shall receive the same pay and allowances that are now provided by law for officers and enlisted men of the same grade or rank and rating in the Navy and Marine Corps detailed to duty with aircraft involving actual flying"; that "officers and enlisted men, while detailed as student aviators and student airmen involving actually flying in aircraft, shall receive the same pay and allowances that are now provided by law for officers and enlisted men of the same grade or rank and rating in the Navy detailed for duty with aircraft"; that student flyers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, during a period of four years following said act, for instruction and training in aeronautics "shall receive the same pay and allowances as midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy"; and that "student flyers shall, after receiving a certificate of qualification as an aviator for actual flying in aircraft, rank with midshipmen and shall receive the same pay and allowances as midshipmen, plus fifty per centum thereof."

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718), it was provided that thereafter the "allowances" of "officers, enlisted men, and student flyers of the naval service shall in no case be increased by reason of the performance of aviation duty."

Flights performed by an officer of the Navy prior to receipt of orders to duty involving actual flying in aircraft do not constitute duty performed under a lawful detail, and therefore do not entitle the officer to the increased pay and allowances authorized by the act of March 3, 1915. (26 Comp. Dec., 93.)

An officer designated as naval aviator on the date that he qualified as such is entitled to the increased pay authorized by the act of March 3, 1915, from the date of such designation, and not merely from the date that the designation was received by him. (Comp. Dec., Jan. 30, 1917, 191 S. and A. Memo., 4149.)

If in point of fact an officer was engaged under proper orders in actual flying at the time an order was issued by the Secretary of the Navy detailing him to duty involving actual flying in heavier-than-air craft, and prior to receipt by him of said detail, he is entitled to the additional pay provided for such duty from the date the detail was issued. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 14, 1913, 146 S. and A. Memo., 2483.)

Officers and enlisted men of the Navy who are properly detailed, under the act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 928, 939), for duty involving actual flying in aircraft, are entitled to the additional pay provided in that act while on authorized leave of absence within the period of such detail. (22 Comp. Dec., 292; see also, 23 Comp. Dec., 589; 24 Comp. Dec., 232.)

An officer of the Army detailed for duty requiring him to make regular and frequent aerial flights is entitled to the increased pay authorized for such duty during the period he is disabled by reason of injuries received in the line of duty as aviator. (25 Comp. Dec., 50.)

The detachment from duty involving actual flying of a student naval aviator because of injuries received in line of duty implies a cessation of such duty for an indefinite period and terminates the right to the additional pay provided therefor while the officer is undergoing treatment. (25 Comp. Dec., 872.)

An officer of the Navy detailed to duty involving actual flying in aircraft is not entitled to the additional pay provided for that duty during a period in which such duty was not performed by him, notwithstanding that he was prevented from performing such duty during said period because of his being interned in a neutral country or held prisoner by the enemy. (25 Comp. Dec., 169; but see decision of Court of Claims, noted below.)

An officer of the Navy detailed as a student aviator is not entitled to the additional pay provided for aviation duty during a period that he was not performing duty involving actual flying, notwithstanding that he was prevented from performing such duty during said period because of conditions directly resulting from a hurricane and over which he had no control. (Comp. Dec., Aug. 8, 1917, 198 S. and A. Memo., 4334; but see decision of Court of Claims, noted below.)

In any case where an officer or enlisted man detailed to duty involving actual flying in aircraft is not engaged in actual flying for an unreasonable period after his order of detail, payment of the additional pay provided in the act of March 3, 1915, is not authorized. As to what would be considered by the Comptroller of the Treasury as such an "unreasonable time" would depend upon the facts in each particular case. (23 Comp. Dec., 589; but see decision of Court of Claims, noted below.)

An officer detailed by the Secretary of the Navy to duty involving actual flying in aircraft, as shown by said detail, is not entitled to the additional pay provided by law for officers so detailed, unless in the opinion of the Comptroller of the Treasury "the duty which the order was for in fact included actual flying." The Comptroller of the Treasury holds that it is the duty of his office to determine in any case whether or not the duty to which an officer of the Navy is detailed by the Secretary of the Navy involves actual flying in aircraft, and that the question of jurisdiction raised by the Secretary of the Navy is one which can be decided only by the comptroller. The Comptroller of the Treasury regards loss of life in the performance of duty for which the additional pay is given as evidence which would certainly pass through his office the accounts of an officer for additional pay for any period within reason prior to his death. (24 Comp. Dec., 11; but see decision of Court of Claims, noted below.)

Under the act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 939, 940), an enlisted man of the Navy is entitled to the additional pay allowed by law "while detailed for duty involving actual flying in aircraft." The pay is not made dependent upon the number of flights while on such duty, but is made dependent on the detail to such duty. Congress did not fix the pay on the number of times an enlisted man actually flew, nor on the number of days he was engaged in actual flying. When, therefore, he was lawfully detailed to duty involving actual flying in aircraft he must be regarded and treated as entitled to the consequences of such detail and to the pay provided for such duty. (Luskey v. U. S., Ct. Cls. No. 34241, decided Nov. 7, 1921, overruling contrary decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury, noted above.)

An officer of the Navy ordered to perform duty as student naval aviator in addition to his regular sea duty is entitled, if he performs actual flights under said detail, to the 35 per cent increase in shore pay only from the time he reported for such duty until he left the station to return to his ship, such increase not to be computed on his increase for sea duty nor on his allowances. Where the orders do not expressly impose the continued discharge of sea duty, but state that the flying duty is not to interfere with duties already assigned, the presumption is that the shore duty is temporary and additional to the regular duty, and therefore the officer is entitled to sea duty pay while performing said temporary duty. (26 Comp. Dec., 93.)

the continental limits of the United States shall while so serving receive ten per centum additional of their salaries and increase as above provided, and such increase shall commence from the date of reporting for duty on board ship or the date of sailing from the United States for shore duty beyond the seas or to join a ship in foreign waters." (Act May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 128. The words "as above provided" refer to the rates of pay for the various ranks as prescribed by the act of May 13, 1908, and which are set forth above in the notes under this section.)

The additional pay provided by the act of May 13, 1908, for shore duty beyond seas, applies to commissioned officers only; midshipmen and warrant officers are not entitled to such increase. (14 Comp. Dec., 882; see also Olliff v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 349; compare Prindle v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 8.) As to additional pay allowed warrant officers for foreign shore duty, see act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 140), noted above under "Warrant officers, acting warrant officers, and commissioned warrant officers."

The act of March 2, 1901 (31 Stat., 903), relating to the Army, provided that "hereafter the pay proper of all officers and enlisted men serving beyond the limits comprising the Union and Territories of the United States contiguous thereto shall be increased ten per centum for officers and twenty per centum for enlisted men over and above the rates of pay proper as fixed by law for time of peace, and the time of such service shall be counted from the date of departure from said States to the date of return thereto." (See also act of June 30, 1902, 32 Stat., 512, to same effect.) The act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1108), relating to the naval service, provided that "officers of the Navy and officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps who have been detailed or may hereafter be detailed for shore duty in Alaska, the Philippine Islands, Guam, or elsewhere beyond the continental limits of the United States shall be considered as having been detailed for 'shore duty beyond seas' and shall receive pay accordingly, with such additional pay as may be provided by law for service in island possessions of the United States." The act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), provided that "when naval officers are detailed for shore duty beyond seas they shall receive the same pay and allowances as are or may be provided by or in pursuance of law for officers of the Army for duty in similar places." Under these laws it was held, in McCully v. U. S. (42 Ct. Cls., 275), that an officer of the Navy detached from shore duty beyond seas and ordered home continues to be entitled to his ten per cent increase until his return to the United States. The act of May 13, 1908, does not change the law as it previously existed so as to deprive naval officers of the right to increased pay while returning home upon orders from foreign stations. Said act expressly provides that "nothing herein shall be so construed as to reduce the pay or allowances now authorized by law for any commissioned, warrant, or appointed officers, or any enlisted man of the active or retired lists of the Navy, and all laws inconsistent with this provision are hereby repealed." Taking into consideration the clause last quoted, and the legislative proceedings, which show that it was the intention of Congress in the act of May 13, 1908, to place officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps exactly on the same basis as to pay, and not to make an unjust discrimination between such officers, held, that officers of the Navy are still entitled to the benefit of the act of March 2, 1901, so far as relates to the length of time during which they are entitled to the increased 10 per cent of pay for shore duty beyond seas. (Gearing v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 187.)

The decision of the Court of Claims in the Gearing case related to an officer who entered the Navy prior to the passage of the act of May 13, 1908, and is not, therefore, decisive of the question presented in the case of an officer who entered the service after that date. Nevertheless, held, that officers of the Navy appointed after said act, and who are detailed for shore duty beyond seas, are entitled to retain the 10 per cent additional pay until their arrival in the United States. There is nothing in the act of May 13, 1908, which requires that said additional pay shall cease upon their detachment from foreign duty, and the reasonable inference from the language used is that Congress intended, when it said that this increased pay should commence from the date of sailing from the United States, that the point of departure from the United States, indicated as the beginning point for the increased pay, should be the terminating point for increased pay upon return. (Comp. Dec., Jan. 24, 1914, 155 S. and A. Memo., 2962.)

Prior to the act of March 2, 1901 (31 Stat., 903), Army officers were not allowed the extra pay provided for foreign service from the date of departure from the United States to the date of return thereto; and the same was true as to naval officers receiving Army pay under the act of March 3, 1899. (McGowan v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 454, citing 6 Comp. Dec., 947, and 7 Comp. Dec., 670.)

Where an officer of the Navy was detailed to sea duty which necessitated a journey by sea on a merchant vessel to reach the place appointed for such duty, he is not an officer "detailed to shore duty beyond seas" within the meaning of section 13 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007). Although his duty during such voyage on a merchant vessel was not sea duty and did not entitle him to sea pay, neither was it shore duty beyond seas, first, because he was not ordered to perform the latter duty, and second, because he never actually performed any such duty regardless of his detail. The statutes made it ordinary shore duty. (McGowan v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 454.)

The claim of an officer detached from sea duty abroad for additional pay for performance of shore duty beyond seas while in Manila waiting for the Army transport in which he was to take passage back to the United States, and his claim for sea-duty pay while aboard said vessel en route to the United States, is governed by the decision in Farenholt v. U. S. (42 Ct. Cls., 114, noted below). (McDonald v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 123; see also note to sec. 1571, R. S.)

The act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), provides that all officers on sea duty and all officers on shore duty beyond the continental limits of the United States shall receive 10 per cent additional pay from the date of reporting for duty on board ship or of sailing from the United States; but it also provides that nothing shall be construed so as to reduce the pay or allowances then authorized by law for officers and enlisted men. The first provision of the said act was intended to assimilate the pay of all officers of the Army and Navy performing similar duty in similar circumstances, but the second provision saves to all officers any legislative discrimination theretofore existing and preserves intact the pay and allowances existing at the time of the passage of the act of 1908. (McDonald v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 123.)

The act of March 2, 1901 (31 Stat., 903), followed by the act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1108), provided in terms for extra pay for shore duty beyond the limits of the United States and expressly applied to the accounting thereof "from the date of departure from said States to the date of return thereto." In McCully v. United States (42 Ct. Cls., 275) these statutes were applied to naval officers on shore duty beyond seas, under the assimilating clause of the act of March 3, 1899, section 13 (30 Stat., 1007). It follows that the act of May 13, 1908, saves to officers of the Navy for shore duty beyond seas the pay fixed by the foregoing enactments. In Gearing v. United States (46 Ct. Cls., 187) it was held that the act of May 13, 1908, did not repeal the statutes upon which the McCully case was based. (McDonald v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 123.)

Officers of the Navy are entitled to the 10 per cent increase authorized for shore duty beyond the continental limits of the United States while on duty at the naval station Hawaii, and while returning to the United States from such duty. The Army act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat., 576), providing that "hereafter the laws allowing increase of pay to officers and enlisted men for foreign service shall not apply to service in the Canal Zone, Panama, Hawaii, or Porto Rico," does not apply to officers of the Navy who derive their right to additional pay for shore duty beyond seas from the act of May 13, 1908. (22 Comp. Dec., 35.)

Shore duty beyond seas is exceptional duty, both as to officers of the Army and Navy, and a naval officer must be "detailed for shore duty beyond seas" before he can "receive the same pay and allowances as are or may be provided by or in pursuance of law for officers of the Army detailed for duty in similar places," as prescribed by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 13. (Ackley v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cls., 216.)

An officer of the Navy assigned by proper authority to sea duty on a vessel at Guam can not be considered as "detailed for shore duty beyond seas" within the intent of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 13 (30 Stat., 1007), and the act of March 3, 1901 (31

Stat., 1108), because the governor of Guam, by a verbal order, directed him to do duty on shore. (Furlong v. U. S., 45 Ct. Cls., 493.)

Duty performed on shore by a naval officer without having been detailed for shore duty must be regarded as temporary service performed while he officially remains on board the vessel to which he is attached. The service of a naval officer on shore duty beyond seas is exceptional service; to entitle him to the extra pay therefor he must show that he was detailed for such service. (Furlong v. U. S., 45 Ct. Cls., 493.)

The naval personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 13, allowing certain officers of the Navy the same pay and allowances as officers of corresponding rank in the Army, did not entitle officers of the Navy, for services on naval vessels in Philippine and Chinese waters, or beyond the limits of the States comprising the Union, to the 10 per cent additional pay given to Army officers under the acts of May 26, 1900 (31 Stat., 211), and March 2, 1901 (31 Stat., 903). While the intention of Congress in the personnel act was to put officers of corresponding rank in the Army and Navy on the same general footing with respect to their general pay and to make the act prospective in its application to any future legislation by which the general pay of Army officers might be increased. Congress may increase the pay of Army officers for services in particular places and under special circumstances without thereby intending such increase to apply to naval officers. (U. S. v. Thomas, 195 U. S., 418.)

A naval officer performing sea service in foreign waters was not entitled by the Navy personnel act to the increased 10 per cent of pay given Army officers for like duty. Only shore duty beyond seas entitled Navy officers to such increased pay. (U. S. v. Thomas, 195 U. S., 418, reversing Thomas v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 719; see also Thomas v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 113.)

Under the Navy personnel act, section 13 (30 Stat., 1007), and the act of May 26, 1900 (31 Stat., 211), and the act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1108), an officer of the Navy on shore duty in the Philippine Islands was entitled to the increased pay allowed for shore duty "beyond seas." The Philippine Islands is "beyond seas" within the meaning of these statutes. (Irwin v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 87.)

The words "pay proper" in the act of May 26, 1900 (31 Stat., 211), includes longevity pay, and the increased pay allowed for shore duty in the Philippine Islands should be computed accordingly. (Irwin v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 87; McCully v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 275.)

The term "beyond seas" generally means out of the Kingdom of England; out of the United States; out of a State. The term must receive the legal interpretation usually given to it in this country and in England, unless there is an indication to the contrary. When the act of May 26, 1900 (31 Stat., 211), was passed the Philippine Islands were unequivocally "beyond seas" within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007).

as the treaty under which it became a possession of the United States had not then been ratified. (Irwin v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 87.)

Service in Alaska is "shore duty beyond the continental limits of the United States," and an officer performing service there is entitled to the increased pay provided for such service under the act of May 13, 1908 (37 Stat., 128), and the act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1108). (Downey v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 273.)

Where an assistant surgeon in the Navy performed shore duty beyond seas, at a naval hospital in the Philippine Islands, pursuant to an order detailing him for such duty, he was entitled to 10 per cent additional compensation calculated on the basis of his maximum pay. The Philippine Islands constitute a "foreign station" for the purpose of extra pay under the act of May 26, 1900 (31 Stat., 211), which was in force when he performed such duty. (Thompson v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 459.)

The duty status of an officer serving beyond seas remains the same for all purposes until his return home. His detachment from service beyond seas does not take effect until his return; and his duty status continues during delay in returning, if such delay was allowed as leave of absence and he was entitled to such leave by law. The permission given to the officer in this case, to delay two months in returning to the United States, in effect and as a matter of fact gave him a leave of absence for sixty days. (Izard v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 367. Under prior laws it had been held that officers were entitled to the increased pay only while performing shore duty beyond seas, and not while in transitu or sick in hospital abroad. See Farenholt v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 114; Thompson v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 459.)

A naval officer ordered to a hospital for treatment while waiting the arrival of a vessel to which he was to be attached will not be entitled while in hospital to shore duty pay "beyond seas," under the Navy personnel act, section 13. (Ackley v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cls., 216.)

An officer of the Navy while on shore duty beyond seas is entitled when on leave of absence taken abroad to the increased pay provided for such duty by the act of May 13, 1908. (19 Comp. Dec., 608.)

A naval officer granted leave of absence from shore duty beyond seas is entitled to the additional pay provided for such duty while en route to the United States and during the period of his return therefrom to his post of duty, but is not entitled to such pay while in the United States. (21 Comp. Dec., 604.)

The Comptroller of the Treasury has repeatedly held that an officer is not entitled to additional pay for service beyond seas while in the United States, whether on temporary duty or on leave. (Comp. Dec., Jan. 17, 1916, 179 S. and A. Memo., 3870.)

When a naval officer on sea duty is ordered to certain duty on shore beyond seas, which duty is described in his orders as being additional but which, in fact, requires his attention to the exclusion of all other duty, he is to be regarded, for purposes of pay and allowances, as being on shore duty beyond seas during the period of such duty. (21 Comp. Dec., 604); but his sea-duty status continues, and he does not become an officer serving on shore duty beyond seas unless he can establish as a matter of fact that the duties performed by him on shore were paramount to his assignment to sea service. (Leach v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 132; see also Furlong v. U. S., 45 Ct. Cls., 493.)

An officer of the Navy detached from a ship in foreign waters and ordered to duty at a foreign station is not entitled to traveling expenses while awaiting transportation to his station nor to the 10 per cent additional for sea duty while en route to his station on board a Government vessel. (Comp. Dec., June 30, 1916, 184, S. and A. Memo., 4007.)

The law makes no provision for 10 per cent increase of naval officers' pay while traveling from shore duty beyond seas to join a vessel in foreign waters, or vice versa. (Comp. Dec., June 24, 1913, 148 S. and A. Memo., 2662.)

An officer of the Navy who is ordered from foreign shore duty to duty on board a vessel in a United States port is entitled to the 10 per cent additional pay for shore duty beyond seas to the date of his return to the United States. (Comp. Dec., Nov. 20, 1916, 189 S. and A. Memo., 4094.)

Acting as pay officer.—See sections 1381 and 1564, Revised Statutes.

39. Longevity pay.—"There shall be allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of rear admiral ten per centum of his current yearly pay for each term of five years service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. The total amount of such increase for length of service shall in no case exceed forty per centum of the yearly pay of the grade as provided by law: Provided, That the annual pay of captain shall not exceed five thousand dollars per annum; of commander, four thousand five hundred dollars per annum, and of lieutenant commander, four thousand dollars per annum." (Act May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 128. As to temporary increases in pay of the grades specified, see notes above, under this section.)

As to longevity increases in pay of commissioned warrant officers, warrant officers, mates, Dental Corps, and Naval Reserve Force, see notes above with reference to those specific classes.

"For the purposes of computing longevity pay, and retirement privileges of officers and enlisted men of the Navy, all creditable service in the Coast Guard and former Revenue-Cutter Service shall be counted." (Act June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 835.)

"Hereafter longevity pay for officers in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Public Health Service, and Coast and Geodetic Survey shall be based on the total of all service in any or all of said services." (Act May 18, 1920, sec. 11, 41 Stat., 604.)

"All officers of the Navy shall be credited with the actual time they may have served as officers or enlisted men in the Regular or Volunteer Army or Navy, or both, and shall receive all the benefits of such actual service in all respects in the same manner as if all said service had been continuous and in the Regular Navy in the lowest grade having graduated pay held by such officer since last entering the service." (Act Mar. 3, 1883, 22 Stat., 473.)

"All officers who have been or may be appointed to any corps of the Navy or to the Marine Corps after service in a different corps of the Navy or of the Marine Corps shall have all the benefits of their previous service in the same manner as if said appointments were a reentry into the Navy or into the Marine Corps." (Act June 10, 1896, 29 Stat., 361.)

"Officers who have been, or may be, transferred from the volunteer service to the Regular Navy shall be credited with the sea service performed by them as volunteer officers, and shall receive all the benefits of such duty in the same manner as if they had been, during such service, in the Regular Navy." (Sec. 1412, R. S.)

By act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), it was provided that "all officers, including warrant officers, who have been or may be appointed to the Navy from civil life shall, on the date of appointment, be credited for computing their pay, with five years' service." By act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 891), it was provided that this provision "shall not apply to any person entering the Navy from and after the passage of this act."

"Hereafter the service of a midshipman at the United States Naval Academy, or that of a cadet at the United States Military Academy, who may hereafter be appointed to the United States Naval Academy, or to the United States Military Academy, shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer in the Navy or in the Marine Corps." (Act Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 891.)

The act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 473), entitles an officer to be credited with actual service only, and does not include constructive service credited to an officer under a special act of Congress. (Laws v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cls., 69.)

Longevity pay is to be computed, except where the statutes otherwise provide, from the date the officer's commission was signed by the President, and not from an antecedent date mentioned in the body of the commission. Under section 1556, Revised Statutes, the right of naval officers to the longevity pay provided therein depends upon the words "date of commission" as used in that section; and the legal construction to be given to those words is the date when the instrument was executed; the President for other purposes may insert an antecedent date in the body of a commission; but antecedent date can affect an officer's pay only in the cases authorized by statute. (Young v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 145.)

The words "current yearly pay," as employed in Revised Statutes, section 1262, were construed in United States v. Tyler (105 U. S., 244) to require that the calculation of longevity pay should be made, not upon the sum of the base pay but on the base pay and previous longevity increases thereof. Subsequently, by the act of June 30, 1882 (22 Stat., 118), Congress expressly directed that the longevity increases provided in section 1262 should be computed "on the yearly pay of the grade." This act was passed for the purpose of commanding a method of computation which would render inapplicable the construction adopted in the Tyler case (citing U. S. v. Miller, 208 U. S., 32, 38). Thereafter the longevity pay of Army officers was computed by the method directed in the act of 1882. In view of the purpose of Congress to equalize, as far as possible, the pay of Army and Navy officers, manifested by the adoption of the Navy personnel act of 1899 and in all subsequent legislation as to such pay, held, that the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127, 128), providing longevity increases for Navy officers based upon their "current yearly pay," was intended to provide that the longevity increase therein prescribed should be computed according to the method then prevailing; that is, upon the "yearly pay of the grade," and not upon the "current yearly pay" as construed in the Tyler case. (Plummer v. U. S., 224 U. S., 137.)

The words "officers or enlisted men in the Regular or Volunteer Army or Navy, or both," as used in the law relating to longevity of officers of the Navy (see act of Mar. 3, 1883, above quoted), were intended to include all men regularly in the service in the Army or Navy; the expression "officers or enlisted men" is not to be construed distributively, as requiring that a person should be an enlisted man, or an officer nominated and appointed by the President, or by the head of a department, but was meant to include all men in service, either by enlistment or regular appointment in the Army or Navy; the word "officer" is used in the statute in a more general sense. (U. S. v. Hendee, 124 U. S., 309, 313, followed in U. S. v. Cook, 128 U. S., 254, 257.)

An officer of the Navy is entitled under the act of March 3, 1883, to credit for service rendered by him as a paymaster's clerk in computing his longevity pay, although such paymaster's clerk, under the law as it then existed, was neither an enlisted man nor an "officer" in the constitutional sense. (U. S. v. Hendee, 124 U. S., 309, distinguishing U. S. v. Mouat, 124 U. S., 303.)

Service as a midshipman at the Naval Academy was service as an officer of the Navy, and should be credited to an officer of the Navy in computing his longevity pay under the act of March 3, 1883. (U. S. v. Baker, 125 U. S., 646; see also U. S. v. Cook, 128 U. S., 254; U. S. v. Morton, 112 U. S., 1; U. S. v. Watson, 130 U. S., 80; but see act Mar. 4, 1913, quoted above, with reference to midshipman service.)

An officer who was not in the Navy on the date of the act (Mar. 4, 1913) abolishing, under certain conditions, credit for constructive service, but who was appointed to the Navy after that date, is entitled to credit for prior service, both actual and constructive, based upon a former appointment to the Navy. The said act did not deprive officers then in the Navy, or thereafter reappointed, of credit for such service previously earned. (22 Comp. Dec., 542; see also, 24 Comp. Dec., 168, 24 Comp. Dec., 629, and 204 S. and A. Memo., 4505.)

Service by an officer of the Navy as an enlisted man in the Marine Corps is to be credited to him in calculating his longevity pay under the act of March 3, 1883. (U. S. v. Dunn, 120 U. S., 249.)

The word "service" in section 1262, Revised Statutes, providing increased pay for officers of the Army "for each term of five years of service," evidently means "military service." (U. S. v. La Tourrette, 151 U. S., 572.)

An aid to a rear admiral is not entitled to have his longevity pay calculated upon the additional pay which he receives as aid, that being an allowance in addition to and not a part of the pay of his rank. (U. S. v. Miller, 208 U. S., 32.)

A retired officer of the Navy is not entitled, in computing his longevity pay, to credit for service rendered after his retirement. (Roget v. U. S., 148 U. S., 167; see also, Thornley v. U. S., 113 U. S., 310; Faust v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 94; 15 Comp. Dec., 767; compare, U. S. v. Tyler, 105 U. S., 244; 5 Comp. Dec., 809; and see notes to secs. 1588 and 1592, R. S., as to longevity increases of retired officers under later laws.)

An officer of the Regular Navy who was credited, under the act of March 3, 1883, with prior service rendered by him in the Volunteer Navy is not entitled to receive the pay of higher grades in the Navy from the dates that he might have been promoted to such grades had he entered the Regular Navy when he entered the Volunteer Navy, and had he been promoted from time to time under the rule of promotion provided by law for the Regular Navy; the court can not concur in the contention of such officer that under the act of 1883, officers in his situation, while denied rank and commissions under the statute, have the right to the pay of the several grades they might have reached if their appointments in the Regular Navy are treated as having been made at the date of their entry into the volunteer service. (Barton v. U. S., 129 U. S., 249.)

As to the method of computing longevity increases under the act of March 3, 1883, in the cases of officers receiving graduated pay under section 1556, Revised Statutes, see United States v. Mullan (123 U. S., 186), United States v. Green (138 U. S., 293), United States v. Alger (151 U. S., 362), United States v. Alger and United States v. Stahl (152 U. S., 384), United States v. Rockwell (120 U. S., 69), White v. United States (191 U. S., 545), United States v. Foster (128 U. S., 435).

For other cases, as to what time counts as service in the Navy, see note to section 1443, Revised Statutes, and see Byrnes v. United States (26 Ct. Cls., 302), and Davis v. United States (28 Ct. Cls., 21).

The act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 473), is not limited to officers who had entered the Navy more than once, but applies also to officers who have served continuously; when such an officer enters the service only once, his first entry is also his last entry within the meaning of the statute. (Mullan v. U. S., 123 U. S., 186.)

Where an officer resigns one office the day before his appointment to a higher one, in substance and in law his actual service was for a continuous period and not for two different periods. (U. S. v. Alger, 151 U. S., 362; U. S. v. Stahl, 151 U. S., 366; U. S. v. Alger, 152 U. S., 384.)

Where at the time of resigning from the Navy it is the intention and purpose of an officer to reenter the service, and as soon as he can do so thereafter he does reenter the service, such last appointment is not "from civil life" as contemplated by section 13 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899. (Barber v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 250. See also U. S. v. U. S. Fidelity and Guaranty Co., 244 Fed. Rep., 310.)

The reinstatement of an officer, pursuant to a special act of Congress, is not an appointment from civil life entitling him to credit for constructive service under the act of March 3, 1899, section 13. (Stirling v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 386.)

The credit of five years' constructive service under the act of March 3, 1899, section 13, is in addition to actual service rendered under a previous appointment. (Guilmette v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 188; 52 Ct. Cls., 219.)

Where the resignation of an officer of the Navy is in good faith, and he is thereafter appointed to serve in the Navy, such latter appointment is from civil life and he is entitled to credit for five years' constructive service. (Guilmette v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 188, 52 Ct. Cls., 219.)

Where an officer was rated as an appointee from civil life and for a number of years paid accordingly, he is entitled to retain the pay so allowed until the date his rating was corrected, although under the correct interpretation of the law he was not appointed from civil life. (U. S. v. U. S. Fidelity and Guaranty Co., 244 Fed. Rep., 310.)

40. Absence from duty. See notes above, under "Mates"; "Warrant officers, acting warrant officers, and commissioned warrant officers"; "Dental Corps and Nurse Corps (Female)"; "Naval Reserve Force (pay for active duty)"; "Additional pay for special duty (Aids to rear admirals, Aviation duty, and Shore duty beyond seas)."

Leave and waiting orders.—In Hunt v. United States (38 Ct. Cls., 704) the Court of Claims said: "Neither the Secretary of War nor any officer of the Government can force a leave of absence or furlough upon an officer or soldier." But as to furlough, see section 1442, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

"A leave of absence is not forced upon an officer, but is granted to him for his sole accommodation." (16 Comp. Dec., 617; see also note to sec. 1442, R. S.)

Prior to July 1, 1899, when the thirteenth section of the Navy personnel act took effect, the duty pay and leave pay of all commissioned officers on the active list of the Navy were fixed by section 1556, Revised Statutes. That section fixed the pay of each officer of different grades, whether on duty or leave, or on waiting orders, including the Construction Corps, professors of mathematics, and civil engineers. Section 13 of the personnel act assimilating the pay of commissioned officers of the Navy with that of Army officers of corresponding rank, was confined to "commissioned officers of the line of the Navy and of the Medical and Pay Corps." This left the Construction Corps, professors of mathematics, and civil engineers where they were before. The leave pay and waiting-orders pay of officers of the Army to which the pay of certain naval officers was thus assimilated is regulated by section 1265, Revised Statutes, which provides: "Officers when absent on account of sickness or wounds, or lawfully absent from duty and waiting orders, shall receive full pay; when absent with leave, for other causes, full pay during such absence not exceeding in the aggregate thirty days in one year, and half pay during such absence exceeding thirty days in one year. When absent without leave, they shall forfeit all pay during such absence, unless the absence is excused as unavoidable." This section was amended by the act of July 29, 1876 (19 Stat., 102), so as to provide that "all officers on duty shall be allowed, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, sixty days leave of absence without deduction of pay or allowances: Provided, That the same be taken once in two years: And provided further, That the leave of absence may be extended to three months, if taken only once in three years, or four months if taken only once in four years." The act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), provided that "hereafter all commissioned officers of the active list of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances according to rank and length of service * * *." One of the purposes of this act was to correct the discrimination in respect of leave pay between commissioned officers of the Navy whose pay was assimilated with that of the Army by section 13 of the personnel act and officers of the Construction Corps, professors of mathematics, and civil engineers, who continued to receive pay at the rates provided by section 1556, Revised Statutes. By said act of May 13, 1908, all commissioned officers of the Navy were placed upon the same footing as to pay and allowances, "according to rank and length of service," whether on active duty or not, and officers of the Construction Corps, professors of mathematics, and civil engineers accordingly are entitled to the same benefits of the law relating to the pay of Army officers when on leave of absence or on waiting orders that are conferred upon officers of the line of the Navy and of the Medical and Pay Corps (now Supply Corps). (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 261; followed, Comp. Dec., Apr. 16, 1909, 98 S. and A. Memo., 1036.)

"The leave year is reckoned from July 1 to the following June 30, both inclusive." (Army Regs., 1913, par. 1276.)

A retired naval officer assigned to active duty is not entitled to cumulative leave of absence that had accrued prior to his retirement, notwithstanding the fact that his assignment to active duty occurred immediately after his retirement. (23 Comp. Dec., 307.)

The leave of absence of an officer of the Navy who was ordered to his home and granted a leave of absence began when he was relieved from duty on board his vessel, and he is not entitled to duty pay while traveling to his home, as said travel was performed for his own benefit and not on public business. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 13, 1910, 110 S. and A. Memo., 1375.)

An officer of the Navy ordered to proceed to his home and granted a leave of absence, and at the expiration of such leave to return to his station, is traveling for his own pleasure and benefit and not on public business, and is not entitled to mileage. (16 Comp. Dec., 611; see also Comp. Dec., June 23, 1910, 112 S. and A. Memo., 1504.)

Section 1265, Revised Statutes, provides that officers shall be entitled to 30 days' leave of absence in one year; and the act of July 29, 1876 (19 Stat., 102), provides that leave of absence may be extended in the discretion of the Secretary of War "to four months if taken only once in four years." An officer of the Navy detached from duty beyond seas and ordered to return home, and who is afterwards authorized to delay two months en route to the United States, is in effect and as a matter of fact given a leave of absence of 60 days, and he is entitled during such leave to continue in receipt of pay allowed him for shore duty beyond seas, provided such leave of absence was not in excess of that to which he was entitled by law. (Izard v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 367.)

An officer ordered away from his station to appear before an examining board preliminary to promotion, and who after completing his examination is, upon his own request, authorized to delay his return to his station, is during such delay in the status of leave of absence granted upon his own request, being in fact relieved from duty and from responsibility during such period, notwithstanding the provisions of the Navy Regulations that "a temporary leave of absence does not detach an officer from duty nor affect his rate of pay." (Roberts v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 411.)

A commissioned officer of the Navy is not entitled to the 10 per cent additional for sea duty while on leave of absence, even though the leave be of only one day's duration. (Comp. Dec., June 8, 1915, 172 S. and A. Memo., 3703.)

The act of May 13, 1908, did not repeal prior statutes regulating the pay of naval officers of the Line and Pay Corps [now Supply Corps] while on leave of absence, and such officers while temporarily absent from their ship on leave properly granted to them for periods not in excess of that authorized with full pay by section 1265 of the Revised Statutes and the act of July 29, 1876, are entitled to the present pay of their grades, increased by their length of service pay, in accordance with the act of May 13, 1908; otherwise, to half of such amount for leave so granted in excess of that authorized by such statutes with full pay; but such officers are not entitled to receive while on leave of absence from sea duty the 10 per cent increase in pay which they were receiving "while so serving," notwithstanding the provision in the act of July 29, 1876, that the authorized leave of absence shall be "without deduction of pay or allowances." (15 Comp. Dec., 656.)

A warrant officer of the Navy granted leave of absence from duty at sea is entitled under the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), to full pay at the rate received by him while on sea duty. (23 Comp. Dec., 200. Note: The act of August 29, 1916, provides that "warrant officers shall be allowed such leave of absence, with full pay, as is now or may hereafter be allowed other officers of the United States Navy.")

with full pay. (Comp. Dec., June 25, 1913, 148 S. and A. Memo., 2670.)

An officer of the Army granted, and accepting, leave without pay is not estopped from demanding the half pay allowed by statute, even though he did not protest at the affixing of such a condition to the order granting the leave. Public policy prohibits any attempt by unauthorized agreement with an officer of the United States, under the guise of a condition or otherwise, to deprive him of the right to pay given by statute. (U. S. v. Andrews, 240 U. S., 90, approving Glavey v. U. S., 182 U. S., 595.)

An officer of the Army who is ordered, even on his own request, to proceed to a particular place, including his home, and "there await orders," reporting thence by letter to the Adjutant General of the Army and to the headquarters of the department to which he then belongs, is not an officer "absent from duty with leave" within the meaning of an act of Congress which enacted that "any officer absent from duty with leave, except from sickness or wounds, shall during his absence receive half of the pay and allowances prescribed by law, and no more." Such an officer is waiting orders in pursuance of law, but not absent from duty on leave. (U. S. v. Williamson, 23 Wall., 411.)

The distinction between the case of an officer "absent from duty with leave," and that of an officer ordered to proceed to a particular place and there "to await orders, reporting thence by letter to the Adjutant General of the Army and to these headquarters," is too plain to require much comment. While absent from duty "with leave," the officer is at liberty to go where he will during the permitted absence, to employ his time as he pleases, and to surrender his leave if he chooses. If he reports himself at the expiration of his leave, it is all that can be asked of him. The obligations of an officer directed to proceed to a place specified, there to await orders, are quite different. It is his duty to go to that place and to remain at that place. He can not go elsewhere; he can not return until ordered. He is as much under orders, and can no more question the duty of obedience than if ordered to an ambush to lie in wait for the enemy, to march to the front by a particular direction, or to the rear by a specified time. That the assignment was made at the request of the officer can make no difference. The pay is regulated by the position, and not by the manner or influence by which the position is acquired. (U. S. v. Williamson, 23 Wall., 411, 415.)

An officer of the Army ordered from a military post at which he is doing duty to his home, to await orders, even at his own request, is entitled to mileage for travel by him in pursuance of his orders. The status of the officer while awaiting orders is different from that of an officer absent from duty with leave. The officer in this case was not absent on leave but was awaiting orders at his home. It results that in thus proceeding to his home he was traveling under orders. The fact that he changed his residence while awaiting orders is unimportant. Whether he resided in New York or New Jersey could make no difference in his position in the Army or his liability or readiness to respond to any orders given to him. It was, indeed, important that he should keep the department advised of his residence, that he could be called upon when it was desired. This he did. (U. S. v. Phisterer, 94 U. S., 219, approving U. S. v. Williamson, 23 Wall., 411.)

The theory of leave or waiting orders pay is that an officer while at home on leave or waiting orders is at less expense than when at sea or on shore duty. (Selridge v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 40.)

Where a naval constructor, entitled to pay under section 1556, Revised Statutes, became sick while on duty and was placed in a naval hospital, and upon his discharge from the hospital, upon the recommendation of a board of medical survey, was granted sick leave for two months, held, that during the time he is absent from his station on such sick leave doing no duty whatever, although not formally detached from duty by express order, he was in fact detached and was entitled to leave pay only. (Williams v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 56.)

Awaiting trial.—While under arrest and suspended from duty awaiting trial by court-martial, an officer is in the status of "waiting orders" and is entitled to pay and allowances; forfeiture of pay and allowances can only be imposed by the sentence of a lawful court-martial. (Walsh v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 225, citing Smith v. U. S., 2 Ct. Cls., 206; Winters v. U. S., 3 Ct. Cls., 136; Collins v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 22; Sullivan v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 402; 4 Comp. Dec., 605; 6 Comp. Dec., 970.)

Where an officer is awaiting trial before either a civil or military tribunal under waiting orders issued by authority of the War Department he is entitled to the emoluments of his office, including commutation of quarters. (Carrington v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 279, overruling 11 Comp. Dec., 755, which held that the officer in such case was in the status of "absent without leave," and not entitled to pay while on bail pending an appeal to a higher civil court.)

Serving sentence.—A person in the military service is not entitled to pay while serving sentence of imprisonment imposed by a civil court, even though during the term of imprisonment he was in the custody of the commanding officer of a military station as a prisoner of the civil authorities. (Comp. Dec., Dec. 20, 1910, 118 S. and A. Memo., 1642.)

An officer suspended from rank and duty pursuant to sentence of court-martial is not entitled to emoluments or allowances. (Swain v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553.)

Absence without leave.—A commissioned officer of the Navy granted a leave of absence for a specified period, who does not report his address on date of termination of such leave, is absent without leave from such date and is not entitled to any pay for the period of such unauthorized absence, unless excused as unavoidable. (Comp. Dec., July 25, 1910, 113 S. and A. Memo., 1521. See also note to sec. 1569, R. S.)

Furlough.—Pay of officers while on furlough under section 1442, Revised Statutes, is fixed by section 1557, Revised Statutes. (See notes to those sections.)

Absence due to misconduct.—"Hereafter no officer or enlisted man in the Navy or Marine Corps in active service who shall be absent from duty on account of injury, sickness, or disease resulting from his own intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquors, or other misconduct, shall receive pay for the period of such absence, the time so absent and the cause thereof to be ascertained under such procedure and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That an enlistment shall not be regarded as complete until the enlisted man shall have made good any time in excess of one day lost on account of injury, sickness, or disease resulting from his own intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquors, or other misconduct." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 580, as amended by act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 717.)

41. Deductions for naval hospital fund.—"The Secretary of the Navy shall deduct from the pay of each officer, seaman, and marine, in the Navy, at the rate of twenty cents per month for each person, to be applied to the fund for Navy hospitals." (Sec. 4808, R. S.; see also sec. 1614, R. S.)

42. Stoppage of pay, service with contractors.—"That hereafter no payment shall be made from appropriations made by Congress to any officer in the Navy or Marine Corps on the active or retired list while such officer is employed, after June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, by any person or company furnishing naval supplies or war material to the Government; and such employment is hereby made unlawful after said date." (Act June 10, 1896, 29 Stat., 361.)

43. Waiver of pay.—Public policy prohibits any attempt by unauthorized agreement with an officer of the United States, under the guise of a condition or otherwise, to deprive him of the right to pay given by statute. (U. S. v. Andrews, 240 U. S., 90, approving Glavey v. U. S., 182 U. S., 595; see also Katzer v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 32, and Kozlowski v. U. S., 54 Ct. Cls., 206.)

44. Allotments of pay.—See section 1430, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

The Secretary of the Navy has no power to increase a naval officer's allotment without his consent; where he attempts to do so, the officer may recover the illegal excess paid under the allotment, without his knowledge or consent. (Melville v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 74.)

Section 3477, Revised Statutes, prohibits assignment of any claim against the United States. The naval appropriation act of June 10, 1896 (29 Stat., 361), authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to permit "officers" of the Navy and Marine Corps to make allotments under certain conditions. Under this authority the Secretary issued a regulation (art. 1094, Navy Regs., 1909) authorizing allotments to be made, under certain conditions, by "each person in the Navy and Marine Corps." (Assignment of wages by enlisted men of the Navy was authorized by sec. 1576, R. S.) (17 Comp. Dec., 665.)

The act of June 10, 1896, is a beneficial one and provides with little expense to the Government for a worthy object; it is not, therefore, an act that calls for a technical construction. Paymasters' clerks in the Navy were recognized as entitled to make allotments of their pay under said act. Held, that clerks to assistant paymasters of the Marine Corps, in 1911, were likewise entitled to make such allotments under said act of 1896 relating to officers. (17 Comp. Dec., 666.)

45. Reduction of pay.—It is not in the power of the executive department, or any branch of it, to reduce the pay of an officer of the Army. The regulation of the compensation of the officers of the Army belongs to the legislative department of the Government. (U. S. v. Williamson, 23 Wall., 411, 416; see also cases cited above, under “43. Waiver of pay.”)

Reduction by the President of the sentence of an officer of the Navy from dismissal from the service to reduction to one-half sea pay for five years is a mitigation of the sentence within the meaning of article 54, section 1624, Revised Statutes. The officer whose pay has been so reduced is not entitled to recover from the United States the difference between one-half sea pay and waiting-orders pay for the period covered by the sentence. (Mullan v. U. S., 212 U. S., 516.)

The report and recommendation of a naval board, although approved by the Secretary of the Navy, did not work a forfeiture of the pay of the disbursing officer involved, as the board only recommended that he be held responsible and that the amount of the loss be deducted from any money that might be due him. Such declaration of the investigating board might have been made the basis of a court-martial, but it is well settled that the pay due to an officer can only be forfeited by the sentence of a court-martial. (Worz v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 80, 93.)

It was competent for the proper marine superiors and the accounting officers of the Treasury to withhold payment of the money due to an officer until he, or his representative after his death, shall establish that the money committed to his care was not lost by or through his fault or negligence. (Worz v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 80, 93.)

46. Termination of pay.—Where a contract officer (civilian captain of a naval collier) abandoned his place of service without orders, it is conclusive that such contract officer considered his contract with the Government at an end, and he is entitled to no further remuneration from the Government. (Gove v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 251.)

An appointed officer (paymaster's clerk) ordered, while abroad, to proceed to his home in the United States, and that upon his arrival home his appointment “is revoked,” was entitled to compensation until he arrived at his home. (Calongne v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 240, citing Davis v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 195; see also Katzer v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 294.)

An officer dismissed in time of peace without sentence of court-martial can not recover pay thereafter if he acquiesces in the unlawful dismissal for such a long period that he may be held to have abandoned his office. (Ide v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cls., 401; 29 Ct. Cls., 558; Newton v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 435.)

The discharge of an officer does not take effect, so as to relieve the Government from its obligations, until he is notified of the fact and actually discharged from the service. (Gould v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 593.)

An officer who continues in the performance of his duty after tendering his resignation is entitled to pay up to the time that he is notified of the acceptance of his resignation. (Barger v. U. S., 6 Ct. Cls., 35.)

47. Pay computed on monthly basis.—Annual compensation of any person in the service of the United States shall be divided into 12 equal installments, one of which shall be the pay for each calendar month; one-thirtieth of one installment shall be the daily rate of pay, in making payments for a fractional part of a month; the 31st of any calendar month shall be excluded from computation, and February shall be treated as having 30 days. Persons entering the service in a 31-day month shall be entitled to pay from date of entry to the 30th of said month, and persons entering in February shall be entitled to one month's pay less as many thirtieths as days elapsed prior to entry. For unauthorized absence on the 31st of any month, one day's pay shall be forfeited. (Act June 30, 1906, sec. 6, 34 Stat., 763.)

The Revised Statutes, section 1556, provided that the officers and men of the Navy “shall be entitled to receive annual pay at the rates herein stated”; but the officers of the Army and Navy have never been paid annually, and in the case of death, resignation, or dismissal, pay runs to the date when the officer leaves the service; therefore, the statute of limitations excludes pay anterior to a period of six years prior to the bringing of suit therefor. (Brook v. U. S., 31 Ct. Cls., 272.)

Sec. 1557. [Furlough pay.] Officers on furlough shall receive only one-half of the pay to which they would have been entitled if on leave of absence.— (3 Mar., 1835, c. 27, s. 1, v. 4, p. 756. 3 Mar., 1845, c. 77, s. 6, v. 5, p. 794. 1 June, 1860, c. 67, s. 4, v. 12, p. 27.)

As to leave of absence pay, see note to section 1556, Revised Statutes, under “Absence from duty.”

This section has not been repealed by subsequent enactments. (15 Comp. Dec., 73. See also notes to sections 1454, 1593, and 1594, Revised Statutes.)

Officers furloughed as measure of economy.—In the appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, Congress reduced the amount for “Pay of the Navy” considerably below that required for the pay of officers on active duty, this action being based upon the express grounds “that by a very rigid enforcement of a somewhat disused power on the part of the Secretary of the Navy to furlough officers, instead of having them under the heads of ‘other duty’ or ‘waiting orders,’ a very considerable reduction could be made,” and that they therefore “give the Secretary of the Navy the disagreeable duty of putting officers upon furlough, when they can be spared from the actual needs of the service." Under these circumstances, the Secretary of the Navy felt bound to reduce the number of officers employed to that absolutely needed to meet the requirements of the service, and to put those unemployed upon furlough pay. (Navy Dept. Gen. Order No. 216, Aug. 12, 1876, citing Cong. Rec., June 30, 1876, p. 16.)

The Secretary of the Navy found it a disagreeable duty to be obliged to put so many well-deserving officers in a position which had been reserved of late years solely for the useless and undeserving, but had no other alternative except that of refusing to carry out the expressed will of the representatives of the people. In placing these officers on furlough, the Secretary stated that it would be understood that his action "neither imputes any wrong to, nor involves the disgrace of, any such officer; but that it is simply an effort to meet, as nearly as may be, the requirements of public law, binding alike upon the department and the service." (Navy Dept. Gen. Order No. 216, Aug. 12, 1876.)

Sec. 1558. [Allowances.] The pay prescribed in the two preceding sections shall be the full and entire compensation of the several officers therein named, and no additional allowance shall be made in favor of any of said officers on any account whatever, except as hereinafter provided.—(15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 4, v. 16, p. 332.)

Allowances for officers of the Army, except forage, are made applicable to all commissioned officers of the Navy by act of March 3, 1899, section 13 (30 Stat., 1007), as amended by acts of May 13, 1908 (31 Stat., 128), and August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 581), noted under section 1487, Revised Statutes.

Chief of Naval Operations shall receive the allowances prescribed by or in pursuance of law for the grade of general in the Army. (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 716.)

Chiefs of bureaus and the Judge Advocate General of the Navy shall receive the same allowances as prescribed by or in pursuance of law for chiefs of bureaus of the War Department and the Judge Advocate General of the Army. (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 717.)

Officers of the Navy holding the rank and title of Admiral and Vice Admiral in the Navy, while holding such rank and title, shall receive the allowances of a General and Lieutenant General of the Army, respectively. (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 717.)

See note to section 1556, Revised Statutes, as to pay and allowances of warrant officers, commissioned warrant officers, Naval Reserve Force, Nurse Corps (Female), etc.

See note to section 1487, Revised Statutes, as to quarters, heat, and light, and as to allowances in general.

See notes to sections 1578 and 1579, Revised Statutes, as to rations of officers.

Transportation of household effects: See act of May 18, 1920, section 12 (41 Stat., 604).

Warrant officers and mates "shall hereafter receive the same commutation for quarters as second lieutenants of the Marine Corps" (act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1107); and "shall receive the same allowances of heat and light as are now or may hereafter be allowed an ensign, United States Navy." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 578.) As to rations of warrant officers and mates, see notes to sections 1578 and 1579, Revised Statutes.

Historical note.—By act of March 3, 1835 (4 Stat., 757), it was provided that "the yearly allowance provided in this act is all the pay, compensation, and allowance which shall be received under any circumstances whatever by any such officer," etc. Before said act it was lawful for the Secretary of the Navy to make allowances out of appropriations in gross to officers of the Navy, beyond their regular pay, for quarters, furniture, light, fuel, and so forth. By act of April 17, 1866 (14 Stat., 33), said act of March 3, 1835, was repealed. The effect of said repeal was to restore the right to make such allowances, as the act of February 25, 1871, now embodied in section 12 of the Revised Statutes, was not then in force. (U. S. v. Philbrick, 120 U. S., 52.)

Provision as to allowances which are fixed for naval officers in the naval personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 13 (30 Stat., 1007), noted above, superseded the statutory provisions as to the same allowances which were contained in earlier statutes. (Gibson v. U. S., 194 U. S., 182.)

The proviso in the naval personnel act declaring that "no provision of this act shall operate to reduce the present pay of any commissioned officer," and the act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 684, 697), that nothing contained in the personnel act shall operate to reduce the pay which, but for the passage of said act, would have been received by any commissioned officer at its passage or thereafter, do not extend to allowances. (Thomas v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 113.)

Allowances provided by law for officers of the Army are applicable to officers of the Navy by reason of section 13 of the Navy personnel act approved March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), and the acts of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127, 128), and August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 581). (24 Comp. Dec., 610, citing 15 Comp. Dec., 809; 66 MS. Comp. Dec., 663, Aug. 14, 1913; 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 261; Op. J. A. G. Navy, Apr. 13, 1918.)

Allowances, pay, emoluments, etc., defined and distinguished.—See note to section 1556, Revised Statutes, under "longevity pay," for definition of current yearly pay and yearly pay of the grade; and note to section 1487, Revised Statutes.

Under the term "allowances" everything is embraced which would be recovered from the Government by the soldier in consideration of his enlistment and services, except the stipulated monthly compensation designated as pay. Therefore, the term allowances includes the bounty allowed to a soldier upon his honorable discharge at the expiration of his service. (U.

S. v. Landers, 92 U. S., 77, 80, citing 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 198, 199.)

By reference to the statutes it appears that the words "pay and allowances" may be understood in a general sense as including all emoluments paid or allowed to a soldier. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 199.)

A general order of the Navy Department allowing officers, in lieu of all allowances, except mileage or traveling expenses, a sum equal to 33½ per cent of their "pay," is to be construed as requiring that said percentage be based upon the amount of the officer's stated statutory pay at the time said order was in force, without taking into consideration the additional amount allowed the officer as longevity pay under the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 473). (U. S. v. Allen, 123 U. S., 345.)

Under a statute providing that officers serving as chiefs of bureaus shall have certain "rank, title, and emoluments," the word "emoluments" includes salary, pay, and every kind of pecuniary compensation for service rendered. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 429, citing Hoyt v. U. S., 10 How., 108, 135.)

The basis of increased pay for shore duty beyond seas is the officer's "pay proper as fixed by law in time of peace." The term "pay proper" is not to be construed differently from the term "pay," which includes the increase granted for longevity service. The total amount is the "pay proper" upon which the percentage is to be computed. (McCully v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 275.)

Under the act of May 26, 1900, increasing the pay of officers 10 per cent and of enlisted men 20 per cent "above the rates of pay proper as fixed by law in times of peace" (for shore duty beyond seas), "pay proper" means the fixed amount given by law to officers as distinguished from pay and emoluments or pay and allowances. The increase of an officer's pay is to be computed on his longevity pay, if any. (Irwin v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 87.)

The words "pay proper" as used in the acts of May 26, 1900 (31 Stat., 205, 211), and March 2, 1901 (31 Stat., 895, 903), allowing additional pay to officers and enlisted men of the Army serving beyond the limits of the States comprising the Union and the territories contiguous thereto, include increase for longevity pay. The total of the minimum pay of the office prescribed by statute and the increased pay for length of service should be taken as the basis of the computation for the increase under the acts cited. (U. S. v. Mills, 197 U. S., 223.)

"Pay proper" means the regular, ordinary pay which an officer may be entitled to under the facts in his case, and if by virtue of length of service he is entitled to receive the additional compensation provided therefor, that compensation is his "pay" or his "pay proper" as distinguished from possible other compensation by way of allowances, or commutation, or otherwise. (U. S. v. Mills, 197 U. S., 223.)

The words "pay proper" are not to be construed differently from the word "pay." The term means compensation which may properly be described or designated as "pay" as distinguished from allowances, commutation for rations, or other methods of compensation not specifically described as pay. (U. S. v. Mills, 197 U. S., 223.)

The words "all back pay and emoluments," in a special act of Congress (granting the compensation to which an officer would have been entitled had he remained in the Army for a period that he was out after an enforced resignation until his reinstatement), are all comprehensive; they embrace all the compensation, perquisites, and dues to which the beneficiary was entitled as an officer. The word "all" excludes the idea of limitation, and the word "emoluments" is the most adequate that could have been used. It especially expresses the perquisites of an office, and its use in connection with the word "pay" makes the restitution of the statute complete. (McLean v. U. S., 226 U. S., 374.)

The word "pay" does not include allowances. (Thomas v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 113.)

Where an officer is sentenced by court-martial to suspension from rank and duty for 12 years, and to forfeit one-half his monthly pay every month for the same period, he is not entitled to recover allowances. (Swain v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 173, 237; affirmed, 165 U. S., 553.)

The word "pay" in the laws providing for the pay and allowances of officers and enlisted men of the Army has a distinct and technical signification, and when used alone in the sentence of a court-martial does not affect the right to of the accused to his pecuniary allowances. (2 Comp. Dec., 300.)

A midshipman suspended from the Naval Academy for one year "without pay" is not entitled to allowances during the period of his suspension. (Comp. Dec., Nov. 13, 1915, 177 S. and A. Memo., 3830, citing 17 Comp. Dec., 834; 11 Comp. Dec., 560; 13 Comp. Dec., 626.)

See also United States v. Jones (18 How., 92), noted under section 1586, Revised Statutes.

Maintenances, attachés.—The money appropriated by Congress for "maintenance of students and attachés and information from abroad" is in the nature of a contingent fund, to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Navy in his discretion. The only question that can arise is how much did the Secretary intend to allow to an officer. Neither can the form of the Secretary's allowance be a matter of judicial review, nor the time when the maintenance was to begin. Accordingly, held, that where a naval officer was ordered by the Secretary of the Navy to report for duty to our minister to Spain, and to accompany him to Madrid, and it was further ordered by the Secretary that the officer be allowed $285 per month for "maintenance," to begin at the time he reports for duty, and that such allowance be "additional to the ordinary traveling and other expenses that may be allowed," the accounting officers were in error in refusing to allow the maintenance prior to the time said officer arrived in Madrid. (Dyer v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 337, citing U. S. v. Jones, 18 How., 92, noted under section 1586, R. S.; see also note to sec. 285, R. S.)

Medical expenses of officers.—See note to section 1586, Revised Statutes.

Servants.—The Navy Regulations which allow the detail of enlisted men to prepare and serve food for officers' messes extend only to messes on board ship; officers' messes on shore are voluntary, and there is no law or regulation which recognizes them. Where enlisted men on shipboard were detailed to serve an officer's mess on shore, and were subsisted by the mess, and their rations were commuted and paid to the mess, the accounting officers could disallow the payment and compel the officers to refund the money. (Williams v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 175.)

The act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 662, 680), authorizing the payment of money accruing from the rations of enlisted men "commuted for the benefit of any mess," does not extend to an officer's mess on shore. (Williams v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 175.)

Section 1232, Revised Statutes, providing that "no officer shall use an enlisted man as a servant in any case whatever," which related to officers of the Army, is equally applicable to officers of the Navy, at least on shore; the Navy Regulations respecting enlisted men in the Marine Corps are equally as explicit, so that, whatever authority there may be for the enlistment of messmen of the servant class on board ship can have no application to a private mess formed by officers on shore. (Williams v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 175.)

Sec. 1559. [Volunteer service.] When a volunteer naval service is authorized by law, the officers therein shall be entitled to receive the same pay as officers of the same grades, respectively, in the Regular Navy.—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 20, v. 12, p. 587.)

Allowances of officer under suspension.—See note above, under "Allowances, pay, emoluments, etc., defined and distinguished"; see also note to section 1556, Revised Statutes.

Sale of stores, etc., to persons in the Navy.—Sale of naval stores to persons in the Navy and Marine Corps, and civilian employees at certain naval stations is authorized by act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 768), act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 619), and act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 909). Sale of Navy and Marine Corps subsistence stores to officers and enlisted men of the Army is authorized by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 630), which also authorizes officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps to purchase subsistence supplies from the Army. (See also sec. 1135, R. S., and note thereto.)

The Secretary of the Navy is not authorized, in the absence of a provision of law therefor, to purchase for sale to officers and enlisted men of the Navy articles not included in the regular naval stores. (6 Comp. Dec., 321; see also note to sec. 1414, R. S.)

Uniforms, accoutrements, and equipment shall be sold at cost to officers of the Navy, Marine Corps, midshipmen, cadets at the Coast Guard Academy, and officers of the Coast Guard while operating with the Navy, subject to such restrictions and regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe. (Act Jan. 12, 1919, 40 Stat., 1054.)

Honorably discharged officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps receiving medical treatment from the Public Health Service shall be permitted to purchase subsistence stores from the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. (Act June 5, 1920, 41 Stat., 976.)

Transfer of officers from the volunteer service to the Regular Navy: See note to section 1412, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1560. [Commencement of pay; original entry.] The pay of an officer of the Navy, upon his original entry into the service, except where he is required to give an official bond, shall commence upon the date of his acceptance of his appointment; but where he is required to give such bond his pay shall commence upon the date of the approval of his bond by the proper authority.—(15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 7, v. 16, p. 333.)

As to commencement of pay in the cases of officers of the Navy required to give bonds, see note to section 1383, Revised Statutes, under "II. Necessity of furnishing bond before entering upon duty"; see also note to same section, under "I. Who are required to give bonds."

As to pay of midshipmen commissioned within six months after graduation, see act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 715), which allows the pay of the grade in which commissioned from the date of rank stated in the commission to the date of qualification and acceptance of commission; and act of May 22, 1917, section 5 (40 Stat., 86), reenacted by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 716), which provides that midshipmen thereafter graduating "may be commissioned effective from date of graduation."

Appointment of officer to higher office in another branch of the service.—It has been the rule of the accounting officers to hold that the appointment of an officer in one branch of the service to another office in another branch is an "original entry into the service" within the meaning of section 1560, Revised Statutes. (Comp. Dec., May 31, 1907, 76 S. and A. Memo., 372.)

For other cases, see note to section 1458, Revised Statutes, under "Promotion" and "appointment" compared." See also note to section 1556, Revised Statutes, under "Longevity pay," citing United States v. Alger (151 U. S., 362, 152 U. S., 384), United States v. Stahl (151 U. S., 366), Barber v. United States (50 Ct. Cls., 250), United States v. U. S. Fidelity and Guaranty Co. (244 Fed. Rep., 310), Stirling v. United States (48 Ct. Cls., 386), which cases hold that the reappointment of an officer, whether under the general law or special act of Congress, is not an original entry into the service, for purposes of longevity pay, where the officer had not left the service with the bona fide intention of not returning, but his services under the two appointments had in effect been continuous. See also notes to sections 1561 and 1562, Revised Statutes.

Reappointment under special act of Congress.—A former officer of the Navy reappointed by authority of a special act of Congress, providing that such reappointment shall be made "as of" a prior specified date, would, if the act stopped there, be entitled to back pay from such prior date; but where the act contained a proviso "that he shall receive no pay or emoluments except from the date of such reappointment," its effect was to forbid the allowance of pay or emoluments prior to the date of such reappointment, which must be regarded as the date when such reappointment was actually made under the act, and not the retroactive date as of which such reappointment was made, and which served merely to fix his rank and precedence. Further held, that this legislation, being remedial in its character, should be construed as ratifying payments which had been made to the officer prior to the passage of the act and which the Government in a counterclaim had sought to recover back. (Quackenbush v. U. S., 177 U. S., 20.)

See also Stirling v. United States (48 Ct. Cls., 386), noted under section 1556, Revised Statutes, "Longevity pay."

Appointment of officer to higher office in a new corps.—The act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 942), created in the Navy the grades of acting pay clerk, pay clerk, and chief pay clerk, and rendered eligible for commissions as chief pay clerks, paymasters' clerks then in the Navy and former paymasters' clerks whose appointments had been revoked prior to the act and who had not less than six years' actual service as such. The said act also changed the titles of paymasters' clerks to "pay clerk." Held, that a paymaster's clerk whose title was changed to pay clerk by the act, and who was commissioned in accordance with said act as a chief pay clerk, was not "advanced in grade or rank pursuant to law" within the meaning of the act of March 4, 1913 (noted under sec. 1562, R. S.); that the said act of March 3, 1915, created a new corps in the Navy; and that paymasters' clerks then in the service, notwithstanding their change of title, were not members of said new corps any more than those whose appointments had theretofore been revoked; that the appointment of the officer in this case as a chief pay clerk was no more an advancement in grade or rank than the appointment of a former paymaster's clerk with the requisite qualifications would have been an advancement in grade or rank; that in either case the appointment would have been that of one outside of the newly created corps, and of one who had no grade or rank as a warrant or commissioned officer; accordingly, the officer in this case, having been commissioned as a chief pay clerk on August 3, 1915, pursuant to the act of March 3, 1915, was not entitled to pay as chief pay clerk from the date of rank stated in his commission, which was July 1, 1915. (Seifert v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 40.)

Promotion of enlisted man.—The appointment of an enlisted man to the position of pharmacist in the Navy is not a promotion "in course," within the meaning of section 1561, Revised Statutes, and the appointee is not entitled to the pay of the higher grade from the date he is to take rank, as provided therein, but from the date of his acceptance of the office. (5 Comp. Dec., 141.)

An officer's original entry into the service, within the meaning of section 1560, Revised Statutes, has reference to his entry into the service as an officer and not as an enlisted man, and when an officer is appointed from among the enlisted men of the Navy his pay as an officer begins as provided in said section. (5 Comp. Dec., 141.)

Midshipman commissioned as an officer.—The appointment of a midshipman to the position of assistant civil engineer in the Navy, when not made until over six months from the date of his graduation, is "an original entry into the service" within the meaning of section 1560, Revised Statutes, rather than a "promotion in course to fill a vacancy in the next higher grade," within the meaning of the act of June 22, 1874 (noted under section 1561, R. S.). (13 Comp. Dec., 606; but see act of July 1, 1918, noted above.)

Sec. 1561. [Commencement of pay of promoted officers. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1561. When an officer is promoted in course to fill a vacancy, and is in the performance of the duties of the higher grade from the date he is to take rank, he may be allowed the increased pay from such date."—(15 July, 1870,

c. 295, s. 7, v. 16, p. 333. 5 June, 1872, c. 306, s. 1, v. 17, p. 226.)

It was superseded by the following clause contained in the act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 191):

"On and after the passage of this act, any officer of the Navy who may be promoted in course to fill a vacancy in the next higher grade shall be entitled to the pay of the grade to which promoted from the date he takes rank therein, if it be subsequent to the vacancy he is appointed to fill."

By act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 892), it was provided that "all officers of the Navy who, since the third day of March, eighteen hundred and ninety-nine, have been advanced or may hereafter be advanced in grade or rank pursuant to law shall be allowed the pay and allowances of the higher grade or rank from the dates stated in their commissions."

Historical note.—The provision of the act of July 15, 1870, section 7, chapter 295 (16 Stat., 333), that "the increased pay of a promoted officer shall commence from the date he is to take rank as stated in his commission," was repealed by the act of June 5, 1872, chapter 306 (17 Stat., 226). The pertinent provision of the latter act is substantially reenacted in section 1561, Revised Statutes. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 495.)

By the settled practice of the service, promotion to a higher grade includes the right to the rank of that grade from the date of the vacancy filled by the promotion. This practice has the distinct recognition of Congress. Before the legislation referred to, several of the Attorneys General had decided that it was competent for the appointing power to give rank by relation in making promotions. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 393.)

Prior to the act of July 15, 1870, chapter 295, the general rule was that the increased pay of all promoted officers in the Navy commenced from the date of the signature of an appointment to perform the duty of the higher grade if an appointment was given before the issue of a commission; or from the date of the commission if no appointment was previously given. This rule was changed by the said act, which provided that "the increased pay of a promoted officer shall commence from the date he is to take rank as stated in his commission." The provision of that act, which was general and applied to any promoted officer, was repealed by the act of June 5, 1872, chapter 306. By the latter act only those officers who are "promoted in course to fill a vacancy" and have been in the performance of the duties of the higher grade from their ranking date become entitled to the increased pay from that date. Officers otherwise promoted are impliedly excluded; with them it must be deemed that their increased pay was contemplated to commence at the date of appointment. The provision of the act of 1872, is substantially embodied in section 1561, Revised Statutes. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 319. But see sec. 1562, R. S., and note thereto.)

The act of June 22, 1874, chapter 392, supercedes section 1561, Revised Statutes, as to officers promoted thereafter. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 329.)

The sole purpose and intent of the first section of the act of June 22, 1874, was to modify the rule prescribed by section 1561, fixing the period at which the increased pay of an officer on the active list who is "promoted in course to fill a vacancy," shall begin. It in no way affected section 1591, which thereafter, as before, remained in full force. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 495.)

The language of the act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 191), is too plain to require construction. The only question presented is whether there was a vacancy in the office on the date from which the officer took rank therein on promotion. (Williams v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 316, 319.)

The first section of the act of June 22, 1874, chapter 392, is in pari materia with the provision touching the pay of promoted officers contained in section 7 of the act of July 15, 1870, chapter 295, and the act of June 5, 1872, chapter 296, and section 1561, Revised Statutes, and must be considered in connection therewith to determine its scope. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 495.)

The act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 191), supercedes section 1561, Revised Statutes, on the same subject. (7 Comp. Dec., 865, 867; 13 Comp. Dec., 606, 608; but see 5 Comp. Dec., 141, 142.)

The President for other purposes may insert an antecedent date in the body of a commission; but antecedent date can affect an officer's pay only in the cases authorized by statute. (Young v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 145.)

As a general principle, it has been repeatedly decided by the Attorneys General that constructive rank retroactively assigned to an officer does not draw after it retroactive pay. Even though a statute expressly provide that rank shall be dated back, the pay is not thereby dated back in the absence of a provision in the statute to that effect. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 68. But see Quackenbush v. U. S., 177 U. S., 20, noted under sec. 1560, R. S.)

The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, has authority to confer brevet rank in the Army from a period antecedent to the actual appointment and commission; if the words in the commission, "to take rank from" a specified date confer on the officer rank from that time, then they confer on him also the pay and emoluments of that rank, when he is on duty and has a command according to that rank from and after that time. It seems that pay and emoluments are necessarily attached to the rank, and that if the rank existed from the date stated in the commission, and the duty and command existed, then the pay and emoluments followed of course. (U. S. v. Vinton, 2 Sumn., 299, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16, 624.)

There is no provision of law authorizing payment to an officer of the Army of the pay of the higher grade from the date on which the vacancy occurred which he is promoted to fill; but by immemorial custom and practice the pay is allowed from the date of the vacancy, in the same manner that officers of the Navy are authorized to be paid. Accordingly, officers of the Revenue Cutter Service (now Coast Guard), who were given by law the same pay as the Army, are likewise entitled to pay on promotion from date of vacancy. (9 Comp. Dec., 1.)

By special legislation the right to compensation may be so conferred as to give an officer the same right thereto that he would have had had he been appointed at a prior date. The act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 191), is an instance of this kind. Similar provisions were made in prior acts; namely, section 16, act of July 16, 1862 (12 Stat., 586); section 5, act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat., 333); and section 1, act of June 5, 1872 (17 Stat., 226). (9 Comp. Dec., 1, 2.)

Officers advanced for heroism.—Revised Statutes, sections 1561 and 1562, provide for certain cases where the pay of an officer shall run from a date anterior to the date of his commission—which is the date when the instrument was executed—but advancement in rank “for eminent or conspicuous conduct in battle or extraordinary heroism” under section 1506, Revised Statutes, is not one of such cases. (Young v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 145; see also 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 319, in same case.)

Cadet engineers.—The words “any officer of the Navy” as employed in the first section of the act of June 22, 1874, chapter 392, comprehend cadet engineers, and that section fixes the commencement of their pay in the grade of assistant engineer when promoted thereto. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 329. See note to sec. 1522, R. S., as to cadet engineers.)

Retired officers.—The act of June 22, 1874, chapter 392, was manifestly designed to fix the commencement of the increased pay of promoted officers in active service only. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 495.)

Officer retired after nomination for promotion.—An officer who qualified and was nominated by the President for promotion to the grade of rear admiral, to fill a vacancy occurring February 18, 1886, but who was retired on account of age prior to his confirmation by the Senate, may, if subsequently confirmed, be commissioned as a rear admiral with rank from the date of said vacancy and with the retired pay of that grade. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 393; compare note to sec. 1588, R. S.)

“Vacancy” defined.—An office which has just been created and has never been filled is “vacant” within the meaning of the act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 191), which provides that “any officer of the Navy who may be promoted in course to fill a vacancy,” etc. An office created by law and never filled constitutes a vacancy. (Williams v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 316.)

Where a statute enacts that there shall be 26 additional passed assistant and assistant paymasters on the active list of the Navy, the President, in his discretion, may direct that this whole number so added to the active list shall be of the grade of passed assistant paymaster. The President having directed that the whole number be added to the higher grade the effect of the law in conjunction with the President's order was to create vacancies in the grade of passed assistant paymaster, within the meaning of the act of June 22, 1874. (Williams v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 316.)

Where the law authorizes additional offices in the Navy, and the President has discretion to add the increase to the higher of two grades, the vacancies are created by the law itself, and not by the President's order; when the President issues his order, it relates back to the date of the law authorizing the additional appointments. An officer promoted with date of rank subsequent to the date of the law, but prior to the date of the President's order, is entitled to the increased pay of the higher grade from the date of rank. (Crapo v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 337, construing the act of March 4, 1913, above quoted, and explaining Williams v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 316.)

There is no reason in justice why an officer who has completed the service necessary to make him eligible to an office of higher grade, which office is vacant by reason of the fact that it has never been filled since it was created by law, should not be entitled to the same consideration as an officer who has become eligible to an office made vacant by death or resignation. (Williams v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 316.)

For other cases, as to definition of “vacancy” see note to section 1458, Revised Statutes.

Date of vacancy.—The advancement in numbers and promotion by the President alone of certain officers under section 1506, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of June 17, 1878 (20 Stat., 144), did not create vacancies in their offices, as such advancement and promotion can be made only with the advice and consent of the Senate; accordingly, junior officers nominated and commissioned to fill the vacancies resulting from such advancement of their seniors were not entitled, under the act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 191), to pay in the higher grades from the dates of rank stated in their commissions, which were prior to the date that the Senate confirmed the promotions of their seniors and the date of such confirmation was the date of the resulting vacancies. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 30 citing 6 Comp. Dec., 7.)

For other cases as to date of vacancies, see note to section 1458, Revised Statutes; see also cases noted above under “‘Vacancy’ defined.”

Promotion of an enlisted man.—See note to section 1560, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1562. [In cases of delayed examination.] If an officer of a class subject to examination before promotion shall be absent on duty, and by reason of such absence, or of other cause not involving fault on his part, shall not be examined at the time required by law or regulation, and shall afterward be examined and found qualified, the increased rate of pay to which his promotion would entitle him shall commence from the date when he would have been entitled to it had he been examined and found qualified at the time so required by law or regulation; and this rule shall apply to any cases of this description which may have heretofore occurred. And in every such case the period of service of the party, in the grade to which he was promoted, shall, in reference to the rate of his pay, be considered to have commenced from the date when he was so entitled to take rank.—(15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 7, v. 16, p. 333.)

By act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 191), it was provided that "on and after the passage of this act, any officer of the Navy who may be promoted in course to fill a vacancy in the next higher grade shall be entitled to the pay of the grade to which promoted from the date he takes rank therein, if it be subsequent to the vacancy he is appointed to fill."

By act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 892), it was provided that "all officers of the Navy who, since the third day of March, eighteen hundred and ninety-nine, have been advanced or may hereafter be advanced in grade or rank pursuant to law shall be allowed the pay and allowances of the higher grade or rank from the dates stated in their commissions."

See note to section 1495, Revised Statutes, as to when examinations are required; and see act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1171), empowering commanding officers on foreign stations to convene examining boards when authorized by the Secretary of the Navy.

Section 1562 not repealed by act of 1874.—There is no conflict between section 1562, Revised Statutes, which applies to officers promoted after a prescribed period of service without the necessity of any vacancy, and the act of June 22, 1874, which applies to officers promoted in course to fill vacancies. Accordingly, an officer promoted to the grade of chief boatswain after a specified period of service and not to fill a vacancy—there being no vacancy for a chief boatswain other than that created by his own service and examination as boatswain—is entitled, under section 1562, Revised Statutes, to the pay of chief boatswain from the date he took rank as stated in his commission, that being the date on which he was entitled to examination for promotion. (Doyle v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 356.)

The act of July 16, 1862, section 16 (12 Stat., 586), provided "that whenever any officer of the Navy, of a class subject by law or regulation to examination before promotion to a higher grade, shall have been absent on duty at the time when he should have been examined, and shall have been found qualified at a subsequent examination, the increased rate of pay to which he may be entitled shall be allowed to him from the date when he would have received it had he been found qualified at the time when his examination should have taken place." Held, that any right an officer may have had to claim back pay, under any construction of the act of July 16, 1862, from a date prior to the occurrence of the vacancy to which he was promoted, was cut off by the act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 191), which latter act authorizes payment only from the time the promoted officer takes rank in the higher grade and subsequent to the date of the vacancy to which in course he is promoted. (Adamson v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 623, 628.)

Whether section 1562 repealed by act of 1913.—In so far as section 1562, Revised Statutes, would restrict an officer's right to the pay of a higher grade to the date that he became entitled to examination for promotion, which in the case of an officer who had been suspended under section 1505, Revised Statutes, would be one year from the date of the examination upon which he had failed, the said section of the Revised Statutes is absolutely inconsistent with the act of March 4, 1913, allowing the pay of the higher grade from the date stated in the commission; and the later law must govern in a case where the date stated in the commission is prior to the date that the officer became entitled to reexamination. (Smith v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 244.)

The act of March 4, 1913, deals with the question of pay, and the act of 1874 and section 1562, Revised Statutes, also deals with questions of pay. It is not necessary to determine whether the last act supersedes the other two, or merely extends similar benefits to other officers not included within the provisions of the former acts. It is sufficient to say that the term "all officers of the Navy" as used in the last act is comprehensive enough to include passed assistant surgeons. (Toulon v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 87, 97.)

Purpose of section 1562.—The evident and sole purpose of the law is to prevent an officer from being deprived by absence on duty of the increased pay which promotion would have given him. The meaning of the law is that if an officer is delayed in his promotion because he has not been examined, and his examination has been delayed by his absence on duty, he shall, when promoted, have the increased pay of the new grade to begin from the time when his examination should have taken place. (Hunt v. U. S., 116 U. S., 394.)

The provisions of section 1562, taken from the act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat., 333), were enacted to relieve officers, absent on duty when the time arrived for their promotion and examination, from the manifest injustice of keeping them out of the pecuniary and other benefits of promotion until such time as the exigencies or convenience of the service admitted of their examination. The period of delay is often long, and during the delay other officers who entered the Navy at a later date more favorably stationed, are examined and but for the provisions of section 1562 would take rank above and receive higher pay than their less fortunate fellow officers of longer service. (Howell v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cls., 288, 292.)

The theory of the statute is that when the officer became due for promotion he was competent to perform the duties of the higher office, was then entitled to examination, and, being without fault, his examination was postponed; but the benefits of the statute are fundamentally based upon capacity and competency, and to hold otherwise would be to declare that, without the capacity to perform the duties of the position, the officer was entitled to pay. (Austin v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 269.)

When entitled to examination.—Under a misconception of the law a practice grew up in the Navy Department by which promoted officers were allowed the pay of their new grade from the time when they became eligible for examination; but this was corrected by the Secretary of the Navy in 1877, who recommended that the increased pay of a promoted officer should be allowed only from the time when a vacancy occurred to which he could have been promoted if an opportunity for examination had been given him. This recommendation was based on a correct construction of the statute. (Hunt v. U. S., 116 U. S., 394.)

Under the provisions of the act of July 16, 1862 (12 Stat., 586, sec. 16), an officer of the Navy of a class subject by law or regulation to examination before promotion to a higher grade was not entitled to be examined until his turn for promotion had arrived or was near at hand. (Hunt v. U. S., 116 U. S., 394.)

Under a regulation which provided that "candidates for promotion to the grade of chief engineer must have served at least two years at sea as first assistant engineers on board a naval steamer" a first assistant engineer became eligible to examination for promotion when he had served two years at sea upon a naval steamer; but he was merely eligible. He was not entitled to be examined until his turn for promotion had arrived or was near at hand. In no event, therefore, could he demand that the increased pay of his new grade should begin until he had a right to be examined for promotion. It would be an unwarranted construction of the statute and regulation to hold that as soon as a first assistant engineer had served two years at sea on board a naval steamer he was entitled, as a matter of right, to an immediate examination whether there was a vacancy in the next higher grade to which he could be promoted or not; and that if his examination was delayed by his absence on duty he could, when examined and promoted, demand the pay of a chief engineer from the time when he had completed his two years' service at sea. (Hunt v. U. S., 116 U. S., 394.)

For other cases, see note to section 1495, Revised Statutes.

Officer promoted subject to examination.—An officer nominated and confirmed for promotion, subject to the condition that his commission be withheld until he pass an examination required by law, will not be entitled to the salary of the office until he comply. Unless there be a holding of an office, de facto or de jure, there is no right to its salary. (Crygier v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cls., 268.)

Officer failing upon examination for promotion.—If a naval officer's examination for promotion be postponed through no fault of his, and he afterwards be examined and found qualified, the increased rate of pay to which his promotion would entitle him shall commence from the date when he would have been entitled to it had he been examined and found qualified at the time so required by law or regulation; but this does not extend to officers who upon examination, being found not qualified, must be suspended under section 1505, Revised Statutes, from promotion for one year. (Austin v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 269.)

For other cases, see note to section 1505, Revised Statutes; and see specific cases noted below.

Section 1562 applicable to warrant officers.—An officer in the Navy whose promotion depends not upon vacancies occurring but upon length of service as a boatswain and examination for promotion is entitled to the increased pay of the office of chief boatswain from the date on which he became entitled to examination. In such case he is entitled to the increased pay, not under the act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 191), which relates only to promotions in course to fill vacancies, but under section 1562, Revised Statutes. In this case the officer was promoted on April 14, 1905, to take rank as chief boatswain from March 6, 1905, the date he became entitled to examination. Held, that he is entitled to increased pay from said date of rank. (Doyle v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 356.)

Act of March 4, 1913, construed literally.—If the act of March 4, 1913, quoted above, means anything, it was intended by Congress thereby to confer upon the appointing power the right to name the date upon which an officer advanced in grade or rank should take such grade or rank and receive pay and allowances accordingly. This is the plain language of the law. (Smith v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 244.)

The act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 892), would seem to be too plain for construction. The said act, in language which can not be misunderstood, provides that officers "shall be allowed the pay and allowances of the higher grade or rank from the date stated in their commissions." (Smith v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 244.)

The act of March 4, 1913, is especially free from ambiguity, and was intended to fix a date from which officers, coming within its terms should be paid. It is designed to establish uniformity, and set at rest disputations with respect to its subject matter, by bringing the whole subject of pay within fixed, definite, and certain limitations. (Crapo v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 337.)

An officer's commission determines the date it was intended he should take rank, and he is entitled under the act of March 4, 1913, to the pay and allowances fixed thereby by law from said date. (Crapo v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 337.)

The single question presented in a case arising under the statute of March 4, 1913, is, Was the officer's status such as to entitle him to pay from the date stated in his commission? (Crapo v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 337.)

If an officer promoted to a higher office was eligible to the office on the date stated in his commission, he is entitled under the act of March 4, 1913, to the pay and allowances of the higher office from said date; if he was not, neither the court nor any administrative officer of the Government has a right to alter the date of his commission or to change the essential proceedings followed by the President in doing what it may be presumed he thought he had a right to do. (Crapo v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 337.)

dent, acting in pursuance of law, nominates and appoints an officer, and the Senate confirms the appointment, his commission thereupon issued is his warrant of authority, and the date thereof can not be changed, eliminated, or substituted by an administrative officer of the Government nor by the court. (Crapo v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 337.)

The administrative officers can not change the date of rank, neither can the court change the commission. The right to change it rests with the appointing power. (Toulon v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 87.)

Erroneous date of commission not controlling under act of March 4, 1913.—Under the act of March 4, 1913, the date stated in the commission is not controlling; the court can not change the date, where it appears to be erroneous, but it can refuse relief where the date is erroneous. (Downes v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 237, 240.)

The statute of March 4, 1913, does not authorize pay and allowances where the date stated in the commission is a date prior in point of time to that on which the officer was eligible to promotion to the grade to which he is promoted. (Toulon v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 87.)

The language of the Court of Claims in Smith v. United States (50 Ct. Cls., 244, 249, above noted) implies, as a matter of course, that in naming the date upon which an officer promoted should take rank and receive pay positive law is not ignored. (Toulon v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 87.)

Where the commission issued to a naval officer shows that the date of rank is incorrect he can not, by virtue of the act of March 4, 1913, recover pay from the date so stated. As he can not recover pay from the date stated in his commission in such case, he can not recover at all. (Toulon v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 87.)

Where an erroneous date is stated in the commission, and the increased pay of the higher grade denied by the Court of Claims for that reason, and the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, issues a new commission to correct the date of rank previously stated, the increased pay will be allowed from the date stated in the new commission. (Toulon v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 333.)

Act March 4, 1913, requires that advancement be pursuant to law.—The statute of March 4, 1913, does not provide that when an officer is advanced in grade or rank he shall have the pay and allowances of the higher grade or rank from the date stated in his commission, but it does provide that when the advancement is "pursuant to law" he shall have them. When he is advanced or promoted contrary to law, if such a case is supposable, or when the period of suspension required by section 1505, Revised Statutes, for instance, is overlooked or disregarded, he can not be said to have been advanced pursuant to law; and in such case he can not be entitled to the pay and allowances of the higher grade from the date stated in his commission. (Downes v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 237.)

The Court of Claims did not hold in the cases of Smith, Crapo, or Toulon (50 Ct. Cls., 244, 342, and 51 Ct. Cls., 87, noted above), and does not now hold, that the act of March 4, 1913, authorizes the fixing of a date in the commission from which the rank begins, which is controlling on the court regardless of whether the promotion was made pursuant to law or not. (Downes v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 237.)

The act of March 4, 1913, contemplates that the officer will be advanced under and in accordance with law, and that the date from which the higher rank begins will be stated in pursuance of law. Conversely, it does not contemplate that an arbitrary date will be chosen, nor that an officer will be advanced in contravention of the positive requirement that he shall not be promoted or advanced while under suspension for a failure to professionally qualify when examined. (Downes v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 237.)

Under the act of March 4, 1913, the court has the right to inquire as to whether there was a vacancy, and also the right to inquire whether the date of commission was prior to any vacancy, or whether any positive law had been ignored in fixing the date of rank in the commission; but ordinarily the court can not look into a matter relating purely to administrative action. (Downes v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 237, 243.)

Where a machinist was advanced to the grade of chief machinist, and given a date of rank in the higher grade which, in the opinion of the Court of Claims, was prior to the date on which he became eligible for promotion, held, that he was not promoted in grade or rank pursuant to law, and is illegally in the service; his claim for difference in pay must therefore be denied. (Hooper v. U. S., 53 Ct. Cls., 90.)

An officer was actually commissioned as passed assistant surgeon on July 25, 1912, by promotion from the grade of assistant surgeon. On that date he was eligible to promotion, and his appointment was therefore pursuant to law. His commission, however, purported to give him rank in the higher grade from April 11, 1911, on which date he was not eligible to promotion. It would be a too literal view of the act of March 4, 1913, to hold that his promotion was pursuant to law, because at the time of his actual promotion such promotion could legally be made. The date which the statute contemplates would be stated in the commission is that upon which the officer becomes eligible to promotion, because the statute regulates the pay during the period of constructive service, and therefore the court must take notice of the date when such constructive service can begin, pursuant to law. The ascertainment of that date is confined in the first instance to the appointing power. (Toulon v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 87.)

The promotion of an assistant surgeon before completing three years' service would not be pursuant to law, and likewise his promotion during a period of six months' suspension under section 1505, Revised Statutes, as amended, would not be pursuant to law. Accordingly, held, that he was not advanced pursuant to law, because he was given a date of rank prior to the expiration of his period of suspension. (Toulon v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 87.)

Specific cases involving retroactive rank.—See cases noted above, under this section; see also notes to sections 1560 and 1561,

Revised Statutes; and see note to section 1458, Revised Statutes, under "Antedating rank on promotion."

A lieutenant (junior grade) became due for promotion to fill a vacancy which existed in the grade of lieutenant on February 1, 1898; by reason of absence on duty on board the U. S. S. Maine he could not be examined; on February 15, 1898, he was injured in the destruction of the Maine, from which injuries he died in June 1898; in the meantime, after his injuries and prior to his death therefrom, he was commissioned a full lieutenant to rank from February 1, 1898. He was allowed in his lifetime the pay of a full lieutenant from the date he took rank, to which he was clearly entitled in the application of section 1562 and the act of June 22, 1874, chapter 392. Held, that at the time of his death he was a full lieutenant, and that his widow, under the act of March 30, 1898 (30 Stat., 346, sec. 2), was entitled to a sum equal to 12 months' sea pay of the grade of lieutenant, which is the amount that the officer would have been entitled to under section 1562, Revised Statutes, and the act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 191), had he survived. (Blandin v. U. S., 35 Ct. Cls., 568, distinguishing Swan v. U. S., 113 U. S., 747.)

An assistant surgeon in the Navy became due for promotion to passed assistant surgeon to fill a vacancy which occurred on July 1, 1897; he was not promoted until February 13, 1899, when he was commissioned as passed assistant surgeon to rank from July 9, 1897. Held, that in consequence of section 1562, Revised Statutes, and the act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 191), his rate of pay on May 1, 1898, was that of passed assistant surgeon, and should be so computed for the purpose of determining his share in the distribution of bounty under section 4631, Revised Statutes. (Engagement at Manila Bay, 36 Ct. Cls., 206, 209, citing Blandin v. U. S., 35 Ct. Cls., 568.)

Where an officer was entitled to his first examination for promotion on March 3, 1909, and through no fault of his own such examination was delayed until May 17, 1909; and he failed on such examination and was suspended from promotion, under section 1505, Revised Statutes, for one year from May 17, 1909; and he was again examined on June 10, 1910, and promoted with date of rank in his commission as March 3, 1910, being one year from the date he originally became due for promotion. Held, that under the act of March 4, 1913, he was entitled to pay from the date so stated in his commission, and that it was but doing him justice to date his rank one year later than the date when he was entitled to his first examination. (Smith v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 244.)

An assistant surgeon becoming eligible for promotion to passed assistant surgeon after three years' service and who failed professionally upon examination for promotion, was again eligible for promotion, under section 1505, Revised Statutes, as amended, after the expiration of six months from the date he originally became due. Where he was commissioned in the higher grade, upon qualifying by reexamination, with a date of rank earlier than six months from the date he originally became due for promotion, he was not entitled to pay from the date of rank so stated in his commission. (Toulon v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 87; see also note to sec. 1505, R. S.)

The act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 942), created in the Navy the grades of acting pay clerk, pay clerk, and chief pay clerk, and rendered eligible for commission as chief pay clerks, paymasters' clerks then in the Navy and former paymasters' clerks whose appointments had been revoked prior to the act and who had not less than six years actual service as paymasters' clerks. Held, that a paymaster's clerk who was commissioned in accordance with said act as chief pay clerk was not "advanced in grade or rank pursuant to law" within the meaning of the act of March 4, 1913; that said paymaster's clerk was not a member of the new corps created by the act of 1915 until he was commissioned therein; and that his appointment as chief pay clerk was no more an advancement in grade or rank than would have been the appointment of a former paymaster's clerk having the requisite qualifications; that in either case the appointment would be that of an outsider, who had no grade or rank as a warrant or commissioned officer at the time of such appointment. The question is not the same as that in the case of Smith v. United States (noted above), in which a machinist was promoted to the grade of chief machinist pursuant to the law which in terms referred to such advancement as a promotion. Accordingly, in this case, where the officer was commissioned as chief pay clerk on August 3, 1915, but was given date of rank as July 1, 1915, he was not entitled to pay as chief pay clerk from the date of rank so stated in his commission. (Seifert v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 40.)

An officer became due for promotion by seniority to fill an existing vacancy in the next higher grade; he was found upon examination incapacitated for service by reason of hernia contracted in the line of duty, and therefore not recommended by the board for promotion; the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery recommended that he be ordered to a naval hospital for operative treatment, and that he be reexamined when he had recovered to determine his physical fitness for promotion; the Secretary of the Navy, reciting the recommendation of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, transmitted the record to the President advising that the findings and recommendations of the board of medical examiners be approved, with a view to effecting the recommendation of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery. The President's indorsement was as follows: "The findings and recommendation of the board in this case are approved." Thereafter the officer was admitted to the naval hospital for operative treatment, and having subsequently passed the required examinations was promoted from the date of the vacancy which had been held open for him in the meantime. Held, that the officer was advanced in grade or rank pursuant to law under the act of March 4, 1913, and is entitled to the pay of the higher grade for constructive service from the date of the vacancy, as stated in his commission; further held, that it would be too strict, if not strained, a construction of the President's action to say that he merely approved the finding of the board of medical examiners, when as a matter of fact he had before him not only their report but the recommendation of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery and the advice thereon of the Secretary of the Navy. It was not an unreasonable construction that the President's approval of the board's findings and recommendation included an approval of the recommendation of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery. Further, held, that section 1505, Revised Statutes, as amended, relating to suspension from promotion applies to officers not professionally qualified, and is not applicable in a case where the examination develops merely a physical disqualification. (Downes v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 237; see also note to sec. 1505, R. S.)

An assistant surgeon who, on original appointment as such, executed his oath of office on December 4, 1907, but whose commission, in accordance with administrative custom, fixed his date of rank as November 29, 1907, may be regarded as becoming eligible for promotion after three years from the date of rank so stated in his original commission, instead of requiring three years' actual service; and the said officer having failed on examination for promotion and been suspended for six months, in accordance with section 1505, Revised Statutes as amended, he again became eligible for promotion after the expiration of three years and six months from the date he took rank as stated in his original commission, that is, on May 29, 1911; and having been promoted to the grade of passed assistant surgeon to rank from the last-named date, he was entitled under the act of March 4, 1913, to be paid from the date of rank so stated in his commission. (Toulon v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 333.)

A machinist in the Navy become eligible for promotion to chief machinist in December, 1912; in February, 1913, a naval examining board reported the said machinist qualified for promotion; however, owing to unfavorable reports as to fitness, the department recommended and the President directed in April, 1913, that final action on the recommendation be suspended for one year; in October, 1914, he was reexamined and found suffering from neurasthenia contracted in line of duty and thereby incapacitated for service, and was not recommended for promotion; the President approved this report of the board of medical examiners on November 21, 1914; subsequently he was examined by a naval retiring board and found temporarily incapacitated for active service by reason of neurasthenia, and recommendation was made that he be granted three months' sick leave; this recommendation was approved by the President on January 2, 1915; in June, 1915, he was again examined by a naval retiring board and found not incapacitated for active duty, and the President approved this report; in September, 1915, he was again examined for promotion and found physically qualified, but in November following the naval examining board reported him as mentally and morally but not professionally qualified, and did not recommend him for promotion; in December, 1915, the President approved this report and directed that he be suspended from promotion for period of six months; in July, 1916, he was examined by a board of medical examiners and found physically incapacitated for duty and it was recommended by the board that he be reexamined physically in six months; no action was taken by the President on this report; in January, 1917, he was reexamined by a board of medical examiners and a naval examining board, found qualified by both boards, and recommended for promotion. These reports were approved by the President and on April 30, 1917, the officer was appointed a chief machinist in the Navy to rank from June 27, 1913, being six months after the date that he originally became due for promotion; he was paid as machinist to January 29, 1917, and claimed the difference in pay between that of machinist and that of chief machinist from June 27, 1913, the date of rank stated in his commission. Held, that under sections 1493, Revised Statutes, and section 1505, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 11, 1912 (37 Stat., 73), the act of June 18, 1878 (20 Stat., 165), and the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 892), he was not promoted in grade or rank pursuant to law, because he was not eligible for promotion on the date of rank stated in his commission, and he is therefore illegally in the service and not entitled to difference of pay as claimed. (Hooper v. U. S., 53 Ct. Cls., 90; see also note to sec. 1505, R. S.)

An ensign in the Navy became eligible for promotion by length of service to the grade of lieutenant (junior grade) on January 31, 1910; he successfully passed his examination, as required by section 1496 of the Revised Statutes, but was found not physically qualified by the medical board acting under section 1493, Revised Statutes, and it was recommended by said board that he be further examined physically in three months, in order to ascertain the extent of his incapacity. The findings and recommendations of both boards were approved by the President on December 12, 1910. Being subsequently examined and found physically qualified, he was commissioned as a lieutenant (junior grade) on May 2, 1911, to rank from January 31, 1910. Held, that he was entitled to the pay of lieutenant (junior grade) from the date stated in his commission; that this case is more analogous to that of Downes v. United States (above noted) than that of Hooper v. United States (above noted). (Wadsworth v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 383.)

Distinction between rank and office.—The distinction between rank and office is not without importance when considering the right of the officer to take rank prior to the time when he is actually commissioned in office. To be an officer he must pass an examination, be nominated to and confirmed by the Senate, and receive a commission; but he takes rank as from the date he became eligible to promotion to such office. His right to the rank becomes absolute when he is actually commissioned, and before that time he was merely eligible to it. (Toulon v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 87, 94.)

The rule and custom of promotion in rank from the date the officer becomes eligible to promotion finds recognition in many statutes, of which the act of June 22, 1874, and section 1562, Revised Statutes, referring to pay between the date of commission and date of rank, are examples. The date of an officer's rank on promotion is, therefore, that on which he becomes eligible to promotion, and though his actual appointment in the higher grade be at a later time, his date of rank relates back to the period stated. (Toulon v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 87, 93.)

An officer takes rank in his grade from the time when the law entitles him to do so, and not necessarily from the time when he is commissioned. (Howell v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cls., 288; Toulon v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 87, 93.)

Section 1562, Revised Statutes, the act of June 22, 1874, and the act of March 4, 1913, each has in contemplation the custom of advancement according to number in grade, and that there is one date when the officer is actually commissioned in the higher grade, and a preceding date upon which he is eligible to promotion thereto. Referring, as it does, to the matter of pay, the purpose of the act of March 4, 1913, may be rendered in the language of section 1562, providing that "the period of service of the party in the grade to which he was promoted shall, in reference to the rate of his pay, be considered to have commenced from the date when he was so entitled to take rank." (Toulon v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 87, 97.)

The officer's service in the grade to which promoted actually begins on the date that he is actually commissioned, but the date upon which he became eligible to promotion may be denominated the date of his constructive service in such grade. The act of March 4, 1913, refers to this latter date, from which he constructively enters the higher grade and takes rank upon being actually commissioned at a subsequent date. By observing the distinction which is to be taken under the act of 1913 between actual and constructive service, and the fact that the pay and allowances therein provided for relate to the period of such constructive service and have no relation to the period of actual service following the date of commission, we find the proper application for the words "advanced in grade or rank, pursuant to law," as used in said act. (Toulon v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 87, 97.)

A lieutenant in the Navy received additional pay for duty as aid to a rear admiral from July 1, 1914, to August 20, 1914; thereafter he was commissioned as a lieutenant commander, with rank as such from July 1, 1914. As a lieutenant commander he would not be entitled to the additional pay allowed aids to rear admirals. Held, that the Government is not entitled to recover the sum allowed him for additional pay as aid during the period in question; that he was in fact a lieutenant and not a lieutenant commander during said period; that he did not become a lieutenant commander until a subsequent date, and the fact that his commission retroactively gave him rank as a lieutenant commander during the period when he was in fact serving as a lieutenant, and that he was entitled to pay as a lieutenant commander from date of rank pursuant to the act of March 4, 1913, can not serve to make him a lieutenant and a lieutenant commander in fact at the same time. (Downes v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 327.)

Sec. 1563. [Advances to persons on distant stations.] The President of the United States may direct such advances, as he may deem necessary and proper, to such persons in the naval service as may be employed on distant stations where the discharge of the pay and emoluments to which they are entitled cannot be regularly effected.—(31 Jan., 1823, c. 9, s. 1, v. 3, p. 723.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1181), which provided that "hereafter advances of pay not to exceed three months' pay in any one case may be made to officers ordered to and from sea duty and to and from shore duty beyond the seas, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe."

By section 3648, Revised Statutes, advances of public money were prohibited, with a saving clause with respect to persons employed in the military and naval service similar to the provisions of section 1563, Revised Statutes. Other exceptions have been made by specific statutes, as, for example, act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 32), relating to partial payments to contractors doing work for the Navy Department; act of October 6, 1917, section 5 (40 Stat., 383), relating to contractors for supplies for the War and Navy Departments "during the period of the existing emergency"; act of April 27, 1904 (33 Stat., 403), relating to purchase of mileage books and transportation tickets for officers and other persons in advance of travel performed under the Navy Department; and various laws relating to payment for subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals, which are noted under section 192, Revised Statutes.

Validity of Navy Regulations relating to advances.—Prior to the amendment of March 4, 1917, noted above, it was held by the Comptroller of the Treasury that Navy Regulations (art. R 4458, Navy Regs., 1913) which authorized advances in pay to officers ordered to duty at sea or on shore beyond the continental limits of the United States were invalid under modern conditions as applied to officers ordered to duty where disbursing officers are stationed who could regularly make payments to them of amounts due for pay and emoluments, and that such regulations should be amended to meet the requirements of sections 1563 and 3648, Revised Statutes. (21 Comp. Dec., 733.) After said decision of the Comptroller was rendered, it was held by the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, December 21, 1916 (file 3980-1275), that the Navy Regulations in question, which had been in effect for many years with the full knowledge and acquiescence of the accounting officers and with the implied sanction of Congress, should be obeyed by disbursing officers, citing the Attorney General's opinion of May 19, 1915 (noted under sec. 285, R. S.), and other opinions of the Attorney General (see 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 204, and 1 Op. Atty. Gen., 620, relating to advances to diplomatic officers going abroad). Certain minor modifications were, however, made in article 4458 (Navy Regs., 1913), by C. N. R. 7 of September 15, 1916, and C. N. R. 10 February 25, 1918. (See art. 1803, Navy Regs., 1920; see also note to sec. 236, R. S., respecting jurisdiction of the accounting officers and the Secretary of the Navy; and note to sec. 161, R. S., respecting validity of Navy Regulations.)

Sec. 1564. [Persons acting as paymaster.] Any person performing the duties of paymaster, acting assistant paymaster, or assistant paymaster, in a ship at sea, or on a foreign station, or on the Pacific coast of the United States, by appointment of the senior officer present, in case of vacancy of such office, in accordance with the provisions of section thirteen hundred and eighty-one, and not otherwise, shall be entitled to receive the pay of such grade while so acting.—(17 July, 1861, c. 4, s. 4, v. 12, p. 258.)

See section 1381, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Not entitled to dual compensation.—Under sections 1381 and 1564, Revised Statutes, a person who holds no office under the Government may be given an acting appointment as paymaster, and in that case the sections may operate literally to entitle the appointee to the pay of the grade while so acting; but if the appointee holds another office under the Government, he can not escape from the prohibitions of the Revised Statutes, sections 1763 and 1765, prohibiting dual compensation. In such case it is the liberal custom of the Treasury Department to allow a person holding more than one office the compensation of that one which is larger. (Webster v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 25.)

Status of acting appointee.—A person appointed to act as paymaster in a ship at sea or on a foreign station, under the Revised Statutes, sections 1381 and 1564, does not thereby become an officer. A naval officer acting as paymaster is appointed to discharge the duties of an office which he does not hold. (Webster v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 25.)

Pay of acting appointee.—A person appointed paymaster to fill the vacancy of a deceased officer on a ship at sea or in a foreign port is entitled to the pay of the office but not to the longevity pay of the officer in whose stead he is acting. (Webster v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 25.)

The offices of engineer and paymaster in the Navy are incompatible, and he who holds them is not entitled to the compensation of both, but is entitled to the larger of the two. (Webster v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 25.)

Termination of acting appointment.—The continuance of an appointment as "acting" paymaster, under Revised Statutes 1381 and 1564, does not depend upon a discharge or revocation; it terminates when another paymaster reports for duty; and the pay continues at farthest only to the time when the acting officer's accounts are made up. (Ostrander v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cls., 218.)

Sec. 1565. [Chiefs of Bureau. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1565. The pay of chiefs of Bureau in the Navy Department shall be the highest pay of the grade to which they belong, but not below that of commodore."—(3 Mar., 1871, c. 117, s. 12, v. 16, p. 537.)

It was superseded by act of March 3, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 1005), which provided that the pay of chiefs of bureaus shall be the highest pay of the grade to which they belong, not below that of commodore.

Other modifications of the law as to pay of chiefs of bureaus were made by act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), which provided that their pay and allowances "shall be the highest pay of the grade to which they belong, and not below that of rear admiral of the lower nine"; by act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 607), which provided that their pay and allowances should be the highest shore duty pay and allowances of rear admirals of the lower nine; by act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 328), which repealed the provisions of the act of June 24, 1910, without making any further provision on the subject—the effect of which was to revive the act of May 13, 1908 (Comp. Dec., June 22, 1916 file 26254-2045); and by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), which provided that chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department shall receive the same pay and allowances as chiefs of bureaus in the War Department.

Chief of bureau dismissed by sentence of court-martial.—The chief of a bureau in the Navy Department tried by court-martial and sentenced to be dismissed from the position of chief of bureau and to be suspended from rank and duty in his permanent grade, on furlough pay, for one year, which sentence was duly confirmed by the President, is not entitled to recover the emoluments of a chief of bureau for the remainder of the four-year term for which he was appointed. A naval court-martial has jurisdiction to sentence chiefs of bureaus to be dismissed from their office as such. (Smith v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 143.)

For other cases relating to the pay and allowances of chiefs of bureaus, see note to section 421, Revised Statutes; see also note to section 1556, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1566. [Mileage and traveling expenses. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1566. An allowance of ten cents a mile may be made to officers in the naval service, and store-keepers on foreign stations for traveling expenses when under orders. And an allowance may be made to officers traveling in foreign countries under orders, for expenses of transportation of baggage necessarily incurred. And no officer shall be paid mileage, except for travel actually performed at his own expense and in obedience to orders."—(3 Mar., 1835, c. 27, s. 2, v. 4, p. 757. 17 July, 1862, c. 200, s. 7, v. 12, p. 595. 15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 4, v. 16, p. 332. 16 June, 1874, c. 285, v. 18, p. 72. 3 Mar., 1875, c. 133, v. 18, p. 452.)

Is was superseded by later enactments set forth below.

By act of June 16, 1874 (18 Stat., 72), it was provided "that only actual traveling expenses shall be allowed to any person holding employment or appointment under the United States, and all allowances for mileage and transportation in excess of the amount actually paid are hereby declared illegal; and no credit shall be allowed to any of the disbursing officers of the United States for payment or allowances in violation of this provision."

By act of January 18, 1875 (18 Stat., 297), it was provided "that no allowance shall be made in the settlement of any account for traveling expenses unless the same be incurred on the order of the Secretary of the Navy, or the allowance be approved by him."

By act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 452), it was provided "that hereafter only actual traveling expenses shall be allowed to any person holding employment or appointment under the United States, except marshals, district attorneys, and clerks of the courts of the United States and their deputies; and all allowances for mileages and transportation in excess of the amount actually paid, except as above excepted, are hereby declared illegal; and no credit shall be allowed to any of the disbursing officers of the United States for payment or allowances in violation of this provision."

By act of June 30, 1876 (19 Stat., 65), it was provided that so much of the act of June 16, 1874, above quoted, "as provides that only actual traveling expenses shall be allowed to any person holding employment or appointment under the United States while engaged on public business, as is applicable to officers of the Navy so engaged, is hereby repealed; and the sum of eight cents per mile shall be allowed such officers while so engaged, in lieu of their actual expenses."

By act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), it was provided that "officers of the Navy traveling abroad under orders hereafter issued shall travel by the most direct route, the occasion and necessity for such order to be certified by the officer issuing the same; and shall receive, in lieu of the mileage now allowed by law, only their actual and reasonable expenses, certified under their own signatures and approved by the Secretary of the Navy."

By act of July 7, 1898 (30 Stat., 708), it was provided "that hereafter the accounting officers of the Treasury shall not receive, examine, consider, or allow any claim against the United States for difference between mileage and actual expenses which has been or may be presented by officers of the Navy, their heirs or legal representatives, under the decisions of the Supreme Court which have heretofore been adopted as a basis for the allowance of such claims, which accrued prior to July first, eighteen hundred and seventy-four." (See decisions of Supreme Court noted below, under "Act of 1876 allowed mileage for all travel by officers of the Navy.")

By act of March 3, 1899, section 13 (30 Stat., 1007), officers of the line of the Navy, and of the Medical and Pay Corps, were given the same allowances, except forage, as officers of the corresponding rank in the Army.

By act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 685), it was provided "that in lieu of traveling expenses and all allowances whatsoever connected therewith, including transportation of baggage, officers of the Navy traveling from point to point within the United States under orders shall hereafter receive mileage at the rate of eight cents per mile, distance to be computed by the shortest usually traveled route; but in cases where orders are given for travel to be performed repeatedly between two or more places in the same vicinity the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, direct that actual and necessary expenses only be allowed. Actual expenses only shall be paid for travel under orders outside the limits of the United States in North America."

By act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1029), the foregoing provisions of the act of June 7, 1900, were repeated in identical language.

By act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 663), it was provided "that hereafter in cases where orders are given to officers of the Navy or Marine Corps for travel to be performed repeatedly between two or more places in such vicinity as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy is appropriate, he may direct that actual and necessary expenses only be allowed."

By act of April 27, 1904 (33 Stat., 403), it was provided that "the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to continue to purchase such mileage books, commutation tickets, and other similar transportation tickets as may in his discretion seem necessary, and to furnish same to officers and others ordered to perform travel on official business; and payment for such transportation tickets upon their receipt, in accordance with commercial usage, or prior to the actual performance of the travel involved, shall not be regarded as an advance of public money within the meaning of section thirty-six hundred and forty-eight of the Revised Statutes."

By act of February 26, 1907, section 6 (34 Stat., 997), provision was made for travel of officers detailed to the Light-House establishment.

By act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 774), it was provided "that hereafter the settlement of all traveling expense claims, where the payment of such is authorized by existing law, and the determination of distances and of what constitutes the shortest usually traveled route in the meaning of laws relating to traveling allowances, shall accord to such rules as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe."

By act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 393), it was provided "that hereafter no mileage shall be paid to any officer where Government transportation is furnished such officer."

By act of May 18, 1920, section 12 (41 Stat., 604), provision was made for transportation being furnished by the Government to the wife and dependent child or children of officers and certain enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps upon permanent change of station by the latter. The same act and section further provided that "the personnel of the Navy shall have the benefit of all existing laws applying to the Army and the Marine Corps for the transportation of household effects." (See also statutes noted under sec. 1135, R. S., as to transportation in Army transports.)

By clauses in the annual naval appropriation acts, under "Bureau of Navigation," officers of the Navy on duty with traveling recruiting parties are entitled to "actual and necessary expenses in lieu of mileage." (See, e. g., act June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 815.)

By clauses in the annual naval appropriation acts, under "Pay, miscellaneous," provision is made "for mileage, at 5 cents per mile, to midshipmen entering the Naval Academy while proceeding from their homes to the Naval Academy for examination and appointment as midshipmen"; for "actual traveling expenses of female nurses"; and for "mileage to officers of the Navy and Naval Reserve Force while traveling under orders in the United States, and for actual personal expenses of officers of the Navy and Naval Reserve Force while traveling abroad under orders." (See, e. g., act June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 812.)

As to travel allowance, Naval Reserve Force, see note to section 1556, Revised Statutes, under "Naval Reserve Force."

As to transportation and necessary expenses of members of the Nurse Corps (Female), when traveling under orders, see note to section 1556, Revised Statutes, under "Dental Corps and Nurse Corps (Female)."

Section 1566 repealed and later revived with modifications.—The provisions of section 1566, Revised Statutes, allowing ten cents a mile to naval officers "for traveling expenses when under orders," were repealed by the act of June 16, 1874 (18 Stat., 372), but became in force, though modified, by reason of the act of June 30, 1876 (19 Stat., 65), which repeals so much of the act of June 16, 1874, "as is applicable to officers of the Navy," and allows to them eight cents per mile in lieu of their actual expenses. (Steele v. U. S., 30 Ct. Cls., 8.)

Section 1566 never actually went into effect, so far as the question of mileage is concerned, as by the act of June 16, 1874, it was provided that "only actual traveling expenses shall be allowed to any person holding employment or appointment under the United States," etc. This act took effect in such a way as to operate to repeal the section referred to, so far as this subject was concerned, before the same actually had effect. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 309, citing sec. 5601, R. S., as to the effect of laws passed after Dec. 1, 1873.)

The act of June 16, 1874, making appropriations for the support of the Army was in its terms applicable to every person holding employment or appointment under the United States, and its obvious purpose was to abolish all payments for traveling expenses in which a specific allowance per mile was made by law, and to establish the more equitable principle of paying the actual expenses of persons traveling in the service of the Government. (U. S. v. Mouat, 124 U. S., 303.)

Act of 1874 repealed only in part by act of 1876.—The act of June 16, 1874, which provided that only actual traveling expenses shall be allowed to any person "holding employment or appointment under the United States," applied to all persons holding "employment or appointment" under the Government of the United States, including officers of the Navy. The later act of June 30, 1876, which excepted "officers of the Navy" from the application of the former act, did not repeal the whole of that statute, even as applicable to the entire Navy, but selected a certain class of persons in the Navy to whom it should no longer apply. This class of persons is designated as "officers of the Navy." No other person holding an employment or appointment under the United States, although in the Navy, was thus relieved from the effect of the act of 1874. The words "officers of the Navy," in the act of 1876, must be confined to those who are, properly speaking, officers of the Navy, that is, to those who are appointed by the President, or by a court of law, or by the head of a department, that is, by a member of the President's cabinet. (U. S. v. Mouat, 124 U. S., 303. See below, as to persons held not officers of the Navy under mileage laws.)

Act of March 3, 1899, extended Army mileage laws to Navy.—Mileage is an allowance, and officers of the Navy coming within the operation of section 13 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), became entitled only to the same rates of mileage as provided by law or regulations for officers of the Army; i. e., to a maximum of 7 cents a mile. (7 Comp. Dec., 117. See later laws noted above.)

Section 1566 repealed only in part by act of March 3, 1901.—The act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1029), repeals section 1566, Revised Statutes, only as to the amount per mile allowed to officers for mileage, but does not repeal the provision in section 1566 that "no officer shall be paid mileage except for travel actually performed at his own expenses and in obedience to orders." (Katzer v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 32.)

Act of 1876 allowed mileage for all travel by officers of the Navy.—The act of June 30, 1876 (19 Stat., 65), establishes one rule, mileage for all travel by officers of the Navy, whether on land or sea. The Government can not by buying for a naval officer traveling under orders a railroad or steamship ticket, reinstate the "actual expense" rule repealed by the said act. (Temple v. U. S., 14 Ct. Cls., 377.)

sea not being in a public vessel, was, under the act of June 30, 1876 (19 Stat., 65), entitled to mileage for the whole distance traveled. The accounting officers of the Treasury, in holding that for one class of travel he should have mileage, and for the other his actual expenses, were attempting to make the law and not to construe it. (U. S. v. Temple, 105 U. S., 97. In this case the accounting officers allowed the officer mileage for the travel by land, and actual expenses for his travel by sea. The court said: "When this travel was performed there was not a line on the statute books of the United States which made any provision whatever, under any circumstances, for allowing officers of the Navy, when engaged on the public business, their actual expenses of travel. The only law ever enacted which made such provision had been expressly repealed by the act on which the appellee based his claim for mileage.")

The act of March 3, 1835 (4 Stat., 755), which provided that 10 cents a mile should be allowed to naval officers for traveling expenses while traveling under orders, made no distinction between travel in and travel out of the country. The construction put upon it by the Treasury Department to the effect that mileage should be paid for traveling expenses within the United States, but that the usual and necessary passage money actually paid by officers returning from foreign service under orders or on sick leave, when they could not return in a public vessel, would be paid as theretofore, as well as the like expenses of officers going out, which construction was accepted by the Navy Department and embodied in the Navy Regulations, can not affect the plain provisions of the act. Under both the act of 1835 and the act of June 30, 1876, all traveling expenses were to be paid by mileage, and in neither act is there any indication of an intention of Congress to make a distinction between travel by sea or on land in foreign countries or in the United States. (U. S. v. Graham, 110 U. S., 219.)

Prior to the decisions of the Supreme Court noted above, the Attorney General had rendered an opinion to the following effect: It was known when the act of June 30, 1876, was passed that the construction which for years had been given by the Navy Department to the law of March 3, 1835, providing that mileage should be paid to officers of the Navy, limited the allowance of the same to those traveling within the limits of the United States. When, therefore, Congress reenacted the law substantially in the same terms, and made no clear provision that the mileage should be paid to those officers who travel by sea and out of the limits of the United States, it must be deemed that in thus reenacting it has accepted the construction theretofore put upon a similar act by the Navy Department. Accordingly, held, that under the act of 1876, mileage is to be allowed and paid to naval officers only when traveling within the United States, in lieu of their actual expenses, and that when traveling without the United States they are to receive their actual expenses alone. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 309; the Supreme Court decisions noted above overruled this opinion of the Attorney General.)

See act of July 7, 1898, noted above, which prohibited the accounting officers from allowing claims for differences between mileage and actual expenses, under decisions of the Supreme Court, where such claims accrued prior to July 1, 1874.

Actual expenses for travel abroad under act of 1882.—An officer of the Navy authorized to appear before a court of inquiry on a foreign station, and ordered "on the conclusion of the investigation to return to Yokohama and there to remain until you receive further orders from the department," is "traveling abroad under orders" within the meaning of the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), allowing actual expenses for such travel. (Selfridge v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 440.)

Traveling does not intend endless movement. A traveler is one who journeys to foreign lands; one who visits strange countries and people; an officer, although not in movement while attending a court of inquiry in a foreign country, or during a few days' detention waiting for a connecting steamer, or during a few days spent in a foreign city on his way out, nevertheless was properly entitled to his expenses at such places. During his stops at these places his status was that of "traveling abroad under orders." He was in the condition of a traveler from the time he left the United States until he returned home. (Selfridge v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 440; see also 10 Comp. Dec., 589; 12 Comp. Dec., 358; 25 Comp. Dec., 555; compare 25 Comp. Dec., 485.)

The question whether travel is abroad or within the United States should be determined by the termini of the journey, rather than by the route actually taken. A naval officer traveling under orders from San Francisco to New York, by way of the Isthmus of Panama, is to be considered, under the statutes applicable to the case, as traveling under orders in the United States and as entitled to eight cents per mile, measured by the nearest traveled route. (U. S. v. Hutchins, 151 U. S., 542.)

An officer is to be understood as traveling abroad when he goes to a foreign port or place under orders to proceed to that place, or from one foreign port to another. (U. S. v. Hutchins, 151 U. S., 542.)

Why officers are allowed by Congress mileage in one case and not in the other is not altogether clear, but probably the reason is that travel at home is ordinarily for such short distances and the disbursements therefor are generally for such petty amounts that to save the necessity of the officer keeping a minute account of each outlay, and the accounting officers passing upon the reasonableness of every small item, it was thought better to allow the officer a fixed mileage by the shortest traveled route, leaving him at liberty under certain circumstances, and where his orders are not to proceed by a particular route, to choose his own. (U. S. v. Hutchins, 151 U. S., 542.)

Actual expenses for repeated travel.—The act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 685), authorizing actual expenses for repeated travel between places in the same vicinity, invests the Secretary of the Navy with discretion to determine what places are "in the same vicinity;"

but the Secretary can exercise this discretion only where the travel must be performed "repeatedly between two or more places." Where the travel between two places was not repeated, the officer is entitled to mileage and not actual expenses. (Willits v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 534.)

The word "vicinity" in the statute has no fixed and definite meaning, and to determine what is or is not a vicinity in these days of express trains and trolley cars must be a matter of discretion, and this discretion is lodged in the Secretary, whose decision is not subject to review by the courts. (Willits v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 534.)

An order of the Secretary of the Navy which does not relieve an officer from duty at a navy yard, but imposes upon him additional duty at another, and requires his personal attention at both, entitles him to mileage for travel between the two and invests him with discretion to determine when his presence is necessary at either; such travel is travel "under orders." (Steele v. U. S., 30 Ct. Cls., 8.)

Mileage not allowed when Government transportation furnished.—By "Government transportation," as used in the act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 393), is understood transportation on vessels owned or employed by the Government or by conveyances on land so owned or employed, but not transportation furnished on transportation request. Accordingly, held, that an officer of the Navy, traveling under proper orders in the United States, and furnished transportation on Government requests, is entitled to be paid mileage less cost of transportation furnished and any other expense incurred by the Government. (21 Comp. Dec., 690.)

Where, under proper orders, a naval officer proceeded from his regular station to a certain point, took charge of a motor launch, and returned thereon to such regular station, said launch not being provided with sleeping quarters or mess arrangements, he is not entitled, for the return journey, either to reimbursement of actual expenses incurred for meals and lodging en route, or to mileage allowance, since he was not performing repeated travel, and was furnished with Government transportation within the meaning of the act of June 30, 1914. (23 Comp. Dec., 368.)

The act of June 30, 1914, was passed after the decision of the comptroller (20 Comp. Dec., 741), which held that a right to mileage was not lost because an officer traveled on a Government conveyance. (23 Comp. Dec., 368, 370.)

Officer performing travel while under suspension.—An officer of the Navy ordered to travel to his home in the United States during his suspension from duty by sentence of a general court-martial is entitled to reimbursement for his actual necessary expenses incurred in traveling from Manila to San Francisco under said orders. (14 Comp. Dec., 684.)

Officer performing travel in answer to a subpoena.—An officer of the Navy is entitled only to actual and necessary expenses for travel performed in attending as a witness before a United States grand jury, in response to a subpoena, notwithstanding that he may have been ordered by his superior officer to perform the travel in answer to said subpoena. (4 Comp. Dec., 146.)

Officer ordered to attend funeral of another officer.—See 11 Comp. Dec., 181, noted under section 1587, Revised Statutes.

Officer traveling to and from leave of absence.—An officer of the Navy ordered to proceed to his home and granted a leave of absence, and at the expiration of such leave to return to his station, is traveling for his own pleasure and benefit and not on public business and he is not entitled to mileage. (16 Comp. Dec., 611.)

It matters not that the officer's leave was not to commence until he arrived at his home, and that the travel to his home was performed before the leave began; such travel was in no sense upon public business, and did not entitle the officer to mileage. (17 Comp. Dec., 252.)

By act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1303), it was provided that "the Auditor of the Navy Department is directed to allow mileage to officers of the Navy who have heretofore been disallowed same by reason of a decision of the Assistant Comptroller of the Treasury dated March seventeenth, nineteen hundred and ten; and to pay said allowances out of any balances of the appropriations for pay, miscellaneous, of the Navy." (The decision referred to was published in 16 Comp. Dec., 611, noted above.)

If an officer in making a journey to his home does so for his own pleasure or on private business, he is not entitled to mileage (citing Perrimon v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 509; Barker v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 291); but where an officer is discharged from treatment in a hospital, after a serious illness, and ordered by the proper authorities to proceed to his home and upon his arrival there granted three months' sick leave for the purpose of allowing him to regain his health, the travel is on public business within the meaning of the law and he is entitled to mileage for travel in the United States and actual expenses for travel out of the United States, in accordance with the act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1029). (McCauley v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 105.)

In Henderson's case, decided by the Comptroller of the Treasury October 18, 1910 (noted in McCauley v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 105, 112), it was said: "Whether a leave of absence is granted on account of sickness or for other cause, the officer's status is the same so far as the matter under consideration is concerned [mileage to his home]. While on 'sick leave' or 'ordinary leave' he is not on duty, nor is he subject to the orders of superior authority. His time is placed at his own disposal, as he may see fit, and he can go and come as he chooses." (But see McCauley v. U. S., noted above.)

The acts of March 3, 1835 (4 Stat., 755), June 16, 1874 (18 Stat., 72), and June 30, 1876 (19 Stat., 65), provide that naval officers shall be allowed mileage "for traveling expenses when under orders." Where an officer at his home on leave of absence is ordered to a new station for special service, and then back to his home before the expiration of his leave, it is travel "when under orders" within the intent of the law and he is entitled to mileage therefor. (Fitzpatrick v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 332.)

It is a principle long recognized and established that the expiration of a leave of absence finds the officer, in legal contemplation, at his post; i. e., the officer must actually or constructively travel from and return to his post at his own expense. But travel for special service within the period of his leave of absence, under orders which leave the officer no discretion as to route, and require him to return to his home, does not come within the reasonable application of the principle. (Fitzpatrick v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 332.)

The ruling of the accounting officers that where an officer absent on leave is ordered to a new station he is entitled to mileage from the place where he happens to be to the new station, "provided the distance is not greater than that from the old station to the new station," but, conversely, if it be greater that he is entitled to mileage only from the old station to the new station, is one which in legal effect prescribes two rules of law where Congress has enacted one, viz, that naval officers shall be allowed mileage "for traveling expenses when under orders" within the United States. The application of the statute must be uniform in all cases. (Fitzpatrick v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 332.)

An officer ordered at the expiration of his leave of absence, to a new station for temporary service, is entitled to mileage from his home to the station; but he is not entitled to mileage for travel from the station to his regiment, if the distance be less than from his home there. (Foster v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 170.)

Where an officer was detached from his ship and granted leave of absence, without any direction for any further duty, the expiration of his leave left him at his home until further orders might be received; it was not his duty to return to the ship or station from which he had been detached. Orders sent him at his home, directing him upon expiration of his leave to proceed to the vessel and station from which he had been detached, for duty on such vessel, entitled him to mileage for travel performed thereon, notwithstanding that he was thereby ordered back to the same station. (17 Comp. Dec., 252.)

Officer traveling on vessel during trial trip.—An officer assisting the superintending naval constructor at the contractor's works was ordered to take passage on a vessel on her trial trip, and was put to no expense whatever in the performance of this duty. Held, that he is not entitled to mileage under the act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 685). (Williams v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 186.)

The theory of the law in allowing mileage is to provide expenses necessarily incurred in the performance of travel (citing Smith v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 568; Galm v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 67); 8 cents per mile of travel under the statute is supposed to include very liberal expenses. In this case it does not appear that the officer was charged for any transportation, or for that matter anything else that was necessary for his comfort and convenience. (Williams v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 186.)

Officer traveling home upon resigning from the Navy.—It has been the policy of the Government to restore an officer to his residence before discharging him from its service; and a journey for that purpose, by authority of the Secretary of the Navy, is a matter of public obligation "and on public business," within the meaning of the act of June 30, 1876 (19 Stat., 65). Where the manifest intent of an order is that a resignation shall take effect when the officer, traveling from a foreign station, arrives in the port of New York, that effect should be given it. (Allerdice v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 511.)

Officers exchanging stations at their own request.—An Army regulation, providing that "when officers are permitted to exchange stations, or are transferred at their own request from one regiment or company to another, the public will not be put to the expense of their transportation. They must bear it themselves," is just and reasonable. If A, at one station, and B, at another, desire to exchange stations or regiments or companies with each other, and prefer a request to that effect, the regulation assumes that the commanding officer may in his discretion grant it; but as no public interest is advanced by it, and it is consented to for the advantage or pleasure of the two officers, they must bear their own expense of transportation in making the exchange. (U. S. v. Phisterer, 94 U. S., 219, 221.)

It would be too narrow a construction of the regulation to hold that it required that two officers should be concerned in the exchange. An exchange from one station to another station by the same officer, at his own request, if found compatible with the public service, would be within the words of the regulation and apparently as much within its spirit as when the exchange was made by and between two officers. (U. S. v. Phisterer, 94 U. S., 219.)

Said regulation, however, does not apply to the case of an officer who, at his own request, is ordered to his home to await orders; his home is not a "station" and therefore there is no exchange of stations within the meaning of the regulation. (U. S. v. Phisterer, 94 U. S., 219.)

See Kozlowski v. United States (54 Ct. Cls., 206), decided January 13, 1919, without an opinion, in which judgment was rendered against the United States for mileage in favor of a paymaster's clerk in the Navy who was permitted to exchange stations with another paymaster's clerk. (See also file 26266-664.)

Officer traveling by permission.—Under the act of June 30, 1876 (19 Stat., 159), an officer was entitled to mileage if the cause of his travel was "public business." When the commander of a squadron on the high seas decides that there are no habitable quarters for certain warrant officers on the ship, and that he has no alternative save that of detaching them "with permission" to return home, he not feeling at liberty "to order" them home, because their quarters had been assigned by the department, the cause of the travel was public business. Request on the part of the inferior and permission on the part of the superior officer do not necessarily change public business into private business. (Barker v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 288.)

See also Katz v. United States (52 Ct. Cls., 32), noted below.

Officer can not be deprived of mileage allowed by law.—An officer, prior to appointment as paymaster's clerk in the Navy, was

"authorized," by telegram from the Secretary of the Navy, to report at Mare Island, Calif., for necessary physical examination; and "if qualified, authorized proceed at own expense to Newport, R. I., and report Minnesota as paymaster's clerk." On the same date the Secretary addressed a letter to the candidate, authorizing him to report to the commandant, navy yard, Mare Island, for examination, and stating that, if found qualified, "you will execute the inclosed acceptance, oath of office, and beneficiary slip, and will proceed at your own expense to Newport, R. I., reporting to the commanding officer of the Minnesota for the above-mentioned duty"; and directing him to forward a true copy "of this order" to the Bureau of Navigation. The candidate was found qualified, and executed the oath and acceptance at Mare Island, Calif.; and then performed travel to Newport and reported for duty on the Minnesota. Held, that he became a paymaster's clerk in the Navy at Mare Island, upon executing the oath of office, and that the travel performed by him to Newport was travel "under orders." Further held, that the right of an officer of the Navy, including a paymaster's clerk (in 1913), to the emoluments and allowances pertaining to his office and prescribed by statute is fixed, and the appointing power can not attach conditions to the appointment which have the effect of depriving the officer of what the law authorizes him to receive. The Secretary would have no more right to require the officer to waive his statutory travel pay than he would have had to require a waiver of part of his salary as a condition precedent to his acceptance or enjoyment of his office. (Katzer v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 32, citing Glavey v. U. S., 182 U. S., 595, and Andrews v. U. S., 240 U. S., 90. See also Comp. Dec., Mar. 10, 1917, appeal No. 26679, in case of Chief Pay Clerk T. M. Schnotala, and 23 Comp. Dec., 420, 421; compare Hunt v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cls., 135; 5 Comp. Dec., 514; and 9 Comp. Dec., 5, noted under sec. 1422, R. S., "Transportation may be waived.")

In the Katzer case, above noted, it was further held that the Secretary's direction to the officer to proceed at his own expense did not necessarily mean that his acceptance of the office would be upon the condition that the Government would not be expected or required to bear his mileage; that under section 1566, Revised Statutes, as amended, an officer must travel at his own expense to be entitled to the statutory allowance of mileage when traveling from point to point within the United States; that in charging the officer to travel to Newport at his own expense the Secretary did what the law required as a condition to receiving any travel allowance, and it is more reasonable to ascribe that purpose to the Secretary's order than it is to adopt the view that the Secretary's direction constituted an illegal condition.

Travel must be performed under orders.—There is no act of Congress or Navy regulation authorizing the payment of traveling expenses of an officer while traveling in the interests of the service unless by order of an officer having the authority to make such order. (Gove v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 251.)

Travel required by officer's delinquency.—A boatswain in the Navy was absent from his vessel when she sailed; he was ordered by the commander of the fleet to take passage on a steamer at his own expense and rejoin his ship; he claimed mileage for such travel. Held, that claim must be denied. Mileage is a form of reimbursement, and "public business" is the foundation on which it rests. If private delinquency and not public business was the cause of the travel, the officer disbursed nothing for the Government. In such case the commanding officer could not make the Government liable for mileage by ordering the officer to rejoin his ship. (Perrimond v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 509.)

The right of an officer to mileage depends upon his having traveled upon public business. Ordinarily it is for his commanding officer to determine whether public business required it. If he be delinquent and ordered to travel at his own expense, he can not recover mileage. (Hannum v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 516.)

Wording of order not controlling as to character of travel.—The question being presented whether travel performed by an officer of the Navy, under orders, was on public business, held, that the rule is well settled that the terms of an order given for any purpose can not determine the character of the travel or the service performed, but that the question must be determined from the particular facts in each case. (McCauley v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 105, citing Curry v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 393, 398; McGovern v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 63; Leach v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 132; and Doyle v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 181.)

Mileage allowed for shortest usually traveled route.—An officer is ordinarily bound to travel by the shortest usually traveled route, but not by an extraordinary and unusual route because it is the shortest. (Hannum v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 516.)

Mileage should not be computed by tracing a direct route upon a chart, but by ascertaining the distance of the shortest route of ordinary travel. (DuBose v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 514.)

If public business was an element in an officer's circuitry of route, he should recover mileage therefor, under the act of June 30, 1876 (19 Stat., 65); if it was not, the Government is not answerable for the needless distance. (DuBose v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 514.)

An order requiring an officer to leave for his station before a designated date does not authorize him to travel by a circuitous route if other means offer prior to the appointed date. (Crosby v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cls., 131.)

By the Revised Statutes, section 1566, as modified by the act of June 30, 1876 (19 Stat., 65), mileage is allowed to naval officers. When the choice of the route is left to the discretion of the officer, his mileage should be calculated by the shortest usually traveled route, regardless of the distance actually traveled, unless some good reason be shown for the deviation. (Crosby v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cls., 131.)

Travel performed not in conformity with orders.—When an officer does not travel by the most direct route, or being ordered to travel by one, is compelled to travel by another, he must bring to the accounting officers the authority or ratification of the Navy Department; neglecting to do so, he must establish his rights judicially. (Hannum v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 516.)

An officer at a foreign station receives an order stating that his resignation is accepted to take effect on his "arrival in the United States," and directing him to proceed to New York and report by letter the date of his arrival. The officer travels by another route, entering the United States at San Francisco; he reports the reasons for so doing, and the Secretary approves his action and orders that his resignation take effect the date of his arrival in New York. Held, that where a naval officer satisfies the Secretary of the Navy that the route traveled by him was proper, admitting the circumstances, ratification was as effective as antecedent authority. (Allerdice v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 511.)

Permission given by an admiral on a foreign station to an officer to return home by a merchantman at his own cost, instead of by a ship of war as directed by the Navy Department does not constitute the travel as upon public business. (Pendleton v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 5.)

Where a naval officer did not travel home in the manner directed by the department, and his action has not been ratified or approved, an informal permission by his immediate commanding officer to return in another manner does not alter the legal situation of his claim for mileage. (Pendleton v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 5.)

Where a naval officer under orders to return home on a ship of war technically disobeys by returning on a merchantman, he can not receive mileage, though the exercise of his discretion in consequence of the changed position of the ship of war may have been a wise one. (Pendleton v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 5.)

Effect of change in law while travel being performed.—The claim of a naval officer for his expenses when traveling under orders rests, not upon contract with the Government, but upon acts of Congress; and when part of such a journey is performed when one statute is in force, and the remainder after another statute takes effect, providing a different rate of compensation, the compensation for each part of the journey is to be at the rate provided by the statute in force when the traveling was done. (U. S. v. McDonald, 128 U. S., 471.)

Who are "officers" within meaning of mileage laws.—See note above, under "act of 1874 repealed only in part by act of 1876."

A paymaster's clerk appointed by a paymaster in the Navy, although his appointment is indorsed with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, is not an officer of the Navy within the meaning of the statute of June 30, 1876, because there is no statute authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a paymaster's clerk or requiring his approval of such an appointment; and the regulations of the Navy in force at the time did not require any such appointment or approval for the holding of the position. Therefore a paymaster's clerk was not an officer, either appointed by the President or under the authority of any law vesting such appointment in the head of a department; and was not entitled to allowance for mileage under the act of 1876, notwithstanding that the word "officer" might be construed in a more popular sense as embracing such clerk in other connections. (U. S. v. Mouat, 124 U. S., 303; see also note to sec. 1386, R. S.)

A paymaster's clerk (prior to the act of Mar. 3, 1915, noted under sec. 1386, R. S.), was not an "officer of the Navy" entitled to mileage within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1029). A regulation of the Navy Department vesting the appointment of such clerks in the Secretary of the Navy was not sufficient to change their status so as to bring them within the terms of said act. Such regulation was not a law of Congress within the meaning of the Constitution relating to appointment of officers, and heads of departments can not confer upon themselves authority to appoint officers of the United States by mere regulations. (Ashton v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 65; distinguishing Katzer v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 294.)

Under the act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 606), a paymaster's clerk, "while holding appointment in accordance with law," was given the same pay and allowances as warrant officers of like length of service in the Navy. Under this act it is not necessary to determine whether a paymaster's clerk was an officer of the Navy within the meaning of the mileage law of March 3, 1901, as said act of 1910 prescribes what the pay and allowances or emoluments of paymaster's clerks shall be. If an act provided that clerks in the office of the Auditor for the War Department should receive the same pay and allowances as warrant officers in the Navy, it would not be necessary to inquire whether the clerks were officers of the Navy, any more than it would be supposed that because the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, assimilated the pay of officers in the Navy to that of officers of corresponding rank in the Army they had to become officers of the Army. It follows that, under the act of 1910, paymasters' clerks became entitled to mileage as allowed warrant officers by the act of March 3, 1901. (Katzer v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 32.)

A mate in the Navy is not an officer of the United States within the meaning of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Mouat v. United States (124 U. S., 303, 307), and is not entitled to mileage. Money paid such mate for mileage was received by him in violation of law and may be recovered by the United States on a counterclaim. (Baxter v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 75; see also note to sec. 1408, R. S.)

Sec. 1567. [Officers serving as store-keepers on foreign stations.]—Officers who are ordered to take charge of naval stores for foreign squadrons, in the place of naval store-keepers, shall be entitled to receive, while so employed, the shore-duty pay of their grades; and when the same is less than fifteen hundred dollars a year, they may be allowed compensation, including such shore-duty pay, at a rate not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars a year.—(17 June, 1844, c. 107, s. 1, v. 5, pp. 700, 701.

See sections 1413 and 1438, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1568. [Civilians, store-keepers on foreign stations.]—Civilians appointed as store-keepers on foreign stations shall receive compensation for such services, at a rate not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars a year.—(17 June, 1844, c. 107, s. 1, v. 5, pp. 700, 701. 3 Mar., 1847, c. 48, s. 3, v. 9, pp. 172, 173.)

See sections 1414 and 1438, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1569. [Pay of enlisted men. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows: "Sec. 1569. The pay to be allowed to petty officers, excepting mates, and the pay and bounty upon enlistment of seamen, ordinary seamen, firemen, and coal-heavers, in the naval service, shall be fixed by the President: Provided, That the whole sum to be given for the whole pay aforesaid, and for the pay of officers, and for the said bounties upon enlistments shall not exceed, for any one year, the amount which may, in such year, be appropriated for such purposes."—(18 Apr., 1814, c. 84, s. 1, v. 3, p. 136. 3 Mar., 1847, c. 48, s. 4, v. 9, p. 173. 1 July, 1864, c. 201, s. 4, v. 13, p. 342. 3 Mar., 1865, c. 124, s. 2, v. 13, p. 539.)

It was amended by act of March 3, 1899, section 16 (30 Stat., 1008), quoted under section 1573, Revised Statutes, fixing increased pay of enlisted men for continuous service in the Navy. See decisions noted under section 1573 relating to continuous-service pay, and honorable-discharge gratuity.

It was superseded by the following provisions of the naval appropriation act, May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128):

"The pay of all active and retired enlisted men of the Navy is hereby increased ten per centum: * * * all pay herein provided shall remain in force until changed by act of Congress. Nothing herein shall be construed so as to reduce the pay or allowances now authorized by law for any * * * enlisted man of the active or retired lists of the Navy, and all laws inconsistent with this provision are hereby repealed."

Other changes were made by the following statutes:

Hospital Corps.—"* * * the Hospital Corps of the United States Navy shall consist of the following grades and ratings: * * * enlisted men classified as chief pharmacists' mates pharmacists' mates, first class; pharmacists' mates, second class; pharmacists' mates, third class; hospital apprentices, first class; and hospital apprentices, second class; such classifications in enlisted ratings to correspond respectively to the enlisted ratings, seamen branch, of chief petty officers; petty officers, first class; petty officers, second class; petty officers, third class; seamen, first class; and seamen, second class." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 572, superseding prior laws relating to the Hospital Corps.)

"* * * the pay, allowances, and emoluments of the enlisted men of the Hospital Corps shall be the same as are now, or may hereafter be, allowed for respective corresponding ratings, except the rating of turret captain of the first class in the seaman branch of the Navy: Provided, That the pay of the rating of the chief pharmacist's mate shall be the same as that now allowed for the existing rating of hospital steward." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 573.) It had previously been provided by act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 146), that "the pay of enlisted men of the Hospital Corps shall be the same as that provided for the corresponding ratings of the seaman branch and other staff corps of the Navy"; and by act of June 17, 1898 (30 Stat., 474, 475), that "the pay of hospital stewards shall be sixty dollars a month, the pay of hospital apprentices (first class) thirty dollars a month, and the pay of hospital apprentices twenty dollars a month, with the increase on account of length of service as is now or may hereafter be allowed by law to other enlisted men in the Navy."

The effect of the act of May 13, 1908, was to allow enlisted men of the Hospital Corps the same rates of pay as allowed other enlisted men of corresponding ratings under Executive orders issued pursuant to section 1569, Revised Statutes; but this did not entitle hospital stewards to the pay of the rating of chief petty officer from the date of said act, but only from the date that such rating was conferred upon him. (17 Comp. Dec., 452. By a clause in the naval appropriation act of August 22, 1912, the Auditor for the Navy Department was directed to allow payments which had been made to hospital stewards who were granted permanent appointments as of May 13, 1908, and which payments had been disallowed pursuant to the comptroller's decision last cited.)

Ratings changed.—"That the designation of the ratings of coal passer be changed to fireman, third class, and that of ordinary seaman to seaman, second class, without change of pay; and that the Bureau of Navigation be authorized under rules established for the advancement of other enlisted men, to advance printers to the ratings of printer, first class, and chief printer, which ratings are hereby authorized with same pay and increases allowed to yeomen, first class, and chief yeomen, respectively: And provided further, That the rating of storekeeper is hereby established in the artificer branch with the following rates of pay per month: Chief petty officer, $50; petty officer, first class, $40; petty officer, second class, $35; petty officer, third class, $30, subject to such increases of pay and allowances as are or may hereafter be authorized by law for the enlisted men of the Navy." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 575.)

Naval Flying Corps.—"The enlisted personnel of the Naval Flying Corps shall be distributed by the Secretary of the Navy in the various ratings as now obtain in the Navy in so far as such ratings are applicable to duties connected with aircraft." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 585, 586.)

"* * * the enlisted men of the Naval Flying Corps shall receive the same pay and allowances that are now provided by law for * * * enlisted men of the same grade or rank and rating in the Navy and Marine Corps detailed to duty with aircraft involving actual flying." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 583.)

"* * * enlisted men, while detailed as student aviators and student airmen involving actually flying in aircraft, shall receive the same pay and allowances that are now provided by law for * * * enlisted men of the same grade or rank and rating in the Navy detailed for duty with aircraft." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 584.)

"Hereafter enlisted men of the Navy or Marine Corps, while detailed for duty involving actual flying in aircraft, shall receive the pay, and the permanent additions thereto, including allowances, of their rating and service, or rank and service, as the case may be, plus fifty per centum increase thereof." (Act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 939.)

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718), it was provided that the "allowances" of "enlisted men * * * of the naval service shall in no case be increased by reason of the performance of aviation duty."

See note to section 1556, Revised Statutes, under "Additional pay for special duty—Aviation duty."

Naval Academy Band.—"The Naval Academy Band shall hereafter consist of one leader, with pay and allowances of first lieutenant in the Marine Corps; one second leader, with a base pay of $81 per month; forty-five musicians, first class, with a base pay of $51 per month; twenty-seven musicians, second class, with a base pay of $44 per month; one drum major, with a base pay of $57.20 per month; and the said leader of the band, second leader of the band, drum major of the band, and the enlisted musicians of the band shall be entitled to the same benefits in respect to pay, emoluments, and retirement arising from longevity, reenlistment, and length of service as are or may hereafter become applicable to other officers or enlisted men of the Navy." (Act July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 152; modifying act of April 12, 1910, 36 Stat., 297.)

Under the act of April 12, 1910 (36 Stat., 297), providing for the enlistment of the Naval Academy bandmen and giving them "the same benefits in respect to pay, emoluments, and retirement arising from longevity, reenlistment, and length of service as are or may hereafter become applicable to other enlisted men of the Navy," such bandmen upon enlistment are entitled to be credited with all services as members of said band in computing continuous-service pay, such comutation to be made as if actually enlisted and discharged as provided by law in effect when such service was rendered; and if citizens of the United States they are entitled to the additional pay provided by General Order No. 34 of November 28, 1906 (art. 1134, par. 7, Navy Regs., 1909), and to ten per cent increase on all permanent pay as provided by the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128). (17 Comp. Dec., 27.)

New ratings established.—"The ratings of engineman, first class, engineman, second class; blacksmith, first class, blacksmith, second class; coppersmith, first class, coppersmith, second class; pattern maker, first class, pattern maker, second class; molder, first class, molder, second class; chief special mechanic and special mechanic, first class, be, and they are hereby, established in the artificer branch of the Navy with the following rates of base pay per month: Engineman, first class, $45; engineman, second class, $40; blacksmith, first class, $65; blacksmith, second class, $50; coppersmith, first class, $65; coppersmith, second class, $50; pattern maker, first class, $65; pattern maker, second class, $50; molder, first class, $65; molder, second class, $50; chief special mechanic, $127; special mechanic, first class, $80: Provided, That the base pay of machinists' mates, second class, and water tenders be, and it is hereby, increased from $40 to $45 per month: Provided further, That all the aforesaid rates of pay shall be subject to such increases of pay and allowances as are, or may hereafter be, authorized by law for enlisted men of the Navy: And provided further, That appointments or enlistments in the said ratings may be made from enlisted men in the Navy or from civil life, respectively, and the qualifications of candidates for any of said ratings shall be determined in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe." (Act Oct. 6, 1917, 40 Stat., 397.)

Grades and ratings to be established by Secretary.—"That hereafter the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to establish such grades and ratings as may be necessary for the proper administration of the enlisted personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps." (Act June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 836.)

Increases in pay during war.—"That commencing June first, nineteen hundred and seventeen, and continuing until not later than six months after the termination of the present war, all enlisted men of the Navy of the United States in active service whose base pay does not exceed $21 per month shall receive an increase of $15 per month; those whose base pay is over $21 and does not exceed $24 per month, an increase of $12 per month; those whose base pay is over $24 and less than $45 per month, an increase of $8 per month; and those whose base pay is $45 or more per month, an increase of $6 per month: Provided, That the increases of pay herein authorized shall not enter into the computation of continuous-service pay." (Act May 22, 1917, sec. 15, 40 Stat., 87.)

"Base pay," as that term is used in the act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 87), relative to increase in pay of enlisted men during the present war, is the fixed monthly sum to which such enlisted men are respectively entitled, stripped of all increases or additions thereto by percentages or otherwise, and accordingly does not include the ten per cent increase provided in the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128). (23 Comp. Dec., 677.)

War time increases temporarily continued.—"The rates of pay prescribed in section 15 of an act * * * approved May 22, 1917, are hereby made the permanent rates of pay of the enlisted men of the Navy during their present current enlistment and for those who enlist or reenlist prior to July 1, 1920, for the term of such enlistment or reenlistment." (Act July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 140.)

The 10 per cent increase provided by the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), for enlisted men of the Navy, does not attach to the increase provided in section 15 of the act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 87), which the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 140), makes a part of the permanent pay of a rating. (26 Comp. Dec., 143.)

Temporary increases of 1920.—By act of May 18, 1920, section 6 (41 Stat., 602), it was provided that "commencing January 1, 1920, the following shall be the rate of base pay for each enlisted rating: Chief petty officers with acting appointments, $99 per month; chief petty officers with permanent appointments and mates, $126 per month; petty officers, first class, $84 per month; petty officers, second class, $72 per month; petty officers, third class, $60 per month; nonrated men, first class, $54 per month; nonrated men, second class, $48 per month; nonrated men, third class, $33 per month: Provided, That the base pay of firemen, first class, shall be $60 per month; firemen, second class, $54 per month; firemen, third class, $48 per month: Provided further, That the rate of base pay for each rating in the Naval Academy Band shall be as follows: Second leader, with acting appointment, $99 per month with permanent appointment, $126 per month; drum major, $84 per month; musicians, first class, $72 per month; musicians, second class, $60 per month: Provided further, That the base pay of cabin stewards and cabin cooks shall be $84 per month; wardroom stewards and wardroom cooks, $72 per month; steerage stewards and steerage cooks, $72 per month; warrant officers' stewards and warrant officers' cooks, $60 per month; mess attendants, first class, $42 per month; mess attendants, second class, $36 per month; mess attendants, third class, $33 per month: * * * Provided further, That the rates of base pay herein fixed shall not be further increased 10 per centum as authorized by an act approved May 13, 1908, nor by the temporary war increases as authorized by section 15 of the act approved May 22, 1917, as amended by the act approved July 11, 1919." By section 13 of the same act (41 Stat., 604), it was provided that the rates of bases pay therein established for enlisted men "shall remain effective until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, unless sooner amended or repealed," and that said rates of pay "shall be the rates of pay during the current enlistment of all men in active service on the date of the approval of this act, and for those who enlist, reenlist, or extend their enlistments prior to July 1, 1922, for the term of such enlistment, reenlistment, or extended enlistment." It was further provided therein "that the increases provided in this act shall not enter into the computation of the retired pay of * * * enlisted men who may be retired prior to July 1, 1922." By section 14 of the same act (41 Stat., 604), it was provided "that nothing contained in this act shall operate to reduce the pay or allowances of any * * * enlisted man on the active or retired list: Provided, That the allowances and gratuities now authorized by existing law are not changed hereby, except as otherwise specified in this act."

The rates of finisher, boiler maker, engineer's blacksmith, armorer's mate, cooper, ship's baker, and second-class painter being abolished by Executive order dated November 5, 1883, and promulgated in General Order No. 310, of the Navy Department, dated November 7, 1883, men holding those ratings in the service on December 31, 1883, will be disposed of as follows, viz: Finishers serving on seagoing or other vessels to be rated first-class machinists; those available on receiving ships and in hospital to be rated second-class machinists. Boiler makers serving on seagoing or other vessels to be rated second-class machinists; those available on receiving ships and in hospitals to be rated third-class machinists. Engineer's blacksmiths and ship's blacksmiths serving on seagoing or other vessels to stand a competitive examination as to their qualifications to perform general blacksmithing work, and those found most capable to be retained as blacksmiths; all others to be discharged from the service, giving such as are entitled thereto the same benefits they would receive had they served out the full term of enlistment. Armorer's mates, coopers, ship's bakers, and second-class painters to be disrated to landsmen,

The rates of seamen, E. F., and ordinary seamen, E. GENERAL ORDER } NOVEMBER 21, 1884.
No. 327. }

From and after January 1, 1885, the form of honorable discharge from the naval service, authorized by section 1427, Revised Statutes of the United States, will be the "honorable-discharge and continuous-service certificate."

All men (except officers' cooks, stewards, and servants enlisted for special service) now serving under enlistments for three years, or who may hereafter enlist for that period, shall receive an "honorable-discharge and continuous-service certificate" at the expiration of their terms of enlistment, upon the recommendation of their commanding officers.

Any man holding an "honorable-discharge and continuous-service certificate" who reenlists for three years, within three months from the date of his last discharge, shall receive an increase of $1 per month to the pay prescribed for the rating in which he serves, for each consecutive reenlistment, in addition to the "honorable-discharge money."

Any man holding an "honorable-discharge and continuous-service certificate" who fails to reenlist within three months from date of last discharge will derive no further advantages therefrom.

The department directs that the records of conduct and professional qualifications on the "enlistment records" shall be a verification of the recommendations for "honorable-discharge and continuous-service certificate," and hereafter only those shall be recommended who obtain, during their terms of enlistment, a general average of 4.

In order that commanding officers of vessels upon which men complete their terms of enlistment shall be informed as to the previous merit of said men, the original "Enlistment record" (Form 12), which accompanies an enlisted man upon his first transfer, will thereafter be carefully preserved and accompany him upon all subsequent transfers, until his term of enlistment has been completed. This form has been amended so as to show the record of conduct as averaged by the commanding officer of the vessel for the period for which the man has served under his command. The final averages will be made by the officer under whom the man is serving at the time his enlistment expires when about to be discharged. These "enlistment records" must be forwarded to the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting.

In addition to the above requirements, enlisted men must serve at least two years and nine months of their terms in order to receive an "honorable-discharge and continuous-service certificate," except in extraordinary cases, which will be provided for by the department as they may occur.

When any man holding an "honorable-discharge and continuous-service certificate" shall fail to receive a recommendation for its renewal upon the expiration of his term of enlistment, the words "Not entitled to honorable discharge" shall be written on the line below the last entry. Men so discharged will receive no further pecuniary benefit from their "honorable-discharge and continuous-service certificate," and entries of reenlistment or subsequent service must not be noted thereon.

"Good-conduct badges" are special distinctions for fidelity, zeal, and obedience, and will not be granted for the first term of enlistment under "continuous service." At the expiration of subsequent reenlistments for three years, within three months from date of discharge, men who hold "honorable-discharge and continuous-service certificates," have obtained a general average of 4.5 on their conduct records, and are recommended by their commanding officers, will be entitled to and receive said badges. The first badge will be a medal, as hitherto. Subsequent badges to be clasps, with the name of the vessel from which given engraved thereon, to be worn on ribbon above medal. When any enlisted man shall have received three such badges, under consecutive reenlistments as above, he shall be enlisted as a petty officer in the rating in which he is best qualified to serve, and shall continue to hold a petty officer's rating during subsequent continuous reenlistments, and shall not be reduced to a lower rating except by sentence of court-martial.

Paragraphs 18 and 20, page 100, and paragraph 22, page 101, United States Navy Regulations, are hereby annulled.

WM. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 26, 1903.

The following Executive order is published for the information and guidance of the service:

WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D. C., June 26, 1903.

All chief petty officers of the Navy whose pay is not fixed by law, including chief water tenders, which rating is hereby established, who, on or after July 1, 1903, shall receive permanent appointments after qualifying therefor by passing such examination as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, shall be paid at the rate of $70 a month; those who serve under permanent appointments issued prior to said date, or under acting appointments, shall be paid at the rates now in force. The pay of chief water tenders who hold acting appointments shall be $50 a month. Nothing herein contained, however, shall operate to reduce the present pay of any enlisted man in the Navy.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

On and after July 1, 1903, permanent appointments will be issued by the Bureau of Navigation to chief petty officers in the service only after the fitness of the man for promotion shall have been shown before a board consisting of three officers detailed from a ship or ships other than the one on board of which the candidate is serving. The examination shall show that the applicant is in all respects fitted to fill the rating in which he seeks a permanent appointment. Such appointments will entitle the holder to draw pay at the rate of $70 per month.

All persons holding permanent appointments as chief petty officers issued prior to July 1, 1903, may qualify by passing examination as above. In the event of their qualifying they will be given new permanent appointments by the Bureau of Navigation from the date they pass their examination.

Chief petty officers who hold permanent appointments issued prior to July 1, 1903, and who do not qualify by examination; those who reenlist under permanent appointments issued prior to July 1, 1903; and those who have acting appointments will draw pay under the present pay table until such time as they qualify by examination and are given permanent appointments.

When these permanent appointments are presented to the pay officer for an increase in pay, he will procure orders from the commanding officer upon S. and A. Form No. 22 (Ratings and Disratings) to make the appropriate changes on his books.

GENERAL ORDER }
No. 137. }

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 25, 1903.

The following Executive order is published for the information and guidance of the naval service:

WHITE HOUSE, July 25, 1903.

Enlisted men of the Navy, after having qualified as gun pointers, according to standards of marksmanship and rules that may be prescribed from time to time by the Secretary of the Navy, and who are regularly detailed as gun pointers by the commanding officer of a vessel, shall receive monthly, in addition to the pay of their respective ratings, extra pay as follows:

Heavy gun pointers, first class, $10; second class, $6; for the class of guns comprising those of 8-inch caliber or larger.

Intermediate gun pointers, first class, $8; second class, $4; for the class of guns comprising those of 4-inch to 7-inch caliber, inclusive.

Secondary gun pointers, first class, $4; second class, $2; for the class of guns comprising those of 1-pounder to 3-inch caliber, inclusive.

Extra pay shall be allowed a qualified gun pointer during not less than two years from and after the date of his qualifying, but only while he is regularly detailed as a gun pointer at a gun of the class at which he qualified.

The following ratings and rates of pay per month for the same are hereby established in the naval service:

Chief turret captain, holding acting appointment as such, $60; holding a permanent appointment as such, $70.

Turret captain, first class, $50.

Enlisted men of the Navy regularly detailed by the commanding officer of a vessel as gun captains, except as secondary battery guns, shall receive, in addition to the pay of their respective ratings, $5 per month, which, in the case of men holding certificates as gun captains or of graduation from the gun-captain class, petty officers' school, shall include the $2 per month to which such certificates entitle them.

This order shall go into effect October 1, 1903.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

In pursuance of the provisions of the foregoing order, the following instructions will be observed:

RULES GOVERNING EXTRA PAY TO GUN POINTERS

The standards of marksmanship entitling men to extra pay as gun pointers (first and second classes) of the three classes of guns (heavy, intermediate, and secondary) will be announced by the department as soon as practicable after the completion of the record target practice to be held early in 1904. These standards are subject to change yearly.

A gun pointer's "gunnery record" will be his sole certificate of qualification, and the rate of his extra pay as a qualified gun pointer will be determined by his score at an annual record target practice, signed by the chief umpire detailed for the ship at that practice.

As soon as the official announcement of standards of marksmanship is received, the commanding officer of each vessel shall direct the pay officer (using S. and A. Form No. 236, "Order for extra compensation for enlisted men") to credit the men that have qualified as gun pointers, first or second class, with the extra pay allowed them, respectively, by the foregoing Executive order; and over the men's names on the pay roll shall be entered in red ink the abbreviations "H. G. P., 1st Cl.," "H. G. P., 2d Cl.," "I. G. P., 1st Cl.," "I. G. P., 2d Cl.," "S. G. P., 1st Cl.," "S. G. P., 2d Cl.," as the case may be. Such extra pay shall be allowed from the date that the vessel on which the pointer qualifies completes her record target practice.

A gun pointer shall receive extra pay as such only during the time that he is regularly detailed by the commanding officer of the vessel as a gun pointer at a gun of a class at which he has qualified; if he has qualified at more than one class of gun, he shall receive only the extra pay allowed for a gun of the class at which he is regularly detailed as gun pointer.

Although the standards of marksmanship are subject to change yearly, a pointer that qualifies at any annual record practice is entitled to the corresponding extra pay for all the time during the ensuing period of two years that he is regularly detailed as a gun pointer at a gun of the class at which he qualified at that practice.

A qualified gun pointer reenlisting for four years within four months of his discharge, and regularly stationed as a gun pointer at a gun of a class at which he was qualified at the time of his discharge, shall be entitled to the corresponding extra pay during the unexpired portion of the period of two years from the date of qualifying—the interval of time between the date of his discharge and reenlistment to be included in the period of two years.

QUALIFICATIONS AND APPOINTMENT OF TURRET CAPTAINS.

The qualifications required for the duties of turret captain are sufficient knowledge and ability to drill the turret crews and to control the fire of the guns in action in the absence of the turret officer, and the mechanical knowledge and skill necessary to overhaul all parts of the turret and gun gear and keep them at all times in efficient condition.

For each 10-inch, 12-inch, and 13-inch turret, and for each combination of superimposed turrets, one chief turret captain is allowed; but a turret captain, first class, may be assigned to any such turret for which no chief turret captain is available. For each 8-inch turret (not superimposed) one turret captain, first class, is allowed.

To fill these ratings, wholly or in part, commanding officers will select candidates that appear to possess the necessary qualifications from gunner's mates, seamen gunners, men holding the rate of gun captain or certificate of graduation from the petty officers' school, gun captain class, and other intelligent men—not alone of the seaman branch—of mechanical bent and good promise as leading men. The names of these men shall be sent to the squadron commander, who will order their examination before a board of not less than three officers, the majority to be turret officers if practicable, to be appointed by him, none of whom shall be taken from the ship to which the candidates belong. Commanding officers shall nominate at least two candidates for each vacancy as turret captain, in order that the examination may be competitive.

The candidates that pass the examination will be eligible for acting appointments as turret captains, first class; but no chief petty officer shall be rated a turret captain, first class, against his will. Permanent appointments and advancement will be governed by the same regulations that apply to other petty officer ratings.

EXTRA PAY FOR GUN CAPTAINS.

When the commanding officer details a petty officer or other enlisted man as a gun captain he shall direct the pay officer to credit him with the extra pay allowed by the foregoing Executive order (using S. and A. Form No. 236, "Order for extra compensation for enlisted men"), and over the man's name on the pay roll shall be entered in red ink the abbreviation "G. C."

DISCONTINUING EXTRA PAY.

When the commanding officer revokes the detail of a man as a gun captain or gun pointer he shall, in writing, direct the pay officer to discontinue the corresponding extra pay.

WILLIAM H. MOODY, Secretary.

All other enlisted men, not to exceed..	60. 00

Commanding officers will direct which of the above amounts is to be allowed in each case of first enlistment.

Attention is called to the Uniform Regulations, 1905, pages 53 and 54, regarding the portions of outfits to be issued on enlistment, and on transfer to cruising vessels; also to General Order 31, of October 29, 1906, regarding the checkage against the accounts of men discharged during the first six months of first enlistment for any cause other than disability incurred in the line of duty, of the cost of such portion of the allowed outfit as may have been drawn.

THE WHITE HOUSE, November 16, 1907.

The extra pay allowed gun pointers in accordance with the Executive order of July 25, 1903, shall be allowed a gun pointer regularly detailed as a gun pointer at a gun of the class at which he qualified only as long as he remains qualified: Provided, This order shall be construed as affecting only gun pointers who qualify subsequent to the date of this order.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

V. H. METCALF, Secretary.

GENERAL ORDER }
No. 62. }

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 7, 1908.

The following Executive order is published for the information and guidance of the service:

On and after March 1, 1908, the classification and pay of mess attendants in the Navy who are citizens of the United States shall be as follows:

	Per month.
Mess attendants, first class	$30. 00
Mess attendants, second class.....	25. 00
Mess attendants, third class.....	20. 00

On and after March 1, 1908, all stewards and cooks in the messman branch who are citizens of the United States and who hold, or may receive certificates of qualification as stewards or cooks, shall receive $5 per month additional to the pay of their rating while holding such certificate, such additional pay to be of a permanent character as regular pay.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,

January 28, 1908.

On and after March 1, 1908, all mess attendants who are citizens of the United States shall be paid in accordance with the above Executive order.

Certificates of qualification heretofore or hereafter issued by the Bureau of Navigation shall remain in force for a period of two years from their date, unless sooner revoked in the discretion of the commanding officer for cause, and shall be renewed by the commanding officer at the expiration of each two years for a similar term, provided the continued good performance of duty of the steward or cook so warrants.

V. H. METCALF, Secretary.

3. Act of May 13, 1908, construed.—The act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), provided that "the pay of all active and retired enlisted men of the Navy is hereby increased ten per centum," and that "all pay herein provided shall remain in force until changed by act of Congress." The 10 per cent increase provided by said act of May 13, 1908, applied only to the pay proper of enlisted men, or their base pay and permanent additional pay, such as additional pay allowed by Executive orders for continuous service, longevity service, good-conduct medals, pins, or bars, and for graduation certificates; and did not apply to their temporary additional pay provided by Executive orders for special service, such as for gun pointers, messmen, coxswains of steam launches, jacks-of-the-dust, etc. (14 Comp. Dec., 829.)

Nevertheless, while the increase of 10 per cent allowed by the act of May 13, 1908, applied only to base pay and permanent additions thereto, the further provision of said act, that all pay therein provided shall continue in force until changed by act of Congress, included not only such base pay and permanent additions thereto, but also temporary additional pay for special service. (24 Comp. Dec., 364.)

The effect of the act of May 13, 1908, was to make the pay of all enlisted men of the Navy, then in force, and as increased by said act, permanent and subject to change only by legislation of Congress; and to prohibit any additional compensation for special services performed by enlisted men under authority of Executive orders issued since May 13, 1908. Accordingly, where Executive orders in force on the last-named date limited the payment of additional compensation to men detailed to perform special services on board vessels of the Navy, the conditions prescribed by such Executive orders could not, after the date of said act, be changed by Executive order so as to allow such additional compensation for similar services performed at shore stations. (24 Comp. Dec., 364.)

Held, however, that additional compensation provided by Executive order prior to May 13, 1908, for enlisted men of the Navy detailed as gun pointers "by the commanding officer of a vessel," may be allowed enlisted men detailed as gun pointers by the officer in command of an enlisted force of the Navy aboard a merchant ship, who may be considered as the commanding officer within the meaning of said order; but that the conditions under which said additional compensation may be allowed are not subject to change. (24 Comp. Dec., 364.)

The act of May 13, 1908, providing that the pay of all enlisted men of the Navy is hereby increased 10 per cent, and that all pay herein provided shall remain in force until changed by act of Congress, took from the President the powers previously conferred upon him, under section 1569, Revised Statutes; and Congress adopted, as the basis of the pay for enlisted men of the Navy, the rates then in force, making such rates permanent. (26 Comp. Dec., 428.)

By the act of May 13, 1908, Congress intended to grant, by direct legislative action, the right to pay previously granted by Executive orders, subject to the limitations which the Comptroller of the Treasury and the courts had by decisions placed thereon. Had Congress intended to extend benefits beyond those which had been held to arise under Executive orders, it is proper to assume that such intent would have been expressed. (26 Comp. Dec., 428.)

4. Civilians shipped on naval vessels.—Section 1569, Revised Statutes, authorizing the President to fix the pay of petty officers, seamen, and others, does not apply to seamen on a vessel who were "shipped" and not enlisted, and whose pay was fixed as a matter of agreement with the officer who shipped them. (Stovel v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 392.)

5. Insular force.—Pursuant to the authority conferred by section 1569, Revised Statutes, the insular force, United States Navy, was established by Executive order dated April 5, 1901 (incorporated in art. 4429, Navy Regs., 1913), under which the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to enlist in the insular force not to exceed 500 Filipinos in the ratings and at the rates of pay therein specified. (27 Comp. Dec., 357.)

Under the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), the rates of pay of the insular force, as established by the Executive order of April 5, 1901, plus the 10 per cent increase thereof provided by that act, was to remain in force until changed by act of Congress. (27 Comp. Dec., 357.)

Pursuant to section 1569, Revised Statutes, the President issued an order dated April 5, 1901, published in Navy Department General Order No. 40 of April 8, 1901, establishing an "insular force" of Filipinos and providing rates of pay for men enlisted therein. Held, that the enlisted men of the said insular force are enlisted men of the Regular Navy of the United States; that unless said insular force be a part of the Regular Navy there would be no authority for the establishment of such force; and that, being enlisted men of the Regular Navy, they are entitled to the outfits on first enlistment as authorized by act of April 27, 1904 (33 Stat., 326), and the extra pay for detention in the service as provided by section 1422, Revised Statutes. (12 Comp. Dec., 189; see also note to sec. 1422, R. S.)

As General Order No. 40, Navy Department, April 8, 1901, which provided for the organization of the insular force of the Navy, made no provision for the payment of additional pay for medals, pins, and bars, and as said order was not modified or enlarged by the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), held, that the members of said insular force acquired no further benefits by reason of the provisions of that act, and accordingly are not entitled to the additional pay provided for enlisted men of the Regular Navy who are awarded good-conduct medals, pins, and bars. (26 Comp. Dec., 428.)

Enlisted men of the insular force are entitled to extra pay conferred upon all enlisted men by statute; but extra pay provided by Executive orders other than that which established the insular force is not payable to members of said force. (26 Comp. Dec., 428.)

The rates of pay prescribed by section 6 of the act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 602), for certain enlisted men of the Navy are applicable to the insular force. Section 13 of the same act provides that same shall be the rates of pay during the current enlistment of "all" men in active service on the date of the approval of the act, etc. The words "all men" as used in that section clearly extend to the enlisted men of the insular force. (27 Comp. Dec., 357.)

The classification in the act of May 18, 1920, section 6, prescribing base pay for certain enlisted ratings, does not include the ratings of steward or cook to commander in chief, stewards and cooks to commandants, or any of the enlisted ratings of the insular force. Apparently no provision is made in the act for discontinuing these ratings, or adapting them to the classified ratings, and therefore they exist as ratings for which no base pay is expressly provided by law. Held, that the provision in the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 836), empowering the Secretary of the Navy to establish such grades and ratings as may be necessary for the proper administration of the enlisted personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps, confers upon the Secretary authority to remodel or change any existing ratings so as to make the designation thereof conform to the classification of the ratings for which a new base rate of pay is provided in the act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 603, 604); and therefore that the Secretary is authorized to determine the proper class in the messmen branch in which native stewards, cooks, and mess attendants of the insular force of the Navy should be placed in order to conform to the classification of ratings for which base pay is prescribed by said act of May 18, 1920. (Comp. Dec., Dec. 17, 1920, file 29199-28:1.)

6. Mates.—See notes to sections 1408, 1409, 1556, and 1573, Revised Statutes.

The exception of mates from section 1569, Revised Statutes, merely indicates that Congress, having already fixed their pay by section 1556, such pay need not be fixed by the President. Such exception of mates from other petty officers in section 1569 indicates that they are petty officers. (U. S. v. Fuller, 160 U. S., 593; see note to sec. 1579, R. S.)

A mate is eligible for selection and designation as Navy mail clerk under the act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., 417), and is entitled to receive the pay provided in said act for a Navy mail clerk in addition to his pay as mate, provided that the provision in said act for the designation and qualification of a Navy mail clerk has been fully complied with. (15 Comp. Dec., 262. See below, "Additional pay for special duty.")

In view of section 1558, Revised Statutes, mates are not entitled to the additional pay provided for by Executive order for good-conduct medals, pins, and bars. (9 Comp. Dec., 600.)

Mates being specifically excepted from section 1569, under authority of which extra compensation for good-conduct medals and bars, seamen gunners' certificates, and petty officers' certificates is provided, they are not entitled to such extra compensation. (14 Comp. Dec., 457.)

7. Mess attendants and cooks.—See also above, "Pay of insular force"; and see below, "Longevity pay, General Order No. 34."

The rates of increased pay for continuous service which, before the naval personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 16 (30 Stat., 1008), had been fixed by the President under section 1569, Revised Statutes, became by said act a part of the statutory law; said act fixed the increase of $1.36 per month to the pay prescribed for the rating of mess attendants for each consecutive reenlistment as the measure of the increase of value to the service of one who so reenlists, and it is not within the power of anyone, until the law is changed, to fix a greater or less rate. Under section 1569, the President could fix the pay to be allowed mess attendants, and could change same from time to time as he deemed just and proper; but when he had fixed the rate, then by section 16 of the personnel act Congress declared what increased amount they should receive for reenlistment. Accordingly, held, that Navy Department General Order No. 20, of January 1, 1901, fixing the pay of mess attendants for the second and third enlistments, and adding $4 to the monthly pay of the rating for a first reenlistment and $4 more per month for a second reenlistment, in addition to the $1.36 per month for each consecutive reenlistment allowed by section 16 of the personnel act of March 3, 1899, was contrary to law. (8 Comp. Dec., 227.)

A mess attendant of the Navy, third class, who holds a certificate of identity issued by the Department of Commerce and Labor, or other proper evidence showing that he was born in the Hawaiian Islands, is a citizen of the United States and as such is entitled to be paid at the rate provided for a citizen of the United States. (17 Comp. Dec., 556.)

Extra pay for enlisted men detailed as messmen was authorized by General Order No. 61 of October 17, 1901, as amended by General Order No. 79 of January 7, 1902. Held, that a man enlisted as a mess attendant is not entitled to the extra pay allowed men enlisted in other branches and temporarily detailed to duty as messmen. The pay of such mess attendants is governed by specific orders. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 11, 1908, 86 S. and A. Memo., 631.)

The rates of pay of mess attendants in the Navy who are citizens of the United States were fixed by Executive order dated January 23, 1908, and promulgated to become effective from March 1, 1908, in General Order No. 62, Navy Department, February 7, 1908. The act of May, 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), should be construed as specifically fixing, as permanent, rates of pay for each rating then in effect for the Navy. Included in these rates are the rates of pay for mess attendants, citizens of the United States. Accordingly, a mess attendant, second class, is not entitled to the pay thus fixed by law for mess attendants, third class. (25 Comp. Dec., 424, citing Gen. Order 303, June 18, 1917, note B. Compare, Comp. Dec., Apr. 14, 1914, 158 S. and A. Memo., 3038, noted below under "Retired enlisted men.")

The fact that enlisted men of the Navy holding the rating of mess attendants, second class, receive less pay, including the increase granted by the act of May 22, 1917, than mess attendants, third class, does not authorize the crediting of men holding the rating of mess attendant, second class, with the pay fixed for the third class. (25 Comp. Dec., 424.)

A wardroom cook who is a citizen of the United States and who holds a certificate of qualification as cook, issued to him while he was a warrant officer's cook, is entitled under such certificate to $5 per month additional pay until its expiration, two years from issuance unless it shall sooner lapse or be revoked. (18 Comp. Dec., 724.)

8. Additional pay for special duty, etc.—See also, below, "Retired enlisted men," and "Leave of absence"; and see above "Mess attendants and cooks."

The increased pay for aviation duty in the case of enlisted men of the Navy is to be computed upon the pay and permanent additions thereto of their rating and service. (22 Comp. Dec., 11.)

As originally provided by the act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 87), the increase of pay to enlisted men of the Navy, which was to continue until not later than six months after the termination of the then existing war, was not permanent in character, but for service under special circumstances due to the emergency of war. Accordingly, it was held that such increase should not be included in the computation of the per cent additional pay for flying duty, either as pay or as permanent additions to pay (citing 24 Comp. Dec., 139). However, the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 140), changed the nature of these increases and expressly declared them to be the permanent rates of pay of enlisted men of the Navy, to continue throughout all existing enlistments and all enlistments or reenlistments prior to July 1, 1920. They are, therefore, permanent for all existing and future enlistments within these bounds. Accordingly, it was held that the act of July 11, 1919, created "a new permanent base rate of pay for each rating, and that this rate is to be determined by adding to the base pay of a particular rating in effect prior to July 11, 1919, the increase applicable thereto granted by the 1917 law." (26 Comp. Dec., 220, citing and affirming 26 Comp. Dec., 139.)

Distinguished-service cross.—An enlisted man of the Navy who, while serving under the jurisdiction of the Army, was awarded the distinguished-service cross provided by the act of July 9, 1918 (40 Stat., 871), for persons serving in any capacity with the Army, is entitled upon his return to the Navy to the additional pay at the rate provided by the act of February 4, 1919 (40 Stat., 1056), for the recipients of the Navy cross for distinguished service. (26 Comp. Dec., 304; see also note to sec, 1407, R. S.)

Navy mail clerks.—Where an ordinary seaman of the Navy is appointed assistant Navy mail clerk under the act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., 406), for duty on board a particular flagship named, the appointment of such assistant mail clerk is not revoked by transfer of the flag to another ship. The proper officer not having directed the termination of his services, and he actually continuing to perform postal services, such seaman is entitled to the additional pay; but he is not entitled to pay for postal services performed on board another vessel, as he earns the pay by services on board the vessel to which he was designated. (18 Comp. Dec., 539.)

Where specific provision for the position of Navy mail clerk for a fleet has been omitted from the classes authorized in Navy regulations, such position can not legally be filled; or, if filled, the incumbent may not receive pay therefor. (24 Comp. Dec., 491; but see, contra, 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 320, July 19, 1918, noted under sec. 236, R. S., "Jurisdiction of accounting officers and heads of executive departments.")

Since the laws relating to the delivery of special delivery mail matter apply only to post offices, payment to Navy mail clerks and assistant Navy mail clerks of fees for making such delivery is not authorized. (25 Comp. Dec., 563.)

For other cases, see above, "Pay of mates"; and see below, "Changes in ratings."

Service on submarines.—A submarine boat in the hands of the contractor and not accepted by the Government is not a "submarine vessel of the Navy" within the meaning of Executive order of January 1, 1901, General Order No. 20, and where enlisted men of the Navy are assigned to perform duty in connection with the fitting out of such submarine boat before its acceptance by the Government, such men are not entitled to the additional pay as provided in the said Executive order. (18 Comp. Dec., 545.)

Enlisted men of the Navy attached to the tender of a submarine group, "under instruction," already reported "qualified" but for a different class of submarine torpedo boats, who are performing actual duty on a submarine torpedo boat in commission but of a different class from that for which previously reported qualified, and are performing no duty on board the tender to which attached, are entitled, in addition to the $5 per month provided for service on submarines, to $1 per day for the days on which their vessel is submerged, as provided by Executive order of November 9, 1905. (19 Comp. Dec., 468.)

Enlisted men of the Navy attached to a tender of a submarine group, "under instruction," but not yet reported "qualified," who are performing actual duty on board a submarine torpedo boat in commission, but performing no duty on board the tender to which attached, are entitled to the $5 additional pay prescribed in Executive order of January 1, 1901. (19 Comp. Dec., 468.)

Enlisted men of the Navy attached to and serving on submarines are entitled to the increased pay provided for duty on such vessels although they are actually quartered and messed on shore. (22 Comp. Dec., 299.)

Enlisted men of the Navy serving on a submarine vessel are entitled to the additional pay provided for such service, although such vessel is merely in commission "in ordinary." (23 Comp. Dec., 89.)

An enlisted man of the Navy detailed as instructor at a submarine school who, in the performance of duty, occasionally submerges in a submarine torpedo boat, while under way or otherwise, is not attached to or serving on board of or with a submarine torpedo boat within the meaning of Navy Department General Order No. 9 of 1905, so as to be entitled to the additional pay of $1 per day provided therein. (25 Comp. Dec., 533.)

Gun captains and gun pointers.—An enlisted man of the Navy who is detailed as a gun captain, and who also holds a certificate of graduation from the seamen gunners' class, is entitled, while so detailed, to additional pay both as a gun captain and under his certificate as a seaman gunner. (22 Comp. Dec., 575.)

General Order No. 137, of July 25, 1903, provides for additional pay, after qualification, to enlisted men detailed, under certain restrictions, as gun pointers. The restrictions are that he be detailed at a gun of the class at which he qualified. The order provides for said detail to be made by the commanding officer of a vessel. Held, that the officer in command of an enlisted force of the Navy, aboard a merchant ship, might well be considered as the commanding officer within the meaning of said general order, and, subject to the further conditions of the general order, if an enlisted man be detailed at a gun on board a merchant ship of the class at which he was qualified, he would be entitled to the additional pay as gun pointer of that class. However, the provisions of the act of May 13, 1908, limit the right to the additional compensation to details to guns of the class at which qualified. (24 Comp. Dec., 364.)

Seamen gunners' certificates.—See notes above, under "Pay of mates," and 22 Comp. Dec., 575, noted above as to pay of gun captains.

An enlisted man who holds a petty officer's certificate of graduation from electrical class, and also holds a petty officer's certificate of graduation from the seaman gunner class, is entitled to additional monthly pay for each of said certificates in accordance with Executive order of September 4, 1902, promulgated in General Order No. 108 of September 11, 1902. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 26, 1915, 170 S. and A. Memo., 3597.) But an enlisted man who holds two certificates of graduation from the seaman gunner class of different schools is entitled to additional pay for only one such certificate. (Comp. Dec., Dec. 3, 1914, 166 S. and A. Memo., 3461.)

Coxswains.—The "coxswains" who are entitled to additional pay under Executive order of January 1, 1901, published in General Order No. 20 of 1901, are confined to those regularly rated as coxswains, and do not include men of other ratings detailed as coxswains. (20 Comp. Dec., 618.)

The additional pay of coxswains continues during temporary separation of boats from their ship unless their details to such duty are revoked. (Comp. Dec., May 31, 1917, 195 S. and A. Memo., 4260.)

Ship's tailors and ship's helpers.—If the total pay of an enlisted man of the Navy, including increase for foreign service, extra pay as heavy-gun pointer, and additional pay as ship's tailor, exceeds $50 per month, he is only entitled to receive sufficient of the additional pay as ship's tailor to make his total pay amount to $50 per month, in view of General Order No. 186, June 5, 1905, in which it is stated that a ship's tailor's monthly pay shall not exceed $50. (15 Comp. Dec., 87.)

General Order No. 186, dated June 5, 1905, limits the payment of additional pay to ship's tailors and ship's helpers to men detailed to perform the duties on board vessels, and fix a sliding scale of monthly compensation based on the complement of the vessel. Accordingly, held, that the act of May 13, 1908, does not authorize payment under any other conditions, and the conditions may not after the date of that act, be changed by Executive order. (24 Comp. Dec., 364.)

The increased rates of pay provided for the enlisted personnel of the Navy by the act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 87), which, by the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 139), became part of the permanent base rates of pay of enlisted men in certain enlistments, should be included in arriving at the total pay of ship's tailors and helpers. (26 Comp. Dec., 258.)

Petty officer's certificates.—See note below under "Men furloughed without pay"; and see note above, under "Seamen gunners' certificates."

Good-conduct medals, pins, and bars.—See also notes above, under "Pay of mates," and "Pay of insular force"; and see notes below, under "Changes in ratings."

Prior to the passage of the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 217), the rates of pay for the various ratings for good-conduct medals, and for most of the extra duty and detail pay was provided for by Executive orders, in accordance with section 1569, Revised Statutes. The additional pay allowed to holders of good-conduct medals, pins, or bars was last fixed by Executive order incorporated in General Order No. 108, dated September 11, 1902. By enactment of May 13, 1908, the additional pay for medals, pins, and bars became statutory rates. (26 Comp. Dec., 428.)

Medals, pins, and bars awarded to enlisted men for service in the insular force of the Navy entitle the holders thereof, after transfer to the Regular Navy for general service, to the additional pay authorized by Executive order of September 4, 1902, embodied in General Order No. 108, September 11, 1902, and article 3664, Navy Regulations, 1913; plus 10 per cent increase thereof as authorized by act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128). (27 Comp. Dec., 468.) Also, an enlisted man of the Navy is entitled to be credited with pay for a good-conduct medal granted to him for service in the Marine Corps. (20 Comp. Dec., 360.)

9. Longevity pay, General Order No. 34.—See also note above, under "Mess attendants and cooks"; and see notes below, under "Retired enlisted men," "Men transferred to Fleet Naval Reserve," "Men furloughed without pay," "Naval Academy Band," and "Men extending enlistments." Further, see note to section 1573, Revised Statutes.

The complete control given the President by section 1569, Revised Statutes, over the pay of enlisted men certainly justified the President in establishing more than one amount as the pay of a rating. If he may fix the pay of a fireman, first class, at $35 per month, he may also fix the amounts to be paid in that rating at $35, $40, and $43, as done by General Order No. 34 of 1906, and allow the amount of $40 to those of that rating having four years' experience under the conditions stated in the order, and the amount of $43 to those of that rating having eight years' experience. Neither period of former experience must necessarily be the period immediately preceding the last enlistment, but may have been at any time, continuous reenlistment not being required. In addition to the pay so fixed by the President, the men are entitled to the $1.36 per month allowed by the act of March 3, 1899, if they come within its terms as to reenlistment within four months, etc. (13 Comp. Dec., 448, distinguishing 8 Comp. Dec., 227, noted above, relating to continuous service pay of mess attendants.)

Navy Department General Order No. 34 of November 28, 1906, publishing Executive order of November 27, 1906, providing $5 per month and $8 per month additional pay for trained men who are citizens of the United States, was within the authority of the President under section 1569, Revised Statutes, and not contrary to the act of March 3, 1899, section 16 (30 Stat., 1008), providing continuous-service pay of $1.36 per month. (13 Comp. Dec., 448.)

Section 1569, Revised Statutes, provided that the pay of enlisted men shall be fixed by the President, and that he might change the same from time to time as he deemed just and proper. Congress, by section 16 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, provided that to the rates of pay thus established by the President the enlisted men shall in addition receive an increase of $1.36 per month for each continuous reenlistment. Congress having undertaken to provide for continuous-service pay the general authority of the President to fix the pay of enlisted men of the Navy was modified to that extent, but to that extent only. General Order No. 34 of 1906 does not attempt to provide for continuous-service pay, but does undertake to provide for pay based on length of service, or longevity pay. The main purpose of the statute providing for continuous-service pay was to encourage immediate reenlistment, while that of General Order No. 34 was to establish higher rates of pay for trained men. (13 Comp. Dec., 448; 17 Comp. Dec., 27, 32.)

By the terms of General Order No. 34 of 1906, no one but a citizen of the United States is entitled to receive the additional pay therein provided, and it follows that a payment of it to one not a citizen would be an illegal payment and credit could not be allowed a paymaster making such payment. The paymaster should, therefore, for his own protection, check all such payments made for periods prior to the date on which the man became a citizen. (14 Comp. Dec., 267.)

An enlisted man of the Navy who was not a citizen of the United States at the time of his reenlistment, but who was naturalized during his second period of service, is entitled to the additional pay provided by Executive order of November 27, 1906 (General Order No. 34), from the date of his naturalization, if he otherwise comes within the scope of said order. (14 Comp. Dec., 284; 18 Comp. Dec., 617.)

A person of Chinese descent, born in the United States of Chinese parents, is a citizen of the United States within the meaning of General Orders Nos. 34 and 62 of the Navy. (18 Comp. Dec., 1026.)

A minor residing in this country became a citizen of the United States upon the naturalization of his stepfather, and being enlisted in the Navy and otherwise qualified is entitled to the additional pay provided by General Order No. 34 of November 28, 1906. (19 Comp. Dec., 641.)

An enlisted man of the Navy who is given a bad-conduct discharge and subsequently reenlists is not entitled during his enlistment next following such discharge to any increase of pay under the provisions of General Order No. 34 of 1906. (19 Comp. Dec., 768; 20 Comp. Dec., 856.)

An enlisted man of the Navy dishonorably discharged pursuant to sentence of court-martial within three months preceding the expiration of his enlistment, and recommended for reenlistment, is not entitled on reenlistment to any additional pay under General Order No. 34 of 1906. (21 Comp. Dec., 871; see also Comp. Dec., Aug. 31, 1914, 70 MS. Comp. Dec., 931.)

Enrolled men transferred from the Naval Reserve Force to the Regular Navy to serve the unexpired term of their enrollment "shall be entitled to and receive the same pay, rights, privileges, and allowances in all respects as now provided by existing law for men regularly discharged and reenlisted immediately upon the expiration of their full four year enlistment in the Regular Navy." (Act July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 139.) Under this act, held, that enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force so transferred to the Regular Navy are entitled, from the date the transfer is consummated, to increase of pay for continuous service and under General Order No. 34 of 1906, as well as to honorable-discharge gratuity. (26 Comp. Dec., 33.)

The act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 141), provides that "any enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who has been or may be discharged to enable him to accept appointment as a commissioned or warrant officer in the Naval Reserve Force or Marine Corps Reserve, and who reenlists in the Navy or Marine Corps after the termination of his reserve service, shall be entitled, in computing service for retirement, to credit for all active reserve service; and if he reenlists in the Navy or Marine Corps within four or three months, respectively, from the date of the termination of his service as an officer of the reserve, he shall be restored to the grade or rank held by him before being discharged to accept such commission or warrant, and his service in the Regular Navy or Marine Corps, including his active service in the Naval Reserve Force or Marine Corps Reserve, shall be regarded as continuous for purposes of continuous-service pay." Held, that this act preserves the status previously acquired by continuity of service, which, without the provision, would be lost; but it does not create any right to permanent additions to pay other than those already acquired. (26 Comp. Dec., 565.)

Reenlistment pay under General Order No. 34, continuous-service pay under the act of August 22, 1912 (noted under sec. 1573, R. S.), and honorable-discharge gratuity under the act of August 22, 1912 (noted under sec. 1573, R. S.), are three distinct classifications of pay that should be kept separate and apart in any consideration of an enlisted man's respective rights thereto, each being dependent upon conditions peculiar to itself. Accordingly, held, that the provision of the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 141), that service performed by the enlisted men described therein "shall be regarded as continuous for purposes of continuous-service pay," does not entitle such men to an increase in continuous-service pay and additional pay under article 4427, paragraph 25, Navy Regulations, 1913 (Gen. Order No. 34, 1906), immediately upon reenlistment; that it does not entitle such men to increase in continuous-service pay and additional pay under General Order No. 34 of 1906, upon the completion of four years from date of last reenlistment in the Navy; that the pay of such men, upon restoration, including permanent additions previously earned by reason of continuity of service, will remain unchanged for the period of their enlistment, except as it may be affected by changes in law or rating; and that such men will not be entitled to honorable-discharge gratuity immediately upon reenlistment or upon the completion of four years' service from date of last reenlistment in the Navy. (26 Comp. Dec., 565. Compare, 25 Comp. Dec., 440, noted below, under "Retired enlisted men.")

For the purpose of computing payment of honorable-discharge gratuity, continuous-service pay, and pay under General Order No. 34 (1906), enlistments in the Navy for "the period of the present war," authorized by section 3 of the act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84), may be considered to have expired on date of discharge; or in case of an extension of enlistment, as provided by the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 139), on date the extension becomes effective. (26 Comp. Dec., 132.)

As the word "service" as used in article 4427 (25), Navy Regulations, 1913, and General Order No. 34, contemplates the performance of duty or a duty status, and as an enlistment which expires while the enlisted man is in desertion is not a termination of service by expiration of enlistment, an enlisted man of the Navy who deserts, surrenders himself subsequent to the period of enlistment, and is permitted to reenlist, is not entitled to pay under General Order No. 34, during the enlistment following such desertion. (26 Comp. Dec., 250.)

The right of a man to pay under General Order No. 34 of 1906 involves the question of his citizenship, which is one of fact which the Comptroller of the Treasury is not required or authorized to decide. (26 Comp. Dec., 399, 401.)

The basic provisions of all existing laws relating to pay for reenlistment in the Navy are now in General Order No. 34, Navy Department, November 28, 1906, promulgating an Executive order of November 27, 1906, and having the authority of law. General Order No. 34 was carried into the Navy Regulations of 1913 as article 4427, paragraph 25. (26 Comp. Dec., 565.)

By reason of prior service in the Regular Navy, terminated by discharge at expiration of enlistment, an enrolled member of the Naval Reserve Force acquires a right to pay under General Order No. 34 while on active duty, and is entitled to the further increases provided by that order when he transfers to the Regular Navy to serve the unexpired portion of his enrollment, as authorized by the act of July 11, 1919. (26 Comp. Dec., 778.)

Enlisted men of the Navy serving over four years under short-term enlistments or extensions of enlistments are entitled to pay under General Order No. 34 at the expiration of the first four years of service, either continuous or dis severed, and at the expiration of each four years of service thereafter: Provided, That no previous service terminated for other than expiration of enlistment (unless on recommendation of boards of medical survey) may be counted. (27 Comp. Dec., 506.)

The period of service from which enlisted men of the Navy were honorably discharged in the course of demobilization under the provisions of the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 139), should be regarded as a full statutory period of four years, and entitles the man, if otherwise qualified, to pay under General Order No. 34 (1906) in subsequent enlistments. (28 Comp. Dec., 814.)

10. Changes in rating.—Under article 798, Navy Regulations, 1896, an enlisted man given an acting appointment by the captain of a ship on a foreign station is entitled to the pay of the rating given by the appointment until notice is received of the disapproval of such appointment by the Navy Department, the disapproval being based upon noncompliance with article 800 of the Regulations requiring that, as far as practicable, each class of petty officers be recruited from the next lower class, and that they shall be advanced but one class at a time. (4 Comp. Dec., 77.)

The rate of pay of an enlisted man in the naval service depends upon the orders establishing his rating, and is not affected by the fact that notice of a change in rating is not communicated to the proper pay officer pursuant to article 826 of the Navy Regulations of 1896. (4 Comp. Dec., 95.)

An enlisted man of the Navy who, while holding the rating of ship fitter, first class, is appointed acting chief carpenter's mate, is entitled while serving under said appointment only to the pay of an acting chief carpenter's mate, notwithstanding that it is less than the pay of a ship fitter. (12 Comp. Dec., 346.)

Where an acting bandmaster of the Navy, who was not a citizen of the United States, received a permanent appointment as bandmaster under article 852, Navy Regulations, 1905, after the examination provided by said article, and performed the duties of such office, he is entitled to retain the pay he received under said appointment, notwithstanding that said article required that men to whom such appointments were issued be citizens of the United States. (14 Comp. Dec., 267.)

The Navy Regulations, 1900 (art. 948), provided that "apprentices, third class, shall be rated apprentices, second class, immediately before being transferred from the training service to general service, and shall not again be reduced below that rating while continuing in general service, except by sentence of a court-martial." Held, that an apprentice of the third class in the Navy, transferred to the general service while said regulation was in force, was entitled to the rating of an apprentice of the second class immediately before such transfer; that the duty enjoined upon the commanding officer was ministerial and a mere formality; and where the commanding officer neglected to perform such duty until more than five months after the transfer, his neglect could not have the effect to deprive the apprentice of the pay to which he was entitled under General Order No. 20 of January 1, 1901; that the regulation and the Executive order fix the man's right to pay, and he should not be made to suffer because the commanding officer neglected to perform a ministerial and formal act. (15 Comp. Dec., 459.)

When enlisted men of the Navy take the required oath and enter upon their duties as Navy mail clerks and assistant Navy mail clerks, as provided in the act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., 417), by order of their commanding officer, and are recommended by said officer for designation from the date on which they entered upon their duties, which recommendation is subsequently approved by the Secretary of the Navy and the designation made by the Postmaster General, such enlisted men are entitled to the additional pay provided for in the act of May 27, 1908, from the date on which they took the oath and entered upon their duties. (16 Comp. Dec., 442.)

The pay of a new rating to which an enlisted man of the Navy is reduced by sentence of summary court-martial becomes his proper pay on the date of the approval of the sentence by the senior officer present. (17 Comp. Dec., 489.)

As soon as the new system of ratings provided in the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 572), for the enlisted force of the Hospital Corps shall have been established, enlisted men thereof then rated as hospital apprentices, second class, shall be paid only $19 per month, although prior to the passage of that act or the establishment of the ratings therein provided they were serving as hospital apprentices at $20 per month. (23 Comp. Dec., 231.)

The statement by a commanding officer of the Navy, over his signature, that a rating of an enlisted man was actually changed on a certain date, is sufficient evidence to entitle the man to the increase in pay from that date. (26 Comp. Dec., 393.)

11. Commencement of pay.—See note to section 1418, Revised Statutes, under, "When enlistment complete."

12. Leave of absence.—A Navy mail clerk absent from his vessel and undergoing treatment at a hospital on shore, when he can not perform his duties as Navy mail clerk, is not entitled to the additional pay. The additional pay of such mail clerks, under the act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., 417), is dependent upon the performance of the services prescribed by said act. (15 Comp. Dec., 548.)

An enlisted man of the Navy regularly detailed to perform the duties of "ship's tailor" is entitled while on leave to the additional pay provided by General Order No. 186, June 5, 1905, of the Navy Department, provided that no one has been detailed to perform his duties as ship's tailor during his absence on leave. (15 Comp. Dec., 894.)

Enlisted men of the Navy on authorized leave are not entitled to the $5 per month additional pay for submarine service authorized by Executive order of January 1, 1901. (19 Comp. Dec., 754.)

Enlisted men of the Navy properly detailed, under the act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 928), for duty involving actual flying in aircraft, are entitled to the additional pay provided in that act while on authorized leave of absence within the period of such detail. (22 Comp. Dec., 292.)

An ordinary seaman detailed as jack-of-the-dust is entitled while on leave of absence to the additional pay allowed for such detail by General Order No. 178 of November 29, 1904. (Comp. Dec., Aug. 17, 1905, 54 S. and A. Memo., 585.) So also a chief petty officer detailed as instructor of apprentice seamen is entitled to additional pay under General Order No. 34 of November 28, 1906, while on leave, if his detail remain unrevoked. (Comp. Dec., Nov. 12, 1910, 117 S. and A. Memo., 1617.)

See act of June 5, 1920 (41 Stat., 975, 976), as to furlough fare certificates for travel of disabled enlisted men.

13. Forfeiture of pay.—The forfeiture incurred by a deserter under the Army Regulations is not a fine which the soldier may be compelled to pay out of any property he possesses, by imprisonment if need be; nor is it, strictly speaking, a punishment; but it relates solely to the soldier's rights under his contract of enlistment, and is a forfeiture of moneys that were due and payable under it in consequence of his contract, and still would be if he had not deserted; and for the purpose of determining what the soldier's rights are, to receive money from the United States under or in consequence of his contract, the fact of desertion need not be established by the record of a court-martial. As the entry of desertion on the muster roll may sometimes have been improperly made, and may afterward be canceled by the War Department on proof that the soldier did not desert, it may happen that the soldier by the cancellation of such an entry becomes entitled to bounty previously withheld from him. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 188, 199.)

Under a law providing that "all forfeitures on account of desertion" should be used for the support of the National Asylum for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, installments of bounty which are not already due and payable to a soldier at the time he deserts never become due and payable in case he does not return or is not returned to the service, and therefore are not forfeited in the legal sense of that word. Nor, in case the deserter returns or is apprehended and put back into service, are such installments forfeited on account of desertion, because either the soldier on serving out his term is entitled to receive them, or they never become due and payable by reason of his desertion. But the installments and bounty due and payable at the time of desertion are forfeited thereby, in both those cases, and become payable to the board of managers of the National Asylum for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 188.)

A soldier who had deserted but was restored to duty by order of his department commander without trial, on condition that he make good the time lost (about two months), and who complied with the condition and was honorably discharged at the expiration of his term of service, held, entitled to bounty money notwithstanding his desertion. (U. S. v. Kelly, 15 Wall., 34. Note: This decision related to money accruing subsequent to the desertion, and not to money due and payable at the time of desertion; see U. S. v. Landers, 92 U. S., 77.)

The honorable discharge of the deserter was a formal, final judgment, passed by the Government upon the entire military record of the soldier, and an authoritative declaration by it that he had left the service in a status of honor; as such it dispensed altogether with the supposed necessity that the soldier must obtain bounty by removal, by order, of the charge of desertion from the rolls, and amounted of itself to the removal of any charge or impediment in the way of his receiving bounty. (U. S. v. Kelly, 15 Wall., 34; compare U. S. v. Landers, 92 U. S., 77.)

Forfeiture of pay and allowances up to the time of the desertion follows from the conditions of the contract of enlistment, which is for faithful service. The contract is an entirety; and if service for any portion of the time is criminally omitted, the pay and allowances for faithful service are not earned. And for the purpose of determining the rights of the soldier to receive pay and allowances for past services, the fact of desertion need not be established by the findings of a court-martial; it is sufficient to justify a withholding of the moneys that the fact appears upon the muster rolls of his company. But forfeiture of pay and allowances for future service, as a condition of restoration to duty, can only be imposed by a court-martial. (U. S. v. Landers, 92 U. S., 77, 79, explaining U. S. v. Kelly, 15 Wall., 34.)

An honorable discharge granted to a soldier who has been restored to duty after desertion, and whose conduct subsequent to his restoration to duty entitled him to such honorable discharge, could not relieve him from the consequences of the judgment of a military court and entitled him to pay and allowances which that court had adjudged to be forfeited. The forfeiture must first be removed, either by its remission in terms, or by the reversal of the judgment, or the pardon of the President. (U. S. v. Landers, 92 U. S., 77, 80, explaining U. S. v. Kelly, 15 Wall., 34.)

Where a deserter at large surrenders and is restored to duty without trial, but the facts clearly establish that he had deserted, he is not entitled to payment of the amount due him at the time of his desertion, notwithstanding that the Bureau of Navigation may have removed the mark of desertion on the alleged ground that it was erroneously entered. (27 Comp. Dec., 46, citing 14 Comp. Dec., 412.)

The pay of enlisted men of the Navy being fixed by the President and subject to regulation by him, a regulation providing that enlisted men absent from duty without leave shall forfeit all pay while so absent is valid; and an enlisted man so absent is not entitled to pay for the period of such absence, although his absence was caused by his arrest by the civil authorities. (9 Comp. Dec., 231.)

An enlisted man of the Navy absent from his station and duty without leave is not entitled to pay for the time so absent, but upon his apprehension and delivery to the naval authorities he is thereafter entitled to pay unless it shall be forfeited by sentence of a court-martial. (15 Comp. Dec., 386.)

No deduction is to be made for the naval hospital fund for any period that an enlisted man is absent without leave. (18 Comp. Dec., 724; see sec. 4808, R. S.)

The pay of an enlisted man of the Navy held by the civil authorities for trial on a criminal charge should not be paid unless he is acquitted; and if found guilty his pay is then forfeited to the United States from the date of his arrest. (2 Comp. Dec., 584.)

Where a carpenter's mate of the Navy was arrested by the civil authorities on a criminal charge and admitted on to bail on his own recognizance, and his trial indefinitely postponed, and it was apparently not the intention of the authorities to further prosecute the case, his pay was not thereby forfeited. (10 Comp. Dec., 490.)

When enlisted men of the Navy have been tried and acquitted by court-martial of the charge of desertion, such acquittal is also an acquittal of absence without leave, and the pay department and accounting officers should follow the judgments in such cases and consider such enlisted men as being in a pay status during the period that they were charged with being in desertion. (16 Comp. Dec., 480.)

An enlisted man of the Navy released from the custody of the civil authorities on bail, who reports at his regular station for duty, is not to be deprived of his pay after so reporting simply because, due solely to the fact that he was on bail, no naval duty was assigned him. (22 Comp. Dec., 374.)

A soldier who was arrested by the civil authorities on a charge of murder, of which he was convicted, is not entitled to pay or allowances after the date of his arrest, although pending his trial he was discharged by reason of the expiration of his term of enlistment. (9 Comp. Dec., 249.)

A soldier who claimed that his enlistment in the Army was illegal, and endeavored to secure his release by habeas corpus proceedings which were decided against him by the Supreme Court, held, not entitled to pay and allowances for the time that his litigation was pending in the civil courts and no service was being rendered by him to the United States, he having secured his release by decision of the lower court which was reversed on appeal. (Grimley v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 285.)

The pay and allowances of an enlisted man of the Navy can not be withheld because he may have been engaged in the performance of service prohibited by law, provided that he was not enlisted solely for the performance of such illegal service. (6 Comp. Dec., 756.)

If men are properly enlisted in the naval service, it is not material to the accounting officers whether they are at all times lawfully engaged or not. That is a matter regulated by the Navy Department. The legality of such service can become material to the accounting officers only where the enlistments are made solely for such illegal purpose, and then only in passing upon payments made under said enlistments. (6 Comp. Dec., 756.)

Absence from duty on account of injury, sickness, or disease resulting from misconduct of an enlisted man shall forfeit his pay for the time of such absence. (See act of Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 580, as amended by act of July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 717, noted under sec. 1556, R. S., under "Absence from duty.")

For other cases, see note to section 1556, Revised Statutes, relating to pay of officers.

14. Men transferred to Fleet Naval Reserve.—Since the transfer of an enlisted man of the Regular Navy to the Fleet Naval Reserve at the expiration of enlistment, after 16 years' service, has the effect of relieving him of all obligation under said contract of enlistment, it is to all intents and purposes a discharge at the expiration of enlistment, so as to entitle him to travel allowance as provided by the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 555). (25 Comp. Dec., 609.)

A transferred member of the Fleet Naval Reserve, whose transfer was made after 20 years' service in the Regular Navy and not at the expiration of enlistment, and who subsequently was discharged from the Fleet Naval Reserve and reenlisted, next day, in the Regular Navy, is not entitled to credit for continuous-service increase of pay, or for the increase under General Order No. 34 of 1906. The cases of transferred members are not covered by the provision in the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 590), with respect to enrolled members of the Naval Reserve Force who are discharged therefrom and reenlist in the Regular Navy, nor is it covered by 23 Comp. Dec., 535, which related to enlisted men of the Navy transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve at expiration of a period of enlistment and subsequently reenlisting in the Regular Navy. (25 Comp. Dec., 884; see also note to sec. 1573, R. S., as to continuous-service pay.)

Enlisted men transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve after 16 or 20 years' service, whose ratings at the time of transfer entitled them to honorable discharge, and who as reservists are not retained on active duty, are entitled at time of transfer to travel allowance at 5 cents per mile from the place of transfer to their actual bona fide home or residence or place of original muster into the service, at their option, as provided by act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1203). (26 Comp. Dec., 636.)

For other cases, see note to section 1556, Revised Statutes, under "Naval Reserve Force."

15. Men furloughed without pay.—An enlisted man who has been discharged by purchase or by special order, and who upon such discharge has refunded the cost of clothing outfit, is entitled upon reentry into the service on a second enlistment to a new outfit, subject only to the condition that the total net cost of outfits furnished any one man shall not exceed $60. (Act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 932.) An enlisted man furloughed without pay, under the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 580), under the same conditions and in lieu of discharge by purchase, and who refunded the cost of clothing outfit issued to him, is entitled upon recall to active duty to the same right to clothing outfit as that provided by the act of March 3, 1915, for men reentering the service after discharge by purchase. (24 Comp. Dec., 191.)

The term "unexpired portion of enlistment," as used in the act of August 29, 1916, with respect to the service of an enlisted man after recall from furlough without pay, means the unexpired portion of the enlistment at the date of recall from furlough, and not that remaining when said furlough was granted. (25 Comp. Dec., 231.)

An enlisted man of the Navy furloughed without pay in accordance with the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 580), resumes in all respects his former status upon being recalled to active service, and upon discharge at the completion of the unexpired portion of his enlistment is entitled to travel allowance, and upon reenlistment to the honorable-discharge gratuity if otherwise authorized. (25 Comp. Dec., 231; see also note to sec. 1573, R. S., as to honorable-discharge gratuity.)

An enlisted man of the Navy whose preceding period of enlistment expired while he was on furlough without pay, as authorized by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 580), and who, therefore, in accordance with the practice then prevailing, did not receive an honorable discharge upon the expiration of such enlistment, his enlistment having been regarded as terminated by furlough and not by expiration, held, not entitled to receive the additional pay authorized for holding a petty officer's certificate (art. 4427, par. 8, Navy Regs., 1913, C. N. R. 3), or the longevity pay provided in General Order No. 34 of 1906, or the continuous-service pay authorized by act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 331), amending section 1573, Revised Statutes, all of which payments are conditioned upon reenlistment after the receipt of an honorable discharge. (25 Comp. Dec., 328.)

For other cases, see note to section 1417, Revised Statutes.

16. Men extending enlistment.—An enlisted man of the Navy who has a deposit to his credit, under the act of February 9, 1889 (25 Stat., 657), and who elects to extend his enlistment under the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 331), may not be repaid such deposit until his discharge from his enlistment, as extended. (19 Comp. Dec., 384.)

The first enlistment of a seaman was extended one year, and during extension his rating was changed to gunner's mate, third class; at expiration of enlistment, as extended, he was honorably discharged and reenlisted within four months. Held, that on reenlistment he was entitled to four months' honorable-discharge gratuity at the rate of pay he was receiving when discharged, which included his rating pay as a gunner's mate, third class, and that he was entitled to citizenship reenlistment pay (longevity pay under General Order No. 34 of 1906), and continuous-service pay, and 10 per cent increase on said total pay. (20 Comp. Dec., 361; see note to sec. 1573, R. S., as to honorable-discharge gratuity and continuous-service pay.)

Enlisted men of the Navy who extend their enlistments under the provisions of the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 331), are not entitled to the travel allowance authorized by the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 555), at the expiration of the four-year period for which they originally enlisted, but are entitled thereto at the time they are discharged at the expiration of the extended period, the reason being that the extension of enlistment is a modification of their original enlistment, the extension thereby becoming a part of their enlistment. (20 Comp. Dec., 805, affirming 20 Comp. Dec., 699; see also, 25 Comp. Dec., 610. But see act of June 4, 1920, sec. 6, noted below, under "Mileage and transportation on discharge.")

The travel for which enlisted men of the Navy are entitled to travel allowance on discharge at the expiration of their enlistments as extended, is travel in the United States from place of discharge to place of original enlistment. (20 Comp. Dec., 805.)

An enlisted man of the Navy who surrendered from desertion and was restored to duty without trial, and who after serving a period of probation was allowed to extend his enlistment, is entitled under such extended enlistment to credit for pay for continuous service and under General Order No. 34, his status being the same as though he had not been absent during his term of enlistment. (25 Comp. Dec., 920; see note to sec. 1573, R. S., as to continuous-service pay.)

The extension of enlistment law granted to enlisted men of the Regular Navy the right to continuous-service increase of pay and to pay under General Order No. 34 of 1906; and also the right to honorable-discharge gratuity if the period for which the extension was made aggregates four years. (26 Comp. Dec., 33, 34, citing 63 MS. Comp. Dec., 136, and 68 MS. Comp. Dec., 1200.)

17. Retired enlisted men.—See acts of March 3, 1899, section 17 (30 Stat., 1008); June 22, 1906 (34 Stat., 451); March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1217); May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128); March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 941); August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 591); July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 719).

The provision in the order of the President of June 24, 1902, that "each enlisted man of the Navy shall receive 75 cents per month, in addition to the pay of his rating, for each good-conduct medal, pin, or bar" which he shall have been awarded, applies to enlisted men on the retired list, who are entitled to the full amount of the additional pay provided for therein. (9 Comp. Dec., 164, Oct. 27, 1902.)

The retired pay of an enlisted man under the acts of March 3, 1899, and March 2, 1907, was 75 per cent of the pay he was in receipt of at the date of his retirement; and 75 cents per month for each good-conduct medal held by him, and an increase of 10 per cent on the total amount thereof. (Comp. Dec., May 14, 1909, S. and A. Memo. No. 99, p. 1077, citing 9 Comp. Dec., 164; 14 Comp. Dec., 176; and 14 Comp. Dec., 830.)

The allowances to which retired enlisted men of the Navy are entitled are separate from and in addition to the pay to which they are entitled. The term "pay" used in a special statute providing for the retirement of an enlisted man with the retired "pay" of his rating does not include allowances. (Comp. Dec., May 14, 1909, 99 S. and A. Memo., 1077.)

The benefits of General Order No. 34, of 1906, are limited by its terms to those men who reenlist on or after its date. An enlisted man who was retired prior to the date of said order is, therefore, not entitled to additional pay thereunder, nor was said order made applicable to him by virtue of the provisions in the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), to the effect that "the pay of all active and retired enlisted men of the Navy is hereby increased ten per centum," and that "the pay of all * * * enlisted men of the Navy now on the retired list shall be based on the pay, as herein provided for, of * * * enlisted men of corresponding rank and service on the active list." (15 Comp. Dec., 517.)

Enlisted men of the Navy, retired under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1217), are entitled on retirement to three-fourths of the pay they were in receipt of at the date of retirement, together with the allowances of $9.50 per month in lieu of rations and clothing, and $6.25 per month in lieu of quarters, fuel, and light. (18 Comp. Dec., 575.)

The additional pay authorized for a steward or cook holding a certificate of qualification (G. O. 62, Feb. 7, 1908) is no part of the pay of the rating held by him at the time of retirement, and should not be included in computing his retired pay under the act of March 2, 1907. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 14, 1914, 158 S. and A. Memo., 3038. Compare, 25 Comp. Dec., 424, noted above, under "Mess attendants and cooks.")

An enlisted man of the Navy retired subsequent to the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1217), and thereafter naturalized, is not entitled to be credited to three-fourths of the pay authorized by Executive order of November 27, 1906, in the computation of his retired pay. (20 Comp. Dec., 606; but see, contra, Comp. Dec., Nov. 16, 1920, case of James Quinn, G. M. 1c., A. D. No. 5207, Navy Dept. file 26252-146:2.)

A retired enlisted man called into active service under the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 591), and issued a new permanent appointment as chief petty officer, is not entitled to the present pay and allowances of the rate to which appointed. (24 Comp. Dec., 79.)

A retired enlisted man called into active service pursuant to the provision in the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 591)—that while so employed on active duty such retired enlisted men shall receive "the same pay and allowances they were receiving when placed on the retired list"—is entitled to the present pay of men on the active list of the same rating and of the same length of service; and is not limited to the identical pay he received previous to his retirement and regardless of subsequent legislation. Where such retired enlisted man was employed in active service on June 1, 1917, he was entitled to the increased pay provided for enlisted men by the act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 87), which went into effect on June 1, 1917, with reference to all enlisted men in active service on the last-named date. (24 Comp. Dec., 79.)

The act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 87), providing for increased pay, commencing June 1, 1917, for enlisted men of the Navy in active service during the present war, is not applicable to enlisted men retired since June 1, 1917. (24 Comp. Dec., 116.)

The rule is well understood that if the pay of the rank or grade on the active list is changed, it effects a change in the pay of enlisted men on the retired list holding that rank or grade. But this does not apply to exceptional pay or increase of pay for special service. (24 Comp. Dec., 116.)

The retired pay of enlisted men should be computed upon their regular ordinary pay, and not include additional pay allowed for exceptional duty or special services. (Comp. Dec., Apr. 14, 1914, 158 S. and A. Memo., 3038.)

Additional pay allowed coxswains by General Order No. 20 of January 1, 1901, should not be included in computing retired pay. (Comp. Dec., May 27, 1914, 159 S. and A. Memo., 3073.)

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 719), it was provided that retired enlisted men recalled into active service shall be eligible for promotion and "shall be entitled to the pay and benefits of continuous service of such rank and for such length of time as he is or has been employed in active service, and when relieved of active service shall retain upon the retired list the rank and service held by him at the time of such relief, with the pay and allowances of such rank on the retired list." Held, that, broadly speaking, "continuous-service" pay includes any pay or gratuity which is based upon the element of continuity in the service of enlisted men; so defined, continuous-service pay includes the so-called honorable-discharge gratuity, since the payment of such gratuity is dependent on continuity of service; it also includes additional pay allowed under General Order No. 34 of 1906, as well as continuous-service pay proper allowed by act of August 22, 1912 (noted under sec. 1573, R. S.). Further held, that the provision in the act of July 1, 1918, provides in effect for a constructive reenlistment when the enlisted man has served the unexpired portion of the enlistment in which he was serving when retired. Accordingly, retired enlisted men of the Navy who are recalled to active service and who complete a period of service equal to the unexpired term of their enlistment are entitled, when otherwise qualified, to continuous-service pay proper, honorable-discharge gratuity, and pay under General Order No. 34 of 1906, whether the constructive reenlistment be considered as operating for a term of four years or for the duration of the existing war. (25 Comp. Dec., 440. Compare, 26 Comp. Dec., 565, noted above, under "Longevity pay, General Order No. 34.")

Retired enlisted men of the Navy who are recalled to active duty and who, upon release therefrom, are ordered to their homes, are not entitled to travel pay under the act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1203), but only to transportation in kind from their homes to the place to which called for active duty and from such place to their homes, when released from such duty. (26 Comp. Dec., 21.)

Retired enlisted men of the Navy called to active duty under the act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 719), and relieved therefrom on or subsequent to July 11, 1919, are entitled to credit for the increase of pay authorized by the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 140), in computing their pay on the retired list. (26 Comp. Dec., 478.)

Enlisted men of the Navy who were not on active duty during the period from July 11, 1919, to June 30, 1920, inclusive, are not entitled to credit for the war increase of pay authorized by the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 140), in computing their pay on the retired list. (27 Comp. Dec., 481.)

18. Men detained after expiration of enlistment.—See notes to sections 1418, 1422, and 1426, Revised Statutes.

An enlisted man in the Navy who was appointed as mate and continued to serve as such after the expiration of his term of enlistment, without receiving a discharge, is still in the service and entitled to his discharge, and may be permitted to reenlist with the benefit of continuous service under article 839 of the Navy Regulations of 1905. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 319.)

The period of detention beyond the expiration of the term of service of an enlisted man of the Navy undergoing treatment in a hospital is to be considered as for the convenience of the Government, and the man is entitled to pay to and including the date of his actual discharge. (26 Comp. Dec., 447, modifying 26 Comp. Dec., 128.)

An enlisted man remains in the service until receipt of his discharge, or until such action is taken as will render him legally chargeable with notice thereof, notwithstanding the expiration of his term of enlistment during his absence on a furlough granted at his own request. (2 Comp. Dec., 94; 27 Comp. Dec., 784.)

The right of a soldier to pay for service after the expiration of his term of enlistment is not expressly provided for by any statutory provision. The Government has no authority to hold a soldier to service after the expiration of his term of enlistment, except that arising from an exigency of the service or the delay incident to the muster out of troops; at least in the latter case the soldier is entitled to pay during the period of detention, as an incident to his term of enlistment, and at the rate to which he was entitled at the expiration thereof. 7 Comp. Dec., 391.)

A deserter from the Navy, upon his return to duty and assignment to a hospital for treatment, is entitled to pay computed upon the base pay prescribed by act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 602), from the date of his return, if after January 1, 1920, to date his enlistment was due to expire, and at the same rate thereafter, to and including the date of his actual discharge. (27 Comp. Dec., 541.)

Where an enlisted man of the Marine Corps who deserted therefrom in time of peace, and subsequently returned to his organization, after the expiration of his enlistment but within two years from the latter date, and was restored to duty without trial, his organization then being in France operating under the Army and subject to Army regulations, held, that such restoration to and acceptance of duty is a constructive reenlistment or extension of enlistment, and credit for pay should be allowed from the date of return to military control. (25 Comp. Dec., 881.)

A convicted deserter, restored to duty on probation after expiration of his enlistment in the Navy, is entitled to pay for services rendered while on probation. (Comp. Dec., Nov. 20, 1908, 93 S. and A. Memo., 896.)

An enlisted man remaining in the service under an illegal extension of enlistment is entitled to pay under his original enlistment, notwithstanding that it had previously expired. (Comp. Dec., June 6, 1914, 160 S. and A. Memo., 3255.)

An enlisted man of the United States Navy captured and separated from his vessel in consequence of an attack by a British vessel in 1807, and held by the British for a period of five years, when he was released and returned to his vessel, held, entitled to be paid his wages by the United States for the total period of five years, although the enlistment in which he was serving at the time of his capture was for a period of only one year. (Straughan v. U. S., 1 Ct. Cls., 324.)

An enlisted man of the Navy whose enlistment expires while he is in confinement serving sentence of a naval court-martial is not entitled to be credited with pay after the expiration of his enlistment; he is thereafter held in obedience to the sentence of the court-martial, but such imprisonment can not be regarded as holding him in the naval service within the meaning of any law entitling him to receive pay for such services, notwithstanding that his discharge is not delivered to him until expiration of his term of imprisonment. (9 Comp. Dec., 256.)

19. Fraudulent enlistment.—See notes to sections 1419 and 1420, Revised Statutes.

It is well established that an enlisted man whose enlistment is procured by fraud, unless the Government waives the objection and allows the enlistment to stand, is not entitled to any arrearages of pay or allowances. (14 Comp. Dec., 267, citing 12 Comp. Dec., 326, 328.)

Whether a man securing his enlistment by fraud shall be discharged for that reason or retained in the service rests in the sound discretion of the executive officer, regardless of his indebtedness to the Government. A paymaster should, for his own protection, upon the discovery of fraud in an enlistment, suspend payments until it is known from the proper authority whether the enlistment shall be terminated and the man discharged on account of the fraud, or whether he shall, notwithstanding, be retained in the service. If he is to be discharged for the fraud, no further payments should be made; if he is to be retained in the service, credit should be given him and payments made as though no fraud had occurred in his enlistment. (14 Comp. Dec., 267.)

Pay and allowances of deserter who fraudulently reenlists: See note to section 1420, Revised Statutes.

Payment of death gratuity in case of deserter who fraudulently enlists and dies without discovery of the fraud: See note to section 1420, Revised Statutes.

Where an enlisted man convicted of fraudulent enlistment and sentenced to imprisonment and dishonorable discharge is restored to duty on probation by order of the Secretary of the Navy, execution of the sentence being suspended during the probationary period with a view to its ultimate remission should his conduct warrant, held, that such man is entitled to pay while serving on probation, the same as if said sentence did not exist; but he is not entitled to be paid any balance due him at the time of the sentence unless and until the sentence be unconditionally remitted after the probationary period. (13 Comp. Dec., 723.)

20. Mileage and transportation on discharge.—See note to section 1422, Revised Statutes; notes above, under "Retired enlisted men," "Men furloughed without pay," "Men extending enlistments," and "Men transferred to Fleet Naval Reserve"; note below, under "Waiver of pay or allowances"; note to section 1556, Revised Statutes, under "Naval Reserve Force," and act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1030); see also act of June 3, 1916, section 126 (39 Stat., 217), as amended and reenacted by act of February 28, 1919, section 3 (40 Stat., 1203), which is the general law providing for travel allowance on discharge.

Where, by inadvertence, an enlisted man of the Navy, on his application therefor, was not furnished transportation to his home on discharge on medical survey, for which provision was made by the appropriation act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1030), and he paid his own fare, he is entitled to reimbursement therefor not to exceed the cost to the general public. (8 Comp. Dec., 377.)

An enlisted man of the Navy whose home is in Porto Rico is a resident of the United States, within the meaning of the provision in the act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1178), for the transportation to their homes of enlisted men of the Navy on discharge from the service. (11 Comp. Dec., 336.)

An enlisted man of the Navy who reenlisted upon his discharge on account of expiration of enlistment, and did not perform actual travel between the place of his discharge and the place of his enlistment, is entitled under the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 555), to travel allowance at the rate of four cents per mile for travel in the United States between said points. (13 Comp. Dec., 50.)

An enlisted man who reenlisted immediately on the expiration of a prior enlistment does not become entitled, under the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 555), on his discharge from such reenlistment, to travel allowance to the place of his preceding enlistment. (13 Comp. Dec., 526.)

The travel allowance for travel in the United States to which enlisted men of the Navy are entitled under the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 555), when discharged at a foreign port, should be computed from the nearest regular port of arrival in the continental limits of the United States to the place of enlistment. (13 Comp. Dec., 689.)

The act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 755), gives the right to enlisted men of the Navy, when discharged on medical survey, to transportation to their homes at Government expense; but such right must be availed of at the time of discharge or within a reasonable time thereafter. (16 Comp. Dec., 555.)

The place of discharge from which travel allowance of an enlisted man is computed under the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 555), is the place at which the discharge was delivered and received by him, provided he is on duty at that place, and not necessarily the place of its issuance. (19 Comp. Dec., 565.)

Travel from Alaska to the State of Washington is "travel in the United States," within the meaning of the authorization for the payment of a travel allowance, under the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 555). (22 Comp. Dec., 183.)

Where a man presented himself at a certain place for enlistment, and there took the initial steps toward entering the service, he is to be regarded, with reference to travel allowance on discharge, as having been enlisted at that place, although for the convenience of the Government he was transported to another place before executing the formal contract of enlistment and taking the oath of allegiance. (23 Comp. Dec., 248.)

The statement or affidavit of an enlisted man as to his actual bona fide home or residence would not be sufficient evidence in all cases upon which to decide the question of the amount of travel pay to which he is entitled under the act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1203). No general rule may be laid down for the determination of the place to which travel pay should be allowed, but each case should be decided upon its merits. (25 Comp. Dec., 792.)

Whether or not an enlisted man intends to make the travel to the place declared to be his "actual bona fide home or residence," to which he is paid travel pay on discharge, as provided by the act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1203), is immaterial, so far as payment is concerned. (25 Comp. Dec., 792.)

Enlisted men who have been honorably discharged since November 11, 1918, should be paid by disbursing officers as provided in the act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1203), travel pay at 5 cents per mile from the place of discharge to the place of original muster into the service, and if the place claimed as actual bona fide home or residence be at a greater distance the enlisted man may present his claim for the difference between that amount and the amount paid to the proper auditor, by whom the evidence as to his home or residence may be considered and the amount found due may be certified for payment. (25 Comp. Dec., 792.)

Under the act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1203), an enlisted man whose bona fide home or residence is in the interior of a foreign country is entitled, in addition to the allowance for necessary travel in the United States, to be furnished transportation and subsistence for the sea travel involved, and 5 cents per mile from the nearest port in the foreign country to his home or residence therein. (25 Comp. Dec., 950.)

Where enlisted men are discharged under an agreement to reenlist they are not entitled to travel allowance at the rate of 5 cents per mile provided by the act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1203). (26 Comp. Dec., 21.)

Any enlisted man discharged from any branch of the naval service for the purpose of reenlisting in the Navy or Marine Corps, or who shall extend his enlistment therein, shall be entitled to travel pay as authorized by act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1203). (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 6, 41 Stat., 836.)

The act of June 4, 1920, section 6 (41 Stat., 836), applies only to men who were in the service on November 11, 1918. (27 Comp. Dec., 305; 27 Comp. Dec., 32.)

The words "honorably discharged" which are used in the act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1203), as a condition precedent to the allowance of mileage to enlisted men of the Navy, are not used in the technical sense which they have acquired in the Navy, but are used in the same broad sense with reference to the Navy that they have with reference to the Army, thus including all discharges under which the holder may be regarded by the War and Navy Departments and military men of the branch in question as leaving the service in an honorable manner. (File 9209-114, Mar. 11, 1919; C. M. O. 114, 1919, p. 18; file 9209-114:45, Feb. 10, 1920.)

An enlisted man who is not dishonorably discharged or discharged without honor, but who is discharged under honorable conditions, although the word "honorably" is omitted from the discharge paper may be considered to be honorably discharged within the meaning of the act of February 28, 1919, providing for travel pay. (25 Comp. Dec., 792; see also 25 Comp. Dec., 771, and 25 Comp. Dec., 930.)

The act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1203), provides for furnishing an enlisted man, honorably discharged from the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, with mileage at the rate of 5 cents per mile from the place of his discharge to his "actual bona fide home or residence, or original muster into the service, at his option," and makes similar provision for furnishing mileage to reservists "honorably released from active service." Held, that the word "home" and "residence" are not used synonymously in this statute; that the man's actual bona fide home within the meaning of the statute is what is commonly known as his legal residence or domicile, and may be different from his actual resident, to which he may at his option claim mileage; that at the time of his enlistment in the Navy, a man may have been engaged in business and actually resided at a place other than his home, domicile, or legal residence. In such case, under the statute, he may, at his option, claim mileage to the place of his actual residence or former employment, or to his home or legal residence. However, to constitute his home or legal residence at a place different from that where he actually resided at the time of enlistment, it must appear that the man did actually reside at some time at the place to which he claims mileage, and if he did not actually reside at such place at the time of his enlistment, it must have been his bona fide home at some time in the past and he must have retained ever since the intention of returning thereto for the purpose of making same his permanent abode. (File 9209-114:4, Apr. 5, 1919; C. M. O. 186, 1919, p. 40.)

A man whose bona fide home was in Batesburg, S. C., was employed at Winston-Salem, N. C., and enrolled in the Naval Reserve Force at Columbia, S. C. He was honorably released from active duty at Charleston, S. C. Held, that there are three places to which the man in this case is entitled, at his option to claim mileage, viz., first, his actual bona fide home, which is stated to be Batesburg, S. C.; second, his actual, bona fide residence at the time of enrollment, which appears upon the facts stated to have been Winston-Salem, N. C.; and third, his place of "original muster into the service," being in this case place of enrollment which is stated to be Charleston, S. C. (File 9209-114:4, Apr. 5, 1919; C. M. O. 186, 1919, p. 40.)

The words of the statute, allowing mileage to be claimed to place of "original muster into the service," refer to the place shown by the records as the man's place of enlistment or enrollment under his current contract. (File 9209-114:4, Apr. 5, 1919; C. M. O. 186, 1919, p. 40.)

The act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1203), is permanent legislation, superseding prior laws for payment of travel allowances on discharge from the Army and Navy. (File 9209-114, Mar. 11, 1919; C. M. O. 114, 1919, p. 18; file 9209-114:45, Feb. 10, 1920.)

The act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 139), authorizing the issuance of honorable discharges and the payment of mileage in certain cases of enlisted men who have served in the war with the German Government, did not repeal the prior permanent law of February 28, 1919 (40

Stat., 1203), or restrict the scope of said prior law. (File 9209-114:45, Feb. 10, 1920.)

Travel allowance on discharge should be paid to enlisted men of the Navy, under the act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1203), irrespective of their indebtedness to the Government at the time of discharge. (File 9209-114:5, Apr. 11, 1919, citing 18 Comp. Dec., 621 and 8 Comp. Dec., 624.)

21. Clothing bounty on enlistment.—By act of March 1, 1889 (25 Stat., 781), it was provided that "in order to encourage the enlistment of boys as apprentices in the United States Navy, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to furnish as a bounty to each of said apprentices after his enlistment, and when first received on board of a training ship, an outfit of clothing not to exceed in value the sum of $45." The language of this statute, both as to the classes of persons included and the value of the clothing outfit, was broadened from time to time by subsequent appropriations for the naval service, until provision is now annually made for furnishing "outfits for all enlisted men and apprentice seamen of the Navy on first enlistment, at not to exceed $100 each." (See, e. g., acts of July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 135, and June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 815.)

By act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 932), it was provided "that hereafter the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to issue a clothing outfit to all enlisted men serving in their second enlistment who failed to receive an outfit of the value authorized by law on their first enlistment, or who, having received such outfit, were required to refund its value on account of discharge prior to expiration of enlistment: Provided further, That the net cost to the Government of clothing outfits furnished any one enlisted man shall not exceed $60."

By act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 556), it was provided "that hereafter the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, require the whole or a part of the cost of outfits allowed upon enlistment to be refunded in cases where men are discharged during the first six months of enlistment for any cause other than disability incurred in line of duty."

By act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1176), it was provided "that the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, require the whole or a part of the bounty allowed upon enlistment to be refunded in cases where men are discharged during the first year of enlistment by request for inaptitude, as undesirable, or for disability not incurred in line of duty."

The whole purpose of the act of March 1, 1889 (25 Stat., 781), providing clothing bounty on enlistment, was to encourage the enlistment of boys as apprentices in the United States Navy; the Secretary of the Navy has no discretion to furnish bounty in one case and decline to furnish it in another. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 270.)

Regulations of the Secretary of the Navy, requiring refund of the clothing bounty, or any portion thereof, in case an apprentice is discharged within a year after his enlistment for disability not incurred in line of duty, are inconsistent with law and void. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 270. Note: This opinion was rendered prior to the statutory enactments of 1906 and 1907, above quoted, with respect to refund of clothing outfit.)

An enlistment in the Navy for temporary service is not the first enlistment within the meaning of the act of March 1, 1889 (25 Stat., 781), and the naval appropriation acts providing for the giving of outfits of clothing as a bounty on first enlistment of all enlisted men and apprentice seamen of the Navy. (19 Comp. Dec., 587.)

The promulgation of a Navy regulation to the effect that checkages of cost of clothing outfit furnished to any enlisted man of the Navy on first enlistment shall be made against his account if discharged within the first six months of such enlistment does not preclude the Secretary of the Navy from the exercise of the discretion conferred on him by the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 556), in each case coming within such statute. (19 Comp. Dec., 741.)

An enlisted man who is given a bad-conduct discharge and subsequently reenlists is not entitled to receive a clothing outfit as of a first enlistment. (20 Comp. Dec., 856. This decision was prior to the act of Mar. 3, 1915, above quoted, authorizing clothing outfits on second enlistment in certain cases.)

For other cases, see notes above, under "Pay of insular force," and "Men furloughed without pay."

22. Deposit of savings.—See note above, under "Men extending enlistments."

The act of February 9, 1889 (25 Stat., 657), "to provide for the deposit of the savings of seamen of the United States Navy," does not extend to enlisted men of the Marine Corps. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 616.)

Paymasters of the Navy may receive from enlisted men or petty officers for deposit, under the act of February 9, 1889 (25 Stat., 657), accumulated savings of any amount, provided they represent the earnings of such a person as an enlisted man or petty officer in the United States Navy, notwithstanding that they may include accumulated savings from previous terms of enlistment. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 498.)

The act of February 9, 1889 (25 Stat., 657), providing for deposits of savings of enlisted men of the Navy and exempting such deposits from liability for their debts, does not apply to debts due the Government, and such debts should be set-off against said deposits. (16 Comp. Dec., 566.)

When it appears that an enlisted man of the Navy has been dishonorably discharged after serving a term of imprisonment for desertion, that at the time of his discharge the fact that there was due him a sum deposited was inadvertently overlooked, and that upon discharge he was furnished, under authority of the acts of February 16, 1909 (35 Stat., 622), and March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 756), a cash gratuity and transportation, the amount of such gratuity, transportation, and any other indebtedness due the Government at the time of his discharge should be set-off against the sum deposited to his credit. (16 Comp. Dec., 566.)

Enlisted men of the Navy temporarily warranted or commissioned under the act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84), being thereby, during the continuance of such appointment, discharged from service as enlisted men and entitled to receive all pay and allowances due them as such, may legally be paid the moneys which they have on deposit at the time of being warranted or commissioned. (24 Comp. Dec., 179; for other cases, see note to sec. 1409, R. S., under "Deposit accounts of mates and warrant officers," note to sec. 1417, R. S., under "Enlisted men furloughed without pay," and note above, under "Men transferred to Fleet Naval Reserve.")

Members of the Naval Reserve Force when released from active duty should be repaid deposits with interest thereon. (Comp. Dec., July 3, 1917, 197 S. and A. Memo., 4302.)

23. Waiver of pay or allowances.—See note to section 1422, Revised Statutes, under "Transportation may be waived," and note to same section under "Additional pay can not be waived;" and see cases noted under section 1556, Revised Statutes, under "Waiver of pay."

An enlisted man of the Navy who, in consideration of his being allowed to remain on his vessel, then about to proceed to Asiatic waters, gives a waiver of all claim to transportation home should he refuse to reenlist and be discharged in a foreign port, can not maintain an action for the value of such transportation. (Hunt v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 135.)

Power to discharge a soldier upon the latter's request is a discretion vested in the President and exercised by him through the Secretary of War. It is essential to the due exercise of this discretion that he have power to exercise it upon conditions prescribed by himself; and this power the judiciary does not desire to question or curtail. Accordingly, held, that where the Secretary of War authorized the discharge of an enlisted man who had unsuccessfully instituted proceedings in the civil courts to have his enlistment canceled, and as a condition to such discharge required that the man make good all indebtedness due by him to the United States; and the man accepted the terms of the release offered, paid what the Government claimed of him, and left the service; there was an implied agreement on the part of the soldier that he would assert no claim for compensation against the United States; he waived some supposed rights in order to secure other and substantial advantages himself; and he was not entitled thereafter to pay or allowances from the United States for the time that his litigation was pending in the civil courts and he rendered no service to the Government. (Grimley v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 285.)

An apprentice of the Navy, having been transferred from one vessel to another, upon his request and upon his waiver of his right, on discharge in a foreign port, to transportation to the United States, he is not entitled to reimbursement of the cost of such transportation procured by himself. (9 Comp. Dec., 5.)

24. Sixty-dollar bonus on discharge.—Under the act of February 24, 1919, section 1406 (40 Stat., 1151), authorizing payment of $60 to men discharged under honorable conditions, and who served in the military or naval forces of the United States during the World War, held, that the separation from the service of enlisted men by discharge should in all cases be considered as "under honorable conditions," except when the certificate or order of discharge recites facts precluding the presumption of honorable conditions. (25 Comp. Dec., 771.)

Under section 1406 of the act of February 24, 1919 (40 Stat., 1151), the discharge contemplated is one which effects a separation from the service, and not a discharge given in the regular course of procedure, solely for the purpose of enabling the person to reenter the service in another branch or subdivision thereof. (25 Comp. Dec., 790.)

The aforesaid bonus can not be paid on the date an enlistment is due to expire, in cases where the enlisted man has agreed to extend his enlistment (25 Comp. Dec., 986); but may be paid on the discharge of such man after the expiration of such extension. (26 Comp. Dec., 138.)

The bonus may be paid to enlisted men who voluntarily reenlist after discharge, but not where the discharge is conditioned upon reenlistment. (25 Comp. Dec., 930.) And it can not be paid to men transferred from the Naval Reserve Force to the Regular Navy, to serve the unexpired term of their enrollment, pursuant to act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 139). (26 Comp. Dec., 33.)

Any enlisted man discharged from any branch of the naval service for the purpose of reenlisting in the Navy or Marine Corps, or who shall extend his enlistment therein, shall be entitled to the payment of bonus authorized by act of February 24, 1919, section 1406. (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 6, 41 Stat., 836.)

The act of June 4, 1920, section 6, above quoted, applies only to persons who were in the service on November 11, 1918. (27 Comp. Dec., 305; 27 Comp. Dec., 32.)

25. Attachment of pay by creditors.—See Buchanan v. Alexander (4 How., 19), noted under section 1430, Revised Statutes.

26. Allotments of pay.—See sections 1430 and 1576, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto.

Sec. 1570. [Additional pay for serving as firemen.] Every seaman, landsman, or marine who performs the duty of a fireman on board any vessel of war shall be entitled to receive, in addition to his compensation as seaman, landsman, or marine, a compensation at the rate of 33 cents a day for the time he is employed as fireman.

This section was expressly amended and reenacted to read as above by act of March 29, 1918 (40 Stat., 499). As originally enacted, it read as follows:

"SEC. 1570. Every seaman, ordinary seaman, or landsman who performs the duty of a fireman or coal-heaver on board of any vessel of war shall be entitled to receive, in addition to his compensation as seaman, ordinary seaman, or landsman, a compensation at the rate of thirty-three cents a day for the time he is employed as fireman or coal-heaver."—(1 Mar., 1869, c. 48, s. 2, v. 15, p. 280.)

Applicable to insular force.—Members of the insular force are entitled to the extra pay provided by section 1570, Revised Statutes, while performing the duty of a fireman on board a vessel of war of the United States. (Comp. Dec., Aug. 13, 1910, 114 S. and A. Memo., 1546; see note to sec. 1569, R. S.)

Sec. 1571. [Sea service.] No service shall be regarded as sea service except such as shall be performed at sea, under the orders of a Department and in vessels employed by authority of law.—(1 June, 1860, c. 67, s. 3, v. 12, p. 27.)

Additional pay for sea duty: See act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128).

Section 1571 not repealed.—The Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 13 (30 Stat., 1007), which provided that officers of the Navy shall receive the same pay and allowances as officers of corresponding rank in the Army, did not repeal or modify Revised Statutes, section 1571, defining sea service. (Ryan v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 143.)

There is nothing in the Navy personnel act inconsistent with or repealing Revised Statutes, section 1571. (U. S. v. Thomas, 195 U. S., 418.)

Orders of Secretary of the Navy as to what constitutes sea service.—The authority of the head of an executive department to issue orders and regulations under the direction of the President, to have the force of law, is subject to the condition that they conflict with no act of Congress; and an order of the Secretary of the Navy that a service shall not be a sea service which Congress has directed shall be a sea service is invalid. (U. S. v. Symonds, 120 U. S., 46.)

Congress certainly did not intend to confer authority upon the Secretary of the Navy to diminish an officer's compensation as established by law, by declaring that to be shore service which was in fact sea service; or to increase his compensation by declaring that to be sea service which was in fact shore service. (U. S. v. Symonds, 120 U. S., 46.)

The statute does not confer upon the Secretary of the Navy, acting alone or by direction of the President, the power to declare a particular service to be shore service if in fact it was performed by the officer "when at sea," under the orders of the Department, and on a vessel employed with authority of law. (U. S. v. Symonds, 120 U. S., 46; U. S. v. Bishop, 120 U. S., 51.)

Services are to be deemed services performed at sea, not because the Secretary of the Navy has announced that the Department will so regard them, but because they are in fact services performed at sea and not on shore. (U. S. v. Symonds, 120 U. S., 46; U. S. v. Bishop, 120 U. S., 51.)

The Navy Department has no power to disregard the provisions of Revised Statutes, sections 1556 and 1571, and either deprive an officer of sea pay by assigning him to a duty mistakenly qualified as shore duty but which is in law sea duty; or to entitle him to receive sea pay by assigning him to duty which is essentially shore duty and mistakenly qualifying it as sea duty. (U. S. v. Engard, 196 U. S., 511.)

The Secretary of the Navy can not arbitrarily change, by an order, the character of the duty to be performed by a naval officer; but the fact that he designates a mixed duty as shore duty is an indication of the construction which he places upon it. (McGowan v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 63.)

The burden of proof rests on an officer seeking sea pay to disclose the character of the service rendered, especially where the order assigning him to duty designates it as shore duty. (Corwine v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 104.)

When a naval officer on sea duty was assigned to shore duty, a modification of the order, after the service was performed, by inserting the words "for temporary duty," and the certificate of the department that the omission of the word "temporary" was a clerical error, does not confer a legal right to sea pay on the officer. The Navy Department has not power to fix the character of the service by the terms of its order. The character of the service is a question of fact. (Doyle v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 181, distinguishing Mueller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 240, which held that ratification by the Secretary of War of an oral order was valid.)

Vessels in bays, inlets, or other arms of the sea.—The sea pay given to officers of the Navy by Revised Statutes, 1556, may be earned by services performed under orders of the Navy Department in a vessel employed by authority of law in active service in bays, inlets, roadsteads, or other arms of the sea, under the general restrictions, regulations, and requirements that are incident or peculiar to service on the high seas. (U. S. v. Symonds, 120 U. S., 46.)

Under the third section of the act of June 1, 1860 (now sec. 1571, R. S.), held, that the words "at sea" are not to be construed literally, as requiring that the vessel must be actually at sea; but that they may properly include an officer who, upon being ordered to duty at sea, reports himself, in obedience to his orders, at the place designated, even though the vessel be lying in port and not actually out at sea. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 191.)

Trips down the river, under orders for a sea voyage, and up the river on the return of a vessel from sea, are sea service. (McRitchie v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 23.)

A naval vessel always afloat on tide water, frequently ordered to sea, at all times ready to obey such orders, the officers and crew messing and sleeping on board and maintaining the regulations and discipline of a man-of-war at sea, is in sea service within the intent of the Revised Statutes, section 1556. (McRitchie v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 23.)

For a naval vessel to come within the phrase "at sea," it is not necessary that she be upon the high seas; it is enough if she be water borne, even at anchor, or tied to a dock. (Wyckoff v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cls., 288.)

Service performed on board a vessel of the United States, by order of the Secretary of the Navy, in which the officer is obliged to occupy a room, pay mess bills, etc., as if actually at sea, entitles him to sea pay. (Hannum v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 99.)

The fact that an officer assigned to duty is to take charge of the machinery of another vessel, and that the vessels were at a navy yard, does not render the service shore duty. (Hannum v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 99.)

Training ship at anchor and not in commission.—It is of no consequence that a naval vessel was, during the period for which sea pay is claimed, in such condition that she could not be safely taken out to sea beyond the mainland. She was a training ship, anchored in Narragansett Bay, during the whole time covered by the claim, and was subject to such regulations as would have been enforced had she been put in order and used for purposes of cruising or as a practice ship at sea. Within the meaning of the law an officer performing his duties as executive officer of the vessel was "at sea"; notwithstanding that, by order of the Secretary of the Navy, it was announced that said vessel "will not be considered in commission for sea service." (U. S. v. Symonds, 120 U. S., 46.)

Receiving ship at anchor and not in commission.—Service, under an order of the Secretary of the Navy, by an officer of the Navy as executive officer of a receiving ship, at anchor in port at a navy yard and not in commission for sea service, entitles him to receive pay for sea service. The facts in this case disclose that the vessel has been stationed and anchored at the same navy yard and in the same place for over 12 years; that it has been used as a naval recruiting station; that there is a roof built over the deck; that the ship is connected and communicates with shore by a rope; that steam is used only for heating purposes and pumps; that all the anchors have never been taken up at the same time; that she was not in a safe condition for cruising; that the duties performed by the executive officer of the vessel were similar to those of executive officers on cruising ships. (U. S. v. Strong, 125 U. S., 656.)

Receiving ship condemned and stricken from Navy Register.—An officer is entitled to sea pay when ordered to duty on board a vessel used as a receiving ship, notwithstanding that such vessel has been condemned by a board as unfit for a cruiser, and its name stricken from the list of ships in the Navy Register. The fact nevertheless appears that the said vessel is subject to the usual naval routine and put to kindred uses, and that her officers are subject to the same rules as before she was condemned. Where officers are charged with the responsibilities and duties of officers on sea duty, the emoluments follow the responsibilities and duties. (Pierce v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cls., 294.)

Vessel having no crew but civilian laborers.—It is sufficient to entitle an officer to sea pay that the vessel on which he is, is employed by authority of law; she need not be in commission or engaged in navigation; her crew need not be seamen, but may be a small force of civilian laborers from a dockyard. (Wyckoff v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cls., 288.)

Vessel in reserve with reduced complement.—It is not the location of a ship, but the condition with reference to the sea, qualified by the further condition of an officer's being "subjected to such restrictions, regulations, and requirements as are incident to service at sea," which determines his right to sea pay. Accordingly, held, that a paymaster ordered to a designated station, "for duty on board the Ajax and the other monitors off that place," his orders designating the duty as shore duty, is not entitled to sea pay, the said ships not being in any designated service, but lying in port, held in reserve for sea service and reduced in complement. (Corwine v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 104.)

A ship of war afloat, manned, in a serviceable condition, and able to proceed to sea, is in service, though she may need more men and stores to make her sea service effective, and although she may be lying in port, held in reserve for sea service and reduced in complement. An officer on such a vessel is in sea service if he is subjected to the restrictions, regulations, and requirements which are incident to service at sea. (Aulick v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cls., 109, distinguishing Corwine v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 104, in that, in the latter case, the officer failed to show that he was subjected to the restrictions, regulations, and requirements incident to sea service.)

Vessel loaned to State as school ship.—A lieutenant in the Navy assigned, by order of the Secretary of the Navy, to duty as executive officer of a vessel of the United States, furnished by the Secretary to the State of New York as a school ship, is entitled to sea pay as well while the vessel is attached to a wharf in the harbor of New York as while she is on a cruise, and although this service is called, in the Secretary's order for the officer's detail, "employment on shore duty," and notwithstanding the officer is receiving pay from the State as instructor in its nautical school upon the vessel. (U. S. v. Barnette, 165 U. S., 174.)

Duty on shore in connection with vessels.—A naval paymaster on shore duty at a navy yard is not entitled to pay for sea duty, though required by the Secretary of the Navy, in addition to his regular duties, to take charge of the accounts of certain vessels temporarily at anchor off the yard and in commission for sea service. (Carpenter v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 247.)

Duty as lighthouse inspector.—An officer of the Navy assigned to duty as a lighthouse inspector, under Revised Statutes, section 4671, and ordered to inspect the light stations in his district, is not entitled to sea pay under section 1571, Revised Statutes, while making his tour of inspection, though it be by water and involve going to sea. To be entitled to sea pay under section 1571, Revised Statutes, an officer must be afloat and under orders to perform sea service. (Schoonmaker v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 170.)

Officer at sea, suspended from duty.—A paymaster at sea, but suspended from duty pending an investigation of his accounts, is not rendering sea service within the intent of section 1571, Revised Statutes, and is entitled only to waiting-orders pay. While in attendance before the court-martial, he is entitled to shore-duty pay; after his court-martial, awaiting the review of the court's proceedings by the President, he is entitled to waiting-orders pay. (Sullivan v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 402.)

It is not the mere being at sea which entitles an officer to sea pay, but it is his being at sea in such a legal condition as entitles him to the pay incident to that condition. In this case the officer was at sea, in that he was on board a receiving ship under the order of the department, but he was not at sea within the meaning of the law entitling him to sea pay. He was, by his own fault, without duty and in the discharge of no functions; so far as public and efficient services were concerned, he had no participation in them, and would have been guilty of a further offense if he had attempted to exercise any of his powers as an officer. (Sullivan v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 402.)

Distinction between "rendering service at sea" and being in "sea service."—There is a distinction between rendering service and being in service; an officer may be in sea service though not rendering service at sea. (Aulick v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cls., 109.)

An officer sleeping in his berth is not rendering service, but is nevertheless in service; an officer on shore leave for a few hours while his vessel is in a foreign port is in sea service, though not rendering service; and sea pay does not stop because the officer chanches for the moment to be on dry land. And so it is with a vessel. Ships of war, in time of peace, are for the greater part of the time in a condition of idleness. They sail somewhere and do nothing; they sail somewhere else, and again do nothing; they return home, and await orders. A ship of war may pass her entire life in a condition of readiness to serve, but of never serving. (Aulick v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cls., 109.)

Vessel on trial trip but not accepted.—Where a vessel is on her trial trip prior to acceptance, and still within the possession and control of the builders, the United States, however, having, by the payment of installments, acquired an interest equal to 49 out of 50 parts of the vessel, she must be regarded as practically the property of the Government. (Williams v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 186.)

Officer traveling on vessel as passenger.—Section 1571 does not admit of the construction that a steamer upon which a naval officer takes passage under orders of the department thereby becomes a "vessel employed by authority of law." A person who takes passage upon a steamer, or a seat in a railway carriage, does not "employ" such steamer or carriage in any just sense. (U. S. v. Thomas, 195 U. S., 418.)

Under section 1571, Revised Statutes, the term "vessels employed by authority of law" is restricted to vessels owned or otherwise engaged in the Government service; and travel under orders by naval officers upon a merchant vessel is not service within the meaning of that section. (McGowan v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 454.)

Section 1571 recognizes the fact that a naval officer, like a landsman, may be on shore duty and yet sailing the seas beyond the 3-mile limit. (McGowan v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 454.)

Where an assistant surgeon in the Navy travels under orders, as a passenger, on a United States naval vessel from China to reach an assignment to duty in the Philippine Islands, he is not performing sea service and is only entitled to shore pay. While he was traveling under orders, his orders were not to perform sea service in the sense required to entitle him to sea pay. (Thompson v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 459.)

Where an assistant surgeon in the Navy was ordered by the commander in chief of the Asiatic station to proceed on the U. S. S. Iris and report to the senior squadron commander off Taku, China, for temporary duty with the detachment of marines; and under orders of the senior squadron commander he performed services in China with the United States marines, such services were shore duties and not duties at sea; during the period in question he was not attached to and performed no duty on any ship. (Thompson v. U. S., 49 Ct. Cls., 459.)

Mixed duty; which is paramount.—

Where the assignment of an officer to duty by the Navy Department expressly imposes upon him the continued discharge of his sea duties, and qualifies the shore duty as merely temporary and ancillary to the regular sea duty, the presumption is that the shore duty is temporary and does not operate to interfere with or discharge the officer from the responsibilities of sea duties to which he is regularly assigned; and he is entitled to sea pay during the time of such temporary shore duty. (U. S. v. Engard, 196 U. S., 511.)

Where an officer is assigned to the command of a training ship, and of a vessel at a station used as a training ship, and his most arduous and responsible duties are discharged on shore, it must be held that the ship is the incident and the shore the principal. (McGowan v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 63.)

Where the question is one of shore duty or sea service, the facts in each case must be considered, and where there is a preponderance the service having paramount character must constitute the basis on which to predicate the right of pay. (McGowan v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 63.)

The fact that the Secretary of the Navy designates a mixed duty as shore duty is an indication of the construction which he places upon it. (McGowan v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 63.)

A naval officer on shore duty who was assigned to the temporary command of a vessel in the Coast Survey service, but who continued on shore duty and did not live continuously on board the vessel, and was not subject to the restrictions, requirements, or regulations of sea service, is entitled only to shore-duty pay. (Taussig v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 104.)

Officers of the Navy may perform duty on a receiving ship which will entitle them to sea pay; but only where they wear their uniform when on duty, live and mess on board the vessel, and are subject to all the restrictions and regulations applicable to vessels at sea; but an officer also having shore duty, living and messing on shore in quarters furnished to him by the Government, and presumably receiving the allowances to which Army officers are entitled, is entitled only to shore-duty pay. (Mahan v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cls., 36.)

It is well settled that where a naval officer attached to a vessel and detailed for shore duty is not called upon to perform services ashore incompatible with the performance of his duty on his ship, and the shore services are temporary and not so different in character as to detach him in fact from his vessel, his paramount duty is sea service. (Leach v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 132.)

The primary question in the case of a naval officer, "detailed for special duty on shore," is one of fact; and the court can not determine the character of the duty on shore or the right of the officer to sea pay or shore-duty pay without knowing what were the services rendered on shore, and how far they detached him in fact from his vessel. (Leach v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 132.)

Where an officer of the Navy is assigned by proper authority to sea duty on a vessel at Guam, he can not be considered as "detailed for shore duty beyond seas," because the naval governor of Guam, by a verbal order, directed him to do duty on shore. (Furlong v. U. S., 45 Ct. Cls., 493.)

Duty performed on shore by a naval officer without having been detailed for shore duty must be regarded as temporary service performed while he officially remains on board the vessel to which he is attached. (Furlong v. U. S., 45 Ct. Cls., 493.)

When a naval officer attached to a vessel and entitled to sea-service pay is ordered by the Secretary of the Navy to report for recruiting service "in addition to your present duties," and he is absent from his vessel on recruiting duty on shore a year, he is not entitled to sea pay though he remains technically attached to his vessel. (Doyle v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 181.)

An officer entirely relieved from all the responsibilities and discomforts of sea service for more than a year while with a recruiting party on shore can not be regarded as on temporary shore service, though technically the order assigning him to recruiting duty did not detach him from his vessel or separate him from sea duty. (Doyle v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 181.)

Where an officer in the performance of sea duty left his vessel on authorized leave, and without rejoining his vessel or resuming his sea duty thereon was placed on special temporary duty ashore in the Bureau of Navigation, he was not, while in the performance of such temporary duty ashore, in a sea-duty status, and was not entitled to sea-duty pay. (18 Comp. Dec., 340.)

When right to sea pay begins and ends.—
The right of a naval officer to sea pay begins when sea service begins, independent of any order of the Navy Department. (Wyckoff v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cls., 288.)

An officer detached from one vessel and assigned to duty on another, by proper authority, is on shore duty while passing from the one to the other, and entitled only to shore-duty pay. (Ryan v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 143.)

The act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), provides that "all officers on sea duty and all officers on shore duty beyond the continental limits of the United States shall while so serving receive ten per centum additional of their salaries and increase as above provided, and such increase shall commence from the date of reporting for duty on board ship or the date of sailing from the United States for shore duty beyond the seas or to join a ship in foreign waters."

An officer in 1867 and 1868 was not entitled to sea pay after being detached from his vessel on a foreign station and ordered to report to the Secretary of the Navy. (Bishop v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 473.)

Where an officer of the Navy is detached from sea duty he ceases to be entitled to sea pay, and, generally, increased pay will cease when an officer is detached from service entitling him thereto. (McCully v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 275.)

Prior to the act of May 13, 1908, there was no statute giving officers a 10 per cent increase in pay subsequent to detachment abroad from sea duty, unless while returning they were actually in the performance of sea duty. Accordingly, the clause in the act of May 13, 1908, saving officers of the Navy from reduction in pay and allowances then authorized by law, has no application to a claim for sea pay by an officer after detachment abroad from sea duty and while returning to the United States. (McDonald v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 123.)

Prior to the act of May 13, 1908, officers of the Navy were entitled to the increased pay for shore duty beyond seas until their return to the United States; and the act of May 13, 1908, did not change the law so as to deprive naval officers of the right to increased pay while returning home upon orders from foreign shore duty; the saving clause in that act preserved the right of naval officers in this respect under laws previously existing. (Gearing v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 187; see note to sec. 1556, R. S., under "Additional pay for special duty," with respect to "Shore duty beyond seas.")

The statutory situation is anomalous, providing extra compensation for officers on foreign shore duty from the time of departure from the United States to the time of their return, and in restricting the extra allowance in the case of naval officers on sea service to a period extending only to the time consumed in reaching the assignment for sea duty; but there is no escape from that conclusion, which the express language of the statute prescribes. The inequality will not justify the court in departing from the express terms of the law. (McDonald v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 123.)

An officer is not entitled to sea-duty pay while aboard a transport en route to the United States after having been detached from sea duty abroad. (McDonald v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 123, citing Farenholt v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 114.)

In United States v. Thomas (195 U. S., 418), the Supreme Court declined to extend the benefits of extra compensation provided for Army officers for service beyond the limits of the United States, under the acts of May 26, 1900 (31 Stat., 211), and March 2, 1901 (31 Stat., 903), to naval officers performing sea service under similar conditions; and doubtless the act of May 13, 1908, allowing increased pay "from the date of reporting for duty on board ship or the date of sailing from the United States for shore duty beyond the seas or to join a ship in foreign waters," was enacted with this decision in view. Just why the period of computation in allowing the extra per centum is so specifically circumscribed is difficult to perceive; nevertheless the express language of the act so provides, and the express provisions of law must govern. (McDonald v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 123.)

Sea pay allowed for shore duty.—See note to section 1556, Revised Statutes, under "Additional pay for special duty," with respect to the pay of the Superintendent of the Naval Academy and of the commandant of the navy yard, Mare Island.

The duty of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy being shore duty, he was entitled only to shore-duty pay under the act of June 8, 1880 (21 Stat., 164), which provided that the Judge Advocate General shall have "the rank, pay, and allowances of a captain in the Navy or a colonel in the Marine Corps, as the case may be." The court knows of no instance where an officer in the Navy is entitled to sea pay and allowances while performing shore duty, except where it is so provided by express statute. (Lemly v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 468.)

Under the amendatory act of June 5, 1896 (29 Stat., 251), which provided that the Judge Advocate General of the Navy should receive the "highest pay of a captain in the Navy," held, that the Judge Advocate General was entitled to the sea pay of a captain. (11 Comp. Dec., 11. For other cases, see note to sec. 421, R. S., relating to pay of chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department.)

The words "highest rates of pay attached to their respective grades" as used in a special act of Congress, approved July 29, 1886 (24 Stat., 346), increasing the pay of certain officers for exceptional shore service, mean something more than "sea pay"; these words entitle the officers concerned to the highest sea pay of their grade, i. e., the rate of pay allowed for sea duty to officers in that grade entitled to the maximum increase for longevity. (Schuetze v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 299.)

Officers temporarily absent from their ship.—See note to section 1556, Revised Statutes, under "Absence from duty"; see also note above, under "Mixed duty, which is paramount."

An officer attached to a vessel at sea, and not detached from it by competent authority, is entitled to sea pay while temporarily in a naval hospital because of a gunshot wound incurred in the line of duty. (Collins v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 222.)

A Navy regulation providing that "an officer temporarily absent from a ship in commission to which he is attached shall continue to receive sea pay" does not contravene section 1556, Revised Statutes. (Collins v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 222.)

Where a naval officer is attached to a vessel when ordered to a hospital for treatment, he is entitled to sea pay while in the hospital; but if when ordered to the hospital he is awaiting the arrival of the vessel to which he has been ordered, he is not then attached, and will not be entitled to sea pay while in the hospital. (Ackley v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cls., 216.)

Officers of the Navy granted temporary leave of absence from their ships are not, during absence on such leave, on "sea duty," and therefore are not entitled under the act of May 13, 1908, to the 10 per cent additional pay therein authorized for officers "while so serving." (15 Comp. Dec., 656.)

A commissioned officer of the Navy is not entitled to the 10 per cent additional pay for sea duty while on leave of absence, even though the leave be of only one day's duration. (Comp. Dec., June 8, 1915, 172 S. and A. Memo., 3703.)

A warrant officer of the Navy granted leave of absence from duty at sea is entitled, under the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), to full pay at the rate received by him while on sea duty. (23 Comp. Dec., 200. Note: The act of Aug. 29, 1916, provided that "warrant officers shall be allowed such leave of absence, with full pay, as is now or may hereafter be allowed other officers of the United States Navy.")

Sea service normal duty of naval officers.—If Army officers should be allowed increased pay when ordered to sea or to a foreign port, it would not follow that naval officers receiving Army pay would be entitled to a like increase, since such service would be wholly exceptional in the case of Army officers, while it is the natural and normal duty of naval officers to engage in sea service, cruise in foreign waters, and lie up in foreign ports. (U. S. v. Thomas, 195 U. S., 418.)

The normal pay of naval officers under the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), is the higher, i. e., sea service pay; the exceptional pay is for shore service; both are dependent upon the character of the service. (Ryan v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 143.)

Under the Navy personnel act the normal pay of officers in the Navy is sea pay, and the exceptional pay is for shore service; where an officer performs shore duty and receives shore pay, he is not entitled to the normal pay. (Mahan v. U. S., 40 Ct. Cls., 36.)

Sec. 1572. [Detention beyond term of enlistment. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1572. All petty officers and persons of inferior ratings who are detained beyond the terms of service, according to the provisions of section fourteen hundred and twenty-two, or who, after the termination of their service, voluntarily re-enter, to serve until the return to an Atlantic port of the vessel to which they belong, and until their regular discharge therefrom, shall, for the time during which they are so detained or so serve beyond their original terms of service, receive an addition of one-fourth of their former pay."—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 17, v. 12, p. 610.)

It was superseded by the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 484), which also superseded sections 1422–1425, Revised Statutes, and re-enacted, with amendments, the provisions of all these sections as section 1422, Revised Statutes. See notes to sections 1422–1425, Revised Statutes.

Additional pay not pay of rating.—The additional pay to which petty officers and persons of inferior ratings are temporarily entitled, under the provisions of section 1422 and 1572, Revised Statutes, should not be added to their regular rates of pay in computations under a statute (sec. 4631, R. S., par. 5), providing for the distribution of bounty among the officers and crew of a vessel "in proportion to their respective rates of pay in the service." (Engagement off Santiago Bay, 36 Ct. Cls., 200.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 1418, 1422, and 1569, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1573. [Honorable-discharge gratuity and continuous-service pay.] If any enlisted man or apprentice, being honorably discharged, shall reenlist for four years within four months thereafter, he shall, on presenting his honorable discharge or on accounting in a satisfactory manner for its loss, be entitled to a gratuity of four months' pay equal in amount to that which he would have received if he had been employed in actual service: Provided, That any enlisted man in the Navy whose term of enlistment has been extended for an aggregate of four years shall, after the expiration of the preceding four-year term of enlistment upon which the extension is made and if otherwise entitled to an honorable discharge, be paid the gratuity above provided: And provided, That any man who has received an honorable discharge from his last term of enlistment, or who has received a recommendation for reenlistment upon the expiration of his last term of enlistment, who reenlists for a term of four years within four months from the date of his discharge, shall receive an increase of one dollar and thirty-six cents per month to the pay prescribed for the rating in which he serves for each successive reenlistment: And provided further, That an extension of the period of enlistment as hereinbefore authorized, aggregating four years, shall be held and considered as equivalent to continuous service with respect to all rights, privileges, and benefits granted for such service pursuant to law."

This section was expressly amended and reenacted to read as above by act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 331). As originally enacted it read as follows:

"SEC. 1573. If any seaman, ordinary seaman, landsman, fireman, coal heaver, or boy, being honorably discharged, shall reenlist for three years, within three months thereafter, he shall, on presenting his honorable discharge, or on accounting in a satisfactory manner for its loss, be entitled to pay, during the said three months, equal to that to which he would have been entitled if he had been employed in actual service."—(2 Mar. 1855, c. 136, s. 2, v. 10, p. 627. 7 June, 1864, c. 111, v. 13, p. 120.)

It had previously been amended by joint resolution of June 11, 1896 (29 Stat., 476), which reads as follows: "That the benefits of honorable discharge, as conferred by section fourteen hundred and twenty-six of the Revised Statutes, and of three months' pay upon reenlistment after honorable discharge, as conferred by section fifteen hundred and seventy-three, upon seamen, ordinary seamen, landsmen, firemen, coal heavers, and boys, be, and the same are hereby, extended and made applicable to all enlisted persons in the Navy. And all accounts of paymasters who have made payments to enlisted men, not of the classes named in sections fourteen hundred and twenty-six and fifteen hundred and seventy-three of the Revised Statutes as if they had been included in the provisions of said sections, shall be allowed and passed by the accounting officers of the Treasury as if they had been included in said sections."

It was further amended and reenacted by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 16 (30 Stat., 1008), which fixed the term of enlistment in the Navy at four years, and expressly provided that section 1573, Revised Statutes, be amended to read as follows: "If any enlisted man or apprentice, being honorably discharged, shall reenlist for four years within four months thereafter, he shall, on presenting his honorable discharge or on accounting in a satisfactory manner for its loss, be entitled to pay during the said four months equal to that to which he would have been entitled if he had been employed in actual service; and that any man who has received an honorable discharge from his last term of enlistment, or who has received a recommendation for reenlistment upon the expiration of his last term of service of not less than three years, who reenlists for a term of four years within four months from the date of his discharge, shall receive an increase of one dollar and thirty-six cents per month to the pay prescribed for the rating in which he serves for each consecutive reenlistment."

Other modifications of section 1573 have been made by the following enactments:

By act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 331), provision was made for the discharge of any enlisted man within three months before the expiration of his term of enlistment or extended enlistment, "without prejudice to any right, privilege, or benefit that he would have received, except pay and allowances for the unexpired period not served, or to which he would thereafter become entitled, had he served his full term of enlistment or extended enlistment."

By act of April 25, 1917 (40 Stat., 38), extension of minority enlistments in the Navy and Marine Corps was authorized under similar conditions as provided by law for extending other enlistments.

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 560), it was provided that enlisted men who serve one year at sea shall, in time of peace, if they so elect, be given a discharge without cost; that "an honorable discharge may be granted under this provision, but when so granted shall not entitle the holder, in case of reenlistment, to the benefits of an honorable discharge granted upon completion of an enlistment." This enactment was repealed by act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1171).

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 590), it was provided that "Men who have enrolled in the Fleet Naval Reserve within four months of the date of their discharge from the Regular Navy shall, upon reenlistment in the regular naval service within four months of the date of discharge from the Fleet Naval Reserve, be entitled to the same gratuity and additional pay as if they had reenlisted in the regular naval service within four months of discharge therefrom."

By act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1174), it was provided that any former member of class 1 of the United States Naval Reserve, established by act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 940), who reenlisted in the Navy prior to May 1, 1917, shall be held and considered to have reenlisted within four months from the date of discharge from the Navy for the purpose of continuous service pay.

By act of May 22, 1917, section 3 (40 Stat., 85), it was provided "that enlistments in the Navy and Marine Corps, during such time as the United States may be at war, shall be for four years, or for such shorter period or periods as the President may prescribe, or for the period of the present war." (This enactment amended sec. 1573, R. S. See 25 Comp. Dec., 315, noted below, under "Short-term enlistments.")

By act of July 1, 1918 (41 Stat., 719), it was provided that retired enlisted men recalled to active service shall be entitled to the benefits of continuous service for such length of time as employed in active service. (See note below, under "Retired enlisted men.")

By act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 134), it was provided that "until June 30, 1920, enlistments in the Navy may be for terms of two, three, or four years, and all laws now applicable to four-year enlistments shall apply, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, to enlistments for a shorter period with proportionate benefits upon discharge and reenlistment."

By the same act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 139), it was provided that enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force, who have performed active duty during the war, may be transferred to the Regular Navy to serve out the unexpired term of their enrollment, and that men so transferred "shall be entitled to and receive the same pay, rights, privileges, and allowances in all respects as now provided by existing law for men regularly discharged and reenlisted immediately upon expiration of their full four-year enlistment in the Regular Navy or Marine Corps."

The same act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 139), authorized the issuance of honorable discharges to men who served in the war with the German Government and were discharged, after November 11, 1918, prior to expiration of their full enlistment.

The said act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 139), provided that men who, after February 3, 1917, and before November 11, 1918, enlisted for four years, shall, upon application to the Secretary of the Navy on or before September 1, 1919, be held to have enlisted for the duration of the war, and shall, when discharged, be granted an honorable discharge if otherwise entitled thereto; and that any enlisted man so discharged from the Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, and thereafter reenlisting in the Navy or Marine Corps within four months, under conditions prescribed by law, for a period of four years, "shall be entitled to receive the benefits of the gratuity pay provided by existing law for reenlistments."

By the same act it was provided that men enlisted for the period of the war, or who are regarded as having enlisted for the duration of the war, may, if entitled to an honorable discharge, extend their enlistments for one, two, three, or four years; and shall be entitled to and receive the same rights, privileges, pay, and allowances in all respects as provided by law for men who extend enlistments on completion of their terms of enlistments, except as to gratuity pay; and that, as to the latter, such men shall be allowed one month's pay for an extension of one year, two months' pay for an extension of two years, three months' pay for an extension of three years, and four months' pay for an extension of four years.

By the same act (41 Stat., 141) it was provided that enlisted men discharged to accept appointments as officers in the Naval Reserve Force who reenlist in the Navy within four months after termination of their reserve service shall be entitled to count his service in the Regular Navy and his active service in the Naval Reserve Force as continuous for purposes of continuous-service pay.

By act of May 18, 1920, section 10 (41 Stat., 603), it was provided "that any enlisted man who shall reenlist in the Navy within one year from the date of his discharge therefrom shall, upon such reenlistment, be entitled to and shall receive the same benefits as are now authorized by law for reenlistment within four months from date of last discharge from the service: Provided, That this section shall become inoperative six months after the date of the approval of this act." (This provision was not retroactive, but was effective only from

May 18, 1920, to November 17, 1920, inclusive. (26 Comp. Dec., 1065.)

By act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 836, sec. 7), it was provided "that hereafter enlistments in the Navy and in the Marine Corps may be for terms of two, three, or four years, and all laws now applicable to four-year enlistments shall apply, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, to enlistments for a shorter period with proportionate benefits upon discharge and reenlistment."

Historical note.—Prior to the passage of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 16 (30 Stat., 1008), the right of enlisted men of the Navy to increased pay, based on previous continuous service, was governed by regulations of the Navy. (6 Comp. Dec., 589.)

Under section 1569, Revised Statutes, the President had the authority to provide an increase of pay for continuous service, and to make it subject to such conditions as he might deem proper. (4 Comp. Dec., 281.)

Continuous-service certificates and additional pay of $1 per month for each continuous reenlistment to all persons holding such certificates was provided for in a circular issued by Mr. Borie, Secretary of the Navy, on April 26, 1869, the provisions of which were embodied in the Navy Regulations of 1870, as articles 1070 and 1071, and with slight verbal changes repeated in the Regulations of 1876 as paragraphs 18 and 19 of chapter 10, section 2, page 100. The same general provisions were repeated in General Order No. 327 of November 21, 1884, and incorporated in the Navy Regulations of 1893 as articles 810 and 1172. (3 Comp. Dec., 316.)

Under the Navy Regulations of 1893, article 1172, and 1896, article 1174, in order to entitle a seaman to increased pay for continuous service he must have received an "honorable" discharge from a previous enlistment or a recommendation for reenlistment upon its termination, and must have reenlisted for three years within three months from the date of discharge. An exception, however, was made in the case of enlisted men who were prevented from serving the full term of their enlistments by reasons of the wrecking of the vessel on which they were serving. (4 Comp. Dec., 281.)

Although no specific regulation therefor existed, it was held that an enlisted man discharged prior to expiration of his term of enlistment, in the case where a vessel was wrecked or lost, and who was issued a continuous-service certificate in accordance with the practice of the Navy Department, was entitled to the additional compensation authorized by the Navy Regulations for all persons holding such certificates, the same as though he had actually completed his term of enlistment. (3 Comp. Dec., 316.)

A practice of the Navy Department relating to the pay of enlisted men was the equivalent of a specific regulation of the Secretary of the Navy, and, like all other regulations of the Navy Department relating to the pay of seamen of the Navy, was presumed to be the act of the President prescribing the pay of these men as required by section 1569, Revised Statutes. (3 Comp. Dec., 316.)

The honorable discharge required by the Navy Regulations prescribing continuous-service pay was that provided for in sections 1426 and 1429, Revised Statutes, and was dependent upon fidelity and obedience in the service. It differed from the "ordinary" discharge in that the latter carried with it no testimonial as to the special good qualities and fitness of the holder. Accordingly, held, that where an enlisted man upon the expiration of his term of enlistment received an "ordinary" discharge, which contained no recommendation for reenlistment, he was not entitled to the benefit of continuous service. Having thereafter received an honorable discharge and complied with the other conditions of continuous service, he was entitled to increased pay from the date of this first reenlistment after receiving an honorable discharge. (4 Comp. Dec., 281.)

The purpose of the joint resolution of June 11, 1896 (above quoted), was to legalize the practice of paying all enlisted men, upon reenlistment, the extra pay, which practice had crept into the service without warrant of law. This practice doubtless arose from the fact that the honorable discharge provided for in section 1429, Revised Statutes, was confused with the honorable discharge granted under section 1426. The object of the honorable discharge provided for in section 1429 is stated in that section to be "as a testimonial of fidelity and obedience," while the honorable discharge provided for in section 1426, taken in connection with section 1573, is seen to be for the purpose of holding out the extra pay to the six lowest classes of enlisted men in the Navy as an inducement to reenlist. By the joint resolution cited, Congress has seen fit to extend the privileges arising from honorable discharges upon reenlistment far beyond what was originally provided. (2 Comp. Dec., 608.)

The joint resolution of June 11, 1896 (above quoted), extended the benefits conferred by sections 1426 and 1573, Revised Statutes, to all enlisted persons. (2 Comp. Dec., 608.)

For other cases, see note to section 1426, Revised Statutes.

In particular cases, prior to the act of March 3, 1899, the Secretary of the Navy could waive the provision requiring reenlistment within three months from the date of previous honorable discharge as a condition to payment of continuous-service pay. (6 Comp. Dec., 589.)

The increase in monthly pay for continuous service is now fixed by law, instead of by Navy Regulations. (5 Comp. Dec., 929.)

The rate of increased pay for continuous service which, before the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 16 (30 Stat., 1008), had been fixed by the President under section 1569, Revised Statutes, became by said act a part of the statutory law. Said act fixed the increase of $1.36 per month to the pay prescribed for the rating, for each consecutive reenlistment, as the measure of the increase of value to the service of one who so reenlists; and it is not within the power of anyone, until the law is changed, to fix a greater or less rate. Under section 1569 the President could fix the pay to be allowed an enlisted man, and could change same from time to time, as he deemed just and proper; but when he had fixed the rate, then by section 16 of the personnel act Congress declared what increased amount the man should receive for reenlistment. (8 Comp. Dec., 227; see note below, under "Continuous-service pay defined.")

"Continuous-service pay" defined.—Broadly speaking, continuous-service pay includes any pay or gratuity which is based upon the element of continuity in the service of enlisted men. So defined, continuous-service pay includes the so-called honorable discharge gratuity, since the payment of such gratuity is dependent on continuity of service. It also includes additional pay allowed under General Order No. 34 of 1906 (noted under sec. 1569, R. S.), as well as continuous-service pay proper. (25 Comp. Dec., 440.)

Reenlistment pay under General Order No. 34 of 1906 (noted under sec. 1569, R. S.), continuous-service pay under the act of August 22, 1912, and honorable-discharge gratuity under the act of August 22, 1912, are three distinct classifications of pay that should be kept separate and apart in any consideration of an enlisted man's respective rights thereto, each being dependent upon conditions peculiar to itself. (26 Comp. Dec., 565.)

Navy Department General Order No. 20 of January 1, 1901 (noted under sec. 1569, R. S.), fixing the pay of mess attendants for the second and third enlistments, and adding $4 to the monthly pay of the rating for a first reenlistment, and $4 more per month for a second reenlistment, in addition to the $1.36 per month for each consecutive reenlistment allowed by section 16 of the Navy personnel act, was contrary to law in that the rate of increased pay to be allowed for continuous service was fixed by Congress in the Navy personnel act, and the order of the President fixed an additional amount per month which constituted an increase in continuous-service pay. (8 Comp. Dec., 227.)

Navy Department General Order No. 34 of November 28, 1906, publishing Executive order of November 27, 1906 (quoted under sec. 1569, R. S.), providing increased compensation for trained men who are citizens of the United States, was within the authority conferred upon the President by section 1569, Revised Statutes, and not contrary to the act of March 3, 1899, section 16, providing continuous-service pay of $1.36 per month. General Order No. 34 does not attempt to provide for continuous-service pay, but does undertake to provide for pay based on length of service, or longevity pay. The main purpose of the statute providing for continuous-service pay was to encourage immediate reenlistments, while that of General Order No. 34 was to establish higher rates of pay for trained men. Their periods of prior service were not required to immediately precede the last enlistment, but might have been at any time, continuous reenlistment not being required. (13 Comp. Dec., 448, distinguishing 8 Comp. Dec., 227; see also 17 Comp. Dec., 27, 32.)

"Pay" defined.—The term "pay" in section 1573, Revised Statutes, entitling men on re-enlistment to "pay" during the said three months, means regular pay, and does not include increased pay for extra duty. (5 Comp. Dec., 241.)

Neither the additional pay of an enlisted man of the Navy for service as a gun pointer, nor that for service on board of submarine vessels, is "pay" within the meaning of that term as used in section 1573 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act of March 3, 1899, section 16 (30 Stat., 1008). (12 Comp. Dec., 772.)

The reenlistment pay provided by section 1573, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of March 3, 1899, includes the extra pay provided for the holders of good-conduct medals by article 1257 of the Navy Regulations of 1905. (13 Comp. Dec., 253.)

On reenlistment a man is entitled to the regular pay of his rating during the four months as provided by section 1573, as amended, subject, however, to said pay being increased or reduced during the said four months, and including pay for good-conduct medal awarded on day of discharge. (17 Comp. Dec., 355.)

Under the provisions of the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 140), the increases in pay authorized by section 15 of the act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 87), became a part of the permanent base rate of pay of an enlisted man in the Navy during the continuance of certain enlistments; and upon this new base rate and permanent increases by continuous service, medals, and General Order No. 34 of 1906 (noted under sec. 1569, R. S.), the honorable-discharge gratuity, which is authorized for men who reenlist in the regular Navy should be computed. (26 Comp. Dec., 139.)

The $2 per month additional pay authorized by the act of February 4, 1919 (40 Stat., 1056), to each enlisted or enrolled person of the naval service to whom is awarded a medal of honor, distinguished-service medal, or a Navy cross should be included in computing honorable-discharge gratuity of enlisted men who reenlist in the Navy for four years within four months after an honorable discharge. (26 Comp. Dec., 976.)

Character of discharge.—See "Historical note" above; see also note to section 1426, Revised Statutes; and see statutes quoted above under this section.

To entitle a seaman in the Navy to the three months' extra pay for reenlisting, known as "honorable-discharge" money, provided for in section 1573, Revised Statutes, his discharge from his previous service must have been honorable within the terms of sections 1426 and 1429, Revised Statutes. An ordinary discharge was not sufficient to entitle him to the three months' extra pay. (4 Comp. Dec., 281.)

An enlisted man of the Navy who received a "bad-conduct" discharge from his last enlistment is not entitled to receive in his present enlistment any continuous-service pay. Under section 1573, Revised Statutes, as amended, he must have received an honorable discharge from his last term of enlistment, or a recommendation for reenlistment upon the expiration of his last term of enlistment; otherwise, on reenlistment he loses the benefit of continuous-service pay which he received under his previous enlistment, as well as failing to acquire any new right to continuous-service pay. (20 Comp. Dec., 856.)

An enlisted man of the Navy dishonorably discharged, pursuant to the sentence of a general court-martial, within three months preceding the expiration of his enlistment, and recommended for reenlistment, is not entitled on reenlistment within four months to any continuous-service pay. His discharge was pursuant to the sentence of court-martial, and not for expiration of enlistment; although it happened to occur within three months prior to expiration, it was not a discharge authorized by the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 331, quoted above). As his discharge was not honorable, and as it occurred prior to the expiration of his last term of service, and independently of the act of August 22, 1912, the recommendation for reenlistment received by him was not a "recommendation for reenlistment upon the expiration of his last term of enlistment" within the meaning of section 1573, as amended. (21 Comp. Dec., 871.)

An enlisted man of the Navy who, on being dishonorably discharged after the expiration of his enlistment, is recommended for reenlistment, is entitled upon reenlistment within four months after the date of discharge to additional pay for continuous service. (Comp. Dec., Aug. 31, 1914, 70 MS. Comp. Dec., 1914; cited in 21 Comp. Dec., 871.)

The act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 331), providing for the discharge of men at any time within three months prior to expiration of enlistment, without prejudice, etc., (quoted above), amended section 1573, Revised Statutes. (24 Comp. Dec., 776.)

An enlisted man of the Navy whose preceding period of enlistment expired while he was on furlough without pay, as authorized by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 580), and who therefore, in accordance with the practice then prevailing, did not receive an honorable discharge upon expiration of his enlistment, his enlistment having been regarded as terminated by furlough, and not by expiration, held, not entitled, on reenlistment, to continuous-service pay as authorized by the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 331), amending section 1573, Revised Statutes (25 Comp. Dec., 328).

As an enlistment which expires while the enlisted man is in desertion is not a termination of service by expiration of enlistment, held, that an enlisted man of the Navy who deserts, surrenders himself subsequent to the period of enlistment, and is permitted to reenlist, is not entitled to continuous-service pay under the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 331), not having received an honorable discharge from his last term of enlistment, and not having been recommended for reenlistment upon the expiration of his last term of enlistment. (26 Comp. Dec., 250.)

Period allowed for reenlistment.—See "Historical note" above. See also act of February 8, 1889 (25 Stat., 657), which permitted persons honorably discharged, in accordance with section 1429, Revised Statutes, to elect a home on any receiving ship, with one ration per day, during any portion of the time allowed them to reenlist with the pecuniary benefits authorized by section 1573, Revised Statutes.

A seaman who was honorably discharged September 21, 1898, and reenlisted December 21, 1898, reenlisted "within three months" as provided by section 1573, Revised Statutes, and became entitled to pay during the said three months. (5 Comp. Dec., 362.)

The Secretary of the Navy has no authority to waive the three months' limitation in the provision of section 1573, Revised Statutes, as amended by joint resolution of June 11, 1896, which, prior to the passage of the naval personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 16 (30 Stat., 1008), provided for three months' pay on reenlistment in the Navy for a term of three years within a period of three months. (6 Comp. Dec., 589.)

Under article 861, Navy Regulations, 1900, an enlisted man of the Navy who accepted an appointment as paymaster's clerk thereby terminated his enlistment; and where he served as paymaster's clerk more than four months he was not entitled, on subsequently reenlisting, to count his prior service as an enlisted man in computing his longevity pay. (10 Comp. Dec., 528.)

Where an enlisted man was discharged at his own request, with recommendation for reenlistment, prior to the expiration of his term of enlistment but after serving for more than three years, to enable him to accept an appointment as paymaster's clerk, he was entitled, upon reenlisting within four months from the time of his discharge, to the continuous-service pay provided for by the act of March 3, 1899. (11 Comp. Dec., 682.)

The phrase "within four months," as used in section 16 of the act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1008), amending section 1573, means within four calendar months; and in computing the same the day of discharge and that day only should be excluded. (14 Comp. Dec., 583.)

An enlisted man of the Navy who was honorably discharged January 19, 1907, and reenlisted May 20, 1907, did not reenlist "within four months" within the meaning of section 16 of the act of March 3, 1899, and is not entitled to the honorable-discharge gratuity pay for said four months, nor to the $1.36 increase of pay, during such reenlistment. (14 Comp. Dec., 583.)

Where an enlisted man of the Navy had been honorably discharged, and applied for reenlistment within the four months allowed by the act of March 3, 1899, but was not then formally reenlisted on account of the fact that his continuous-service certificate had not been returned by the officer to whom he had forwarded same with request for transportation; and said man was formally reenlisted on a date subsequent to the expiration of the four months, having in the meantime actually entered on duty with the knowledge of the commanding officer of the ship upon which he had made application for reenlistment, held, that such man had reenlisted within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1899, and is entitled to all the benefits of said act as if his reenlistment had been formally completed on the date of application. (16 Comp. Dec., 359.)

An honorably discharged enlisted man of the Navy applied for reenlistment to a traveling recruiting party; was given a preliminary examination and authorization for reenlistment "subject to reexamination physically"; was physically reexamined and found disqualified for reenlistment and granted permission to enter a naval hospital for operative treatment, if he so desired, with a view to reenlistment—all within four months from the date of his discharge. Subsequent to the expiration of the four months' period he entered the hospital, and on discharge therefrom entered into the formal contract of enlistment and executed the oath of allegiance. Held, that he was not reenlisted within four months from the date of discharge, and is not entitled to honorable-discharge gratuity or continuous-service pay on such reenlistment. (19 Comp. Dec., 334.)

Short-term enlistments.—While continuous-service pay provided for enlisted men of the Navy under the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 331), is authorized only when reenlistment is for a term of four years, the act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 85), modifies the provision of the former act as to the term of enlistment, and by a fair construction of the two acts if an enlisted man reenlists for another full term, as prescribed by the latter act, whether it be for four years or for such period as may be prescribed by the President, or for the duration of the present war, he is entitled to continuous-service pay if such reenlistment takes place within four months from the date of discharge. (25 Comp. Dec., 315.)

For the purpose of computing payment of honorable-discharge gratuity, and continuous-service pay, enlistments in the Navy for "the period of the present war," authorized by section 3 of the act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84), may be considered to have expired on date of discharge; or in case of an extension of enlistment, as provided by the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 139), on date the extension becomes effective. (26 Comp. Dec., 132.)

Under the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 134), above quoted, providing for short-term enlistments "with proportionate benefits upon discharge and reenlistment," held that a man reenlisting for a term of three years acquired a right to continuous-service increase of pay equal to three-fourths of $1.36 per month, plus 10 per cent. (26 Comp. Dec., 399.)

The words "with proportionate benefits upon discharge and reenlistment" apply to discharge and reenlistment after expiration of an enlistment for less than four years, entered into under authority of the act of July 11, 1919. Accordingly, a man reenlisting in the Navy after July 11, 1919, for three years, was entitled to increase of continuous-service pay as allowed for a four-year enlistment; but upon his discharge and subsequent reenlistment he would be entitled to "proportionate benefits" or three-fourths of the continuous-service pay allowed upon reenlistment after discharge from a four-year enlistment. (26 Comp. Dec., 706.)

The amount of honorable-discharge gratuity of enlisted men of the Navy on reenlistments for two years, or three years, or four years, authorized by acts of July 11, 1919, and June 4, 1920

(above quoted), is equal to the pay the enlisted men would have received if they had been employed in actual service two months, or three months, or four months, respectively. (27 Comp. Dec., 210, following 27 Comp. Dec., 101.)

In computing continuous-service pay, the unit of service is four years; for each full four years of service the additional pay authorized should be credited for the ensuing four years of service without regard to length of time actually served in any particular enlistment of shorter periods authorized by acts of July 11, 1919, and June 4, 1920 (above quoted). (27 Comp. Dec., 210.)

Enlisted men of the Navy serving over four years continuously, under short-term enlistments or extensions of enlistments, are entitled to continuous-service pay at the expiration of the first four years of continuous service, and at the expiration of each four years of continuous service thereafter. (27 Comp. Dec., 506.)

A man enlisted for three years, May 13, 1896, was honorably discharged May 12, 1899, on account of expiration of enlistment, and reenlisted the next day for a term of four years as prescribed by the act of March 3, 1899. Held, that he was entitled to the honorable-discharge gratuity of four months' pay, as prescribed by the act of March 3, 1899, and not to the gratuity of three months' pay as prescribed by section 1573, Revised Statutes, prior to its amendment; further held, that he was entitled to continuous-service pay of $1.36 per month, as prescribed by the act of March 3, 1899, and not to the continuous-service pay of $1 per month under the Executive orders in force prior to March 3, 1899. (5 Comp. Dec., 929.)

Minority enlistment.—A person enlisted in the Navy during minority, and honorably discharged within three months before the expiration of his enlistment (as authorized by act of Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 331), and who reenlisted for four years the day following his discharge, is entitled to all the benefits accruing to an enlisted man for continuous-service pay, although still a minor at the time of his discharge and reenlistment. (20 Comp. Dec., 409.)

Extension of enlistment.—An extension of enlistment for one year, as provided in the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 330), entitles an enlisted man of the Navy to be credited under such extension with continuous-service certificate pay. (19 Comp. Dec., 819.)

When an enlisted man of the Navy has been detained in the service under section 1422, Revised Statutes, the enlistment in which he is detained may, under the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 331), be extended before the expiration of the authorized detention, to date not from the expiration of the original enlistment but from the end of the period for which he was legally detained. When so extended, the man is entitled to continuous-service-certificate pay. (20 Comp. Dec., 377, modifying 19 Comp. Dec., 819.)

The first enlistment of a seaman was extended one year, and during extension his rating was changed to gunner's mate, third class; at expiration of extended enlistment he was honorably discharged and reenlisted within four months. Held, that on reenlistment he was entitled to four months' honorable-discharge gratuity computed at the rate of pay he was receiving when discharged, which included his rating pay as a gunner's mate, third class; and that he was entitled to continuous-service pay, and 10 per cent increase thereof. (20 Comp. Dec., 361.)

An enlisted man of the Navy who surrendered from desertion and was restored to duty without trial, and who, after serving a period of probation, was allowed to extend his enlistment, is entitled under such extended enlistment to credit for pay for continuous service, his status being the same as though he had not been absent during his term of enlistment. (25 Comp. Dec., 920.)

The extension of enlistment law granted to enlisted men of the Regular Navy the right to continuous-service pay; and honorable-discharge gratuity is payable if the period for which the extension was made aggregated four full years. (26 Comp. Dec., 33, 34, citing 63 MS. Comp. Dec., 136, Oct. 12, 1912, and 68 MS. Comp. Dec., 1200, Feb. 25, 1914.)

Where under the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 331), an enlisted man of the Navy acquires a right to the continuous-service increase of pay by extending his enlistment, the right so acquired, except in cases where such extension aggregates four years, terminates upon his discharge at the expiration of the extended period of enlistment; and thereafter the enlisted man acquires a right to continuous-service pay only under the same conditions as such right is acquired upon reenlistment at the completion of a regular term of enlistment. (26 Comp. Dec., 399.)

Where under the act of August 22, 1912, an enlisted man of the Navy extends his enlistment, he is entitled to continuous-service pay during the period of extension as if the extension were in fact a reenlistment; but such right to continuous-service pay, except in cases where the extension aggregates four years, terminates upon discharge at the expiration of the extended enlistment; and thereafter, in computing his continuous-service pay in subsequent reenlistments, the extension under the said act of August 22, 1912, for less than four years, is to be considered a part of the original enlistment thus extended, and not as a separate and distinct enlistment or as part of any subsequent reenlistment. (26 Comp. Dec., 706.)

Naval reservists.—An enlisted man in the Navy who, at the expiration of his term of enlistment, is not discharged therefrom, but under the provisions of the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 556), is transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve, and who, within four months after the date of expiration of such term of enlistment is discharged from the Fleet Naval Reserve and reenlisted for four years in the Regular Navy, is entitled, in an otherwise proper case, to honorable-discharge gratuity and continuous-service pay. (23 Comp. Dec., 535.)

An enlisted man of the Navy who reenlists within four months of the date of his honorable discharge therefrom is not deprived of the gratuity authorized under the act of August 22,

1912, merely because of service in the Naval Reserve during the interval. (24 Comp. Dec., 129.)

A transferred member of the Fleet Naval Reserve, whose transfer was made after 20 years' service in the Regular Navy and not at the expiration of an enlistment, and who subsequently was discharged from the Fleet Naval Reserve and reenlisted next day in the Regular Navy, is not entitled to credit for continuous-service pay. The cases of transferred members are not covered by the provision in the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 590, above quoted), with respect to enrolled members of the Naval Reserve Force who are discharged therefrom and reenlist in the Regular Navy, nor is this case covered by 23 Comp. Dec., 535 (above noted), which related to enlisted men of the Navy transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve at the expiration of a period of enlistment and subsequently reenlisting in the Regular Navy. (25 Comp. Dec., 884.)

Enrolled men transferred from the Naval Reserve Force to the Regular Navy to serve the unexpired term of their enrollment, in accordance with the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 139, above quoted), are entitled, from the date the transfer is consummated, to increase of pay for continuous service, as well as to honorable-discharge gratuity. (26 Comp. Dec., 33.) But such former reservists who reenlist in the Regular Navy for four years within four months after discharge at the expiration of their period of enrollment thus served in the Regular Navy are not entitled to a further increase of pay for continuous service in addition to that received during the period of enrollment after transfer to the Regular Navy. (27 Comp. Dec., 695.)

Under the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 590, above quoted), an enlisted man of the Navy who was enrolled in the Fleet Naval Reserve within four months after discharge, and who, after discharge from the Fleet Naval Reserve, was again enlisted in the Regular Navy within the prescribed period, is entitled to honorable-discharge gratuity, computed upon the pay he was receiving at the date of his last discharge from the Regular Navy. (26 Comp. Dec., 489.)

The act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 141, above quoted), relating to enlisted men of the Navy appointed officers in the Naval Reserve Force and subsequently reenlisting, preserves the status previously acquired by continuity of service, which, without the provision, would be lost to such men; but it does not create any right to permanent additions to pay other than those already acquired. (26 Comp. Dec., 565; see note above, under "Continuous-service pay defined.")

Held, specifically, that the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 141), providing that service performed by the men described therein "shall be regarded as continuous for purposes of continuous-service pay" does not entitle such men to an increase in continuous-service pay immediately upon reenlistment; that it does not entitle them to increase in continuous-service pay upon the completion of four years from the date of their last previous enlistment in the Navy; that the pay of such men upon restoration, including permanent additions previously earned by reason of continuity in service, will remain unchanged for the period of their enlistment, except as it may be affected by changes in law or rating; and that such men will not be entitled to honorable-discharge gratuity immediately upon reenlistment or upon completion of four years from the date of their last previous enlistment in the Navy. (26 Comp. Dec., 565.)

An enlisted man of the Navy who enrolls in the Naval Auxiliary Reserve within four months from date of honorable discharge from the Regular Navy is not entitled to honorable-discharge gratuity upon reenlistment in the Navy within four months from date of discharge from the Naval Auxiliary Reserve. (27 Comp. Dec., 8.)

It has repeatedly been held by the comptroller that, except for enrolled members of the Fleet Naval Reserve who reenlist in the Regular Navy, no right to honorable-discharge gratuity can accrue to a former member of any class of the Naval Reserve Force except where the reenlistment takes place within four months from the date of last discharge, at expiration of enlistment, from the Regular Navy. (27 Comp. Dec., 8.)

Retired enlisted men.—An enlisted man of the Navy, holding the rating of mate, who is placed on the retired list without having completed the term of his final enlistment, and who thereafter is called into active service, does not, after a period of active service equal to the unexpired portion of his last enlistment, become entitled to the continuous-service increase of pay or the honorable-discharge gratuity. (24 Comp. Dec., 152.)

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 719), it was provided that a retired enlisted man recalled into active service shall be eligible for promotion and "shall be entitled to the pay and benefits of continuous service of such rank and for such length of time as he is or has been employed in active service, and when relieved of active service shall retain upon the retired list the rank and service held by him at the time of such relief, with the pay and allowances of such rank on the retired list." Held, that as continuous-service pay includes in its broadest sense any pay or gratuity dependent upon continuity of service, retired enlisted men of the Navy who are recalled to active service and who complete a period of service equal to the unexpired term of their enlistment are entitled, when otherwise qualified, to continuous-service pay proper, honorable-discharge gratuity, and pay under General Order No. 34 of 1906 (noted under sec. 1569, R. S.), by virtue of said act of July 1, 1918. (25 Comp. Dec., 440; compare, 26 Comp. Dec., 565, noted above, under "Naval reservists.")

Men furloughed without pay.—An enlisted man furloughed without pay in accordance with the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 580), resumes in all respects his former status upon being recalled to active service, and upon discharge at the completion of the unexpired portion of his enlistment is entitled to travel allowance, and upon reenlistment to the honorable-discharge gratuity, if otherwise authorized. (25 Comp. Dec., 231.)

An enlisted man furloughed without pay, and who was not given a discharge at the expiration of his enlistment, held, not entitled to continuous-service pay upon reenlistment. (25 Comp. Dec., 328.)

Mates.—Mates of the Navy are petty officers, and their pay being specially fixed by section 1556 of the Revised Statutes, and any additional pay or allowances being prohibited by section 1558, Revised Statutes, they are not entitled, upon reenlistment in the rating of mate, to the $1.36 increase of pay per month provided therein for enlisted men who reenlist within the provisions of section 1573, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 3, 1899. But such mates on reenlistment are entitled to the honorable-discharge gratuity provided by the same law if they reenlist within four months from the date of discharge. (14 Comp. Dec., 457.)

An enlisted man of the Navy who was appointed as mate and continued to serve as such after the expiration of his term of enlistment, without receiving a discharge, held, still in the service and entitled to his discharge; and upon reenlisting after such discharge he is entitled to the benefits of continuous-service pay under article 839, Navy Regulations, 1905. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 319; but see, 14 Comp. Dec., 457, and 24 Comp. Dec., 152.)

Sec. 1574. [Crews of wrecked or lost vessels.] When the crew of any vessel of the United States are separated from such vessel, by means of her wreck, loss, or destruction, the pay and emoluments of such of the officers and men as shall appear to the Secretary of the Navy, by the sentence of a court-martial or court of inquiry, or by other satisfactory evidence, to have done their utmost to preserve her, and, after said wreck, loss, or destruction, to have behaved themselves agreeably to the discipline of the Navy, shall go on and be paid them until their discharge or death.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 14, v. 12, pp. 608, 609.)

See sections 286–290, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto.

The act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 824), makes provision for compensation to be paid to the widow, and if no widow to the child or children, and if no widow or child to any other dependent relative, previously designated, of any officer, enlisted man, or nurse on the active list, in case of the latter's death from wounds or disease, not the result of the decedent's misconduct; the amount of such compensation to equal six months' pay at the rate received by the decedent at the time of his or her death.

The war risk insurance act of October 6, 1917, Article III (40 Stat., 405), as amended by act of June 25, 1918 (40 Stat., 609), and act

The base pay of mates fixed by section 6 of the act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 602), at $126 per month, is not to be increased by 25 per cent thereof, the provision in the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), for a 25 per cent increase in the base pay of mates in the Navy, in effect having been repealed and superseded by the act of May 18, 1920; nor does the act of May 18, 1920, operate to grant to mates in the Navy the right to permanent additions to their base pay that are authorized for enlisted men of the Navy generally, under General Order No. 34 of 1906 (noted under sec. 1569, R. S.), or for continuous service, under section 1573, Revised Statutes, as amended, or for good-conduct medals. (27 Comp. Dec., 175.)

Naval Academy Band.—Under the act of April 12, 1910 (36 Stat., 297), providing for the enlistment of Naval Academy bandmen and giving them "the same benefits in respect to pay, emoluments, and retirement arising from longevity, reenlistment, and length of service as are or may hereafter become applicable to other enlisted men of the Navy," such bandmen, upon enlistment, are entitled to be credited with all service as members of said band in computing continuous-service pay, such computation to be made as if actually enlisted and discharged as provided by law in effect when such service was rendered. (17 Comp. Dec., 27.)

of December 24, 1919 (41 Stat., 371), makes provision for compensation, in lieu of pension, to be paid to the family of any person in the naval service who is disabled or dies as the result of injury or disease suffered in line of duty and not caused by his own willful misconduct.

Subsistence of officers separated from their vessel.—The provision in the act of March 3, 1897 (29 Stat., 657), making appropriation for subsistence of officers temporarily absent from their vessel, does not apply to officers separated from their vessel by reason of its loss or destruction while they are in receipt of their sea pay and allowances under section 1574, Revised Statutes. (5 Comp. Dec., 221.)

Sec. 1575. [Crews of vessels taken by an enemy.] The pay and emoluments of the officers and men of any vessel of the United States taken by an enemy who shall appear, by the sentence of a court-martial or otherwise, to have done their utmost to preserve and defend their vessel, and, after the taking thereof, to have behaved themselves agreeably to the discipline of the Navy, shall go on and be paid to them until their exchange, discharge, or death.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 15, v. 12, p. 609.)

"Enemy" defined.—The first statute providing, in terms, for our naval discipline is the "act for the government of the Navy of the United States," of March 2, 1799 (1 Stat., 709). The fourth section of that act (1 Stat., 714) provided that "all the pay and wages of such officers and seamen of any of the ships of the United States as are taken by the enemy, and, upon inquiry at a court-martial, shall appear by the sentence of the said court to have done their utmost to defend the ship or ships, and since the taking thereof, to have behaved themselves obediently to their superior officers, according to the discipline of the Navy, and the said articles and orders, hereinbefore established, shall continue and go on as aforesaid," etc. The act of April 23, 1800, enacts (sec. 4, 2 Stat., 45), "that all the pay and emoluments of such officers and men of any of the ships or vessels of the United States taken by an enemy, * * * shall go on, and be paid them until their death, exchange, or discharge." The act of 1799 is almost identical with that of 1800. In the former the phrase stands, "the enemy;" in the latter it is changed to "an enemy." The construction of the act of 1799 might be doubtful, for there is a certain and definitive meaning in the phrase "the enemy." It is a familiar phrase and means the public enemy, the acknowledged enemy, the enemy of the nation, the enemy with whom we are already at war. But when Congress, in 1800, changed the phraseology, and for this definitive and restricted phrase adopted one so general and comprehensive as to include any and every enemy, they must have done so for some legislative purpose. That purpose appears to have been to provide for engagements with pirates, then common in American seas, and to provide for just such cases as the encounter between the Chesapeake and the British ship Leopard. (Straughan v. U. S., 1 Ct. Cls., 324.)

John Straughan, a citizen of the United States, enlisted as a seaman on board the United States frigate Chesapeake for one year; the Chesapeake in time of peace was attacked and taken possession of by the British ship Leopard; Straughan, with other seamen, was forcibly carried off by the Leopard on the pretext that they were deserters; after five years they were released and returned to the Chesapeake; Straughan did duty for a short time and was discharged; he received no pay for the period that he was held by the British Government. His widow brought action in the Court of Claims to recover pay for said period. Held, that the Leopard, in her attack upon the Chesapeake, was "an enemy" within the meaning of the fourth section of the act of April 23, 1800 (2 Stat., 45). That act enlarges the act of March 2, 1799 (1 Stat., 709), and the third and fourth sections thereof are intended to include all cases where persons in the naval service are "separated from their vessels" by either wreck or capture. (Straughan v. U. S., 1 Ct. Cls., 324. Note: The third section of the act of April 23, 1800, and the third section of the act of March 2, 1799, were both similar to the provisions of section 1574, Revised Statutes, while the fourth sections of those acts were similar to the provisions of section 1575, Revised Statutes.)

An act of hostility by a national ship of war is an act of war. The officer who directs it is not liable to the injured parties, but to his own Government. The rule that a principal is not responsible for the tortious acts of his agent forms no part of the law of nations; and a Government can not relieve itself of responsibility by disavowing the act of its officer. (Straughan v. U. S., 1 Ct. Cls., 324.)

Pay continues after expiration of enlistment.—An enlisted man of the Navy captured and separated from his vessel in consequence of an attack by a British vessel in 1807, and held by the British Government for a period of five years, when he was released and returned to his vessel, held, entitled to be paid his wages by the United States for the total period of five years, although the enlistment in which he was serving at the time of his capture was for a period of only one year. (Straughan v. U. S., 1 Ct. Cls., 324.)

Officer interned in neutral country.—An officer of the Navy interned in a neutral country, if required to hire quarters there for himself, is entitled to commutation thereof as "emoluments" that "shall go on and be paid" as provided by sections 1574 and 1575, Revised Statutes. If quarters have not been so acquired, he is not entitled to commutation. (25 Comp. Dec., 303.)

An officer of the Navy who without fault on his part is interned by a neutral nation is on active duty within the meaning of the act of April 16, 1918 (40 Stat., 530), and is entitled under said act to commutation of quarters, heat, and light, on account of maintaining dependents for the period of his internment. (25 Comp. Dec., 303.)

Sec. 1576. [Assignment of wages.] Every assignment of wages due to persons enlisted in the naval service, and all powers of attorney, or other authority to draw, receipt for, or transfer the same, shall be void, unless attested by the commanding officer and paymaster. The assignment of wages must specify the precise time when they commence.—(30 June, 1864, c. 174, s. 12, v. 13, p. 310.)

See section 1430, Revised Statutes, and note thereto; see also sections 3477 and 3620, Revised Statutes; and see note to section 1556, Revised Statutes, under "Allotments of pay."

Effect of section.—The assignment of any claim against the United States is prohibited by section 3477 of the Revised Statutes. This prohibition is held to include the assignment of pay. The assignment of wages by enlisted men of the Navy is taken out of the prohibition of section 3477 by section 1576 of the Revised Statutes. (17 Comp. Dec., 666.)

Assignment to attorney.—Where an enlisted man of the Navy employed an attorney to defend him on a criminal charge before civil authorities, and in compensation therefor gave said attorney an order on the commanding officer of the vessel on which he served for a portion of the pay due him, such contract is a personal one, not operating to create a liability on the part of the Government, and payment of the amount is not authorized. (25 Comp. Dec., 99.)

1577. [Rations of midshipmen. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1577. Midshipmen and acting midshipmen in the Navy shall be entitled to one ration, or to commutation therefor."—(28 July, 1866, c. 296, s. 8, v. 14, p. 322. 28 Feb., 1867, c. 100, s. 2, v. 14, p. 416.—Philbrook's Case, 8 C. Cls., 523.)

It was superseded by the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 472), which abolished the grade of midshipman, which was then, under section 1362, Revised Statutes, the eleventh grade of line officers of the active list of the Navy, and provided that midshipmen then on the active list should "constitute a junior grade of, and be commissioned as, ensigns." The grade of junior ensign thus created was abolished by act of June 26, 1884, section 2 (23 Stat., 60; see notes to secs. 1362 and 1512, R. S.).

Students at Naval Academy.—Under the Revised Statutes, section 1512, students at the Naval Academy were designated as "cadet midshipmen," with the exception of a special class, styled "cadet engineers," under sections 1522-1524, Revised Statutes. By act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285), the title of all undergraduates at the Naval Academy was changed to "naval cadets," which was the title of students at the Naval Academy when the grade of midshipman was abolished by act of March 3, 1883, above quoted.

By act of January 30, 1885 (23 Stat., 291), it was provided that "all enlisted men and boys in the Navy, attached to any United States vessel or station and doing duty thereon, and naval cadets, shall be allowed a ration, or commutation thereof in money, under such limitations and regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe." This act in so far as it applied to "naval cadets," was amended by act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 686), which changed the title "naval cadet" to "midshipman," which has ever since continued to be the title of students at the Naval Academy.

Rations of midshipmen are now authorized by the act of January 30, 1885, as amended by the act of July 1, 1902, both above quoted. (By joint res. No. 1, Dec. 17, 1903, 33 Stat., 581, reference was made to sec. 1577, R. S., as the authority for allowing commuted rations to midshipmen.)

"Midshipmen are entitled to one ration, or to commutation therefor, at all times." (Art. 4517, par. 1, Navy Regs., 1913; 26 Comp. Dec., 42.)

Rations of other officers are provided for by sections 1578 and 1579, Revised Statutes.

Commutation price of rations is fixed by section 1585, Revised Statutes, and amendments thereto. The naval appropriation act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 825), made appropriation for "commuted rations for * * * midshipmen at $1.08 per diem."

Sec. 1578. [Rations of other officers.] All officers shall be entitled to one ration, or to commutation therefor, while at sea or attached to a sea-going vessel.—(3 Mar., 1851, c. 34, s. 1, v. 9, p. 621. 16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 19, v. 12, p. 587).

Rations of enlisted men: See act of January 30, 1885 (23 Stat., 291), noted under section 1579, Revised Statutes.

Section 1578 repealed in part.—Section 1578, Revised Statutes, is repealed by section 13 of the Navy personnel act, providing that commissioned officers of the line of the Navy and of the Medical and Pay Corps shall receive the same pay and allowances, except forage, as are or may be provided by or in pursuance of law for the officers of corresponding rank in the Army. The latter law was intended to cover, and in exact terms provides for, all pay and allowances for naval officers, except forage. The later act was intended as a substitute for the earlier provisions contained in section 1578. (Gibson v. U. S., 194 U. S., 182.)

While section 13 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), provided that officers of the line of the Navy and of the Medical and Pay Corps should not be reduced in pay by virtue of said act, there is no provision retaining the allowances of the former law. Moreover, section 26 of the Navy personnel act provides that all acts and parts of acts, so far as they conflict with its provisions, shall be repealed. The allowance of the preceding statute (sec. 1578, R. S.) can not stand consistently with the express provision upon the same subject of the later act. (Gibson v. U. S., 194 U. S., 182.)

In Gibson v. United States (194 U. S., 182) it was held that the personnel act did repeal sections 1578 and 1585, Revised Statutes, allowing sea rations, because the later act covered the same subject matter and superseded the provisions of those sections. (U. S. v. Thomas, 195 U. S., 418, 426.)

Prior to the passage of the act of March 3, 1899, officers of the Navy were entitled to rations or commutation thereof under sections 1578-1579, Revised Statutes. By the Navy personnel act of that date, the pay and allowances of the line, Medical, and Pay Corps were assimilated to those of officers of corresponding rank in the Army, and the pay and allowances of commissioned warrant officers, created by that act, were assimilated to the pay and allowances then allowed a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps. As the allowance of a ration was not an allowance to which officers of the Army and Marine Corps were entitled, the said officers of the Navy whose pay and allowances were so assimilated were not entitled thereto after the passage of the act of March 3, 1899; but the right of other officers of the Navy to said allowance was not affected thereby. (15 Comp. Dec., 8.)

The act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), assimilating the pay and allowances of chaplains in the Navy to those of line officers of the Navy, prevents the allowance of rations to chaplains after the approval of said act. (15 Comp. Dec., 651.)

Following the enactment of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, the appropriation acts for the Navy have since provided for commuted rations for officers on sea duty, other than commissioned officers of the line, Medical and Pay Corps, and chief warrant officers. (26 Comp. Dec., 42.)

By the naval appropriation act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 825), appropriation is made for "commuted rations for officers on sea duty (other than commissioned officers of the line, Medical and Supply Corps, chaplains, chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief carpenters, chief machinists, chief pay clerks, and chief sailmakers) at 68 cents per diem, and midshipmen at $1.08 per diem * * *."

The law on this subject was incorporated in article 4517 (1), Navy Regulations, 1913, which provides: "With the exception of commissioned officers of the line, Medical Corps, and Pay Corps, and of chaplains and commissioned warrant officers, all officers of the Navy are entitled to one ration or to commutation therefor at the rate of thirty cents a day while doing duty on board a seagoing vessel of the Navy. Midshipmen are entitled to one ration, or to commutation therefor, at all times." (26 Comp. Dec., 42.)

The officers of the Navy who were entitled to receive a ration prior to the passage of the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), are still entitled to that allowance under the provision of said act prohibiting the reduction of pay or allowances, and also by the express terms of the appropriation, "Provisions, Navy," which specifically excludes from its application the said officers who were not entitled to rations under the Navy personnel act. (15 Comp. Dec., 8.)

Under the act of May 13, 1908, all officers of the Navy, other than the commissioned officers of the line, Medical and Pay Corps, and commissioned warrant officers, are entitled to rations or commutation therefor while on sea duty. (15 Comp. Dec., 8; modified, as to chaplains, by 15 Comp. Dec., 651, noted above.)

The act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), except as stated in the saving clause thereof, repealed sections 1578 and 1579, Revised Statutes, so far as said sections applied to commissioned officers. (25 Comp. Dec., 125.)

The act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 127), provided that all commissioned officers of the Navy shall receive the same allowances, according to rank and length of service. The effect of this provision was either to confer the right to rations upon commissioned officers not already receiving same or to take away the right to rations from commissioned officers of the class entitled to receive same under section 1578, Revised Statutes, because their allowances had not been assimilated to those of the Army by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899. (25 Comp. Dec., 125.)

In 15 Comp. Dec., 8, it was held that officers of the Navy who were entitled to rations while on sea duty prior to the passage of the act of May 13, 1908, were still entitled thereto because of the provision in said act prohibiting a reduction in pay and allowances. However, it is now held, that a naval constructor appointed to office since the act of May 13, 1908, is not within the saving clause therein prohibiting reduction of pay and allowances, and accordingly is not entitled to commutation of rations while on sea duty. (25 Comp. Dec., 125.)

Under the act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 403), which created the grade of acting chaplain, and provided that "while so serving acting chaplains shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of lieutenant, junior grade, in the Navy," held, that acting chaplains are not entitled to rations or commutation thereof, because lieutenants, junior grade, are not entitled thereto. (File 26254-2333, July 23, 1917.)

Commissioned warrant officers.—Neither the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), which created the grade of chief gunner, nor any other law, authorizes rations or commutation thereof to chief gunners of the Navy. (15 Comp. Dec., 874; see note to sec. 1556, R. S., as to pay and allowances of commissioned warrant officers.)

Marine officers.—An officer in the Marine Corps attached to a seagoing vessel is not entitled to the ration allowed by section 1578, Revised Statutes, to a naval officer so attached. (Reid v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 625.)

Warrant officers.—A warrant officer while on duty at sea, or attached to a seagoing vessel, is entitled to rations in kind or to commutation therefor; whichever he accepts precludes him from receipt of the other. (26 Comp. Dec., 42.)

A paymaster's clerk of the Navy who, while en route to his place of service on the Island of Guam, performed temporary duty on the steamer Supply, is not entitled to reimbursement of traveling expenses; but under section 1578, Revised Statutes, he is entitled to a ration or commutation thereof. Under the orders issued to him he was temporarily attached to a seagoing vessel and doing duty thereon. If he did not receive rations in kind, he is entitled to commutation of rations for the period while on said duty. (10 Comp. Dec., 107.)

Checkage of difference between actual cost and commuted value of rations.—A warrant officer of the Navy who has been subsisted in the general mess is not entitled to commuted rations, nor is he liable for the difference between the monetary value of the ration in kind and the value of a commuted ration. (26 Comp. Dec., 42, distinguishing Comp. Dec., Feb. 18, 1910, noted below.)

The accounts of officers subsisted by the general mess of a vessel while serving temporarily on shore should be checked with the cost of rations issued, as shown by the actual issues during the period covered by their subsistence, and not with the commutation value of the ration as fixed by section 1585, Revised Statutes. (Comp. Dec., Feb. 18, 1910, 108 S. and A. Memo., 1335, 52 MS. Comp. Dec., 857. Note: This case is distinguished from that considered in 26 Comp. Dec., 42, noted above, in that the officers referred to in this decision were not entitled to either a ration in kind or to commutation in lieu thereof. See 26 Comp. Dec., 42.)

For other cases, see note to section 1579, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1579. [When rations not allowed.] No person not actually attached to and doing duty on board a sea-going vessel, except the petty officers, seamen, and ordinary seamen attached to receiving-ships or to the ordinary of a navy-yard, and midshipmen, shall be allowed a ration.—(3 Mar., 1851, c. 34, s. 1, v. 9, p. 621. 28 July, 1866, c. 296, s. 8, v. 14, p. 322. 28 Feb., 1867, c. 100, s. 2, v. 14, p. 416.)

See notes to sections 1578 and 1579, Revised Statutes, and see section 1595, Revised Statutes, as to retired officers.

This section was amended by act of January 30, 1885 (23 Stat., 291), which provided "that all enlisted men and boys in the Navy attached to any United States vessel or station and doing duty thereon, and naval cadets, shall be allowed a ration, or commutation thereof in money, under such limitations and regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe."

Enlisted men.—Section 1577, Revised Statutes, provides that midshipmen shall be entitled to one ration, and section 1578 declares that all officers shall be entitled to one ration; but there is no affirmative law giving a ration to an enlisted man of the Navy. Section 1579 impliedly allows the ration to all men doing duty on seagoing vessels as well as to those within the exceptions mentioned in the section; and this section is referred to in article 1120 (4), Navy Regulations, 1909, as authorizing rations. (19 Comp. Dec., 450; but see act of Jan. 30, 1885, quoted above under this section; and see decisions of the comptroller, noted below.)

The benefits of section 1579, Revised Statutes, granting rations to enlisted men in the Navy, were extended by the act of January 30, 1885 (23 Stat., 291). These statutory provisions limit the allowance of rations to those enlisted men attached to some Government vessel or station and doing duty thereon, and to petty officers, seamen, and ordinary seamen attached to receiving ships or to the ordinary of a navy yard. (4 Comp. Dec., 690.)

The act of January 30, 1885 (23 Stat., 291), extends the right to rations or to commutation thereof in money to all enlisted men and boys in the Navy "attached to any United States vessel or station and doing duty thereon." (5 Comp. Dec., 40.)

Enlisted men in the Navy are given rations or commutation therefor in money by virtue of section 1579, Revised Statutes, and the act of January 30, 1885 (23 Stat., 291). Section 1579 limits the right to rations to certain specified classes of persons in the naval service; the act of January 30, 1885, extends the right to all enlisted men and boys in the service when attached to a United States vessel or station and doing duty thereon. (5 Comp. Dec., 177.)

Yeomen doing duty at the different headquarters of the Coast Signal Service are not attached to any United States vessel or station and doing duty thereon, within the meaning of the act of January 20, 1885, granting rations to certain enlisted men and boys in the Navy, and they are not entitled to rations or commutation thereof. (4 Comp. Dec., 690.)

On reconsideration, held, that the different headquarters of the Coast Signal Service where enlisted men on duty are armed perform military service, and are subject to military discipline, are stations within the meaning of the act of January 30, 1885, and yeomen attached to and doing duty at such stations are entitled to rations or commutation thereof. (5 Comp. Dec., 40.)

The naval proving ground at Indianhead, Md., is not a station within the meaning of the act of January 30, 1885, which provides for rations for enlisted men in the Navy attached to a station, and enlisted men stationed there are not entitled to rations or commutation thereof. (5 Comp. Dec., 177.)

The act of 1885, while extending the right of rations to those who before were not entitled to it, did not remove the general prohibition contained in section 1579, except in the cases provided for in that act. Taking the two laws together, it appears that only those enlisted men of the Navy who are attached to some United States vessel or station and doing duty thereon, or attached to the ordinary of a navy yard, are entitled to rations. Had Congress intended that all enlisted men in the service should have the benefit of a daily ration or commutation thereof in money, there would have been no occasion to attach the conditions which the law does to such a right. (5 Comp. Dec., 177.)

The headquarters of the Marine Corps at Washington, D. C., a place where armed forces are stationed and military duties and discipline are imposed, is a station, within the meaning of the act of January 30, 1885, and a hospital steward in the Navy on duty there is entitled to rations or to commutation thereof. (5 Comp. Dec., 561.)

The recruiting rendezvous at Chicago, Ill., is a naval station within the meaning of the act of January 30, 1885. (Comp. Dec., Jan. 5, 1901, cited in 7 Comp. Dec., 408, 410.)

ary 30, 1885. Under these laws, an enlisted man of the Navy, released from the custody of the civil authorities on bail, who reported at his regular station, the receiving ship at New York, for duty, but was not permitted to enter on duty or to remain at his station, solely because he was on bail, is entitled to commutation of rations during the period of such enforced absence from his regular station. If he had been received on board the receiving ship to which he was attached when he reported there, he would be entitled to rations or commutation thereof; and the erroneous action of the officer in refusing to receive him on board should not deprive him of his right to which he would otherwise be entitled. (22 Comp. Dec., 589.)

Subsistence when absent from vessel or on detached duty.—The naval appropriation act of March 3, 1915, under the head of "Provisions, Navy," contained the following appropriation: "For * * * subsistence of officers and men unavoidably detained or absent from vessels to which attached under orders (during which subsistence rations to be stopped on board ship and no credit for commutation therefor to be given) * * *" (38 Stat., 943.) A similar provision was contained in the Navy appropriation act of July 19, 1892 (27 Stat., 243), and in each subsequent act making annual appropriation for the support of the Navy. This provision has been construed as authorizing the payment for subsistence of enlisted men while on duty under orders which require them to be absent from the vessel to which attached or on detached duty under conditions where they are not entitled to rations or commutation thereof. (22 Comp. Dec., 589, citing 10 Comp. Dec., 593, and other decisions.)

Petty officers and other enlisted men who may be temporarily absent from the vessels to which they are attached, under orders and engaged in recruiting service for the time being at places not stations within the purview of the act of January 30, 1885 (quoted above under "Enlisted men"), may be subsisted while so temporarily absent and the expense paid from the appropriation, "Provisions, Navy." Unless, however, they are attached to vessels under orders and unavoidably absent therefrom, they can not be subsisted at the expense of the Government at places not stations within the meaning of the act of June 30, 1885. (7 Comp. Dec., 408.)

Under the act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 679), which provided for the subsistence of officers and enlisted men of the Navy unavoidably detained or absent from their vessels, a petty officer attached to a vessel at the Mare Island Navy Yard, who was detailed for duty at the Union Iron Works at San Francisco, Calif., and thereby deprived of quarters and rations on board ship, was entitled while so detailed to an allowance in lieu of subsistence; and the word "subsistence," as used in said act, must be construed as comprehending both board and lodging. (10 Comp. Dec., 593.)

An enlisted man who is granted leave from a hospital for the convenience of the Government or for the purpose of more rapidly recuperating from his illness is in the status of an enlisted man on detached duty and should be allowed the same subsistence as authorized for men on detached duty. (File 26254-2883:2, Oct. 30, 1919, 225 S. and A. Memo., 5026.)

It is the duty of the Government to feed and quarter the enlisted men at all times, except when for a man's own pleasure and convenience he absents himself. (26 Comp. Dec., 47.)

The language of the annual appropriations for "Provisions, Navy," entitles enlisted men of the Navy to be subsisted at the expense of the United States when "unavoidably detained or absent from vessels to which attached under orders (during which subsistence rations to be stopped on board ship and no credit for commutation therefor given)" and when on "detached duty." This subsistence, it has been held, may be paid to them directly in the form of a per diem allowance in lieu of the payment of actual expense thereof in each instance to the person supplying it. (Comp. Dec., Mar. 23, 1917, 193 S. and A. Memo., 4198.)

An enlisted man of the Navy who after undergoing treatment at a naval hospital is ordered on sick leave of absence is in a duty status and entitled to the per diem allowance for subsistence for such period. (26 Comp. Dec., 47.)

Where a man's status before entering a hospital and upon return to duty at the Navy Department at the expiration of sick leave of absence was that of an enlisted man "on detached duty from vessel or shore station," he is recognized as "on duty" while on such sick leave of absence, and his status for purposes of subsistence per diem was not changed from "on detached duty" by being ordered to take sick leave. (26 Comp. Dec., 47.)

The provision in the act of March 3, 1897 (29 Stat., 657), for subsistence of officers temporarily absent from their vessels, does not apply to officers separated from their vessel by reason of its loss or destruction, while they are in receipt of their sea pay and allowances under section 1574, Revised Statutes. (5 Comp. Dec., 221.)

Where a naval officer under arrest is confined to a vessel, the mess of which he is a member is entitled to reimbursement of his share of the mess expenses incurred on account of subsistence. (9 Comp. Dec., 711.)

Officers of the Navy on sea duty who are not entitled to a ration or commutation thereof are not entitled to allowance for subsistence when performing temporary duty which requires their absence from the ship to which attached and which does not require their detachment from the ship nor affect their sea-duty status. (Comp. Dec., Jan. 29, 1917, 191 S. and A. Memo., 4145.)

The appropriation "Provisions, Navy," for "subsistence of officers and men unavoidably detained or absent from vessels to which attached under orders (during which subsistence rations to be stopped on board ship and no credit for commutation therefor to be given)," was intended to authorize the payment of subsistence of only such officers of a ship so absent as would have been entitled to a ration or commutation thereof at the expense of the Government had they not been thus absent from their vessels. Accordingly, this appropriation has no application to officers who would not have been entitled to subsistence ration or commutation therefor had they in fact continued on shipboard. (Comp. Dec., Jan. 29, 1917, 191. S. and A. Memo., 4145.)

The appropriation under "Pay, miscellaneous," for "actual expenses of officers while on shore patrol duty," and for "relief of vessels in distress; recovery of valuables from shipwrecks," does not authorize allowance of subsistence to officers on shore engaged in salvage operations requiring their temporary absence from their vessels; nor are such officers entitled to subsistence allowance from the appropriation for "Contingent, Navy." (Comp. Dec., Jan. 29, 1917, 191 S. and A. Memo., 4145.)

See below, under "Officers temporarily absent from vessel."

Officers of receiving ships.—A receiving ship at anchor is not "a seagoing vessel" within the meaning of the Revised Statutes, sections 1578 and 1579; accordingly a boatswain in the Navy attached to such ship is not entitled to a ration. (Frary v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 114.)

Section 1579 is a limitation upon section 1578; the one gives and the other takes away, and that alone which remains stands as the law. To entitle officers and other persons, with some exceptions, to rations, they must be either at sea or actually attached to and doing duty on a seagoing vessel, whether such vessel be at sea or not. That Congress intended to exclude receiving ships from that designation as seagoing vessels is conclusively shown by the exception in section 1579, which, after prohibiting the allowance of rations to persons not on a seagoing vessel expects petty officers, seamen, and ordinary seamen attached to receiving ships. An exception is part of what is previously described and not of something else. (Frary v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 114; 21 Comp. Dec., 318.)

A mate in the Navy on duty on a receiving ship is entitled, under the decision in Fuller v. United States (noted below), to rations or commutation therefor. (Baxter v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 75.)

A paymaster's clerk attached to and doing duty on a receiving ship is not entitled to rations, notwithstanding that the vessel used as a receiving ship, instead of being a stationary hulk, as was formerly the case is a seaworthy vessel; that it has a regular complement for sea service which, with the vessel, are held in readiness to go to sea on short notice; and that, in addition, she has a complement as a receiving ship for receiving-ship duty which, if the vessel is ordered to sea, remains, being automatically transferred to another vessel designated to act as receiving ship to take the place of the former vessel ordered to sea. The vessel, acting in her capacity as receiving ship, is stationary and does not go to sea, and, so far as her receiving ship complement is concerned, is not a seagoing vessel within the meaning of section 1579, Revised Statutes. (21 Comp. Dec., 314.)

Warrant officer on training ship.—Where a vessel is attached to a naval training station to be used for training landsmen and apprentices, but is also commissioned with all sails bent and kept in readiness to go to sea, a boatswain attached to said training station for such duty as the commandant thereof may assign him at the station under his command, who is detailed by the commandant to duty on board said vessel and such other duty as may be assigned to him at said station, and is furnished quarters and messes on board of such vessel, is entitled to rations or commutation thereof while on said duty. (14 Comp. Dec., 233.)

Ordinary of a navy yard.—The term "ordinary of a navy yard," as used in Revised Statutes, section 1579, refers to ships laid up in ordinary at a navy yard. The meaning of the section is that petty officers, etc., though not upon a "seagoing vessel," may be allowed a ration if "actually attached to and doing duty" on shipboard. But it does not extend to the apothecary of the Navy Academy. (Button v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 423.)

An apothecary in the Navy detailed to and doing duty at the marine barracks is not "attached to the ordinary of a navy yard" within the meaning of the Revised Statutes, section 1579, and therefore is not entitled to a daily ration. (Herbert v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 53.)

See section 1534, Revised Statutes, as to vessels laid up in ordinary.

Judge Advocate General.—The provisions of section 1579, Revised Statutes, preclude the allowance of a sea ration to the Judge Advocate General, whose duty is in the Navy Department, the law then in effect providing that the Judge Advocate General shall have the "allowances" of a captain in the Navy. (Lemly v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 468.)

Mates.—Mates are petty officers, and as such are entitled to rations or commutation therefor. (U. S. v. Fuller, 160 U. S., 593; see also sec. 1408, R. S., as to status of mates.)

The exceptions of mates from section 1569, Revised Statutes, merely indicates that Congress, having already fixed their pay by section 1556, such pay need not be fixed by the President. But they are still within the exception of "petty officers, seamen, and ordinary seamen attached to receiving ships," who are inferentially allowed a ration by section 1579. The exception of mates from other petty officers in section 1569 indicates that they are petty officers, and the exception of petty officers from those who are not entitled to rations under section 1579 indicates that as such they are entitled to a ration. (U. S. v. Fuller, 160 U. S. 593.)

Officers temporarily absent from vessel.—See above, under "Subsistence when absent from vessel or on detached duty."

Officers of the Navy on sea duty, temporarily located on shore for the convenient and efficient performance of the services required of them under competent orders, are entitled to sea-duty pay but not to commutation of rations under section 1579, Revised Statutes, which authorizes commutation of rations only while actually performing duty on board a seagoing vessel. (27 Comp. Dec., 222.)

Under section 1579, a warrant officer is entitled to commutation of rations only when actually attached to and doing duty on board a seagoing vessel. A pay clerk attached to but not actually doing duty on board a seagoing vessel is not entitled to commutation of rations, although his temporary situation on shore, due to the exigencies of the service, did not change the character of his duty as sea duty; yet the law requires that he must in fact perform duty on board a seagoing vessel to entitle him to a ration. The word "actually" will not permit a constructive status; and therefore the pay clerk, although on sea duty and attached to a seagoing vessel, while so temporarily located on shore is not entitled to commutation of rations. (Comp. Dec., Sept. 2, 1920, file 26254-3232.)

Temporarily in hospital.—See note above, under "Subsistence when absent from vessel or on detached duty."

Where an officer attached to a seagoing vessel was entitled to commutation of rations, under section 1578, Revised Statutes, his temporary absence in hospital, under treatment, without being detached from his vessel, did not deprive him of such commutation. (Collins v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 222, 226.)

By section 4812, Revised Statutes, for every Navy officer, seamen, or marine admitted into a Navy hospital the institution shall be allowed one ration per day during his continuance therein, "to be deducted from the account of the United States with such officer, seamen, or marine." By the annual naval appropriation act, under "Provisions, Navy," appropriation is made for "commuted rations stopped on account of sick in hospital and credited to the naval hospital fund." This appropriation shows that the law contemplates a condition where a man may be in hospital while at the same time he is entitled to be credited with a ration, for otherwise there would be no ration to be stopped for the sick, and no appropriation would be necessary if the ration were to be charged against his pay, as provided by section 4812. This appropriation means simply that the commutation of rations to which a person is entitled by being attached to a seagoing vessel is to be transferred to the hospital to which he is sent, and the statute makes an appropriation to pay for the same. Of course the appropriation would not apply where an officer becomes detached from his vessel while in hospital or on being sent there. (4 Comp. Dec., 458.)

Under the appropriation for commuted rations for the Navy, a paymaster's clerk attached to a seagoing vessel who is temporarily in hospital without being detached from his ship is entitled to commutation of rations, which should be credited to the naval hospital fund in accordance with the language of the appropriation; and no deduction should be made from the pay of such paymaster's clerk on account of rations credited to the hospital, as provided by section 4812, Revised Statutes. (4 Comp. Dec., 458.)

The appropriation for commutation of rations stopped on account of sick in hospital and credited to the naval hospital fund repeals, in effect, the requirement of section 4812, Revised Statutes, that one ration per day shall be deducted from the account of every naval officer sent to the hospital, in cases where the officer is not detached from sea duty and is entitled to a ration; but the ration to which the officer would otherwise be entitled by reasons of his sea status goes to the hospital. (4 Comp. Dec., 644.)

Where an officer of the Navy not entitled to rations is ordered to a hospital for treatment, charges of the value of one ration per day should be made against the pay of such officer. (17 Comp. Dec., 663.)

Section 4812, Revised Statutes, has been held to mean that the naval hospital fund is entitled to one ration or the value thereof per day for each person treated in a naval hospital, and when the officer is not entitled to rations the value of one ration is deducted from his pay and credited to said fund. This practice began with the first law depriving officers of rations and has continued to the present time. Under Navy Regulations 1909, article 1129 (1), this practice applies to officers under treatment in foreign hospitals. (17 Comp. Dec., 663.)

Although a retired enlisted man on inactive duty is entitled to only $9.50 per month, "in lieu of rations and clothing," and something less than $9.50 is in lieu of rations, some portion of the amount being in lieu of clothing, held, that under section 4812, Revised Statutes, the account of such enlisted man, while under treatment in a naval hospital, should be checked 68 cents per day as the value of a ration for each day that he is subsisted as a patient and said amount credited to the institution, the act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 147), having fixed this as the commutation value of a Navy ration until the close of the fiscal year 1921. (26 Comp. Dec., 784. Note: By said act of July 11, 1919, under "Provisions, Navy," appropriation was made for "commuted rations stopped on account of sick in hospital and credited at the rate of 50 cents per ration to the naval hospital fund.")

Court-martial prisoners.—Annual appropriation, under "Provisions, Navy," is made for "subsistence of * * * general courts-martial prisoners undergoing imprisonment with sentences of dishonorable discharge from the service at the expiration of such confinement," with the proviso, "That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to commute rations for such general courts-martial prisoners in such amounts as seem to him proper, which may vary in accordance with the location of the naval prison, but which shall in no case exceed 30 cents per diem for each ration so commuted."

Sec. 1580. [Navy ration, constituents of.] The Navy ration shall consist of the following daily allowance of provisions to each person: One pound and a quarter of salt or smoked meat, with three ounces of dried or six ounces of canned or preserved fruit, and three gills of beans or pease, or twelve ounces of flour; or one pound of preserved meat, with three ounces of dried or six ounces of canned or preserved fruit and eight ounces of rice or twelve ounces of canned vegetables, or six ounces of desiccated vegetables; together with one pound of biscuit, two ounces of butter, four ounces of sugar, two ounces of coffee or cocoa, or one-half ounce of tea and one ounce of condensed milk or evaporated cream; and a weekly allowance of one-quarter pound of macaroni, four ounces of cheese, four ounces of tomatoes, one-half pint of vinegar or sauce, one-quarter pint of pickles, one-quarter pint of molasses, four ounces of salt, one-half ounce of pepper, one-eighth ounce of spices, and one-half ounce of dry mustard. Seven pounds of lard, or a suitable substitute, shall be allowed for every hundred pounds of flour issued as bread, and such quantities of yeast and flavoring extracts as may be necessary.

This section was expressly amended and reenacted to read as above by act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 570). As originally enacted, it read as follows:

"Sec. 1580. The Navy ration shall consist of the following daily allowance of provisions to each person: One pound of salt pork, with half a pint of beans or peas; or one pound of salt beef, with half a pound of flour and two ounces of dried apples, or other dried fruit; or three-quarters of a pound of preserved meat, with a half pound of rice, two ounces of butter, and one ounce of desiccated 'mixed vegetables;' or three-quarters of a pound of preserved meat, two ounces of butter, and two ounces of desiccated potatoes; together with fourteen ounces of biscuit, one-quarter of an ounce of tea, or one ounce of coffee or cocoa, and two ounces of sugar; and a weekly allowance of half a pint of pickles, half a pint of molasses, and half a pint of vinegar."—(18 July, 1861, c. 7, s. 1, v. 12, p. 264. 14 July, 1862, c. 164, s. 4, v. 12, p. 565.)

It had previously been amended and reenacted by act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 679), to read as follows:

"Sec. 1580. The Navy ration shall consist of the following daily allowance of provisions to each person: One pound and a quarter salt or smoked meat, with three ounces of dried or six ounces of canned fruit, and three gills of beans or peas, or twelve ounces of flour; or one pound of preserved meat, with three ounces of dried or six ounces of canned fruit, and twelve ounces of rice or eight ounces of canned vegetables or four ounces of desiccated vegetables; together with one pound of biscuit, two ounces of butter, four ounces of sugar, two ounces of coffee or cocoa or one-half ounce of tea and one ounce of condensed milk or evaporated cream; and a weekly allowance of one-half pound of macaroni, four ounces of cheese, four ounces of tomatoes, one-half pint of vinegar, one-half pint of pickles, one-half pint of molasses, four ounces of salt, one-quarter ounce of pepper, and one-half ounce of dry mustard. Five pounds of lard or a suitable substitute shall be allowed for every hundred pounds of flour issued as bread, and such quantities of yeast as may be necessary."

Refuse of rations is Government property.—Theoretically, the component parts of the ration are issued to the individual men, and such may originally have been the practice; but it is the practice now, and has been for a long time, to subsist the men by means of the commissary department of the vessel. The men have nothing to do with the ration, but only with food cooked and placed on the table for their use as food; the whole issue and preparation is done by persons appointed and paid by the Government for the purpose. Held, that the enlisted men are entitled to use the articles furnished as food to be eaten, but with no interest in the refuse, which remains public property; and that the proceeds from sale of garbage from the general mess of a receiving ship should be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. (19 Comp. Dec., 450.)

For other cases, see note to section 1581, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1581. [Substitutions in rations, and extra allowance for night watches.]

The following substitution for the components of the ration may be made when deemed necessary by the senior officer present in command: "For one and one-quarter pounds of salt or smoked meat or one pound of preserved meat, one and three-quarter pounds of fresh meat or fresh fish, or eight eggs; in lieu of the articles usually issued with salt, smoked, or preserved meat, one and three-quarter pounds of fresh vegetables; for one pound of biscuit, one and one-quarter pounds of soft bread or eighteen ounces of flour; for three gills of beans or pease, twelve ounces of flour or eight ounces of rice or other starch food, or twelve ounces of canned vegetables; for one pound of condensed milk or evaporated cream, one quart of fresh milk; for three ounces of dried or six ounces of canned or preserved fruit, nine ounces of fresh fruit; and for twelve ounces of flour or eight ounces of rice or other starch food, or twelve ounces of canned vegetables, three gills of beans or pease; in lieu of the weekly allowance of one-quarter pound of macaroni, four ounces of cheese, one-half pint of vinegar or sauce, one-quarter pint of pickles, one-quarter pint of molasses, and one-eighth ounce of spices, three pounds of sugar, or one and a half pounds of condensed milk, or one pound of coffee, or one and a half pounds of canned fruit, or four pounds of fresh vegetables, or four pounds of flour.

"An extra allowance of one ounce of coffee or cocoa, two ounces of sugar, four ounces of hard bread or its equivalent, and four ounces of preserved meat or its equivalent shall be allowed to enlisted men of the engineer and dynamo force who stand night watches between eight o'clock postmeridian and eight o'clock antemeridian, under steam."

Any article comprised in the Navy ration may be issued in excess of the authorized quantity, provided there be an under issue of the same value in some other article or articles.

This section was expressly amended and reenacted to read as above by acts of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 571), and March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1193), the amendment made by the act last cited consisting of the addition to section 1581 of the last paragraph thereof, as above set forth. As originally enacted, it read as follows:

"Sec. 1581. The following substitution for the components of the ration may be made when it is deemed necessary by the senior officer present in command: For one pound of salt beef or pork, one pound and a quarter of fresh meat or three-quarters of a pound of preserved meat; for any or all of the articles usually issued with the salted meats, vegetables equal to the same in value; for fourteen ounces of biscuit, one pound of soft bread, or one pound of flour, or half a pound of rice; for half a pint of beans or peas, half a pound of rice, and for half a pound of rice, half a pint of beans or peas. And the Secretary of the Navy may substitute for the ration of coffee and sugar the extract of coffee combined with milk and sugar, if he shall believe such substitution to be conducive to the health and comfort of the Navy, and not to be more expensive to the Government than the present ration: Provided, That the same shall be acceptable to the men."—(18 July, 1861, c. 7, ss. 2, 3, 4, v. 12, p. 265. 17 April, 1862, c. 57, s. 4, v. 12, p. 381.)

It was previously amended by act of May 3, 1880 (21 Stat., 86), which provided that "the Secretary of the Navy may substitute for the ration of 'two ounces of desiccated potatoes' six ounces of desiccated tomatoes if he shall believe such substitution to be conducive to the health and comfort of the Navy, and not to be more expensive to the Government than the present ration, provided the same shall be acceptable to the men. In the event the Secretary of the Navy orders such substitution he is authorized to have sold at public auction any desiccated potatoes on hand, the proceeds of which sale shall be used in the purchase of desiccated tomatoes for the use of the Navy."

It was again amended by act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 680), which expressly repealed the provision above quoted from the act of May 3, 1880, and reenacted section 1581 to read as follows:

"Sec. 1581. The following substitution for the components of the ration may be made when deemed necessary by the senior officer present in command:

"For one and one-quarter pounds of salt or smoked meat or one pound of preserved meat, one and three-quarters pound of fresh meat; in lieu of the article usually issued with salt, smoked, or preserved meat, fresh vegetables of equal value; for one pound of biscuit, one and one-quarter pounds of soft bread, or eighteen ounces of flour; for three gills of beans or peas, twelve ounces of flour or rice or eight ounces of canned vegetables, and for twelve ounces of flour or rice or eight ounces of canned vegetables, three gills of beans or peas."

The act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 680), also enacted the following clause, but not as a part of section 1581, although, with slight verbal change, embraced in that section as reenacted by the act of June 29, 1906:

"That an extra allowance of one ounce of coffee or cocoa, two ounces of sugar, four ounces of hard bread or its equivalent, and four ounces of preserved meat or its equivalent shall be allowed to enlisted men of the engineer and dynamo force when standing night watches between eight o'clock postmeridian and eight o'clock antemeridian under steam."

A provision similar to that last quoted was enacted by act of May 22, 1917, section 21 (40 Stat., 90), which applied only for the period of the then existing war, and extended said extra allowance to enlisted men of the deck force. See note to section 1584, Revised Statutes.

Issue of fruits with fresh meat.—When fresh meat is substituted for salt, smoked, or preserved meat, "three ounces of dried, or six ounces of canned or preserved fruit," may be issued therewith; or "nine ounces of fresh fruit" may be substituted for the dried, canned, or preserved fruit. (File 21177-3, Jan. 25, 1911.)

When "one and three-quarter pounds of fresh vegetables" are issued with fresh meat as a substitute for "the articles usually issued with salt, smoked, or preserved meat," there may be issued therewith "one and a half pounds of canned fruit," or such portion thereof as desired, "in lieu of the weekly allowance of one-quarter pound of macaroni, four ounces of cheese, one-half pint of vinegar or sauce, one-quarter pint of pickles, one-quarter pint of molasses, and one-eighth ounce of spices." (File 21177-3, Jan. 25, 1911.)

When fresh meat is issued with dried, canned, or preserved fruit, or with fresh fruit, in accordance with above ruling, there may also be issued therewith "four pounds of fresh vegetables," or such portion thereof as desired, "in lieu of the weekly allowance of one-quarter pound of macaroni," and other items specified above. (File 21177-3, Jan. 25, 1911.)

Any of the articles above enumerated may be issued in excess of the quantities stated, "provided there be an under issue of the same value in some other article or articles." (File 21177-3, Jan. 25, 1911.)

Substitution for butter.—The Navy ration includes a daily allowance to each person of "two ounces of butter." Substitutes are authorized for certain components of the ration, not including, however, butter, as to which, accordingly, no substitution can be made. Held, therefore, that oleomargarine or butterine can not legally be substituted for butter as a part of the Navy ration. (File 19398-34, Apr. 14, 1913; 148 S. and A. Memo., 2682.)

Sec. 1582. [Short allowance.] In case of necessity the daily allowance of provisions may be diminished at the discretion of the senior officer present in command; but payment shall be made to the persons whose allowance is thus diminished, according to the scale of prices for the same established at the time of such diminution. And every commander who makes any diminution or variation shall give to the paymaster written orders therefor, specifying particularly the diminution or variation which is to be made, and shall report to his commanding officer, or to the Navy Department, the necessity for the same.—(18 July, 1861, c. 7, s. 4, v. 12, p. 265.)

Sec. 1583. [Rations stopped for the sick.] Rations stopped for the sick on board vessels shall remain and be accounted for by the paymaster as a part of the provisions of the vessels.—(3 Mar., 1851, c. 34, s. 1, v. 9, p. 621. 22 June, 1860, c. 181, s. 3, v. 12, p. 83.)

See note to section 1579, Revised Statutes, under "Temporarily in hospital"; and see section 4812, Revised Statutes.

See act of March 29, 1894 (28 Stat., 47), as to rendition of property accounts, noted under section 236, Revised Statutes, under "III. Limitations upon Jurisdiction."

Sec. 1584. [Additional ration. Repealed.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1584. An additional ration of tea or coffee and sugar shall be hereafter allowed to each seaman, to be provided at his first 'turning out.'"—(23 May, 1872, c. 195, s. 1, v. 17, p. 151.)

It was expressly repealed by act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 680).

Additional rations in special cases were authorized as follows: By act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 680), quoted above under section 1581, Revised Statutes, an extra allowance was authorized for men standing night watches. The said enactment of July 1, 1902, was superseded and repealed by act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 571), which reenacted same, with a slight verbal change, as part of section 1581 as that section now reads. By act of May 22, 1917, section 21 (40 Stat., 90), the following provision was enacted for the period of the war:

"That during the continuance of the present war an extra allowance of one ounce of coffee or cocoa, two ounces of sugar, four ounces of hard bread or its equivalent, and four ounces of preserved meat or its equivalent shall be allowed to enlisted men of the deck force when standing night watches between eight o'clock postmeridian and eight o'clock antemeridian."

Sec. 1585. [Ration commutation.] Forty cents shall in all cases be deemed the commutation price of the Navy ration: Provided, however, That after January first, nineteen hundred and eighteen, the commutation price shall not exceed the average cost of the ration during the preceding six months, not to exceed 40 cents.

This section was expressly amended and reenacted to read as above by act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 397). As originally enacted, it read as follows

"Sec. 1585. Thirty cents shall in all cases be deemed the commutation price of the Navy ration."—(15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 4, v. 16, p. 333.)

Other amendments to this section have been made by clauses in the naval appropriation acts effective for the ensuing fiscal year. The act of June 4, 1920, (41 Stat., 825), under "Provisions, Navy," contained the following: "For provisions and commuted rations for the seamen and marines, which commuted rations may be paid to caterers of messes, in case of death or desertion, upon orders of the commanding officers, commuted rations for officers on sea duty (other than commissioned officers of the line, Medical and Supply Corps, chaplains, chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief carpenters, chief machinists, chief pay clerks, and chief sailmakers) at 68 cents per diem, and midshipmen at $1.08 per diem, and commuted rations stopped on account of sick in hospital and credited at the rate of 68 cents per ration to the naval hospital fund; * * * subsistence of * * * Navy and Marine Corps general courts-martial prisoners undergoing imprisonment with sentences of dishonorable discharge from the service at the expiration of such confinement: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to commute rations for such general courts-martial prisoners in such amounts as seem to him proper, which may vary in accordance with the location of the naval prison, but which shall in no case exceed 30 cents per diem for each ration so commuted; and for the purchase of United States Army emergency rations as required." The same act, under "Provisions, Marine Corps" (41 Stat., 831), provided for "commutation of rations to recruiting parties, and enlisted men traveling on special duty, at such rate as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe."

Payment to commissary officer.—By act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 680), it was provided "that money accruing from the rations of enlisted men commuted for the benefit of any mess may be paid on public bills to the commissary officer by the pay officer having their accounts." (See also clause quoted above, from act of June 4, 1920, as to payment to caterers of messes in case of death or desertion.)

Under Navy regulations prior to July 1, 1907 (revoked by G. O. No. 44, Apr. 16, 1907), the commutation value of rations due enlisted men was credited by the pay officer to himself as such, and debited against himself as commissary officer in charge of the general mess, composed of such enlisted men, the money never actually leaving the pay officer's hands until finally paid out in the shape of mess expenditures and not being paid over to the individual enlisted men who composed the mess. It was held by the Comptroller of the Treasury that such commutation money in the hands of the pay officer was public money until actually expended by him, and he should be required to account for its proper disbursement to the accounting officers of the Treasury, the same as any other public money placed in his hands for disbursement in his official capacity. (12 Comp. Dec., 678; see also 94 S. and A. Memo., 923, relating to midshipmen's mess, noted under sec. 236, Revised Statutes, under "11. Jurisdiction of accounting officers," sub-heading, "Public money.")

The act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 680), authorizing the payment of money accruing from the rations of enlisted men "commuted for the benefit of any mess," does not extend to an officer's mess on shore. Officers' messes on shore are voluntary, and there is no law or regulation which recognizes them. (Williams v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 175.)

Where enlisted men on shipboard were detailed to serve an officer's mess on shore, and were subsisted by the mess, and their rations were commuted and paid to the mess, the accounting officers could disallow the payment and compel the officers to refund the money. (Williams v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cls., 175.)

The chief petty officers' mess and its organization are provided for in part by Navy regulations; the duly elected treasurer of said mess is not an agent of the Government, the commuted rations of each member of such a mess, when paid to said treasurer, are no longer public funds, and may be expended by him in such manner as the mess may direct. (File 26262-3363, G. C. M. Rec. 41585, C. M. O. 190, 1918, pp. 17-19, holding that the treasurer of a chief petty officer's mess was not guilty of "making false and fraudulent official reports in violation of article fourteen of the Articles for the Government of the Navy" by reason of his presenting false and fraudulent vouchers in rendering his official statement of the accounts of said mess to the members of the mess and the auditing board, because the fraud was not against the United States.)

Commutation defined.—Commutation in the military or naval service is money paid in substitution of something to which an officer, sailor, or soldier is entitled. The principle which governs the commutation of rations in lieu of subsistence is that commutation will not be allowed where subsistence in kind is provided by the Government. (Jaegle v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 133.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 1578 and 1579, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1586. [Medicines and medical attendance.] Expenses incurred by any officer of the Navy for medicines and medical attendance shall not be allowed unless they were incurred when he was on duty, and the medicines could not have been obtained from naval supplies, or the attendance of a naval medical officer could not have been had.—(15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 17, v. 16, p. 334.)

Payment by officers and enlisted men to naval hospital fund is required by sections 1614 and 4808, Revised Statutes.

Duty of Government to provide medical stores and attendance.—It is the peculiar province and duty of the Navy Department to provide medical stores and attendance for the officers and seamen attached to the naval service; this may truly be said to enter into the contract of the Government with persons so employed. For this purpose a Bureau of Medicine and Surgery is attached to the Navy Department, and numerous medical officers appointed. The law, moreover, exacts from every officer and seaman a monthly contribution from their wages to make provision for the sick and disabled; and these contributions are applied, under the supervision of the President, to the erection and maintenance of marine hospitals and similar institutions for the benefit of seamen. (U. S. v. Jones, 18 How., 92.)

The exigencies of the service often require the employment of soldiers and sailors at a distance from public hospitals, and when the attendance of medical officers can not be obtained; consequently, in fulfillment of the humane policy of the Government, it frequently becomes necessary to employ temporarily physicians not regularly commissioned, for in this way alone can the department perform the duty assumed by the Government of providing the necessary medical attendance for those who become sick or disabled in its service. (U. S. v. Jones, 18 How., 92.)

Navy Department's action conclusive upon accounting officers.—The executive department of the Government to which is intrusted the control of the subject matter must necessarily determine all questions appertaining to the employment and payment of civilian physicians and the exigency which demands their employment. The Secretary of the Navy represents the President and exercises his power on subjects confided to his department. He is responsible to the people and the law for any abuse of the powers intrusted to him. His acts and decisions on subjects submitted to his jurisdiction and control by the Constitution and laws do not require the approval of any officer of another department to make them valid and conclusive. The accounting officers of the Treasury have not the burden of responsibility cast upon them of revising the judgments, correcting the supposed mistakes, or annulling the orders of heads of departments. (U. S. v. Jones, 18 How., 92.)

The propriety of detaching an officer of the Navy for special duty in France, of furnishing him with medical attendance while so employed, and of adopting and ratifying his act in the employment of physicians, under all the circumstances, are all subjects peculiarly within the jurisdiction and discretion of the head of the Navy Department, and not subject to revision by the officers of any other department; and the judgment of the lower court, in refusing to charge the officer with the amount disbursed by him for medical attendance, should be affirmed. (U. S. v. Jones, 18 How., 92; see also note to secs. 236 and 285, R. S.; and see note to sec. 1558, R. S., under "Maintenance, attachés.")

The act of March 3, 1835, chapter 27, section 2, provided that "the yearly allowance provided in this act is all the pay, compensation, and allowance which shall be received under any circumstances whatever by any such officer," etc. (See sec. 1558, R. S.) The Secretary of the Navy transmitted to an officer detached on special duty in France a sum of money to be disbursed for medical attendance incurred by such officer. The Treasury Department held that this was an allowance prohibited by the law quoted, and charged the amount so disbursed by the officer, according to the orders of the Secretary, to the officer's pay account and refused to recognize the authority of the Secretary of the Navy in the premises. Held, that the action of the Secretary was conclusive upon the accounting officers of the Treasury. (U. S. v. Jones, 18 How., 92.)

The determination of the Secretary of the Navy that expenses of an officer of the Navy for medicines and medical attendance are incurred under circumstances entitling him to reimbursement is conclusive. (2 Comp. Dec., 241.)

Where the Navy Department disapproved the claim of an officer for allowance of medical expenses, the auditor correctly disallowed the officer's claim. Thereafter, the Secretary of the Navy having reconsidered his action, and recommended allowance of the claim, although the Surgeon General of the Navy still declined to recommend the allowance, held, that this action of the Secretary remove the ground of the auditor's disallowance, and was binding upon all. (2 Comp. Dec., 241.)

A claim for expenses incurred by an officer of the Navy for medical attendance or medicines must be accompanied by the certificate of the proper officer of the Navy Department to the facts in order that the accounting officers may determine whether the allowance of the claim is prohibited by section 1586 of the Revised Statutes. (3 Comp. Dec., 250.)

Enlisted men.—An enlisted man of the Navy is not entitled to medical treatment at public expense while on leave of absence or furlough. (19 Comp. Dec., 382.)

Where an enlisted man of the Navy, while serving a court-martial sentence, as mitigated by the Secretary of the Navy, does not forfeit his pay and allowances, but receives the same in full as when in a duty status, such enlisted man is not entitled to dental treatment at Government expense while so confined. The general principle is that where an enlisted man in confinement under sentence of court-martial forfeits his pay and allowances, thus being deprived of the means of procuring the things necessary for his health and comfort, the duty devolves upon the Government, at its own expense, to furnish them to the destitute prisoner; but this does not apply where pay of the prisoner is not forfeited. (17 Comp. Dec., 552.)

An enlisted man furloughed without pay for the unexpired portion of his enlistment is nevertheless an enlisted man in the Navy, and as such is entitled, under the regulations, to treatment in Navy hospitals. (File 7657-411, Nov. 18, 1916, and Feb. 5, 1917; see also note to sec. 1417, R. S., under "Enlisted men furloughed without pay.")

The period of detention beyond the expiration of enlistment of an enlisted man of the Navy undergoing treatment in a Government hospital is to be considered as for the convenience of the Government, and the enlisted man is entitled to pay to and including the date of his actual discharge. (26 Comp. Dec., 447, modifying 26 Comp. Dec., 128.)

Students at the Naval Academy, designated as midshipmen, are officers of the Navy within the meaning of section 1586, Revised Statutes, and subject to the same limitations relative to the obtaining of medicines and medical attendance from other sources than the United States as are other officers of the Navy. (9 Comp. Dec., 375.)

A clerk to a commandant of a navy yard is neither an officer, enlisted man, or marine, and the Secretary of the Navy is not authorized, under sections 1614 and 4808, Revised Statutes, to deduct 20 cents per month from his pay; such a clerk is not entitled to reimbursement for medicines and medical attendance. (1 Comp. Dec., 289.)

It is the opinion of the Navy Department that members of the naval personnel who are required to pay 20 cents monthly to the Navy hospital fund should be entitled to medical attendance and maintenance, or, in the absence thereof, reimbursement for the amount expended for the purpose; and, conversely, that any member of the naval personnel who is not entitled to medical supplies or reimbursement therefor should not be required to pay 20 cents monthly to the hospital fund. (See 1 Comp. Dec., 289, 290.)

An officer of the Marine Corps injured while engaged in an unusual and dangerous amusement is not entitled to reimbursement for medical expenses incurred by him by reason of such injuries, notwithstanding that at the time he was in a duty status as distinguished from being absent with leave or without leave. (19 Comp. Dec., 635.)

Officer on sick leave.—Section 1586, Revised Statutes, prohibits the payment of medical expenses of an officer incurred while on sick leave. (12 Comp. Dec., 28.)

Accounts for medical attendance by the private physicians of officers or soldiers while on leave of absence have never been allowed. (5 Comp. Dec., 363.)

If an officer or soldier chooses to put himself out of the reach of medical attendance which the government has provided in hospitals, etc., he can not place the Government under obligations to pay any expense he may incur for medical attendance. (5 Comp. Dec., 363.)

See also, above, under "enlisted men."

Officer residing at distance from station.—Where an officer of the Navy places himself away from his regular station for his own convenience and comfort, so that the medical department at the station is not available for his treatment in case of illness, such officer can not be reimbursed any expense incurred by him for private medical attendance or for medical supplies. (17 Comp. Dec., 472.)

When an officer takes up his residence outside and so far away as to render it inconvenient or impracticable for a naval medical officer to attend him, the Government is under no obligation to pay for the employment of a private physician or for medicines. (5 Comp. Dec., 363.)

Naval medical officer available.—Where the attendance of an Army surgeon could be procured, the Government is not liable for the expenses of a sick officer in a private hospital, though he was carried there involuntarily and though his account was approved by the Surgeon General. (Preston v. U.S., 37 Ct. Cls., 39.)

Section 1586 prohibits the allowance of a physician's claim for attendance upon an officer of the Navy for any time after the services of a naval surgeon have been provided and tendered to the officer. (3 Comp. Dec., 250.)

Special treatment.—Payment of expenses incurred by an officer of the Navy for medical attendance while in a duty status may be authorized, notwithstanding the attendance of a medical officer of the Navy could have been had, if in the judgment of the Navy Department the available medical officers of the Navy were not sufficiently skilled to properly treat the disease with which the officer was afflicted. (12 Comp. Dec., 28.)

In cases of claims for treatment of officers by physicians outside the Medical Corps, it is not understood that the law permits the allowance of such expenses when incurred upon the mere volition of the officer who seeks the treatment and which was in his judgment necessary; but such treatment by doctors outside the Medical Corps in serious cases requiring special treatment, and where medical officers are actually available, should be under the orders and direction and control of the medical establishment of the department, and the claim for the expenses approved by the Secretary of the Navy. (12 Comp. Dec., 28.)

Private sanitarium.—Where by proper authority an officer of the Navy was removed to a private sanitarium for treatment, there being no naval hospital to which he could be sent with safety, payment for medicines, care, maintenance, and medical attendance upon such officer while in said sanitarium is authorized. (9 Comp. Dec., 761.)

Dental treatment.—An officer of the Navy may be reimbursed the expenses of dental treatment when such treatment is of a surgical nature required for repairing an injury to the teeth resulting from an accident while in the performance of duty, provided it is shown that the services of a naval dental officer or of a naval medical officer, properly qualified and equipped, were not available. (21 Comp. Dec., 624.)

Prior to the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 344), authorizing the establishment of a Dental Corps in the Navy, no provision was made for furnishing dental service to the personnel of the Navy. Medical attendance, however, has been furnished for years, not only through the officers of the Medical Corps and the hospitals provided and maintained for that purpose, but the employment of private physicians and hospitals in certain cases has been authorized where the regular medical officers and naval hospitals were not available. (19 Comp. Dec., 550.)

Medical attendance within the meaning of the laws and regulations relating to the Navy has not been construed to include dental treatment. (19 Comp. Dec., 550.)

By act of August 22, 1912, the Government has undertaken to furnish dental treatment to the personnel of the naval service, but only in the manner and to the extent therein provided. Neither said act nor any other law makes provision for the employment of civilian dentists; and Congress has made no appropriation for such purpose. Accordingly, held, that civilian dentists can not legally be employed where naval dental officers are not available. (19 Comp. Dec., 550.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 1579, Revised Statutes, under "Temporarily in hospital"; and to section 1571, Revised Statutes, under "Officers temporarily absent from their ship."

Sec. 1587. [Funeral expenses.] No funeral expense of a naval officer who dies in the United States, nor expenses for travel to attend the funeral of an officer who dies there, shall be allowed. But when an officer on duty dies in a foreign country the expenses of his funeral, not exceeding his sea-pay for one month, shall be defrayed by the Government, and paid by the paymaster upon whose books the name of such officer was borne for pay.—(15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 17, v. 16, p. 334.)

By annual appropriation acts for the naval service, under "Bureau of Medicine and Surgery," appropriation is made for "care, transportation, and burial of the dead, including officers who die within the United States, and supernumerary patients who die in naval hospitals." (See act June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 823.)

By act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 823), appropriation was made "to enable the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to cause to be transferred to their homes the remains of officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, of members of the Nurse Corps, of civilian officers and crews of naval auxiliaries, and of officers and enlisted men of the Naval Militia and National Naval Volunteers and the Naval Reserve Force when on active service with the Navy, who die or are killed in action ashore or afloat, and also to enable the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to cause to be transported to their homes the remains of civilian employees who die outside of the continental limits of the United States," with a proviso that said appropriation "shall be available for payment for transportation of the remains of officers and men who have died while on duty at any time since April 21, 1898, and shall be available until June 30, 1922."

By act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 832), appropriation was made, under "Contingent, Marine Corps," for "funeral expenses of officers and enlisted men, and retired officers on active duty during the war and retired enlisted men of the Marine Corps, including the transportation of bodies and their arms and wearing apparel from the place of demise to the homes of the deceased in the United States."

By act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 406), it was provided, "That the Secretary of the Navy be authorized, at his discretion, to issue free of cost the national flag (United States national ensign No. 7) used for draping the coffin of any officer or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps whose death occurs while in the service of the United States Navy or Marine Corps, upon request, to the relatives of the deceased officer or enlisted man or upon request, to a school, patriotic order, or society to which the deceased officer or man belonged."

By act of April 27, 1904 (33 Stat., 403), a special appropriation was made "to pay for the funeral expenses, including the disinterment, proper care, preparation, and transportation to their homes of the remains of the officers and men who died as the result of the recent explosion on the United States steamship Missouri, to be expended at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy."

Section 1587, construed.—An officer of the Navy is not entitled to mileage or reimbursement of traveling expenses for travel performed in obedience to an order directing him to attend the funeral of an officer who died in the United States. (11 Comp. Dec., 181.)

By act of July 15, 1870 (now sec. 1587, R. S.), the allowance of funeral expenses of a naval officer who died in the United States is prohibited; but such expenses are allowable where the officer died in a foreign country, to an amount not exceeding his sea pay for one month. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 341.)

The fact that the officer had started on a foreign service, but died in a port of the United States at which his vessel had touched, does not relieve the case from the prohibition of the statute. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 341.)

The law makes the liability of the Government for funeral expenses to depend on the place where the officer dies and not upon the nature of his service. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 341.)

Section 1587 was clearly intended to prohibit the payment of any and all expense of travel to attend the funeral of a naval officer who dies in this country. There is no exception or reservation in the statute; it can make no difference in what capacity the officer attends the funeral, whether in connection with a battalion of cadets or as an individual, the prohibition is equally effective and the expense can not be allowed. (11 Comp. Dec., 181.)

An officer of the Navy who died while on duty on the high seas must be regarded as having died in a foreign country within the meaning of section 1587, Revised Statutes; and payment of his funeral expenses, not to exceed one month's sea pay, is authorized by that section. (6 Comp. Dec., 620.)

Officers of the Navy ordered for duty in connection with the funeral of a deceased officer are not entitled to reimbursement of expenses incurred by them in hiring horses. (2 Comp. Dec., 511.)

The act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat., 354), incorporated into section 1587, Revised Statutes, repealed article 1503 of the Navy Regulations of 1870, wherein it had been attempted to provide that the necessary funeral expenses of all persons who should die in the service of the Navy, whether in the United States or in foreign countries, should, when sanctioned by the Navy Department, be borne by the Government. (3 Comp. Dec., 154.)

Officers of Marine Corps—Payment of the cost of transporting the remains of a deceased officer of the Marine Corps from the Island of Guam, where he died, to Mobile, Ala., is not authorized. (6 Comp. Dec., 677.)

Section 1587 has been construed as not applicable to officers of the Marine Corps. Also, the appropriations made for "funeral expenses of marines" have been construed as referring only to enlisted men. (6 Comp. Dec., 677. But see appropriations quoted above, under this section.)

Enlisted man furloughed without pay—The Navy Department is not authorized to defray the burial expenses of an enlisted man who died while furloughed, without pay, under the act of August 29, 1916. (23 Comp. Dec., 504; see note under sec. 1417, R. S.)

Sec. 1588. [Pay of retired officers.] The pay of all officers of the Navy who have been retired after forty-five years' service after reaching the age of sixteen years, or who have been or may be retired after forty years' service, upon their own application to the President, or on attaining the age of sixty-two years, or on account of incapacity resulting from long and faithful service, from wounds or injuries received in the line of duty, or from sickness or exposure therein, shall, when not on active duty, be equal to seventy-five per centum of the sea-pay provided by this chapter for the grade or rank which they held, respectively, at the time of their retirement. The pay of all other officers on the retired list shall, when not on active duty, be equal to one-half the sea-pay provided by this chapter for the grade or rank held by them, respectively, at the time of their retirement.—(15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 5, v. 16, p. 333. 3 Mar., 1873, c. 230, s. 1, v. 17, p. 555.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stat., 501), providing that "in computing the pay of retired officers of the Navy, the 10 per cent additional pay allowed for sea duty or for shore duty beyond the continental limits of the United States shall not be included"; by act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 128), providing that any officer retired on his own application, after 30 years' service, shall receive "three-fourths of the highest pay of his grade"; by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 579), fixing the age of retirement at 64 years, except in the cases of captains, commanders, and lieutenant commanders who become ineligible for promotion on account of age (56, 50, or 45 years, respectively), who shall be retired at said ages "on a percentage of pay equal to two and one-half per centum of their shore duty pay for each year of service," their total retired pay, however, not to exceed 75 per cent of the shore-duty pay they were entitled to receive while on the active list; and by act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 328), providing that any officer to whom it applied should receive "three-fourths the sea pay of the grade from which he is retired."

Retirement of officers with the rank and pay of a grade higher than that held by them on the active list at date of retirement is authorized by the following laws: Acts of March 3, 1899, section 11 (30 Stat., 1007), June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), and March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 753), on account of civil war service; act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1267), on account of failing physically for promotion, due to disability incurred in line of duty, which, under acts of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 579), and July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 118), shall not apply to officers of the rank of lieutenant commander and above; section 1481, Revised Statutes, relating to staff officers retired after specified length of service; and by section 1473, Revised Statutes, and laws noted under section 421, Revised Statutes, relating to chiefs of bureaus.

See note to section 1444, Revised Statutes, under "Historical note," as to laws relating to the retirement of officers "after forty-five years' service after reaching the age of sixteen years," which laws are no longer in effect.

The pay of officers on the retired list, May 13, 1908, was, under the act of that date (35 Stat., 128), fixing new rates of pay for officers of the Navy, to be based on the pay therein provided for officers of corresponding rank and service on the active list.

The rank and pay of officers on the retired list was to be the same that they are when such officers shall be retired, according to a clause in the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), which also prohibited promotion or increase of pay on the retired list.

The act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), authorized the promotion of any officer on the retired list, employed on active duty in time of war or national emergency, "to the grade or rank, not above that of lieutenant commander in the Navy or major in the Marine Corps," which the total active service of such officer, both prior and subsequent to retirement, in the manner rendered by him, would have enabled him to attain in due course of promotion had such service been rendered continuously on the active list during the "period of time last past," and provided that officers so promoted to such higher grade or rank "shall thereafter receive the pay and allowances thereof."

The act of June 10, 1896 (29 Stat., 361), provided that no payment shall be made from appropriations made by Congress to any officer in the Navy on the retired list while such officer is employed by any person or company furnishing naval supplies or war material to the Government.

Pay based on "grade" at time of retirement.—The "grade" of an officer in the Navy is his official station, by which are regulated his powers, duties, and pay. His pay may be further governed by his time of service within a grade, either in fact rendered within the grade or constructively performed therein through the force of statutes. (Roget v. U. S., 148 U. S., 167, 171.)

The office of professor of mathematics is a grade. (Roget v. U. S., 148 U. S., 167, 171.)

The periods of five years' service mentioned in Revised Statutes, section 1556, for increase of pay, are "grades" within the meaning of section 1588, fixing the pay of retired officers at 75 per cent of the sea pay of the grade or rank held at the time of retirement. (Thornley v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 111; 113 U. S., 310.)

The word "grade" in section 1588 refers to the divisions of officers into five years' periods of service. An officer retired in the third period of five years' service is entitled to 75 per cent of the sea pay of that grade, and not to 75 per cent of the highest pay of a chief engineer who has served over 20 years. (Rutherford v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 339.)

In the Navy there are grades for duty, for honor, and for pay, some by name and others by description. A lieutenant has the grade of his class, and also a grade in his class upon which his pay is fixed, depending upon length of service. The word "grade" in section 1588 refers to the division of officers into periods of service. A lieutenant retired in the first five years of service, because not recommended for promotion, is entitled to one-half of his sea pay at the time of retirement, and no more. (McClure v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 347.)

"Grade" and "rank" are used synonymously in section 1588; the word "grade" is used by Congress as a general term, indicating any marked distinction fixed by law among officers which would be expressed in their commission, title, or pay, not excluding chiefs of bureaus having a certain rank. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 505, holding that an officer retired while serving as chief of bureau in the Navy Department, or Judge Advocate General of the Navy, is entitled to the rank attached by law to such office.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 421, 1362, 1457, and 1480, Revised Statutes, relating to definition of the word "grade."

Pay based on higher grade than that held on active list.—Under section 11 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, an officer retired on September 26, 1899, was entitled to the advancement therein authorized on the date of his retirement, and not on the date of the department's notice to him of November 26, 1907. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 599.)

Mates whose names are borne on the retired list of officers of the Navy in accordance with the act of August 1, 1894 (28 Stat., 212), are officers of the Navy and are placed upon the same footing as warrant officers under the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), which entitles such mates, otherwise eligible, to the rank and retired pay of the next higher grade in the service, viz, that of the lowest grade of warrant officers. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 433, 599.)

A captain in the Navy who had served during the civil war, and was retired, pursuant to section 1444 of the Revised Statutes, with the rank and three-quarters of the sea pay of the next higher grade in accordance with section 11 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, was entitled only to the pay of rear admiral of the lower nine. Under section 11 he passes on retirement into and not over the next pay grade, which is that of the nine lower numbers, the rank of rear admiral being divided into two pay grades. (Gibson v. U. S., 194 U. S., 182.)

The Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 13, makes no distinction in the rank of rear admirals, but does in their pay; and the provision of section 11 of that act, which authorizes the retirement of certain officers with the rank and retired pay "of the next higher grade," must be interpreted with reference to that distinction. Accordingly, held, that a captain on the active list, retired under section 11 with the retired pay of the next higher grade, was entitled only to the retired pay of rear admiral of the lower half. Pay and not rank is the paramount purpose of the law, and the grades of pay must therefore be regarded as of paramount importance. (Lowe v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 170.)

A mate retired as a master (now lieutenant, junior grade) in 1871 should be credited under the naval appropriation act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 493), with his actual service as mate, as of the time when he was retired; held, therefore, that he is entitled to the pay of a master retired in the second five years of service. (Bradbury v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 187.)

An officer who qualified and was nominated by the President for promotion to the grade of rear admiral to fill a vacancy occurring February 18, 1886, but who was retired on account of age prior to his confirmation by the Senate, may, if subsequently confirmed, be commissioned as a rear admiral with rank from date of vacancy and with the retired pay of that grade. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 393.)

The act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1267), which provides that if an officer of the Navy should fail in his physical examination for promotion, and be found incapacitated for service by reason of physical disability contracted in the line of duty, he shall be retired with the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted, does not authorize retirement with a higher rank than that the officer would have had if he had successfully passed his examination; and the rank with which the officer is to be retired is not determined by the date of the action of the retiring board. (Tappan v. U. S., 54 Ct. Cls., 76.)

A captain in the Navy became due for promotion by seniority to rear admiral; he failed in his physical examination, because of disability incurred in the line of duty; subsequently he was retired in consequence of the action of a retiring board. Had he qualified for promotion he would have been commissioned as a rear admiral on the active list, and would have been in the lower half or second nine of the grade of rear admiral. However, before his retirement his seniority would have placed him in the upper half, or first nine, of the grade of rear admiral had he qualified and been commissioned. He was retired with the rank of rear admiral, pursuant to the act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1267), and received the retired pay of a rear admiral of the second nine. Held, that he was correctly paid as a rear admiral of the second nine; that his rank and position on the retired list are not determined by the date of the action of the retiring board; and the fact that after he became due for promotion, and prior to his retirement, his name was borne on the Navy Register as a rear admiral on the active list, "subject to examination and confirmation," did not make him such, but indicated simply that he was eligible to become a rear admiral. (Tappan v. U. S., 54 Ct. Cls., 76.)

Effect of increasing pay of active list.—Section 1588 is somewhat ambiguous; it does not say that each officer shall receive a percentage of the pay which he was actually receiving or entitled to receive at the time of his retirement, but that he shall receive a percentage of the pay of the "grade or rank" which he then held. The act of March 3, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), providing that there shall be no increase of pay in the retired list of the Navy, etc., was intended to render the pay of retired officers fixed and certain, except as might otherwise be specifically provided by Congress. The mere increase in the pay of a grade or rank after the retirement of an officer does not increase his pay on the retired list. (Fulman v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cls., 112. For other cases, see note to sec. 1457, R. S., under "General legislation not applicable to retired officers.")

The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 581), which had the effect of increasing the pay of chaplains above the rank of lieutenant commander (see note to sec. 1556, R. S.), resulted in increasing from the date of said act the pay of a chaplain who was retired in 1910, notwithstanding that said act of August 29, 1916, did not in terms refer to pay of officers on the retired list. (26 Comp. Dec., 270.)

The accepted principle is that changes in the permanent rates of pay for the active list in the Army and Navy, in the absence of any express provision to the contrary, are applicable to the retired list. (27 Comp. Dec., 233, 234.)

Longevity pay of retired officers.—Under sections 1262 and 1263, Revised Statutes, which provide that commissioned officers of the Army below the rank of brigadier general shall be allowed 10 per cent of their current yearly pay for each term of five years' service, the total amount of such increase not to exceed 40 per cent of their current yearly pay, held, that an officer of the Army retired from active service is still in the military service of the United States, and, in addition to the percentage of the pay of the rank on which he was retired, is entitled to the 10 per cent allowed by law for each term of five years' service, counting years passed in the service after retirement as well as before. (U. S. v. Tyler, 105 U. S., 244.)

Officers on the retired list of the Navy are not entitled to longevity pay for time spent in the service after retirement. (Thornley v. U. S.,

The case of United States v. Tyler (105 U. S., 244), which held that officers of the Army on the retired list were entitled to longevity pay, does not support the contention that officers of the Navy, whose pay is fixed by different statutes, are entitled to similar increase. By no act since the foundation of the Government has Congress ever given longevity pay to officers of the Navy, except those on the active list; and the statute book is now bare of any enactment which awards to any officer of the Navy not on the active list any increase of pay for length of service. The court is not called on to explain why Congress should apply one rule to the officers of the Army and another to the officers of the Navy. It is sufficient to say that it has clearly done so. If the law is unequal and unjust, the remedy is with Congress and not with the courts. (Thornley v. U. S., 113 U. S., 310; Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S., 568.)

Held, that section 13 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), providing Army pay for all commissioned officers of the line of the Navy and of the Medical and Pay Corps, virtually superseded the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), providing that there shall be no increase of pay on the retired list of the Navy, so far as relates to officers retired on Army pay, and that such officers retired on Army pay are entitled to longevity pay as retired officers in the same manner as retired officers of the Army. (5 Comp. Dec., 809, 811.)

By act of March 2, 1903 (32 Stat., 932), relating to the Army, it was provided that "hereafter, except in cases of officers retired on account of wounds received in battle, no officer now on the retired list shall be allowed or paid any further increase of longevity pay, and officers hereafter retired, except as herein provided, shall not be allowed or paid any further increase of longevity pay above that which had accrued at date of their retirement."

Officers of the Navy whose pay is assimilated to that of officers of corresponding rank in the Army by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, are not entitled to increased retired pay for length of service after retirement. The pay of officers of the Navy on the retired list, whether retired before or after the act of March 3, 1899, is governed by the retirement laws of the Navy and not by those of the Army. (15 Comp. Dec., 767, citing Hannum v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 323, and overruling 5 Comp. Dec., 809, above noted.)

The plain meaning of section 1588, Revised Statutes, is that the pay of each retired officer shall be three-fourths of the sea pay to which he was entitled when he was retired; to give that section a meaning which would entitle the officers to increased pay for every period of five years after retirement would be legislation and not interpretation. (Thornley v. U. S., 113 U. S., 310.)

An officer retired from active service, thereafter employed on active duty, and then detached from such duty, can not be held to have been retired a second time on the date that he was relieved from active duty. The retirement of an officer is a proceeding that can only take place in a prescribed manner, and it is not pretended that such proceeding occurred with reference to this officer more than once. (Roget v. U. S., 148 U. S., 167, 172.)

The pay of a retired officer of the Navy is fixed by statute at a certain percentage of the active-service pay of the grade held by him at the time of his retirement; and there is nothing in the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 472), to modify this rule. (Roget v. U. S., 148 U. S., 167.)

An officer of the Navy who was retired in the first five years of service from a rank having longevity pay, but who was continued on active duty until he had passed into his second five years of service, is not entitled, under the act of March 3, 1883, to a greater rate of pay after active service ceased than 75 per cent of the pay of the grade or rank which he held at the time of retirement. (Roget v. U. S., 148 U. S., 167.)

The act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717, quoted above under this section), authorizing the promotion of retired naval officers who serve on active duty during time of war or national emergency, provides that officers so promoted to higher grades "shall thereafter receive the pay and allowances thereof." This does not mean that upon relief from active duty their active-duty pay is to continue; but means that the increased rate of pay that is acquired by reason of the promotion on the active list is to be the rate upon which is to be computed their retired pay as well as their active duty pay. (26 Comp. Dec., 306.)

Under the act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), where a retired chief warrant officer of the Navy is advanced in "pay grade" by reason of active service performed both prior and subsequent to retirement, the increased rate of pay acquired by such promotion is the rate upon which is to be computed his retired pay. (26 Comp. Dec., 306.)

Retired warrant officers of the Navy called to active duty under the act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), are entitled to count their active service since retirement in determining their right to promotion in the various pay grades of warrant officers as provided by section 1556, Revised Statutes, the pay grade to which thus promoted becoming the basis upon which their retired pay subsequent to release from active duty is to be computed. (26 Comp. Dec., 409.)

Retired officers called to active duty under the act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), and temporarily advanced in grade or rank, are not entitled to count their active service since retirement in computing their pay under such temporary appointments. (26 Comp. Dec., 409; 25 Comp. Dec., 601; but see Bailey v. U. S., 53 Ct. Cls., 639, file 26254-2376:3; see also Jonas v. U. S., 53 Ct. Cls., 254.) But such officers who are permanently advanced in grade or rank under other provisions in the same act are entitled to count their active service since retirement for longevity increase of pay. (25 Comp. Dec., 601.)

Cause of retirement cannot be altered.—Where an officer of the Navy was retired under section 1454, Revised Statutes, for incapacity not originating in the line of duty, and upon a full review of the facts the Secretary of the Navy found that the causes of incapacity were incident to the service, and the officer was accordingly transferred by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to the 50 per cent retired pay list, in accordance with section 1595, Revised Statutes, and later, by a private act of Congress, was transferred to the 75 per cent pay list of retired officers under section 1588, he can not thereafter be placed on the retired list with the retired pay of one grade above that actually held by him at the time of his retirement, pursuant to the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), which authorized such advancement to certain officers of the Navy retired on account of disability incident to the service. The action taken in this case did not change the fact that the officer was retired for incapacity not originating in the line of duty, however, erroneous such action may have been. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 221; for other cases, see note to sec. 1454, R. S.)

An officer was retired under section 3 of an act approved February 21, 1861, authorizing the retirement of officers of the Navy "proved to be permanently incapable from physical or mental infirmity for further service at sea," etc. The board in its report expressed its opinion that his disability "did not occur in the line of his duty." Under the act cited it was immaterial whether his disability originated in line of duty or not. Accordingly, the board's opinion as to the cause of the disability was mere surplusage. Subsequently to his retirement, new provisions were made by an act approved August 3, 1861, sections 21, 22, and 23, for the retirement of officers, which, among other things, divided the causes for retirement into disability incurred in the line of duty and disability proceeding from other causes. This act did not affect officers already on the retired list. Thereafter, by act of March 3, 1873, embodied in section 1588, Revised Statutes, two rates of retired pay were established. Upon application of the officer, the Secretary of the Navy convened a board in 1876 which made a further examination of the cause of his disability, and reported that it originated in the line of duty; and the Secretary of the Navy approved this report and directed that the officer be regarded as having been retired for incapacity occasioned while in the line of duty. Held, that the Secretary of the Navy was not authorized by law to submit the case of this officer to a medical board for reexamination as to the origin of the disability for which he was retired, and that the Secretary's action, based on the report of such board, was without legal effect as regards the cause for retirement in the case of said officer or his right of pay; held, further that said officer was entitled only to one-half sea pay under the latter clause of section 1588, applicable to "all other officers on the retired list." (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 178.)

The act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717, quoted above), authorizing the promotion of retired officers on active duty in certain cases, and entitling such retired officers when relieved of active duty to the retired pay of the rank or grade to which permanently promoted during such active service, does not change the status of an officer who was retired on furlough pay for disability not incident to the service, nor entitle such officer to a different percentage of pay than that to which he was entitled under the law governing his retirement. (27 Comp. Dec., 78.)

For other cases, see note to section 1454, Revised Statutes, and see note below, under "Officer transferred from half-pay list to three-quarters pay list."

Officers retired on furlough pay.—See section 1593, Revised Statutes.

Section 1588, Revised Statutes, does not apply to officers retired on furlough pay; their pay is governed by section 1593, Revised Statutes. (Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S., 568.)

The act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat., 321), did not abolish the furlough pay list; and an order after the passage of that act retiring a naval officer on furlough pay was made in pursuance of law. The statutes distinguish between officers on the retired list and officers on the retired list on furlough pay, and this distinction is preserved by the Revised Statutes. Thus sections 1588 and 1592 prescribe rates of pay for retired officers, and section 1593 a different rate for officers on the retired list on furlough pay; and section 1594 authorizes the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer any officer of the Navy on the retired list from the furlough to the retired pay list. (Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S., 568.)

For other cases, see note to section 1593, Revised Statutes; and see note below, under "Pay reduced by Congress."

Officer transferred from furlough to retired pay list.—See note to section 1594, Revised Statutes.

Where a naval officer is transferred, under section 1594, Revised Statutes, from the furlough list to the retired pay list, the cause for his retirement determines the rate of pay to which he is entitled under section 1588. An officer retired on furlough pay, from causes not incident to the service, can not, by the action of the President, be transferred to the 75 per cent retired pay list provided for by the last-mentioned section, but becomes entitled to only one-half pay, as provided by section 1588, for officers retired for causes other than those entitling them to 75 per cent of sea pay. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 22.)

A naval officer being retired on furlough pay, under Revised Statutes section 1454, for incapacity not the result of any incident of the service, and being subsequently transferred by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, from the furlough to the retired pay list under Revised Statutes section 1594, is entitled thereafter, under the second clause of section 1588, when not on active duty, to one-half the sea pay provided for the grade or rank held by him at the time of his retirement. (Potts v. U. S., 125 U. S., 173.)

Officer transferred from half-pay list to three-quarters pay list.—A special act (June 10, 1902, 32 Stat., 1444) which authorized the Secretary of the Navy to transfer an officer on the retired list "from the half-pay list to the 75 per cent list under section 1588, Revised Statutes," did not operate to change his status from that of an officer retired for incapacity not incident to the service to that of an officer retired for incapacity incident to the service. Accordingly, held, that a lieutenant in the Navy retired for incapacity which did not originate in the line of his duty, on furlough pay, and later transferred from the furlough pay list to the one-half retired pay list, and afterward transferred by special act of Congress from the half-pay list to the three-fourths pay list, and thereafter nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate for advancement to the rank of lieutenant commander on the retired list, under the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 554), authorizing such advancement in the cases of certain officers who had been retired "on account of wounds or disability incident to the service," was not entitled to the retired pay of a lieutenant commander for the reason that his advancement to that rank was not authorized by the act of June 29, 1906. (Morse v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 361, affirmed, 229 U. S., 208, following Potts v. U. S., 125 U. S., 173, and Burchard v. U. S., 125 U. S., 176.)

For other cases, see note to section 1454, Revised Statutes.

Retired pay reduced by Congress.—

A colonel in the Regular Army, holding at the same time the rank of brigadier general of Volunteers, was retired by the President from active service with the rank and retired pay of major general, pursuant to an act of Congress of 1866 which authorized the retirement of officers in certain cases with a higher rank than that held by them on the active list at the time of retirement. Later Congress provided by an act approved March 3, 1875, that a class of retired officers, which included this officer, who were wounded in action, should be "considered as retired upon the actual rank held by them, whether in the regular or volunteer service, at the time when such wound was received, and shall be borne on the retired list and receive pay hereafter accordingly." Pursuant to this act the President fixed the rank of this officer as that of brigadier general from March 3, 1875, the date of the act last cited. In behalf of the officer it was contended that he held the office of major general on the retired list of the Army by appointment of the President, and that Congress had no power to remove him from that office and appoint him to the office of brigadier general on the retired list. Held, that an officer of any grade on the active list, appointed thereto in the manner required by the Constitution, may be retired with a different rank from that which belongs to his office, when Congress so provides; that this is not the appointment of such officer to a new and different office, but is the transferring of him to the retired list and the changing of his rank while he holds the same office; and that, in connection with this change of rank, his pay may be changed; that in this case, the retirement of the officer with the rank of major general while he held the office of colonel in the Army did not confer on him the office of major general; that he remained in the office of colonel and acquired a higher rank and higher pay as a retired officer; that such rank, not being an office, Congress could change his rank and with it his pay, as it did by the act of 1875; that Congress had the same right to change this officer's rank and pay by reducing them that it has to change the rank and pay of another officer by increasing them, the standard in both cases being the actual rank held by the officer at the time he was wounded; that the offices of both were left untouched; and that the pay of retired officers is a matter entirely within the control of Congress and so is their rank. (Wood v. U. S., 107 U. S., 414; 15 Ct. Cls., 151.)

A provision in the Revised Statutes reducing the pay of a retired naval officer is not affected by the general provision of the Revised Statutes, section 5597, that the repeal of previous statutes by the revision shall not affect acts done or rights accrued under them, nor change the term or tenure of any office. (Magaw v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls., 3.)

Sections 1588, 1590, and 1593, Revised Statutes, which contain provisions both of a general and special character prescribing the compensation of retired naval officers and embrace within their scope all such officers, whether of the line or staff, superseded all provisions in force at the adoption of the Revised Statutes by which that compensation was previously regulated, and those sections thereafter furnished the only law upon the subject. Accordingly, held, that an officer retired in 1871 on furlough pay was entitled after the enactment of the Revised Statutes to only one-half of leave of absence pay as fixed by section 1593, Revised Statutes, although prior to the enactment of the Revised Statutes he had been entitled to one-half of the highest pay of his grade, under section 5 of the act of July 15, 1870; and said officer having thereafter been transferred to the retired pay list in accordance with section 1594, Revised Statutes, was entitled to one-half sea pay as provided by section 1588, Revised Statutes. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 316.)

In the absence of constitutional restriction, the future compensation of a public officer may be reduced at pleasure by the legislature during his incumbency, without violating any legal right vesting in him by virtue of his appointment. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 316.)

Retired pay is salary.—See note to section 1457, Revised Statutes, under "Status of retired officers, part of the Navy;" and "Retired pay not 'pension.'"

A retired naval officer is still an officer of the Navy, and his retired pay is the equivalent of salary. When serving on a board as to which a statute prescribes, for members who are "not salaried officers," a salary, and for members who are "salaried officers," their "actual necessary expenses," he is entitled to the latter and not to the former. (Franklin v. U. S., 29 Ct. Cls., 6.)

Retired pay of mates.—See note to section 1408, Revised Statutes; and see note above under "Pay based on higher grade than that held on active list."

A mate in the Navy on August 1, 1894 (28 Stat., 212), which prescribed special rates of pay for such mates while on sea duty, shore duty, or leave or waiting orders, and who was retired on his own application, after 30 years' service, under the act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1008), providing for the retirement of enlisted men and petty officers with 75 per cent of the "pay and allowances" of the rank or rating upon which retired, was entitled to such percentage of the sea pay which he was receiving at the time of his retirement. Section 1588, Revised Statutes, entitling officers to 75 per cent of sea pay on retirement, was not repealed by the said act of 1899, which was silent as to the kind of pay which a petty officer shall receive on retirement. (Creighton v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cls., 327.)

Retirement under a special act of Congress.—An act of February 16, 1897, provided for the reappointment of John N. Quackenbush, late a commander in the United States Navy, to the grade and rank of commander as of the date of August 1, 1883, and that the said Quackenbush be placed on the retired list of the Navy as of the date of June 1, 1895: "Provided, That he shall receive no pay or emoluments except from the date of such reappointment." Held, first, that the only apparent office of the proviso was to forbid the allowance of pay or emoluments from August 1, 1883, by limiting such allowance to the date of reappointment, which in that view must be regarded as the date of appointment under the act; second, that it was remedial in its character, and should be construed as ratifying prior payments which the Government in its counterclaim was seeking to recover back. If it had not been for the proviso, the effect of the appointment would have been, in addition to fixing his status, as to grade and rank, as of August 1, 1883, to entitle him to pay from that date, but not to pay prior thereto. The date of reappointment was the date when it was actually made, and to substitute the date to which the appointment related for the actual date would defeat the obvious object of the proviso, which was to narrow the effect of giving the reappointment a retroactive operation. It was allowed that effect as to grade and rank, but not as to current pay or emoluments. (Quackenbush v. U. S., 177 U. S., 20.)

For other cases, see note to section 1457, Revised Statutes, under "When retirement or advancement on retired list takes effect."

Officer wholly retired from the service.—See note to section 1454, Revised Statutes.

There is a manifest difference in the two kinds of retirement, namely, retiring from active service, and retiring wholly from the service. In the latter case such reward or compensation as Congress thought proper to bestow, namely, one year's pay and allowances, in addition to what was previously allowed, is given at once, and the connection is ended; in the former case the compensation is continued at a reduced rate and the connection is continued, with a retirement from active service only. (U. S. v. Tyler, 105 U. S., 244.)

Officer retired because not recommended for promotion.—See act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1267), and amendatory statutes, quoted above, under this section.

An officer retired in the first five years of service, because not recommended for promotion, is entitled to one-half of his sea pay at the time of retirement, and no more. (McClure v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 347.)

Irregularities in retirement.—The administrator of a retired naval officer can not, in order to recover from the United States an increase in the compensation of his intestate, take advantage of an alleged defect in the proceedings by which he was retired and which he acquiesced in without objection during his lifetime. (Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S., 568.)

An officer whose name is placed on the retired list of the Army by the Secretary of War, in apparent compliance with provisions of law, is an officer de facto if not de jure, and money paid to him as salary can not be recovered back by the United States. (Badeau v. U. S., 130 U. S., 439.)

When retired pay commences.—See note to section 1457, Revised Statutes, under, "when retirement or advancement on the retired list takes effect."

The retirement of a naval officer for disability under section 1453, Revised Statutes, becomes effective only upon the approval of the finding of the retiring board by the President. Accordingly, the retirement of such officer with the higher rank on the retired list to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted on the active list, as authorized by act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1267), can not be made effective prior to the President's approval of his retirement, and his retired pay of the higher rank will date from such approval, notwithstanding that an earlier date of rank is stated in his commission. (27 Comp. Dec., 512.)

Sec. 1589. [Retired rear admirals.

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1589. Rear-admirals on the retired list of the Navy, who were retired as captains when the highest grade in the Navy was captain, at the age of sixty-two years, or after forty-five years' service, and who, after their retirement, were promoted to the grade of rear-admiral, and performed the duties of that grade in time of war, shall be considered as having been retired as rear-admirals."—(5 June, 1872, c. 307, s. 1, v. 17, p. 226. 3 Mar., 1873, c. 230, s. 1, v. 17, p. 555.)

It is rendered obsolete by the fact that there are now no officers in the Navy to whom it could apply.

Sec. 1590. [Third assistant engineers. Obsolete.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1590. Officers who have been retired as third assistant engineers shall continue to receive pay at the rate of four hundred dollars a year."—(3 Mar., 1859, c. 76, s. 2, v. 11, p. 407. 3 Aug., 1861, c. 42, s. 22, v. 12, p. 290. 16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 20, v. 12, p. 587. 21 April, 1864, c. 63, s. 7, v. 13, p. 54. 15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 5, v. 16, p. 333.)

The grade of third assistant engineer was abolished on the active list, by act of July 15, 1870, section 6 (16 Stat., 333), which act and section further provided that "retired third assistant engineers shall continue to receive the same rate of pay they have received up to the time of the passage of this act." However, on the date of the Revised Statutes, there were no third assistant engineers on the retired list, so that section 1590 never had any force or effect. The last of the third assistant engineers were Theron Skeel, who was retired as such June 22, 1869, and resigned November 12, 1870; and Nicholas H. Lamdin, who was retired as third assistant engineer, June 22, 1869, was restored to the active list, as second assistant engineer, July 17, 1872, and was commissioned as passed assistant engineer June 3, 1879.

Sec. 1591. [Pay not increased by promotion.] No officer heretofore or hereafter promoted upon the retired list, shall, in consequence of such promotion, be entitled to any increase of pay.—(2 Mar., 1867, c. 174, s. 9, v. 14, p. 517. 15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 5, v. 16, p. 333.)

By act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), it was provided that "hereafter there shall be no promotion or increase of pay in the retired list of the Navy, but the rank and pay of officers on the retired list shall be the same that they are when such officers shall be retired."

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), the promotion was authorized of retired officers employed on active duty in time of war, such promotion being permanent under certain conditions, and in other cases continuing only until the officer's relief from active duty; in either case the law in terms entitled such officers to the pay of the grade to which promoted. As to retired enlisted men promoted while on active duty, see notes to sections 1569 and 1592. Revised Statutes.

See sections 1459-1465, 1481, and 1588, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto, as to promotion of retired officers.

Sec. 1591 not modified by laws relating to active list.—The act of June 22, 1874 (18

Stat., 191), quoted under section 1561, Revised Statutes, which provided that any officer promoted in course to fill a vacancy "shall be entitled to the pay of the grade to which promoted from the date he takes rank therein," etc., was manifestly designed to fix the commencement of the increased pay of promoted officers in active service only, and it in no way affected section 1591, Revised Statutes, which thereafter, as before, remained in force. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 495.)

Applicable to all promotions on retired list.—Section 1591, Revised Statutes, is applicable alike to officers promoted under section 1461, Revised Statutes, and to those promoted under section 1460, as amended. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 495.)

The act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), above quoted, prevents either rank or pay of officers on the retired list from being increased in any way after such officers shall have been placed thereon. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 96.)

Officers promoted on retired list entitled to increased pay.—An officer was promoted on the retired list from the grade of lieutenant commander to that of commander, pursuant to a special act of Congress, approved March 11, 1902, which made no express provision for increasing his retired pay, but provided "that the President is hereby authorized to nominate to the Senate Lieutenant Commander R. M. G. Brown, now on the retired list, to be a commander on the retired list." Held, that under said act the officer on promotion was entitled to the retired pay of a commander, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1591 of the Revised Statutes and the act of August 5, 1882, forbidding increase of pay on the retired list. (Comp. Dec., May 3, 1902, 2 S. and A. Memo., 31.)

A chief engineer was advanced on the retired list from the rank of captain to the rank of rear admiral, pursuant to a special act of Congress, February 5, 1903, which said nothing about any increase in his retired pay, but provided "That Chief Engineer David Smith, United States Navy, retired, who served with credit through both the civil and Spanish-American Wars, and who, in the performance of duty, incurred disabilities from exposure, rendering him an invalid requiring the services of an attendant ever since his detachment, February 7, 1899, be advanced on the retired list from March 3, 1899, to the next higher grade." Held, that under this act the officer in question became entitled to three-fourths the sea pay of a rear admiral of the lower half. (Comp. Dec., Mar. 27, 1903, 22 S. and A. Memo., 173.)

Officers not entitled to increased pay on promotion.—An officer of the Navy retired as second assistant engineer with the rank of master (now lieutenant, junior grade), and thereafter promoted on the retired list and commissioned as a first assistant engineer with the rank of lieutenant, under the provisions of section 9 of the act of March 2, 1867 (14 Stat., 517), did not thereby become entitled to any increase of pay, such increase in pay being forbidden by the act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat., 333), now section 1591, Revised Statutes. The act of May 13,

1908 (35 Stat., 128), fixing new rates of pay for officers of the Navy, and providing that the pay of retired officers should be based on the pay therein fixed for officers of corresponding rank and service on the active list, did not repeal section 1591 so as to entitle this officer to the retired pay of the rank of lieutenant, to which he had been promoted; but merely entitled him to compute his percentage of active-duty pay upon the new rates of pay prescribed by said act of May 13, 1908, for the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), which was the rank with which he had been retired, and upon which his pay was to be based under section 1588, Revised Statutes. (Comp. Dec., July 28, 1908, 89 S. and A. Memo., 6790.)

Pay of officers promoted under act of July 1, 1918.—The act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), authorizes the permanent promotion of certain retired officers employed on active duty in time of war, and entitles officers so permanently promoted to a higher grade to retired pay upon their release from active duty based on the active duty pay of the grade to which promoted. (27 Comp. Dec., 78, 79, citing 26 Comp. Dec., 306, 409.)

Retired warrant officers of the Navy called to active duty in time of war, under the act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), are entitled to count their active service since retirement in determining their right to promotion in the various pay grades of warrant officers as provided by section 1556, Revised Statutes, the pay grade to which thus promoted becoming the basis upon which their retired pay subsequent to release from active duty is to be computed. (26 Comp. Dec., 409.)

A commissioned warrant officer advanced to the pay grades of lieutenant (junior grade) or lieutenant, in accordance with the act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), on account of active duty rendered in time of war, is entitled upon relief from active duty to have his retired pay thereafter computed upon the higher pay grade to which so permanently advanced. (26 Comp. Dec., 306.)

Sec. 1592. [Pay on active duty.] Officers on the retired list, when on active duty, shall receive the full pay of their respective grades.—(1 June, 1860, c. 67, s. 5, v. 12, p. 27. 2 Mar., 1867, c. 174, s. 9, v. 14, p. 517.)

Active duty by retired officers in time of war was authorized by sections 1462, 1463, and 1464, Revised Statutes.

Active duty for retired officers, with the pay and allowances of the grade from which retired, was authorized by act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 703), which expired by its terms at the end of 12 years from date of its enactment.

Active duty for retired officers, with their consent, with the pay and allowances, in time of peace, of an officer of the active list of the same rank, not to exceed the pay and allowances of a lieutenant (senior grade), was authorized by act of Aug. 22, 1912, 37 Stat., 329.)

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 581), it was provided that any retired officer detailed to active duty shall, while so serving, receive the active-duty pay and allowances of the grade, not above that of lieutenant commander in the Navy or of major in the Marine Corps, that he would have attained in due course of promotion if he had remained on the active list for a period beyond the date of his retirement equal to the total amount of time he has been detailed to active duty since retirement. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 581.)

By act of April 10, 1918, section 1 (40 Stat., 516), it was provided that retired chief warrant officers, while detailed to active duty, shall be entitled to the pay and allowances of a lieutenant (junior grade), if their total service, active and retired, since date of commission equals six years, and to the pay and allowances of a lieutenant if such total service equals 12 years.

By act of April 10, 1918, section 2 (40 Stat., 516), it was provided that retired warrant officers, while on active duty, shall be entitled to the pay and allowances of a lieutenant (junior grade), if their total service, active and retired, since date of warrant, equals 12 years; and to the pay and allowances of a lieutenant if such total service equals 18 years.

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), it was provided that retired commissioned or warrant officers of the Navy or Marine Corps ordered to active duty in time of war or national emergency shall be entitled to promotion on the retired list to the grade or rank, not above that of lieutenant commander in the Navy or major in the Marine Corps, and shall thereafter receive the pay and allowances thereof, which their total active service as officers, prior and subsequent to retirement, in the manner rendered by them, would have enabled them to attain in due course of promotion had such service been rendered continuously on the active list during the period of time last past.

By the act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), it was provided that retired commissioned or warrant officers of the Navy or Marine Corps, while on active duty during the existence of war or national emergency, may be temporarily commissioned in such higher grade or rank on the retired list, not above lieutenant commander or major, as the case may be, as the President may determine, and when so advanced, shall, while on such active duty, be entitled to the same pay and allowances as officers of like grade or rank on the active list; and upon relief from active duty, not later than six months after the war or emergency terminates, shall revert to their former grade or rank, and pay and allowance status on the retired list.

Detail of retired officers to educational institutions was authorized by section 1225, Revised Statutes, as amended, and other laws noted under that section.

Retired enlisted men on active duty.—See acts of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 941), August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 591), and July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 719); and see note to section 1569, Revised Statutes.

Marine officers.—Section 1622, Revised Statutes, simply provides for the conditions precedent to the retirement of an officer of the Marine Corps and in no way changes the jurisdiction to which he is subject or the conditions under which he may be again placed on active duty. (Jonas v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 281.)

The Secretary of the Navy exercised his authority properly under the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 329), when he assigned a retired Marine officer to active duty as post quartermaster, and upon such assignment the officer became entitled to the pay and allowances provided in said act. (Jonas v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 281.)

Commissioned warrant officers.—A commissioned warrant officer ranks with but after ensign; as such commissioned officer there is no actual rank or grade to which he would attain in due course of promotion on the active list, for there is no due course of promotion for such officers as a class. However, the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 578), authorizes the advancement of commissioned warrant officers after prescribed periods of service to the pay and allowances of lieutenant (junior grade) and lieutenant, respectively. Such advancement in "pay grades" which a commissioned warrant officer might attain in due course on the active list is applicable, under the act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), to such commissioned warrant officers employed on active duty in time of war, based upon their active service both prior and subsequent to retirement. Such commissioned warrant officers so advanced in pay while on active duty are entitled, upon relief from such duty, to have their retired pay computed upon the higher pay grade to which advanced. (26 Comp. Dec., 306.)

A retired chief warrant officer on active duty since August 29, 1916, was not entitled to the pay and allowances of a lieutenant (junior grade) under the first section of the act of April 10, 1918 (40 Stat., 516), because he had not served a total of six years from the date of his commission as a chief warrant officer; he would have been entitled to the pay of a lieutenant (junior grade) under the second section of the act of April 10, 1918, but for his promotion to chief warrant officer. Neither section of that act, therefore, entitled him to such increased pay. Nor is he entitled to such pay under the provision in the act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 771), providing that "no warrant officer, heretofore or hereafter promoted six years from date of warrant, shall suffer a reduction in pay which, but for such promotion, would have been received by him." This latter act merely protected him from reduction in the pay which attached to the warrant office at the time he vacated it by promotion; and his promotion occurred prior to the passage of the act of April 10, 1918. The act of March 3, 1909, does not entitle a chief warrant officer to the benefit of increased pay made a part of the warrant grade by legislation enacted after his promotion. (26 Comp. Dec., 935.)

Increased pay from date stated in commission.—A retired officer of the Navy, temporarily advanced to the grade of lieutenant commander on the retired list, while on active duty pursuant to the provision in the act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), authorizing such temporary advancement in grade, held, entitled to the active-duty pay of a lieutenant commander from the date stated in his commission, provided he was on active duty on that date. (Comp. Dec., Oct. 11, 1918, 212 S. and A. Memo., 4681. Compare, 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 495, noted under sec. 1591; and White v. U. S., 239 U. S. 608, noted below, under "Active duty in time of peace.")

Increased pay under act of August 29, 1916.—A retired officer detailed to active duty is entitled, under the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 581), to the increased pay of a higher rank while on active duty from the date that his running mate on the active list of the Navy receives a temporary appointment in such higher rank, "in due course of promotion." (Comp. Dec., Nov. 12, 1918, 213 S. and A. Memo., 4724.)

Active duty in time of peace.—Reference to sections 1462, Revised Statutes, shows that section 1592 is intended to apply to the rates of pay of naval officers only in time of war, and consequently can have no bearing upon the issue involved in the case of an officer ordered to active duty under more recent statutes. (Sears v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 105.)

A retired officer employed on active duty in time of peace, pursuant to the act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 703), was entitled only to the pay of the rank held by him on the active list at the time of retirement and not to the active-duty pay of an officer of corresponding rank and service on the active list. (Sears v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 105.)

A retired officer performing active duty under the act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 684), was entitled only to the same pay that he was receiving at the time of his retirement; he was not entitled while on active duty to the benefits of longevity increase accruing after the date of his retirement. There is no apparent reason for giving a retired officer on active duty a higher rate of pay than he was receiving at the time of his retirement. (Faust v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cls., 94.)

The pay of a retired officer of the Navy ordered to active duty is governed by the law under which his orders are issued. Thus, an officer who held the grade of lieutenant commander on the active list, but was retired with the rank of commander, was entitled, while on active duty under the act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 703), to the active-duty pay of the grade of lieutenant commander, which was the grade from which he was retired, and not to the active duty pay of the rank of commander, held by him on the retired list. (Sears v. U. S., 46 Ct. Cls., 105.)

The act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 891, 892), provided that "all officers of the Navy who, since the third day of March, eighteen hundred and ninety-nine, have been advanced or may hereafter be advanced in grade or rank pursuant to law shall be allowed the pay and allowances of the higher grade or rank from the dates stated in their commissions." Certain officers were advanced in rank at the time of their retirement, in accordance with sections 8 and 11 of the naval personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1006, 1007), and continued on active duty for several years thereafter, in accordance with the act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 703). For such active duty they were allowed the active duty pay of the rank which they held prior to their retirement. Held, that the act of 1913 applied only to officers on the active list. The act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 328, 329), which limited the pay which retired officers thereafter ordered to active duty might receive, confirms this conclusion. (White v. U. S., 239 U. S., 608. See note above, under "Increased pay from date stated in commission.")

For other cases, see notes to sections 1588 and 1591, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1593. [Officers retired on furlough pay.] Officers placed on the retired list, on furlough pay, shall receive only one-half of the pay to which they would have been entitled if on leave of absence on the active list.—(3 Mar., 1835, c. 27, s. 1, v. 4, pp. 756, 757. 28 Feb., 1855, c. 127, s. 2, v. 10, p. 616. 16 Jan., 1857, c. 12, s. 1, v. 11, p. 154. 3 Aug., 1861, c. 42, s. 23, v. 12, p. 291. 28 July, 1866, c. 312, s. 2, v. 14, p. 345. 30 Jan., 1875, c. 30, v. 18, p. 304.)

See sections 1442, 1454, 1557, 1558, and 1594, Revised Statutes; and notes to those sections.

Section 1593 not repealed.—Section 1442 gives the right to furlough an officer of the Navy, and section 1557 fixes the proportion of pay that he shall have while on furlough. Section 1454 provides for retiring officers of the Navy on furlough pay, and section 1593 provides specifically that such officers "shall receive only one-half of the pay to which they would have been entitled if on leave of absence on the active list." These sections are not repealed. (15 Comp. Dec., 70.)

Under the act of May 13, 1903, one-half of full pay based on the rates fixed by that act is the proper pay to be allowed an officer of the Navy while on furlough, or while on the retired list on furlough pay. (15 Comp. Dec., 70.)

The assimilating clause of section 13 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004, 1007), giving certain officers of the Navy the same pay as allowed officers of corresponding rank in the Army, applied only to officers on the active list, and did not, therefore, repeal the prior laws respecting the pay fixed by section 1593 of the Revised Statutes for officer compulsorily retired, under section 1452, for incapacity not resulting from any incident of the service. (Hannum v. U. S., 226 U. S., 436.)

Not applicable to Marine officers.—Section 1593 does not apply to officers of the Marine Corps. Accordingly, such an officer, retired for disability not incident to the service, and in whose case it was directed by the President that he be retired on furlough pay, was nevertheless entitled to full retired pay as provided by section 1274, Revised Statutes, relating to the Army, and made applicable to the Marine Corps by sections 1622 and 1623, Revised Statutes. It is not competent for the President to place retired officers on a different rate of pay than that which the law has fixed. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 442.)

Report of board under which officer retired.—An officer is legally retired on furlough pay for incapacity not the result of an incident of the service where the retiring board reports that there was no evidence that his incapacity was the result of any incident of the service. It is incumbent on the officer whose case comes before a retiring board to show, in order to secure a report which will entitle him to be placed on the retired list, rather than on the retired list on furlough pay, that his incapacity was the result of some incident of the service. Accordingly, the report of the board that there was no evidence to support such a finding is to all intents and purposes a report that the incapacity was not the result of an incident of the service. (Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S., 568, 573.)

Sec. 1594. [Transfer from furlough to retired pay list.] The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may transfer any officer on the retired list from the furlough to the retired-pay list.—(16 Jan., 1857, c. 12, s. 3, v. 11, p. 154. 16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 20, v. 12, p. 587. 30 Jan., 1875, c. 30, v. 18, p. 304.)

See sections 1442, 1454, 1557, 1558, and 1593, Revised Statutes; and notes to those sections.

Increased pay prohibited.—By act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 286), it was provided that "hereafter there shall be no promotion or increase of pay in the retired list of the Navy, but the rank and pay of officers on the retired list shall be the same that they are when such officers shall be retired." Held, that this statute prohibits the transfer of an officer from the furlough to the retired pay list, under section 1594, Revised Statutes, with increase of pay; also held, that such officer can not be simultaneously retired on furlough pay and transferred to the retired pay list, so as to give him the pay of the latter. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 96.) (That furlough pay is now the same as the pay received by officers on the half-pay retired list, see 15 Comp. Dec., 70, noted under section 1593, Revised Statutes; see also note to section 1588, Revised Statutes. Transfer from the furlough to the retired pay list would not, therefore, involve any increase of pay under existing laws.)

Liberal construction.—Section 1594, Revised Statutes, authorizing the transfer of a retired officer of the Navy from the furlough to the retired pay list, being intended to afford relief from the consequences of the findings of retiring boards, should be construed liberally; and being so construed, it is held that the President has power under it, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make the transfer relate back to a time when in his judgment it ought to have been granted. (U. S. v. Burchard, 125 U. S., 176.)

Sec. 1595. [Rations.] Rations shall not be allowed to officers on the retired list.—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 20, v. 12, p. 587.)

See notes to sections 1578 and 1579, Revised Statutes, as to rations of officers on the active list; and see note to section 1592, Revised Statutes, as to pay and allowances of retired officers on active duty.

Sec. 1596. [Number and grades of officers and enlisted men.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1596. The Marine Corps of the United States shall consist of one commandant, with the rank of brigadier-general, one colonel, two lieutenant-colonels, four majors, one adjutant and inspector, one paymaster, one quartermaster, two assistant quartermasters, twenty captains, thirty first lieutenants, thirty second lieutenants, one sergeant-major, one quartermaster-sergeant, one drum-major, one principal musician, two hundred sergeants, two hundred and twenty corporals, thirty musicians for a band, sixty drummers, sixty fifers, and twenty-five hundred privates."—(25 July, 1861, c. 19, s. 7, v. 12, p. 275. 2 Mar., 1867, c. 174, s. 7, v. 12, p. 517.)

It was amended by acts of June 30, 1876 (19 Stat., 71), and January 30, 1885 (23 Stat., 293), which provided for a permanent reduction in the number of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps to "not exceed seventy-five;" and by act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 369, 370), which authorized the appointment by the President within twelve months following said act of such additional temporary officers of the Marine Corps, not above the rank of captain, as might be requisite, such officers to serve "only during the continuance of the exigency under which their services are required in the existing war;" and further authorized the Secretary of the Navy to enlist, as a temporary force during the existing war, not more than 60 gunnery sergeants with the rank of first sergeant, not more than 80 corporals, and not more than 1,500 privates.

It was superseded by sections 18-24 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1008, 1009), section 18 of which act prescribed the number of line officers; section 22, the number of staff officers; section 23, the number of enlisted men; and section 24, the number constituting the Marine Band. These sections are more fully noted below, with references to amendatory statutes since enacted.

LAWS PRESCRIBING ORGANIZATION OF MARINE CORPS.

Number and grades of commissioned officers.—

By act of March 3, 1899, section 18 (30 Stat., 1008), it was provided that the active list of the line officers of the Marine Corps shall consist of—

- 1 Brigadier general commandant;
- 5 Colonels;
- 5 Lieutenant colonels;
- 10 Majors;
- 60 Captains;
- 60 First lieutenants, and
- 60 Second lieutenants.

By the same act, section 22 (30 Stat., 1009), it was provided that the staff of the Marine Corps shall consist of 1 adjutant and inspector, 1 quartermaster, and 1 paymaster, each with the rank of colonel; 1 assistant adjutant and inspector, 2 assistant quartermasters, and 1 assistant paymaster, each with the rank of major; and 3 assistant quartermasters with the rank of captain.

By act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 686), the commandant was given the rank of major general during the service of the then incumbent.

By act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1198), the following additional officers were authorized: 1 Colonel; 1 lieutenant colonel; 5 majors; 12 captains; 25 first lieutenants; 12 second lieutenants; 1 assistant adjutant and inspector with the rank of lieutenant colonel; 2 assistant adjutants and inspectors with the rank of major; 1 assistant quartermaster with the rank of lieutenant colonel; 5 assistant quartermasters with the rank of captain; 1 assistant paymaster with the rank of lieutenant colonel, 1 assistant paymaster with the rank of captain.

By act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 155), the following further increases were made in the commissioned personnel: 1 Major general commandant, in lieu of the then brigadier general commandant; 1 colonel; 1 lieutenant colonel; 2 majors; 18 captains; 7 first lieutenants; and 14 second lieutenants.

By act of December 19, 1913 (38 Stat., 241), it was provided that appointments as commandant thereafter made should be for a term of four years, that the appointee should be an officer of the active list not below the grade of field officer, who while serving as commandant should have the rank of major general, and be carried as an additional number in his grade and after his return to duty in his grade until said grade is reduced to the number authorized by law; and that nothing contained in said act "shall operate to increase or reduce the total number of officers in the Marine Corps now provided by law." (For amendment to this provision, see act of Aug. 29, 1916, quoted below.)

By act of June 12, 1916, section 3 (39 Stat., 224), the following additional officers were authorized: 2 majors; 12 captains; 18 first lieutenants; 2 assistant quartermasters with the rank of captain; and 1 assistant paymaster with the rank of captain.

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 609, 610), the commissioned strength of the Marine Corps, line and staff, was fixed on a percentage basis of the enlisted strength, as follows:

"Hereafter the total number of commissioned officers of the active list of the line and staff of the Marine Corps, exclusive of officers borne on the Navy list as additional numbers, shall be four per centum of the total authorized enlisted strength of the active list of the Marine Corps, exclusive of the Marine Band, and of men under sentence of discharge by court-martial, distributed in the proportion of one officer with rank senior to colonel to four with the rank of colonel, to five with the rank of lieutenant colonel, to fourteen with the rank of major, to thirty-seven with the rank of captain, to thirty-one with the rank of first lieutenant, to thirty-one with the rank of second lieutenant: * * *

Provided further, That in determining the officers with rank senior to colonel there shall be included the officer serving as major general commandant: And provided further, That appointments hereafter made to the position of major general commandant under the provisions of the Act approved December nineteenth, nineteen hundred and thirteen, entitled "An Act to make the tenure of office of the major general commandant of the Marine Corps for a term of four years," shall be made from officers of the active list of the Marine Corps not below the rank of colonel: Provided further, That the officers serving in the senior grade of the Adjutant and Inspector's, Quartermaster's, and Paymaster's Departments shall, while serving therein, have the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier general: And provided further, That for the purpose of determining the number of officers in the various ranks as herein provided such staff officers shall be counted as being of the rank of colonel."

(As to total authorized enlisted strength, see laws noted below under this section. As to number of staff officers, see note to section 1598.)

By act of May 22, 1917, section 4 (40 Stat., 85), it was provided that additional commissioned officers of the Marine Corps shall be temporarily appointed by the President, in his discretion, based upon the temporary increase in the number of enlisted men authorized by said act; no such temporary appointment to be made above the rank of major; and it was further provided that during the period of the existing war, vacancies in the total number of commissioned officers in the Marine Corps authorized by the act of August 29, 1916, might be supplied by temporary appointments in the lowest grades, and by temporary promotions to all other grades, until a sufficient number of officers should be available for regular appointment or promotion.

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 715), the said act of May 22, 1917, section 4, was amended so as to authorize the temporary appointment of not exceeding 6 brigadier generals, 22 colonels, and 22 lieutenant colonels, based on the temporary increase in the enlisted force of the Marine Corps.

By said act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 715), the rank and title of major general was created in the Marine Corps, and the President was authorized to appoint, with the advice and consent of the Senate, one major general, "who shall at all times be junior in rank to the Major General Commandant," and also one temporary major general, "who shall at all times be junior to the permanent major general."

By act of January 12, 1919 (40 Stat., 1054), it was provided that temporary vacancies in the Marine Corps, caused by the temporary promotion of marine officers to higher grades in the Army, while detached for service with the Army under section 1621, Revised Statutes, "shall be temporarily filled in the same manner as is now prescribed by law."

By act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 830), which authorized certain permanent appointments in the Marine Corps, to be accomplished by June 30, 1921, it was provided: "That the officers now holding temporary appointments as commissioned officers in the Marine Corps may retain their temporary commissions until the permanent appointments provided for in the foregoing section shall have been made."

As to additional number officers, Marine Corps Reserve, etc., see note below under this section.

Warrant officers and pay clerks.—By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 611), "the warrant grades of marine gunner and quartermaster clerk" were established, and the number in each grade fixed at twenty; and it was provided that officers in said grades "shall have the rank and receive the pay, allowances, and privileges of retirement of warrant officers in the Navy."

By act of May 22, 1917, section 11 (40 Stat., 87), the appointment was authorized of 30 marine gunners and 30 quartermaster's clerks, additional to the number then prescribed by law.

By act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 830), it was provided that "officers now holding temporary commissions in the Marine Corps and who have had more than ten years' service therein, if not found qualified for permanent commissions, and who are recommended by the board herein provided for, may be appointed warrant officers in the Marine Corps; and the authorized number of warrant officers is hereby increased by a number not to exceed fifty to provide for the appointment of the aforesaid officers."

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 735), it was provided that "the title of clerks for assistant paymasters is hereby changed to pay clerk, who shall hereafter receive the same pay, allowances, and other benefits now provided by law for clerks for assistant paymasters; and the total number of pay clerks shall not exceed ten for duty in the office of the paymaster, Marine Corps, fifteen for duty in the paymaster's department at large, and one for each assistant paymaster." (As to pay and allowances, etc., of pay clerks, see note to sec. 1612.) By act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 625), appropriating for one clerk for each assistant paymaster, it was provided that hereafter such clerk shall be available where his services are required.

Number and grades of enlisted men.—By act of March 3, 1899, section 23 (30 Stat., 1009), it was provided that the enlisted force of the Marine Corps shall consist of 5 sergeant majors, 1 drum major, 20 quartermaster sergeants, 72 gunnery sergeants with the rank and allowance of first sergeant, 60 first sergeants, 240 sergeants, 480 corporals, 80 drummers, 80 trumpeters, and 4,962 privates.

By subsequent enactments, the following additional noncommissioned officers and privates were authorized:

Act July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 687): 10 gunnery sergeants, 40 sergeants, 60 corporals, 10 drummers, 10 trumpeters, and 620 privates.

Act March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1198): 1 sergeant major, 40 quartermaster sergeants, 12 first sergeants, 65 sergeants, 55 corporals, 10 drummers, 10 trumpeters, and 527 privates.

Act March 3, 1905 (33 Stat., 1113): 10 first sergeants, 67 sergeants, 142 corporals, 10 drummers, 10 trumpeters, and 1,000 privates.

Act May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 155): 2 sergeant majors, 15 quartermaster sergeants, "five of whom are to serve in the pay department," 20 first sergeants, 50 sergeants, 125 corporals, 10 drummers, 10 trumpeters, and 518 privates.

Act August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 350, 351): 4 sergeant majors, 4 quartermaster sergeants, 4 gunnery sergeants, 12 first sergeants, 18 sergeants, 35 corporals, 4 drummers, 4 trumpeters, and 315 privates.

Act March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 948): 20 gunnery sergeants, 20 sergeants, and 70 corporals. The number of privates was reduced by 110 in this act.

Act June 12, 1916 (39 Stat., 223, 224): 5 quartermaster sergeants, 5 gunnery sergeants, 5 first sergeants, and 11 sergeants.

Act August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 612): 28 sergeant majors, 117 quartermaster sergeants, 107 gunnery sergeants, 107 first sergeants, 500 sergeants, 835 corporals, 50 drummers, 50 trumpeters, and 3,235 privates.

The total strength of the above enlisted grades, as fixed by the acts cited, was as follows: 40 sergeant majors, 1 drum major, 201 quartermaster sergeants, 218 gunnery sergeants, 226 first sergeants, 1,011 sergeants, 1,802 corporals, 174 drummers, 174 trumpeters, and 11,067 privates, making a grand total in all said grades of 14,914. (As to number of Marine Band, see below.)

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 612), it was provided that "the President is authorized, when, in his judgment, it becomes necessary to place the country in a complete state of preparedness, to further increase the enlisted strength of the Marine Corps to 17,400: And provided, That the distribution in the various grades shall be in the same proportion as that authorized at the time when the President avails himself of the authority herein granted." (In accordance with this provision, the enlisted strength of the Marine Corps was increased to 17,400 by the President's order of Mar. 26, 1917.)

By act of May 22, 1917, section 2 (40 Stat., 84), it was provided "that the authorized enlisted strength of the active list of the Marine Corps is hereby temporarily increased from 17,400 to 30,000, this authorized strength being distributed in the various grades of the enlisted force in the same proportion as those authorized at the date of the approval of this act."

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 714), the act of May 22, 1917, section 2, was reenacted to read as follows: "That the authorized enlisted strength of the active list of the Marine Corps is hereby temporarily increased from 17,400 to 75,500, this authorized strength being distributed in the various grades of the enlisted force in the same proportion as those authorized at the date of the approval of this act: Provided, That not more than 25 per centum of the authorized number of privates in the Marine Corps shall have the rank of private, first class, which rank is hereby established in the Marine Corps."

By act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 152), it was provided that "the authorized enlisted strength of the active list of the Marine Corps is hereby temporarily increased to 27,400, plus such number of men as may be serving with the American expeditionary forces abroad: Provided, That the average number of enlisted men of the Marine Corps on active duty during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, shall not exceed 27,400, distribution in the various grades to be made in the same proportion as provided under existing law."

By act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 830), it was provided that "the authorized enlisted strength of the active list of the Marine Corps is hereby permanently established at 27,400, distribution in the various grades to be made in the same proportion as provided under existing law."

By act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 155), it was provided that "hereafter the number of enlisted men in the United States Marine Corps shall be such as the Congress may from time to time authorize."

By act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 403), it was provided "that hereafter the number of enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps provided for shall be construed to mean the daily average number of enlisted men in the naval service during the fiscal year."

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 612), it was provided that "hereafter the number of enlisted men of the Marine Corps shall be exclusive of those sentenced by court-martial to discharge."

By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 714, quoted above), the rank of private, first class, was established.

By act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 152), it was provided "that the words 'enlisted men,' as contained in prior appropriation acts, shall not be construed to deprive women, enlisted or enrolled in the naval service, of the pay, allowances, gratuities, and other benefits granted by law to the enlisted personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps."

By act of June 4, 1920, section 7 (41 Stat., 836), it was provided "that hereafter the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to establish such grades and ratings as may be necessary for the proper administration of the enlisted personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps."

Marine Band.—The provision of section 1596, Revised Statutes, above set forth, that "the Marine Corps of the United States shall consist of * * * thirty musicians for a band," was superseded by section 24 of the Navy personnel act approved March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1009), which provided "That the band of the United States Marine Corps shall consist of one leader, with the pay and allowances of a first lieutenant; one second leader, whose pay shall be seventy-five dollars per month, and who shall have the allowances of a sergeant major; thirty first-class musicians, whose pay shall be sixty dollars per month; and thirty second-class musicians, whose pay shall be fifty dollars per month and the allowances of a sergeant; such musicians of the band to have no increased pay for length of service." (As to pay of Marine Band, see also note to sec. 1613, R. S.)

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 609, above quoted), the total number of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps is fixed at a percentage of "the total authorized enlisted strength of the active list of the Marine Corps, exclusive of the Marine Band * * *." The same act (39 Stat., 612) provided "that the band of the United States Marine Corps shall consist of one leader, whose pay and allowances shall be those of a captain in the Marine Corps; one second leader, whose pay shall be $150 per month and who shall have the allowances of a sergeant major; ten principal musicians, whose pay shall be $125 per month; twenty-five first-class musicians, whose pay shall be $100 per month; twenty second-class musicians, whose pay shall be $85 per month; and ten third-class musicians, whose pay shall be $70 per month; such musicians of the band to have the allowances of a sergeant and to have no increase in the rates of pay on account of length of service."

Additional officers and enlisted men.—By act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1108), it was provided that officers of the Marine Corps advanced under section 1605, Revised Statutes, for services rendered during the war with Spain, shall be carried as additional numbers in their grades. By act of June 16, 1906 (31 Stat., 296), it was provided that officers of the Marine Corps advanced in rank for eminent and conspicuous conduct in battle or extraordinary heroism, shall be carried as additional numbers in each grade in which they serve. (See secs. 1605-1608, R. S.)

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 609), it was provided that "the promotion to the grade of brigadier general of any officer now or hereafter carried as an additional number in the grade or with the rank of colonel shall be held to fill a vacancy in the grade of brigadier general." (This provision does not apply to the officer serving as Major General Commandant and carried as an additional number in his grade under the act of December 19, 1913, 38 Stat., 241, quoted above, under "Number and grades of commissioned officers." (See note to sec. 1601, R. S.)

The said act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 611), further provided that within two years from the date thereof certain officers retired for physical disability might be transferred to the active list of the Marine Corps, and that any officer so transferred "shall be carried as an additional number in the grade to which he may be transferred or at any time thereafter promoted."

The said act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 582, 586), authorized a Naval Flying Corps, to be composed in part of 150 officers, detailed from the line of the Navy and from the Marine Corps, or appointed to the line of the Navy or Marine Corps, for aeronautic duties only, and 350 enlisted men, the said officers and enlisted men to be in addition to the total number of officers and enlisted men which "is now or may hereafter be provided by law for the other branches of the naval service."

Marine Corps Reserve.—The act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 593), created a Marine Corps Reserve, "to be a constituent part of the Marine Corps and in addition to the authorized strength thereof," under the same provisions in all respects, except as may be necessary to adapt the said provisions to the Marine Corps, as those providing for the Naval Reserve Force in the same act. (For amendments to said act of Aug. 29, 1916, see acts of Mar. 4, 1917, 39 Stat., 1174, Apr. 25, 1917, 40 Stat., 37, Apr. 25, 1917, 40 Stat., 38, May 22, 1917, 40 Stat., 84, July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 708-712, and June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 834.)

Marine Corps instruction camps.—By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 614), the Secretary of the Navy was authorized to establish camps of instruction for volunteer citizens designated for such training.

Computing number of officers.—The naval appropriation act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 577), provides that "whenever a final fraction occurs in computing the authorized number of any corps, grade or rank in the naval service, the nearest whole number shall be regarded as the authorized number: Provided, That at least one officer shall be allowed in each grade or rank." Held, that the words "naval service" in this provision include the Marine Corps, although the method of computing by percentages the authorized number of commissioned officers in that corps was prescribed in a different part of the act. This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that Congress in the same act elsewhere made specific reference to the "naval service" with indisputable application to the Marine Corps, in connection with the reinstatement of "former officers of the Marine Corps who resigned from the naval service in good standing." (File 28687-5, Aug. 29, 1916. See also note to sec. 1621, R. S.)

Reduction in number of officers.—Congress might disband the whole Marine Corps without any violation of the Constitution of the United States and without any breach of contract with the officers of the corps. If they might do the greater act, they might certainly do the less. If they might disband wholly, they may surely disband partially, without any imputation of their having transcended either their power or their duty. They have disbanded the majors; that grade exists no longer; and with the grade falls the claim to pay. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 489, 490; see also note to sec. 1604, R. S.)

Distribution of enlisted men.—Under the naval appropriation act of June 4, 1920 (above quoted), fixing the permanent strength of the active list of enlisted men in the Marine Corps, held that the words "in the same proportion as provided under existing laws" continue the grades existing at the date of the approval of said act and definitely establish the number in each; and the Secretary of the Navy is without authority to increase the numbers in said grades. (File 1112-1617, June 22, 1920.)

The further provision in said act, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to establish grades and ratings, does not modify the provision first above quoted, except in so far as it authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to establish such new grades and ratings in the Marine Corps as may be necessary for the proper administration of the enlisted personnel thereof, and assign thereto such numbers of enlisted men as he may deem expedient. In the event of the Secretary of the Navy not availing himself of the authority to establish new grades and ratings, those provided for under existing law prior to June 4, 1920, will continue as before. (File 1112-1617, June 22, 1920.)

Grades established for pay purposes.—See note to section 1612, Revised Statutes.

Status of Marine Corps; part of the Navy.—See note to section 1621, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1597. [When number of officers may be exceeded. Obsolete.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1597. The provisions of the preceding section shall not preclude the advancement of any officer to a higher grade for distinguished conduct in conflict with the enemy, or for extraordinary heroism in the line of his profession, as authorized by sections sixteen hundred and five and sixteen hundred and seven."—(25 July, 1861, c. 19, s. 2, v. 12, p. 275. 16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 9, v. 12, p. 584. 24 Jan., 1865, c. 19, s. 2, v. 13, p. 424.)

It was rendered obsolete by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 18 (30 Stat., 1008), which superseded "the provisions of the preceding section," referred to herein, namely, section 1596, Revised Statutes, by making new and complete provisions as to the number of officers who should compose the active list of the Marine Corps.

Other enactments on this subject are contained in the following statutes: Act March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1108), June 16, 1906 (34 Stat., 296), and August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 609), noted under section 1596, Revised Statutes, "Additional officers and enlisted men." See also section 1606, Revised Statutes.

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 609, 610), quoted under section 1596, Revised Statutes, under "Number and grades of commissioned officers," new provisions were enacted as to the number of officers allowed in the various grades of the Marine Corps, and it was therein provided that the total number of commissioned officers therein authorized, was "exclusive of officers borne on the Navy list as additional numbers." Officers advanced under sections 1605 and 1607, Revised Statutes, become additional numbers in grade under the acts of March 3, 1901, and June 16, 1906, above cited.

See notes to sections 1363 and 1364, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1598. [Staff separate from line. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1598. The staff of the Marine Corps shall be separate from the line."—(30 June, 1834, c., 132, s. 6, v. 4, p. 713. 2 Mar., 1847, c. 40, s. 3, v. 9, p. 154.)

It was superseded by the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 610), which abolished the permanent staff system in the Marine Corps and substituted therefor a system of temporary details from the line, as follows:

"No further permanent appointments shall be made in any grade in any staff department. Any vacancy hereafter occurring in the lower grade of any staff department shall be filled by the detail of an officer of the line for a period of four years unless sooner relieved; any vacancy hereafter occurring in the upper grade of any staff department shall be filled by the appointment of an officer with the rank of colonel holding a permanent appointment in the staff department in which the vacancy exists, or of some other officer holding a permanent appointment in such staff department in case there be no permanent staff officer with the rank of colonel in that department, or of a colonel of the line in case there be no officer holding a permanent appointment in such staff department. Such appointments shall be made by the President and be for a term of four years, and the officer so appointed shall be re-commissioned in the grade to which appointed."

The said act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 610), also made provision for transfers of permanent staff officers to the line, the said provision, which was temporary and has now expired, being as follows:

"That prior to June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and eighteen, an officer holding a permanent appointment in any staff department may, upon his own application, with the approval of the President, be reappointed in the line of the Marine Corps in the grade and with the rank he would hold on the date of his reappointment if he had remained continuously in the line: Provided, That no officer holding a permanent appointment in any staff department shall be recommissioned in the line with the rank of colonel or lieutenant colonel: Provided further, That such staff officer shall, before being reappointed in the line of the Marine Corps as above provided, perform line duties for one year, at the expiration of which time he shall as a prerequisite to reappointment in the line be required to establish to the satisfaction of an examining board consisting of line officers of the Marine Corps his physical, mental, and professional fitness for the performance of line duty."

By another clause in the same act (39 Stat., 610) it was provided "that officers holding permanent appointments in the staff departments shall not be eligible for appointment to the grade of brigadier general of the line as hereinbefore provided."

Proportion of officers in the staff.—By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 610), it was provided that—

"The total commissioned personnel of the active list of the staff departments, whether serving therein under permanent appointments or under temporary detail, as herein provided, shall be eight per centum of the authorized commissioned strength of the Marine Corps, and of this total one-fifth shall constitute the adjutant and inspector's department, one-fifth the paymaster's department, and three-fifths the quartermaster's department."

As to rank of senior staff officers see note to section 1602, Revised Statutes.

As to promotion of officers in staff departments, see note to section 1599, Revised Statutes.

Duties of staff officers.—An adjutant was provided for the Marine Corps as early as July 11, 1798 (1 Stat., 594), and the quartermaster and paymaster at least as early as Apr. 16, 1814 (3 Stat., 124). The act of March 3, 1899, section 22 (noted under section 1596, R. S.), simply increased the number of assistants to the three principal officers. It is to be noted that in none of these acts are the duties and functions of the three staff officers in question at all specified, but it can not on this account be held that the statute itself imposes none. On the contrary, it is clear that these duties and functions were presumed by Congress to be so well understood as not to require specific mention. Broadly, the adjutant is the aid of the commander in maintaining military discipline; the quartermaster attends to the supplies of the command; and the paymaster to the payment thereof. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 234.)

A regulation which would deprive the senior staff officers in the Marine Corps of the functions above enumerated, or place them in a situation where they would be unable to perform them, is necessarily invalid. The headquarters of the command is the only place where in the nature of things those duties can be properly performed. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 234.)

Detachment of senior staff officers from headquarters.—The President, as commander in chief of the Army and Navy, may temporarily detail said staff officers (adjutant and inspector, quartermaster, and paymaster) away from the headquarters of their command, or order them to perform temporarily additional duties in the line of their staff functions or outside of them. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 234.)

A Navy regulation is invalid which permits officers of the staff departments of the Marine Corps to be detached permanently from the headquarters of the Marine Corps, and gives the power to the commandant of that corps to impose duties upon these staff officers inconsistent with their staff functions. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 234.)

Detail of junior staff officer as head of department.—It is clearly inconsistent with the acts of Congress relating to the staff of the Marine Corps, up to and including the act of March 3, 1899, section 22 (noted under sec. 1596, R. S.), to relegate the quartermaster, for example, to the position of an officer in his own department, and to raise one of his assistants to a position not recognized in the statutes, namely, "officer in charge of the quartermaster's department." (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 234. But see act Aug. 29, 1916, quoted above.)

Sec. 1599. [Qualifications for appointment and promotion. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"SEC. 1599. No person under twenty or over twenty-five years of age shall be appointed from civil life as a commissioned officer of the Marine Corps, nor shall any person be so appointed until his qualifications for such service have been examined and approved, under the directions of the Secretary of the Navy."—(25 July, 1861, c. 19, s. 3, v. 12, p. 275.)

It was superseded by act of March 3, 1899, section 20 (30 Stat., 1008), which provided "that no person except such officers or former graduates of the Naval Academy as have served in the war with Spain, as hereinbefore provided for, shall be appointed a commissioned officer in the Marine Corps who is under twenty or over thirty years of age; and that no person shall be appointed a commissioned officer in said corps until he shall have passed such examination as may be prescribed by the President of the United States, except graduates of the Naval Academy, as above provided * * *."

The said act of March 3, 1899, Section 19 (30 Stat., 1008), provided that "the vacancies existing in said Corps after the promotions and appointments herein provided for shall be filled by the President from time to time, whenever the actual needs of the naval service require it, first, from the graduates of the Naval Academy in the manner now provided by law; or second, from those who are serving or who have served as second lieutenants in the Marine Corps during the war with Spain; or, third, from meritorious noncommissioned officers of the Marine Corps; or, fourth, from civil life: Provided, That after said vacancies are once filled there shall be no further appointments from civil life."

OTHER LAWS RELATING TO APPOINTMENT.

Act of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1198), provided "that the vacancies now existing in the line and the staff departments of the Marine Corps and those created by this Act below the grade of brigadier-general shall be filled, respectively, first by promotion by seniority and then by selection and appointment as now provided by law, excepting that vacancies in the grade of second lieutenant shall be filled first, as far as practicable, from graduates of the Naval Academy each year on completing the prescribed course at the Naval Academy, exclusive of the probationary tour of sea service before final graduation, then from meritorious noncommissioned officers and from civil life between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-seven years."

Act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 155), provided "that the vacancies now existing in the line and staff departments of the United States Marine Corps and those created by this Act shall be filled in the manner provided by law."

Act of July 9, 1913 (38 Stat., 103), provided that "midshipmen on graduation shall be commissioned ensigns in the Navy, or may be assigned by the Secretary of the Navy to fill vacancies in the lowest commissioned grades of the Marine Corps or Staff Corps of the Navy." (For other laws relating to appointment of midshipmen on graduation, see note to sec. 1521, R. S.)

Act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 611), provided "that no midshipman at the United States Naval Academy or cadet at the United States Military Academy who fails to graduate therefrom shall be eligible for appointment as a commissioned officer in the Marine Corps until after the graduation of the class of which he was a member."

The said act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 610), further provided that "appointees to the grade of second lieutenant, if appointed from civil life, shall be between the ages of twenty and twenty-five years, and before receiving a commission in the Marine Corps, each appointee shall establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy his mental, physical, moral, and professional qualifications for such commission."

The said act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 610), further provided that "the President of the United States be, and hereby is, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint as second lieutenants on the active list in the United States Marine Corps, to take rank at the foot of the list of second lieutenants as it stands at the date of reinstatement, former officers of the Marine Corps who resigned from the naval service in good standing: Provided, That they shall establish their moral, physical, mental, and professional qualifications to perform the duties of that grade to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, may waive the age limit in favor of the aforesaid former officers of the Marine Corps: Provided further, That the prior service of such officers and the service after reinstatement shall be not less than thirty years before the age of retirement."

The same act (39 Stat., 611), provided "that appointments from noncommissioned officers of the Marine Corps and from civil life shall be for a probationary period of two years and may be revoked at any time during that period by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided further, That the rank of such officers of the same date of appointment among themselves at the end of said probationary period shall, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, be determined by the report of a board of Marine officers who shall conduct a competitive professional examination under such rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy and the rank of such officers so determined shall be as of date of original appointment with reference to other appointments to the Marine Corps." The act of May 22, 1917, section 10 (40 Stat., 87), authorized promotion, during the existing war, of probationary second lieutenants without change in their probationary status.

The same act (39 Stat., 611), contained a provision, which expired two years after the date of its approval, authorizing the transfer to the active list of the Marine Corps of certain retired officers, officers so restored to be additional numbers and to have the position on the active list which they would have had if not retired.

By act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 830), provision was made for permanent appointment in the Marine Corps of officers serving temporarily in the grades of captain and below, such appointments to be made without regard to age, in the same grades as held temporarily or lower grades, according to qualifications, it being required that such officers "shall establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, under such rules as he may prescribe, their mental, moral, professional, and physical qualifications to perform the duties of the grade to which transferred or reappointed," and that they take precedence with each other and with other officers of the Marine Corps in such order as may be recommended by a board of Marine officers and approved by the Secretary of the Navy.

The same act (41 Stat., 830), provided "that all persons who served honorably as officers in the Marine Corps or Marine Corps Reserve on active duty at any time between April 6, 1917, and the date of the passage of this act, and who have been honorably discharged or assigned to inactive duty shall be eligible for permanent appointment in the same or a lower rank than that held on discharge or assignment to inactive duty, but not above the rank of captain, to fill vacancies existing or hereby created in the permanent authorized strength of the Marine Corps," under the same conditions as those above set forth for officers then in the service.

All appointments under the act of June 4, 1920, from former officers, or officers holding temporary appointments, or members of the Marine Corps Reserve, were required to be accomplished by June 30, 1921. (41 Stat., 830.)

Officers dropped from the rolls of the Navy or Marine Corps on account of absence without leave or imprisonment under sentence of civil courts, shall not be eligible for reappointment. (Act Apr. 2, 1918, 40 Stat., 561. See sec. 1441, R. S., and note thereto for other provisions disqualifying former officers and midshipmen for reappointment in the Navy or Marine Corps.)

Qualifications for warrant officers.—By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 611), creating the warrant grades of marine gunner and quartermaster clerk, noted under section 1596, Revised Statutes, it was provided that "they shall be appointed from the noncommissioned officers of the Marine Corps and clerks to quartermasters now serving as such and who have performed field service."

By act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 830), it was provided that officers then holding temporary commissions in the Marine Corps, and who had more than 10 years' service therein, if not found qualified for permanent commissions, may be appointed warrant officers in the Marine Corps if "recommended by the board herein provided for."

LAWS RELATING TO PROMOTION.

See sections 1605–1607, Revised Statutes, as to advancement for heroism, etc.

Act of July 28, 1892 (27 Stat., 321), provided "That hereafter promotions to every grade of commissioned officers in the Marine Corps below the grade of Commandant shall be made in the same manner and under the same conditions as now are or may hereafter be prescribed, in pursuance of law, for commissioned officers of the Army: Provided, That examining boards which may be organized under the provisions of this act to determine the fitness of officers of the Marine Corps for promotion shall in all cases consist of not less than five officers, three of whom shall, if practicable, be officers of the Marine Corps, senior to the officer to be examined, and two of whom shall be medical officers of the Navy: Provided further, That when not practicable to detail officers of the Marine Corps as members of such examining boards, officers of the line in the Navy shall be so detailed."

Act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., 562), relating to promotions in the Army, and extended to Marine Corps by above act of July 28, 1892, contained the following provision in section 1:

"That hereafter promotion to every grade in the Army below the rank of brigadier general, throughout each arm, corps, or department of the service, shall, subject to the examination hereinafter provided for, be made according to seniority in the next lower grade of that arm, corps, or department * * *." The same act of October 1, 1890, section 3, contained the following: "That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to prescribe a system of examination of all officers of the Army below the rank of major to determine their fitness for promotion, such an examination to be conducted at such times anterior to the accruing of the right to promotion as may be best for the interests of the service: * * * And provided, That if any officer fails to pass a satisfactory examination and is reported unfit for promotion, the officer next below him in rank, having passed said examination, shall receive the promotion: And provided, That should the officer fail in his physical examination and be found incapacitated for service by reason of physical disability contracted in line of duty he shall be retired with the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted; but if he should fail for any other reason he shall be suspended from promotion for one year, when he shall be reexamined, and in case of failure on such reexamination he shall be honorably discharged with one year's pay from the Army."

Act of March 3, 1899, section 20 (30 Stat., 1009), provided, "That the officers of the Marine Corps above the grade of captain, except brigadier general, shall, before being promoted, be subject to such physical, mental and moral examination as is now, or may hereafter be, prescribed by law for other officers of the Marine Corps."

By said act of March 3, 1899, section 18 (30 Stat., 1008), it was provided that "vacancies in the grade of brigadier general shall be filled by selection from officers on the active list of the Marine Corps not below the grade of field officer." By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 609, 610), it was provided that "brigadier generals shall be appointed from officers of the Marine Corps senior in rank to lieutenant colonel"; that the Commandant shall be appointed from officers of the active list not below the rank of colonel; and that officers holding permanent appointments in the staff departments shall not be eligible for appointment to the grade of brigadier general of the line.

Act of June 3, 1916, section 24 (39 Stat., 183), made applicable to the Marine Corps by act of July 28, 1892, above quoted, provided, "That the provisions of existing law requiring examinations to determine fitness for promotion of officers of the Army are hereby extended to include promotions to all grades below that of brigadier general: Provided further, That examinations of officers in the grades of major and lieutenant colonel shall be confined to problems involving the higher functions of staff duties and command."

Act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 610), provided "That for the purpose of advancement in rank to and including the grade of colonel, all commissioned officers of the line and staff of the Marine Corps shall be placed on a common list in the order of seniority each would hold had he remained continuously in the line. All advancements in rank to captain, major, lieutenant colonel, and colonel shall, subject to the usual examinations, be made from officers with the next junior respective rank, whether of the line or staff, in the order in which their names appear on said list."

The said act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 611), further enacted that "the provisions of sections fourteen hundred and ninety-three and fourteen hundred and ninety-four of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall apply to the Marine Corps." (See said sections and notes thereto. Sec. 1493 required physical qualification for promotion to all grades in the Navy, except in the case specified in sec. 1494, of partial disability incurred in line of duty.)

By said act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 611, 612), it was provided that—

“In lieu of suspension from promotion of any officer of the Marine Corps who hereafter fails to pass a satisfactory professional examination for promotion, or who is now under suspension from promotion by reason of such failure, such officer shall suffer loss of numbers, upon approval of the recommendation of the examining board, in the respective ranks, as follows: Lieutenant colonel, one; major, two; captain, three; first lieutenant, five; second lieutenant, eight: Provided, That any such officer shall be reexamined as soon as may be expedient after the expiration of six months if he in the meantime again becomes due for promotion, and if he does not in the meantime again become due for promotion he shall be reexamined at such time anterior to again becoming due for promotion as may be for the best interests of the service: Provided further, That if any such officer fails to pass a satisfactory professional reexamination he shall be honorably discharged with one year's pay from the Marine Corps.”

Act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1171), empowered commanding officers on foreign stations, when authorized by the Secretary of the Navy, to order boards of medical examiners and examining boards for examination of candidates for promotion in the Marine Corps. (See note to sec. 1493, R. S.)

Act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 774), relating to the Army provided that “Existing laws providing for the examination of officers for promotion are hereby repealed, except those relating to physical examination, which shall continue to be required for promotion to all grades below that of brigadier general, and except also those governing the examination of officers of the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps.” (As to effect of this act upon promotions in the Marine Corps, see decisions noted below.)

By said act of June 4, 1920, section 51 (41 Stat., 785, amending act June 3, 1916, sec. 127, 39 Stat., 217), it was provided that “in time of war any officer of the Regular Army may be appointed to higher temporary rank without vacating his permanent commission, such appointments in grades below that of brigadier general being made by the President alone, but all other appointments of officers in time of war shall be in the Officers' Reserve Corps.”

Probationary appointments.—The act of August 29, 1916 (above quoted), does not contemplate the issuance of probationary appointments to former officers of the Marine Corps appointed as second lieutenants in accordance with that act. (File 13261-544: 1, Oct. 10, 1916.)

Appointment of former student at Naval Academy.—Under the act of March 3, 1899, providing for filling vacancies thereby created in the staff of the Marine Corps, and making eligible for appointment thereunder line officers on the active list of the Marine Corps not below the grade of captain, “who shall have seen not less than ten years' service in the Marine Corps,” held that in estimating the time which is necessary for qualification for the promotion provided for, the time of service as a naval cadet at the Naval Academy and at sea before being commissioned should be counted. This view is sustained by the act of June 10, 1896 (noted under sec. 1600, R. S.). (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 377.)

There can be no doubt about the proposition that the time of service of a cadet at the Naval Academy and at sea anterior to commission is as much a time of preparation for service in the Marine Corps as it is in the Navy proper, because the Marine Corps is an essential part of the naval organization. Such time of preparation at the Academy and at sea having always been counted for appointments and promotions in the Navy proper, and the Marine Corps being part of the Navy, there is no reason why the benefits of time at the Academy and at sea anterior to commission should not be given to persons seeking promotion in the Marine Corps as well as in the Navy proper. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 377, 379.)

A person who took the regular four years' course at the Naval Academy, and received a certificate of graduation issued pursuant to the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 284), without rendering the two years' service at sea then required for final graduation, held to be a graduate of the Naval Academy within the meaning of section 20 of the Navy personnel act approved March 3, 1899, providing for filling vacancies in the Marine Corps. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 485.)

The exemption as to age limit in section 20 of the act of March 3, 1899 (above quoted), with reference to the eligibility to appointments in the Marine Corps, is not restricted to those who served in the Marine Corps during the war with Spain, but extends to all graduates of the Naval Academy who served in that war, including one who so served in the line of the Navy. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 485.)

See act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 891), providing that service of a midshipman at the Naval Academy, thereafter appointed to said Academy, “shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer in the Navy or in the Marine Corps.”

See section 1520, Revised Statutes, and amendments noted thereunder, as to four years' course at the Naval Academy.

See section 1621, Revised Statutes, and note thereto, as to status of Marine Corps.

Appointments from enlisted men and civil life.—Section 19 of the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, and the act of March 3, 1903 (both above quoted), considered, and held, 1st. That appointments to the grade of second lieutenant in the Marine Corps may be made from civil life; 2d. That the limitation as to age of appointees, contained in the latter act, applies only to appointments from civil life; 3d. That enlisted men of the Marine Corps, other than noncommissioned officers, and also enlisted men of the Navy, may be appointed as second lieutenants. (File 13261-426, May 29, 1913, citing file 3727-2, Feb. 17, 1906, and 3259-98, May 19, 1898.)

Appointment and promotion distinguished.—See note to sections 1458 and 1603, Revised Statutes.

Laws relating to promotion construed.—Previous to the act of July 16, 1862, chapter 183, there was no law which required officers in any branch of the naval service, including the Marine Corps, to pass a physical examination as a preliminary to promotion. The fourth section of that act directed the Secretary of the Navy to appoint an advisory board of naval officers, whose duty it was to carefully scrutinize the active list of line officers in the Navy above and including the grade of master, and report to the Secretary in writing those found to be worthy of promotion. The board in recommending an officer for promotion was to certify that he "has the moral, mental, physical, and professional qualifications to perform efficiently all his duties, both at sea and on shore, of the grade to which he is to be promoted." By the sixth section of the same act a similar advisory board was to be appointed at least once in every four years. These provisions applied solely to line officers of the Navy, but were superseded by other provisions on the same subject contained in the act of April 21, 1864, chapter 63. The latter provisions are embodied in sections 1493, et seq., of the Revised Statutes. They include both line and staff officers, but in terms extend to those only who are "on the active list of the Navy." There is no statutory provision of this character which expressly or impliedly includes officers of the Marine Corps. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 117, June 11, 1881.)

Section 1493 of the Revised Statutes, requiring physical examinations for promotion in the Navy, is not extended to the Marine Corps by section 1621, Revised Statutes. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 117, June 11, 1881.)

It would seem that the examination, physical or other, of a retiring board, constituted under section 1623, Revised Statutes, is the only one to which an officer of the Marine Corps is by law subjected in order to determine his fitness for active duty; and unless the officer is by this board found incapacitated for active service, and the finding is approved by the President, he remains in the line of promotion on the active list as he previously was, and is entitled to all the rights which belong to his position. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 117, June 11, 1881.)

The act of October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., 562), which was extended to the Marine Corps by the act of July 28, 1892 (above quoted), provided that examinations for promotion were to be held at such times "anterior to the accruing of the right to promotion" as may be best for the interests of the service. A question having arisen as to whether certain officers to be promoted in the Marine Corps to vacancies created on July 10, 1892, in the offices of major, captain, and first lieutenant, should or should not be examined under the act of July 28, 1892, held, that said promotions might be made without the examinations in question; that the right of the officers in question to promotion existed from July 10, 1892, prior to the passage of the law requiring examination; that the act of October 1, 1890, having been construed by the Army as not requiring examinations for officers who had previously become due for promotion, it must be understood that Congress enacted the law of July 28, 1892, with full knowledge of such construction, and did not intend that a right of promotion earned by long service and actually accrued should be taken away by force of the

The words "usual examinations," as used in the act of August 29, 1916 (above quoted), referred to the mental, moral, professional, and physical examinations for promotion which officers of the Marine Corps below the grade of major were required to undergo by virtue of the Army act of October 1, 1890, made applicable to the Marine Corps by act of July 28, 1892; the mental, moral, and physical examinations which officers of the Marine Corps above the rank of captain, except brigadier generals, were required to undergo by the act of March 3, 1899; the professional examination which officers of the Marine Corps of the ranks of major and lieutenant colonel were required to undergo by virtue of the Army act of June 3, 1916, made applicable to the Marine Corps by the act of July 28, 1892; and the physical examination which all officers of the Marine Corps were required to undergo by virtue of section 1493 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the Navy, and made applicable to the Marine Corps by the act of August 29, 1916. (File 26521-405:1, Sept. 15, 1920; see also 26521-405, June 30, 1920. The laws referred to are quoted above, under this section.)

The act of August 29, 1916, should be construed as referring to the "usual examinations" which were required by law in the Marine Corps on that date, regardless of whether such examinations were originally prescribed by Army laws, Navy laws, laws relating specifically to the Marine Corps, or a lawful regulation of the Executive. No reference was made in said act to examinations which might thereafter be prescribed by law for the Army or Navy, and accordingly the system of examinations then in force, and specifically required for the Marine Corps by the act of August 29, 1916, must continue to be required until otherwise provided by Congress; it could not be affected by any subsequent legislation relating specifically to examinations in the Army and which, in terms, is inapplicable to the Marine Corps. So long as promotions in the Marine Corps are made pursuant to the act of August 29, 1916, such promotions must be subject to the "usual examinations" which were required at the time said act was enacted, unless and until Congress otherwise directs. (File 26521-405:1, Sept. 15, 1920; see also 26521-405, June 30, 1920.)

Prior to the enactment of the Army act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 774), the system of promotion in the Marine Corps was well understood. The act of August 29, 1916, provided that advancements in rank in the Marine Corps, to and including the grade of colonel, were to be made according to seniority from a "common list," and that advancements in rank to captain, major, lieutenant colonel, and colonel were to be made "subject to the usual examinations." There were other provisions in the act which clearly indicated that the usual examinations were also intended to apply to promotions to the grade of first lieutenant. (File 26521-405:1, Sept. 15, 1920; see also 26521-405, June 30, 1920.)

The repeal of prior Army laws on the subject of promotion, by the act of June 4, 1920 (41

Stat., 774), without the substitution of any other constructive legislation applicable to the Marine Corps, leaves nothing upon which the act of July 28, 1892, can operate, and the Marine Corps is now governed wholly by the system of promotion provided for by the act of August 29, 1916, and prior statutes adopted by reference therein or which are not inconsistent therewith. Query: Whether the act of July 28, 1892, has been superseded or repealed in its entirety? (File 26521-405:1, Sept. 15, 1920; see also 26521-405, June 30, 1920.)

The system of promotion in the Marine Corps, including examinations and penalties, continues in force unaffected by anything contained in the act of June 4, 1920, establishing a new system of promotion in the Army. (File 26521-405:1, Sept. 15, 1920; see also 26521-405, June 30, 1920.)

The promotion legislation in the Army act of June 4, 1920, which covers several printed pages of that act, is clearly not applicable to the Marine Corps in its entirety. For example, said act requires that promotions shall be made from a common list of all officers of the Army below the grade of colonel, with certain exceptions, and that this "promotion list" shall be formed by a board of officers appointed by the Secretary of War, "consisting of one colonel of each of six branches of the service in which officers are permanently commissioned under the terms of this act, and one officer who, as a member of the personnel branch of the General Staff, has made a special study of merging the present promotion lists into a single list." It would be impossible to convene a board in the Marine Corps constituted as required by this provision to form a promotion list for that service. The further provisions of the Army act make it clear that the system which it creates was never intended to apply to promotions in the Marine Corps. (File 26521-405:1, Sept. 15, 1920; see also 26521-405, June 30, 1920.)

The Army legislation of June 4, 1920, relating to promotions, being as a whole clearly inapplicable to the Marine Corps, it can not be held that a part of one sentence therein, which repeals "existing laws providing for the examination of officers for promotion * * * except those relating to physical examination, which shall continue to be required for promotion to all grades below that of brigadier general * * *," should be applied to the Marine Corps, and given the far-reaching effect of tearing down a carefully constructed system already in operation in that service, without providing anything in its place. The repealing clause can not be separated from the remainder of the act, which provides a complete substitute for the former system of promotion in the Army, and which was apparently regarded as dispensing with the necessity for the former tests of efficiency, thus explaining the repeal of the former laws relating to examinations, in so far as such laws affected the Army. (File 26521-405:1, Sept. 15, 1920; see also 26521-405, June 30, 1920.)

The new Army system of promotion was established as a substitute for and supersedes the former system followed in the Army under the act of October 1, 1890, and amendments thereto. It does not, however, provide any substitute for the system of promotion already in force in the Marine Corps, and therefore does not supersede the Marine Corps system which the act plainly indicates was not intended to be affected thereby. It is not reasonable to assume that Congress intended with respect to the Marine Corps to repeal prior laws relating to examinations for promotion without providing any substitute therefor, at the very time it was creating in detail a complete substitute for such laws in the Army. (File 26521-405:1, Sept. 15, 1920; see also 26521-405, June 30, 1920.)

The provision in the Army act of June 4, 1920, requiring physical examinations for promotion to all grades below that of brigadier general, is not applicable to the Marine Corps, for the reason that physical examinations prior to promotion to all grades in the Marine Corps, without exception, are required by the Navy law contained in section 1493 of the Revised Statutes, as extended and applied to the Marine Corps by the act of August 29, 1916, which legislation for physical examinations in the Marine Corps in accordance with Navy laws, certainly is not repealed by said act of June 4, 1920. (File 26521-405:1, Sept. 15, 1920; see also 26521-405, June 30, 1920.)

Under the laws in force prior to June 4, 1920, and which continued in force unaffected by the Army act of that date, held: (1) A mental, moral, and professional examination is required for promotion in the Marine Corps to the grades of first lieutenant, captain, major, lieutenant colonel, and colonel; but not to the grades of brigadier general and major general. (2) A mental, moral, and physical examination is required in the Marine Corps for promotion to the grade of brigadier general, and a physical examination is required for promotion to the grade of major general. (File 26521-405:1, Sept. 15, 1920; see also 26521-405, June 30, 1920.)

Sec. 1600. [Credit for volunteer service.] All marine officers shall be credited with the length of time they may have been employed as officers or enlisted men in the volunteer service of the United States.—(2 Mar., 1867, c. 174, s. 3, v. 14, p. 516.)

All officers appointed to any corps of the Navy or to the Marine Corps, after service in a different corps of the Navy or of the Marine Corps, shall have all the benefits of their previous service in the same manner as if said appointments were a reentry into the Navy or into the Marine Corps. (Act June 10, 1896, 29 Stat., 361.) Any warrant officer or pay clerk in the Marine Corps who accepts appointment as commissioned officer in Marine Corps Reserve shall be entitled, upon termination of such appointment, to revert to his former status as a warrant officer or pay clerk in the Marine Corps, and shall be entitled to count all active reserve service for purposes of longevity pay and retirement. (Act July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 141.)

Enlisted men of the Marine Corps discharged to be commissioned or warranted as officers in the Marine Corps Reserve, and who reenlist in the Marine Corps after termination of reserve service, shall be entitled in computing service for retirement to credit for all active reserve service. (Act July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 141.)

Enlisted men of the Marine Corps discharged to be commissioned or warranted in the Marine Corps Reserve, and who reenlist in the Marine Corps within three months from date of termination of reserve service, shall be restored to grade or rank held before being discharged from Marine Corps, and service in the regular Marine Corps, including active service in the Marine Corps Reserve shall be regarded as continuous for purposes of continuous service pay. (Act July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 141.)

Longevity pay for officers in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Public Health Service, and Coast and Geodetic Survey, shall be based on the total of all service in any or all of said services. (Act May 18, 1920, sec. 11, 41 Stat., 604.)

Musicians of the Marine Band are to have no increase in their rates of pay on account of length of service. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 612.)

Service of a midshipman at the Naval Academy or of a cadet at the Military Academy hereafter appointed to either of said

academies, shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer in the Navy or Marine Corps. (Act Mar. 4, 1913, 37 Stat., 891.)

Service as paymaster's steward.—The Revised Statutes, Title XV, chapter 9, classify the Marine Corps as part of the Navy, and provide (sec. 1600), that all marine officers shall be credited with the length of time they may have been employed as officers or enlisted men in the volunteer service of the United States. An officer of the Marine Corps who served as a paymaster's steward in the Volunteer Navy is entitled to have the time of such service credited to him in the computation of his longevity pay. (Muse v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 441.)

The Navy Regulations classify paymasters' stewards as petty officers, and the Revised Statutes (sec. 1410) include petty officers in the more general designation of "all officers." It is not, however, to be understood that all petty officers are officers within the intent of the Constitution or of a penal statute. In the Navy, warrant officers and petty officers are spoken of generally as officers, and section 1410 merely recognizes the usage. (Muse v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 441.)

The Navy consists of officers, warrant officers, petty officers, and seamen. The two terms used in section 1600, "officers" and "enlisted men" embrace, for the purpose of computing longevity pay, all four classes in the Navy. (Muse v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 441.)

For other cases, see note to section 1612, Revised Statutes, respecting longevity pay; see also note to section 1599, Revised Statutes, under "Appointment of former student at the Naval Academy."

Sec. 1601. [Rank of commandant.

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1601. The commandant of the Marine Corps shall have the rank of a brigadier-general of the Army." (2 Mar., 1867, c. 174, s. 7, v. 14, p. 517. 6 June, 1874, c. 216, v. 18, p. 58.)

It was repealed by act of June 6, 1874 (18 Stat., 58), which provided that "the office of commandant of the Marine Corps having the rank of a brigadier general of the Army shall continue until a vacancy shall occur in the same and no longer; and when such vacancy shall occur in said office, immediately thereupon all laws and parts of laws creating said office shall become inoperative, and shall by virtue of this act from thenceforth be repealed: And provided further, That thereafter the commandant of the Marine Corps shall have the rank and pay of a colonel, and shall be appointed by selection by the President from the officers of said corps." (See sec. 5601, R. S.)

Rank of brigadier general restored.—By act of March 3, 1899, section 18 (39 Stat., 1008), it was provided "that from and after the date of the approval of this Act the active list of the line officers of the United States Marine Corps shall consist of one brigadier general commandant * * *."

Repealed.]

Rank of major general created.—By act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 686), the commandant was given the rank of major general during the service of the then incumbent; by act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 155), there was authorized "one major general commandant, in lieu of the present brigadier general commandant;" and by act of December 19, 1913 (38 Stat., 241), which fixed the commandant's term of office at four years, it was provided that the appointee should be an officer of the active list not below the grade of field officer who, while serving as commandant, should have the rank of major general and be carried as an additional number in his grade and after his return to duty in his grade until said grade is reduced to the number authorized by law. By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 609), it was provided that appointments thereafter made to "the position of major general commandant," shall be from officers of the active list of the Marine Corps not below the rank of colonel, and that "in determining the officers with rank senior to colonel there shall be included the officer serving as major general commandant."

The act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 715), which created the permanent grade of major general in the Marine Corps, authorized the appointment to that grade of one major general, "who shall at all times be junior in rank to the Major General Commandant, and also one temporary major general in the Marine Corps, who shall at all times be junior to the permanent major general."

Rank on retirement.—The Major General Commandant, if retired from that position in accordance with sections 1251, 1622, and 1623, Revised Statutes (physical disability incident to the service), or by reason of age or length of service, shall have the rank and retired pay of major general; if retired for any other reason, he shall be placed on the retired list of officers of the grade to which he belonged at the time of his retirement. (Act Dec. 19, 1913, 38 Stat., 241.)

Active duty after retirement.—After a Commandant of the Marine Corps is placed upon the retired list of officers of that corps on account of age, he can not legally be retained in his former office of Commandant until his successor is appointed. The general statute authorizing the detail of retired officers to active duty did not modify the special provision of law that the Commandant shall be appointed from officers of the active list, which applies to all appointments, whether regular or for a limited time. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 486; see also note to sec. 1622, R. S.)

Filling of temporary vacancy.—An officer on the active list of the Marine Corps can not be temporarily detailed to fill a vacancy created by the retirement of the Commandant, with authority to transact official business and sign orders and correspondence as "Acting Commandant, U. S. Marine Corps." (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 486.)

During a vacancy caused by the retirement of a Commandant of the Marine Corps, the orders and correspondence connected with his office should be signed by the Secretary of the Navy or by the Acting Secretary of the Navy, in person. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 486.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 177–182, Revised Statutes.

Commandant's status as additional number.—Under the act of August 29, 1916, officers of the Marine Corps carried as additional numbers in grade will, if promoted to the grade of brigadier general, immediately become regular numbers in the latter grade, and will continue to be carried as regular numbers therein, unless, by operation of some other law applicable to a specific case, the status of such an officer should revert to that of an additional number in grade. The act of December 19, 1913, relating to the Major General Commandant is an exception to the general provisions contained in the act of August 29, 1916, and a Major General Commandant whose permanent grade is that of colonel would continue to be an additional number if promoted to the grade of brigadier general. (File 28687–1, Aug. 18, 1916.)

Rank from which commandant appointed.—Should a vacancy occur in the position of Major General Commandant, the President would be authorized to appoint any officer of the rank of colonel or brigadier general to fill such vacancy. Such officer would, by virtue of the act of December 19, 1913, immediately become an additional number in his grade. Should the number of officers senior to colonel be full, the President would not thereby be restricted to the selection of a brigadier general to fill the vacancy, but would have discretion to appoint a colonel whom he might consider better fitted for the office. The act of August 29, 1916, deals only with the apportionment of regular number officers, and allows more than the authorized percentage of officers senior to colonel, when such a result is made necessary by the appointment of a colonel to fill a vacancy in the position of Major General Commandant as specifically authorized by the same act, notwithstanding the provision therein that "in determining the officers with rank senior to colonel there shall be included the officer serving as major general commandant," which has the effect of making the Major General Commandant one of the authorized number of officers above the rank of colonel. (File 28687–1, Aug. 18, 1916.)

Sec. 1602. [Staff rank. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1602. The adjutant and inspector, the paymaster, and the quartermaster shall have the rank of major; [the] [each] assistant quartermaster shall have the rank of captain."—(2 Mar., 1847, c. 40, s. 3, v. 9, p. 154. 27 Feb., 1877, c. 69, v. 19, p. 244.)

It was amended by act of February 27, 1877 (19 Stat., 244), which substituted the word "each" for "the," as indicated in the above reproduction of this section as it appeared in the second edition of the Revised Statutes.

It was superseded by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 22 (30 Stat., 1009), which provided, in part, that "the staff of the Marine Corps shall consist of one adjutant and inspector, one quartermaster and one paymaster, each with the rank of colonel; one assistant adjutant and inspector, two assistant quartermasters and one assistant paymaster, each with the rank of major; and three assistant quartermasters with the rank of captain."

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 609), it was provided "that the officers serving in the senior grade of the Adjutant and Inspector's, Quartermaster's, and Paymaster's Departments shall, while serving therein, have the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier general: And provided further, That for the purpose of determining the number of officers in the various ranks as herein provided [see note to sec. 1596, R. S.] such staff officers shall be counted as being of the rank of Colonel: And provided further, That officers holding permanent appointments in the staff departments shall not be eligible for appointments to the grade of brigadier general of the line as hereinbefore provided."

See note to section 1598, Revised Statutes, for other provisions of said act of August 29, 1916, relating to the rank of officers from whom appointments shall be made to the upper grades of the staff departments, their tenure of office, etc.

Sec. 1603. [Relative rank with the Army.] The officers of the Marine Corps shall be, in relation to rank, on the same footing as officers of similar grades in the Army.—(30 June, 1834, c. 132, s. 4, v. 4, p. 713.)

Army and Navy officers; relative rank of:

See section 1466, Revised Statutes.

Brigadier generals and rear admirals of the lower half; relative rank of: See note to section 1466, Revised Statutes.

Command when different corps or commands happen to join or do duty together: See note to section 1342, Revised Statutes, under articles 119 and 120 of the Articles of War, and note to section 1621, Revised Statutes.

Command of joint forces of the Army and Navy: See note to section 1466, Revised Statutes.

Command of Navy yards or vessels: See section 1617, Revised Statutes.

In the absence of special assignment by the President, officers of the same grade shall rank and have precedence in the following order, without regard to date of rank or commission as between officers of different classes, namely: First, officers of the Regular Army and officers of the Marine Corps detached for service with the Army by order of the President; second, officers of forces drafted into the military service of the United States. (Joint Res. 23, July 1, 1916, sec. 4, 39 Stat., 340.)

“In determining relative rank and increase of pay for length of service * * * active duty performed while under appointment from the United States Government, whether in the Regular, provisional, or temporary forces, shall be credited to the same extent as service under a Regular Army commission.” (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 51, 41 Stat., 785, amending act June 3, 1916, sec. 127, 39 Stat., 217.)

Precedence between officers of the Marine Corps and line officers of the Navy, and between officers of the Marine Corps and staff officers of the Navy: See note to section 1466, Revised Statutes.

Precedence of Naval Academy graduates commissioned in the line of the Navy and in the Marine Corps: See note to section 1483, Revised Statutes.

“Unless special assignment is made by the President under the provisions of the one hundred and nineteenth article of war, all officers in the active service of the United States in any grade shall take rank according to date, which, in the case of an officer of the Regular Army, is that stated in his commission or letter of appointment, and, in the case of a reserve officer or an officer of the National Guard called into the service of the United States, shall precede that on which he is placed on active duty by a period equal to the total length of active service which he may have performed in the grade in which called or any higher grade. When dates of rank are the same, precedence shall determined by length of active commissioned service in the Army. When length of such service is the same, officers of the Regular Army shall take rank among themselves according to their places on the promotion list, preceding reserve and National Guard officers of the same date of rank and length of service, who shall take rank among themselves according to age.” (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 51, 41 Stat., 785, amending act June 3, 1916, sec. 127, 39 Stat., 217.)

“Senior in rank,” construed.—An officer in one branch of the service can not with accuracy be called senior in rank to an officer of another branch. A major in the Army is no more senior to a captain of marines than he is to a captain in the Navy. The term in its military sense is applicable only to relatively higher grades of the same service. Its use otherwise would create confusion. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 116. See also sec. 1623, R. S.)

Officers having same date of “appointment.”—Section 1219, Revised Statutes, provides that “in fixing relative rank between officers of the same grade and date of appointment and commission, the time each may have actually served as a commissioned officer of the United States, whether continuously or at different periods, shall be taken into account,” etc. Held, that the word “appointment” as used in this section comprehends only the appointment of an officer on his original entry into the regular service, and does not include his appointment on promotion thereafter made. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 155, affirming 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 196, and 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 362. See also cases noted below, and note to sec. 1458, R. S.)

Officers having same date of rank.—Under the act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1004), reorganizing the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps, Charles H. Lauchheimer, a captain of the line in the Marine Corps, was upon the date of the passage of that act, appointed and commissioned, by selection, as adjutant and inspector with the rank of major, and on March 11 following, took the oath of office. On March 23, 1899, Charles H. McCawley, a captain and assistant quartermaster in the Marine Corps, was promoted by seniority to assistant quartermaster with the rank of major, to date from March 3, and took the oath of office on March 30. The question of the relative rank of these officers being presented for determination, held: (1) That the advancement of an officer to a higher grade, one to which he could not then succeed in due course by seniority, while called an appointment, is, in fact and effect, a promotion. Maj. Lauchheimer's advancement should, therefore, be taken as a promotion, and there is nothing in this regard to affect the relative rank of the two officers. (2) That as Maj. Lauchheimer's commission and induction into office each antedate by several days that of Maj. McCawley's, during that period the former ranked the latter. This rank was not lost nor a superior one conferred by the subsequent promotion of Maj. McCawley. (3) As both officers were in fact promoted, the earlier commission and rank of Maj. Lauchheimer entitle him to precedence in rank. (4) The Secretary of the Navy, by virtue of his general power under the President to make rules and regulations for the government of the Navy, may determine with the force and effect of law the relative rank of officers of the Marine Corps. Usually this is better done by general rules than by decisions in particular cases, but it may be done either way. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 155.)

Section 1219, Revised Statutes, has no application to the cases of Lauchheimer and McCawley, except as it recognizes the general rule which has regard for previous service. According to the preference given throughout the statutes and by the rules and practice of the War and Navy Departments to seniority of service, the longer service of Maj. Lauchheimer would, other things being equal, give him precedence in rank. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 155.)

Precedence not disturbed by promotion.—Until May 17, 1877, Col. Reid outranked Col. Goodloe by seniority in commission. On that date, Col. Goodloe was appointed major and paymaster, and subsequently, on May 2, 1894, Col. Reid was appointed major, adjutant and inspector. Both of these last-named commissions were appointments by selection at the discretion of the appointing power, and were not promotions under the statutes regulating such promotions. Therefore, from May 17, 1877, Col. Goodloe outranked Col. Reid by seniority of commission, and on March 3, 1899, under the act of that date (30 Stat., 1008), both officers were promoted to the rank of colonel. Held, that the mere promotion of the two officers does not disturb their preexisting relative rank; that the promotions of March 3, 1899, were not "appointments" within the meaning of section 1219, Revised Statutes; and that therefore Col. Goodloe continues to outrank Col. Reid. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 74, affirming 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 196 and 362; see note above, under "Officers having same date of appointment.")

Officers of Marine Corps and officers of Navy.—By an unwritten law of the Army and Navy, officers of the Army and officers of the Navy take relative rank as respects the two classes according to their respective grades; and if of similar grade, then according to dates of commission. Officers of the Marine Corps, who are in relation to rank on the same footing as officers of similar grades in the Army, take rank and precedence relatively to line officers in the Navy according to grade; and if of similar grade, then according to dates of commission. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 517.)

There is no law making any distinction as to relative rank and precedence between the officers of the Marine Corps who are and those who are not graduates of the Naval Academy, either as respects themselves or officers of the line of the Navy. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 517; see also sec. 1483, R. S., and note thereto.)

There is no statutory provision expressly regulating the relative rank and precedence of officers of the Marine Corps and officers of the several staff corps of the Navy; but there are provisions which, with the long established and settled usage and practice of the Army and Navy, regulate it with the same certainty as if by enactment in terms. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 16.)

Whatever will be the relative rank and its resulting precedence of an officer of the Army to either line or staff officers of the Navy, that would also be the relative rank as to them of officers of the Marine Corps. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 16.)

The Secretary of the Navy is without authority to make such a change in article 23 of the Navy Regulations, 1909, as to fix the relative rank of officers of the Marine Corps with officers of the Navy according to length of service, rather than by date of commission. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 264.)

Officers of Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.—Paragraph 3 of article 25 of the Navy Regulations, 1909, may be amended in form so as to read: "When officers of the Army are associated jointly with officers of the Navy or Marine Corps, their corresponding rank shall be determined according to the dates of their respective commissions, when of the same or corresponding grades; and when of different rank, as set forth in the first paragraph of this article." (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 264. Compare secs. 1485 and 1486, R. S., and notes thereto, as to precedence of line and staff officers of the Navy according to length of service.)

Officers of Marine Corps.—The relation as to rank which officers of the Marine Corps hold to other officers is prescribed by section 1603, Revised Statutes, and could not be changed by any act of the President. Whatever relation as to rank one Army officer may hold as to another officer, that is the relation which an officer of the Marine Corps of similar grade holds. Accordingly, the Navy Department would not have the authority, with the approval of the President, to amend the Navy Regulations so as to do away with the practice as to relative rank of officers of the Marine Corps and line officers of the Navy, established in accordance with 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 517. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 16.)

Date of rank on promotion.—Officers of the Marine Corps on promotion should ordinarily be given rank from the date of the vacancy to which promoted; in no case, however, will an officer permanently or temporarily promoted be given rank from a date earlier than his date of rank in the lower grade. Vacancies resulting from the President's order of March 26, 1917, increasing the authorized number of enlisted men in the Marine Corps, were created on the date of said order, and vacancies resulting from the temporary increase in the number of enlisted men authorized by the act of May 22, 1917, were created on the date of the act. (File 28687-5:1. Sept. 7, 1917.)

Sec. 1604. [Brevets.] Commissions by brevet may be conferred upon commissioned officers of the Marine Corps in the same cases, upon the same conditions, and in the same manner as are or may be provided by law for officers of the Army.—(6 July, 1812, c. 137, s. 4, v. 2, p. 785. 16 April, 1814, c.

58, s. 3, v. 3, p. 124. 16 April, 1818, c. 64, s. 2, v. 3, p. 427. 30 June, 1834, c. 132, s. 9, v. 4, p. 713. 1 Mar., 1869, c. 52, s. 2, v. 15, p. 281. 3 Mar., 1869, c. 124, s. 7, v. 15, p. 318. 15 July, 1870, c. 294, s. 16, v. 16, p. 319.)

Brevet commissions may be conferred by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, upon commissioned officers of the Army, in time of war, for distinguished conduct and public service in presence of the enemy. (Sec. 1209, R. S.)

Brevet commissions shall bear date from the particular action or service for which the officers were brevetted. (Sec. 1210, R. S.)

Brevet rank shall be considered strictly honorary, and shall confer no privilege of precedence or command not already provided for in the statutes which embody the rules and articles governing the Army of the United States. (Act Feb. 27, 1890, section 3, 26 Stat., 14.)

No officer shall be entitled on account of having been brevetted to wear while on duty any uniform other than that of his actual rank; and no officer shall be addressed in orders or official communications by any title other than that of his actual rank. (Sec. 1212, R. S.)

Officers may be assigned to duty or command according to their brevet rank, by special assignment of the President; and brevet rank shall not entitle an officer to precedence or command except when so assigned. (Sec. 1211, R. S.)

Officers of the Army shall only be assigned to duty or command according to their brevet rank when actually engaged in hostilities. (Act Mar. 3, 1883, 22 Stat., 457.)

Rank of brevet major abolished.—"There is no act of Congress now in force [Apr. 22, 1820] which recognizes any such office as that of brevet major of marines;" the President can not confer that rank under the act of April 16, 1814. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 352.)

The act of March 3, 1817, fixing the peace establishment of the Marine Corps, not having retained any majors in service, the brevets theretofore conferred were thereby made to cease with the termination of the lineal rank of majors by commission. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 489.)

"The act of 1814 was predicated on a state of things which no longer exists. We were then at war, and the commissioned rank of major then existed; the design of that act was to augment that corps, and to stimulate it to deeds of arms. We are now at peace; the corps has been reduced and adapted to the state of peace; the grade of major exists no longer, even though it had been conferred by commission, much less when conferred by brevet; and with the grade falls the claim to pay. There is no breach of contract in this." (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 489, 490.)

Captains brevetted as lieutenant colonels.—Congress having, by the act of April 16, 1814, authorized the President to confer brevet rank, and having, by the act of March 3, 1817, fixing the peace establishment of the Marine Corps, abolished the rank of major, held that the President is authorized to issue to a captain of the Marine Corps the brevet rank of lieutenant colonel. This will not operate to give the officer an advance of two steps instead of one. In the present organization of the Marine Corps there is but one step from the post of captain to that of lieutenant colonel, the former intermediate step of major having been abolished. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 578.)

Questions of duty and command are military questions.—Under the law allowing officers of the Marine Corps their brevet pay and emoluments when on duty having a command according to their brevet rank, the question when and under what circumstances an officer is properly to be regarded as "on duty, and having a command according to his brevet rank," is a military question, strictly and technically a military question, properly determinable by the Department of the Navy or of War as it may arise in one or the other. Congress not having defined what shall constitute the fact of "having a command according to brevet rank," has left it as a military fact or question to be settled by the military authorities of the Government. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 513.)

Laws on military subjects seldom fall within the sphere of a lawyer's practice or consideration, and he is consequently without that key of experience in the subject matter which is so essential to their just construction. The origin and nature of brevet rank—for example, the cases in which it is conferred, and the effects which it produces—are purely questions of military experience, with regard to which we have no written laws; and all questions in relation to that rank must be, of necessity, beyond the province of the mere jurist. Accordingly, suggested that the President would be much more safe in resting on the opinion of military men upon such a question than upon that of the Attorney General. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 578, 579.)

Brevet pay and emoluments.—Brevet majors of the Marine Corps are entitled to the same pay and emoluments which are allowed to officers of similar grades in the infantry of the Army. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 513.)

Whatever may have been a different practice, brevet officers of the Marine Corps have always been by law upon the same footing with other officers of the military establishment of the United States in respect to the circumstances which entitle them to pay and emoluments. (U. S. v. Freeman, 3 How., 556.)

Brevet pay and emoluments were given to officers of the Army by an act of July 6, 1812, section 4, and to the Marine Corps by act of April 16, 1814, section 3, which was substantially identical with the Army act. By act of April 16, 1818, it was provided that "the officers of the Army who have brevet commissions shall be entitled to, and receive, the pay and emoluments of their brevet rank when on duty and having a command according to their brevet rank, and at no other time." Held, that said act of 1818, although in terms applicable only to officers of the Army, operated to repeal the enactment of 1814 providing brevet pay for the Marine Corps as well as that of 1812 relating to brevet pay in the Army. (U. S. v. Freeman, 3 How., 556.)

It can not be denied that the Marine Corps is an addition to the military establishment of the United States. It is declared to be so in the act by which it was organized. Though neither that fact nor the words "military establishment" as they are used in the acts of Congress will of themselves authorize the inclusion of officers of the Marine Corps within the words "officers of the Army," nevertheless, considering the subject matter of the act of 1818, the application of the second section of that act to all brevetted officers, and the assimilation of the Marine Corps by the act of 1814 to the Army, giving to its officers brevet commissions and pay in exactly the same way as they were given to the officers of the Army by the act of 1812, held that Congress intended by the act of 1818 to place the officers of the Marine Corps and the officers of the Army upon the same footing in respect to brevet pay and emoluments. (U. S. v. Freeman, 3 How., 556.)

The words, "officers of the Army," in the act of 1818, though descriptive of a particular class, were intended, as shown by their connection with the subject matter of the act, to comprehend all officers of the military establishment of the United States who, when the act was passed, were only under like circumstances entitled to brevet pay and emoluments. (U. S. v. Freeman, 3 How., 556.)

Where a captain in the Marine Corps acts as brevet lieutenant colonel, and is paid as such, he can not, during the same period, receive either the pay or allowances attached to the duties of captain. (U. S. v. Freeman, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15163.)

Brevet officers of the Marine Corps were included under the Army Regulations of March 1, 1825, and also in the regulation upon the subject of brevet pay sanctioned by the President December 1, 1836, and could claim brevet pay and emoluments under the Army Regulations of 1841. This right to brevet pay results from the Marine Corps having been subjected by the act of 1798 and by other acts of Congress to the same rules and articles of war "as are prescribed for the military establishment of the United States," and from the exception in section 2 of the act of June 30, 1834, taking them out of the regulations which might be established for the Navy, when detached for service with the Army by order of the President of the United States. (U. S. v. Freeman, 3 How., 556.)

Sec. 1605. [Advancement in number.] Any officer of the Marine Corps may, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be advanced not exceeding thirty numbers in rank, for eminent and conspicuous conduct in battle or extraordinary heroism.—(21 Apr., 1864, c. 63, s. 6, v. 13, p. 54. 24 Jan., 1865, c. 19, s. 1, v. 13, p. 424.)

By sections 1506-1508, Revised Statutes, provision is made for the Navy similar to sections 1605-1607, relating to the Marine Corps; by acts of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1108), and June 16, 1906 (34 Stat., 296), officers so advanced are to be carried as additional to the numbers of each grade in which they serve; by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 608), the promotion to the grade of brigadier general of any officer carried as an additional number in the grade or with the rank of colonel shall be held to fill a vacancy in the grade of brigadier general.

See note to section 1597, Revised Statutes; and see, generally, note to section 1506, Revised Statutes.

See notes to section 1407, Revised Statutes, as to medals of honor, etc.

Sec. 1606. [Promotion when grade is full.] Any officer who is nominated to a higher grade by the provisions of the preceding section shall be promoted, notwithstanding the number of said grade may be full, but no further promotion shall take place in that grade, except for like cause, until the number is reduced to that provided by law.—(24 Jan., 1865, c. 19, s. 2, v. 13, p. 424.)

See section 1605, Revised Statutes, and references thereunder.

Sec. 1607. [Promotion for gallantry.] Any officer of the Marine Corps may, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be advanced one grade, if, upon recommendation of the President by name, he receives the thanks of Congress for highly distinguished conduct in conflict with the enemy, or for extraordinary heroism in the line of his profession.—(16 July, 1862, c. 183, s. 9, v. 12, p. 584. 24 Jan., 1865, c. 19, s. 2, v. 13, p. 424.)

See section 1605, Revised Statutes, and references thereunder.

Sec. 1608. [Enlistment. Superseded.]

This section provided as follows:

"Sec. 1608. Enlistments into the Marine Corps shall be for a period not less than five years."—(11 July, 1870, Res. 106, v. 16, p. 387.)

It was superseded by act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 1132), which provided "that hereafter the enlistments into the Marine Corps shall be for a period of not less than four years."

By act of June 4, 1920, section 7 (41 Stat., 836), it is provided that hereafter enlistments in the Navy or Marine Corps may be for terms of two, three, or four years, and all laws now applicable to four years enlistments shall apply, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy to enlistments for a shorter period, with proportionate benefits upon discharge and reenlistment.

Absence to be made good.—By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 580), as amended by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 717), it was provided that no enlistment in the Navy or Marine Corps shall be regarded as complete until the enlisted man has made good all time lost on account of injury, sickness, or disease resulting from his own misconduct. (See note to sec. 1624 R. S., art. 8.)

Detention after expiration of enlistment.—See note to section 1422, Revised Statutes.

Transfers from the Hospital Corps to the Marine Corps, and transfers of the marines to the Hospital Corps, are authorized by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 572). See note to section 1421, Revised Statutes.

Transfers from Army to Marine Corps.—See section 1421, Revised Statutes.

Minority enlistments in the Marine Corps are governed by section 1418, Revised Statutes, relating to the Navy. (See note to that section, under "Minority enlistments in Marine Corps governed by Navy laws," and note to sec. 761, R. S., under "Disposition of party claiming discharge from Marine Corps on ground of fraudulent enlistment.")

Qualifications for enlistment in the Navy are prescribed by sections 1418-1420, Revised Statutes, which apply to the Marine Corps, except as otherwise specifically provided. (See notes to said sections.)

Extension of enlistments in the Marine Corps.—See note to section 1418, Revised Statutes. See also act of April 25, 1917 (40 Stat., 38), expressly authorizing extension of minority enlistments in the Marine Corps.

Naturalization of aliens serving in the Marine Corps is provided for by act of May 9, 1918 (40 Stat., 542). Naturalization of aliens serving in the Marine Corps Reserve is authorized by act of Mar 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84), made applicable to the Marine Corps Reserve by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 593).

As to enlistment of aliens in the Marine Corps, see note to section 1420, Revised Statutes, under "Aliens not to be enlisted."

For decisions relating to enlistments in the Navy and Marine Corps, see generally notes to sections 1418-1422, Revised Statutes.

Advertising for recruits.—By act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 736), under "Transportation and recruiting, Marine Corps," it was provided "that hereafter authority is hereby granted to employ the services of advertising agencies in advertising for recruits under such terms and conditions as are most advantageous to the Government."

Enlistment of women.—By act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 152), it was provided "that the words 'enlisted men,' as contained in prior appropriation Acts, shall not be construed to deprive women, enlisted or enrolled in the naval service, of the pay, allowances, gratuities, and other benefits granted by law to the enlisted personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps."

Status of applicants for enlistment.—See note to section 1418, Revised Statutes, under "When enlistment complete"; see also note to section 1609, Revised Statutes.

Discharge prior to expiration of enlistment.—The act of March 3, 1809, directed enlistments in the Marine Corps to be for five years, unless sooner discharged; but did not provide by whom such discharges should be granted. Held, that the commandant of the Marine Corps can not legally grant discharges to marines before the expiration of their term of enlistment; but that such discharges can only be granted by the President of the United States or in conformity to such regulations as he may think proper to prescribe. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 353.)

The authority to rescind a contract between the United States and the individual, which is the effect of a discharge from the Marine Corps prior to expiration of enlistment, is a power which can exist only by virtue of an express grant. Under the Army law (held applicable in this case to the Marine Corps) the major general commanding the Army of the United States can not grant a discharge; accordingly held that it is not competent for the commandant of the Marine Corps to grant discharges to marines before the expiration of their enlistment, and that, until Congress shall otherwise provide, such discharges can only be granted by the President or in conformity to such regulations as he may think proper to prescribe. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 353.)

A private in the Marine Corps of the United States, discharged from the service as a person of bad character and unfit for service, by order of the Secretary of the Navy through the commandant of the corps, without court-martial or other competent military proceeding, forfeits thereby his retained pay under the provisions of section 1281, Revised Statutes; but he may claim and recover his transportation and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment, enrollment, or original muster into the service, under the provisions of section 1290, Revised Statutes. (U. S. v. Kingsley, 138 U.S., 87, reversing 24 Ct. Cls., 219.)

A discharge issued for unfitness for service and general bad character, without trial by court-martial, can not be considered as "a punishment for an offense" within the meaning of section 1290, Revised Statutes; the question whether such punishment must necessarily be awarded by the judgment of a court-martial, not presented in this case and no opinion expressed on it. (U. S. v. Kingsley, 138 U. S., 87.)

By his enlistment the soldier contracts for honest and faithful service, and the rendition of such service is a condition precedent to his right to recover his retained pay. The fact that he has not rendered such service may be shown as well by his military record as by the judgment of a court-martial. (U. S. v. Kingsley, 138 U. S., 87, reversing 24 Ct. Cls., 219.)

"Reenlistment" construed.—An enlistment in the Marine Corps after an honorable discharge from the Army or Navy is not a

"reenlistment" within the meaning of section 7 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 836). The term "reenlistment" as therein used signifies an entry into the same branch of the service from which honorably discharged. (27 Comp. Dec., 170.)

A soldier honorably discharged from the Army who enlists in the Marine Corps is entitled, under section 1612, Revised Statutes, to the same additional pay that he would be entitled to if his reenlistment had been in the Army. (Walton v. U. S., 31 Ct. Cls., 196, construing sec. 1284, R. S.)

Sec. 1609. [Oath.] The officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps shall take the same oaths, respectively, which are provided by law for the officers and enlisted men of the Army.—(11 July, 1798, c. 72, s. 4, v. 1, p. 595.)

By act of March 3, 1899, section 25 (30 Stat., 1009), it was provided that "the oath of allegiance now provided for the officers and men of the Army and Marine Corps shall be administered hereafter to the officers and men of the Navy."

The oath of allegiance provided by the Revised Statutes for enlisted men of the Army was contained in section 1342, Revised Statutes, article 2, quoted under section 1418, Revised Statutes.

The oath of allegiance now provided by law for enlisted men of the Army is contained in article 109 of the Articles of War, as embodied in act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 809), as follows: "At the time of his enlistment every soldier shall take the following oath or affirmation: 'I, . . . , do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America; that I will serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies whomsoever; and that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and the orders of the officers appointed over me, according to the Rules and Articles of War.' This oath or affirmation may be taken before any officer."

The oath of office prescribed for persons in the military service is set forth in Revised Statutes, section 1757, as amended by act of May 13, 1884, section 2 (23 Stat., 22).

The oath of office to be taken by enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps designated as Navy mail clerks or assistant Navy mail clerks is that prescribed for employees of the Postal Service. (See secs. 391 and 392, R. S., and note thereto, for form of this oath.)

Men drafted into service.—The Articles of War, requiring every soldier at the time of his enlistment to take an oath of allegiance, apply only to voluntary enlistment; and one certified into the military service under the selective draft act of May 18, 1917 (40 Stat., 76), can not escape liability to military service because he had not taken the required oath. (Franke v. Murray, 248 Fed. Rep., 865.)

Applicants for enlistment.—Applicants for enlistment who have been accepted provisionally, but have yet to be subjected to the first examination at the recruiting depots and to take the oath before they become a part of the soldiery of the Nation, are not "troops of the United States" (as used in the land-grant acts in relation to transportation for the Government). It is the actual enlistment, the oath of allegiance, that changes the status from a civilian to a soldier. The officers at the recruiting stations are expressly forbidden by Army Regulations to administer this oath. Such applicant is then not even a potential soldier; for he may be rejected on final examination. And it is the actual and not the potential status that must govern. The fact that under the Army Regulations he receives the same rations as an enlisted man, and that he is subject to the same medical attention, does not effect a change of status. And the fact that the transportation is for the purposes of the Government in connection with its military establishment is immaterial. The Army appropriation acts make specific provision for the transportation of "troops" and of "recruits." (U. S. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 249 U. S., 354, 359, affirming 52 Ct. Cls., 226.)

For other cases, see note to section 1418, Revised Statutes, under "When enlistment complete."

Sec. 1610. [Exemption from arrest.] Marines shall be exempt, while enlisted in said service, from all personal arrest for debt or contract.—(11 July, 1798, c. 72, s. 5, v. 1, pp. 595, 596. 30 June, 1834, c. 132, s. 3, v. 4, p. 713.)

As to privilege from arrest in civil cases, see note to Constitution, Article I, section 6, clause 1.

As to jurisdiction of civil authorities over persons in the military service, see notes to Constitution, Article I, section 8, clauses 11, 13, and 14; and notes to sections 355, 417, and 753, Revised Statutes.

Officers of the Navy or Marine Corps, finally sentenced by civil authorities to imprisonment in State or Federal penitentiary, may be dropped from the rolls of the Navy or

Marine Corps, and shall be ineligible for reappointment. (Act Apr. 2, 1918, 40 Stat., 501.)

Exemption limited to marines.—The proper construction of the act of July 11, 1798, section 5, relating to the Marine Corps, fails to include midshipmen, who are, therefore, not exempt from arrest. If public policy requires the extension of this privilege to these officers, it is not to be doubted that Congress will so direct in explicit terms whenever their attention may be called to it. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 119.)

Sec. 1611. [Companies and detachments.] The Marine Corps may be formed into as many companies or detachments as the President may direct, with a proper distribution of the commissioned and non-commissioned officers and musicians to each company or detachment.—(11 July, 1798, c. 72, s. 1, v. 1, p. 594.)

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 586), it was provided that summary courts-martial may be ordered by the commanding officer of any "brigade, regiment, or separate or detached battalion, or other separate or detached command," etc., for the trial of enlisted men in the naval service; and that when empowered by the Secretary of the Navy, general courts-martial may be convened by the commanding officer of "a brigade or larger force of the naval service on shore beyond the continental limits of the United States"; and in time of war by the commanding officer of "a brigade or larger force of the Navy or Marine Corps on shore not attached to a navy yard or naval station," if so empowered by the Secretary of the Navy.

Organization into regiments and brigades.—The organization of the Marine Corps is sui generis, in that there is no provision of law for its formation into regiments or battalions, or the assignment of its officers to any particular command. (Berryman v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 397.)

By order of the Major General Commandant the officers in charge of the marines at Cavite,

P. I., were organized into the first brigade of marines, composed of two regiments of two battalions each. The order of the commandant was presumably made by direction of the President, pursuant to section 1611, Revised Statutes, and the name of regiments given to said bodies of marines did not change their character, but they remained under the generic term of "detachments" contained in section 1611. (Berryman v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 397.)

The act of April 26, 1898, section 7 (30 Stat., 365), provided that "in time of war every officer serving with troops operating against an enemy who shall exercise, under assignment in orders issued by competent authority, a command above that pertaining to his grade, shall be entitled to receive the pay and allowances of the grade appropriate to the command so exercised." A lieutenant colonel of the Marine Corps was assigned to the command of a so-called regiment. Held, that he was not an officer having a command above that pertaining to his grade, within the act of April 26, 1898, and was not entitled to the pay of a colonel in the Marine Corps. (Berryman v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 397.)

Sec. 1612. "Officers appointed to the Regular Army from the volunteer service, whose service has been continuous, shall, in the computation of leaves of absence after their appointment in the Regular Army, be entitled to the leave credits which accrued to them as volunteer officers where such leave credits were not availed of during their volunteer service." (Act June 30, 1902, 32 Stat., 508.)

Absence resulting from misconduct: See laws noted above, under "Laws relating specifically to Marine Corps."

Temporary increases in pay of officers.—By act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 601-605), the pay of officers of the Army and Marine Corps was increased, as set forth below, commencing January 1, 1920, and remaining effective until June 30, 1922; such annual increases being "in addition to all pay and allowances now allowed by law:" Colonels in the Army and Marine Corps, $600; lieutenant colonels in the Army and Marine Corps, $600; majors in the Army and Marine Corps, $840; captains in the Army and Marine Corps, $720; first lieutenants in the Army and Marine Corps, $600; second lieutenants in the Army and Marine Corps, $420.

Pay of enlisted men.—General rates of pay for enlisted men of the Army were prescribed by act of May 11, 1908 (35 Stat., 109). Increases in the pay of enlisted men were made by act of May 18, 1917, section 10 (40 Stat., 82), to continue "until the termination of the emergency." These increases were "continued in force and effect from and after the date and approval of this Act," by act approved July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 110).

By act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 601-605), it was provided that, "commencing January 1, 1920, the pay of all enlisted men of the Army and Marine Corps and of members of the female Nurse Corps of the Army and Navy is hereby increased 20 per centum: Provided, That such increase shall not apply to enlisted men whose initial pay, if it has already been permanently increased since April 6, 1917, is now less than $33 per month." Such increases were to remain effective until June 30, 1922, unless sooner amended or repealed, but were to "be the rates of pay during the current enlistment of all men in active service on the date of the approval of this Act, and for those who enlist, reenlist, or extend their enlistments prior to July 1, 1922, for the term of such enlistment, reenlistment, or extended enlistment."

By act of June 4, 1920, section 4 (41 Stat., 761), new rates of base pay were prescribed for enlisted men, as set forth below, and it was provided that the temporary increase of pay for enlisted men of the Army authorized by act of May 18, 1920, above quoted, "shall be computed upon the base pay provided for in this section, and shall apply only to enlisted men of the first five grades," and it was further provided "that nothing in this section shall operate to reduce the pay which any enlisted man is now receiving, during his current enlistment and while he holds his present grade, nor to change the present rate of pay of any enlisted man now on the retired list."

"On and after July 1, 1920, the grades of enlisted men shall be such as the President may from time to time direct, with monthly base pay at the rate of $74 for the first grade, $53 for the second grade, $45 for the third grade, $45 for the fourth grade, $37 for the fifth grade, $35 for the sixth grade, and $30 for the seventh grade. Of the total authorized number of enlisted men, those in the first grade shall not exceed 0.6 per centum, those in the second grade 1.8 per centum, those in the third grade 2 per centum, those in the fourth grade 9.5 per centum, those in the fifth grade 9.5 per centum, those in the sixth grade 25 per centum." (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 4, 41 Stat., 761, amending act of June 3, 1916, sec. 4, 39 Stat., 167.) See note above, under "Short term enlistments," for law authorizing Secretary of the Navy to establish grades and ratings in Marine Corps.

Longevity pay of enlisted men.—"Existing laws providing for continuous service pay are repealed to take effect July 1, 1920, and thereafter enlisted men shall receive an increase of 10 per centum of their base pay for each five years of service in the Army, or service which by existing law is held to be the equivalent of Army service, such increase not to exceed 40 per centum." (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 4, 41 Stat., 761, amending act of June 3, 1916, sec. 4, 39 Stat., 167.)

Enlistment and reenlistment allowance.—"Existing laws providing for the payment of three months' pay to certain soldiers upon reenlistment are hereby repealed, and hereafter an enlistment allowance equal to three times the monthly pay of a soldier of the seventh grade shall be paid to every soldier who enlists or reenlists for a period of three years, payment of the enlistment allowance for original enlistment to be deferred until honorable discharge." (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 27, 41 Stat., 775, amending act of June 3, 1916, sec. 27, 39 Stat., 185. See 27 Comp. Dec., 101, noted below, as to repeal in part of sec. 1612.)

Specialist ratings.—"Under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, enlisted men of the sixth and seventh grades may be rated as specialists, and receive extra pay therefor per month, as follows: First class, $25; second class, $20; third class, $15; fourth class, $12; fifth class, $8; sixth class, $3. Of the total authorized number of enlisted men in the sixth and seventh grades, those rated as specialists of the first class shall not exceed 0.7 per centum; of the second class, 1.4 per centum; of the third class, 1.9 per centum; of the fourth class, 4.7 per centum; of the fifth class, 5 per centum; of the sixth class, 15.2 per centum." (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 4, 41 Stat., 761, amending act June 3, 1916, sec. 4, 39 Stat., 167.)

Extra duty pay.—"All laws and parts of laws providing for extra duty pay for enlisted men are repealed, to take effect July 1, 1920." (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 4, 41 Stat., 761, amending act June 3, 1916, sec. 4, 39 Stat., 167.)

Enlistment bounty.—"No bounty shall be paid to induce any person to enlist in the military service of the United States." (Act May 18, 1917, sec. 3, 40 Stat., 78. See above, as to "Enlistment allowance.")

Additional pay for marksmen, etc.—"That hereafter enlisted men now qualified or hereafter qualifying as marksmen shall receive $2 per month* as sharpshooters, $3 per month; as expert riflemen, $5 per month; as second-class gunners, $2 per month; as first-class gunners, $3 per month; as expert first-class gunners, Field Artillery, $5 per month; as gun pointers, gun commanders, observers second class, chief planters, and chief loaders, $7 per month; as plotters, observers first class, casemate electricians, and coxswains, $9 per month, all in addition to their pay, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, but no man shall receive at the same time additional pay for more than one of the classifications named in this section." (Act May 11, 1908, 35 Stat., 110, as amended and reenacted by act May 12, 1917, 40 Stat., 45. See decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury, noted below, as to additional pay for special qualifications, details, etc., in the Marine Corps.)

Mess sergeants shall receive six dollars per month in addition to their pay." (Act May 11, 1908, 35 Stat., 109.)

Quarters and commutation thereof.—"That at all posts and stations where there are public quarters belonging to the United States officers may be furnished with quarters in kind in such public quarters, and not elsewhere, by the Quartermaster's Department, assigning to the officers of each grade, respectively, such number of rooms as is stated in the following table, namely: Second lieutenants, two rooms; first lieutenants, three rooms; captains, four rooms; majors, five rooms; lieutenant-colonels, six rooms; colonels, seven rooms; brigadier-generals, eight rooms; major-generals, nine rooms; lieutenant-general, ten rooms: Provided further, That at places where there are no public quarters commutation therefor may be paid by the Pay Department to the officer entitled to the same at a rate not exceed twelve dollars per month per room." (Act June 17, 1878, Sec. 9, 20 Stat., 151, as amended and reenacted by act Mar. 2, 1907, 34 Stat., 1168, 1169.)

"That hereafter, at places where there are no public quarters available, commutation for the authorized allowance therefor shall be paid to commissioned officers, acting dental surgeons, veterinarians, members of the Nurse Corps, and pay clerks at the rate of $12 per room per month; and, when specifically authorized by the Secretary of War, to enlisted men at the rate of $15 per month, or in lieu thereof he may, in his discretion, rent quarters for the use of said enlisted men when so on duty." (Act Mar. 4, 1915, 38 Stat., 1069.)

"Officers temporarily absent on duty in the field shall not lose their right to quarters or commutation thereof at their permanent station while so temporarily absent." (Act Feb. 27, 1893, 27 Stat., 480. As to quarters for dependents, see laws noted above, under "Laws relating specifically to Marine Corps.")

Heat and light.—"The heat and light actually necessary for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men shall be furnished at the expense of the United States under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe." (Act Mar. 2, 1907, 34 Stat., 1167.)

By annual appropriation for the Marine Corps, under "Maintenance, Quartermaster's Department," provision is made "for heat, light, and commutation thereof for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men." (Act June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 831.)

Sale of fuel to officers.—"Hereafter fuel may be furnished to commissioned officers on the active list by the Quartermaster's Department, for the actual use of such officers only, at the rate of three dollars per cord for standard oak wood, or at an equivalent rate for other kinds of fuel, the amount so furnished to each to be limited to the officer's actual personal necessities as certified to by him." (Act June 12, 1906, 34 Stat., 250.)

Traveling expenses.—"That for all sea travel actual expenses only shall be paid to officers * * * when traveling on duty under competent orders, with or without troops, and the amount so paid shall not include any shore expenses at port of embarkation or debarkation but for the purpose of determining allowances for all travel under orders, or for officers and enlisted men on discharge, travel in the Philippine Archipelago, the Hawaiian Archipelago, the home waters of the United States, and between the United States and Alaska shall not be regarded as sea travel and shall be paid for at the rates established by law for land travel within the boundaries of the United States." (Act June 12, 1906, 34 Stat., 247. As to travel with troops, see note above, under "Laws relating specifically to Marine Corps"; and see decisions of Comptroller of the Treasury, noted below.)

"That hereafter officers of the Army and Navy detailed for service in connection with the Lighthouse Establishment shall be paid their actual traveling expenses when traveling under orders on official duty to and from points which can not be conveniently reached by vessel or railroad." (Act Feb. 26, 1907, sec. 6, 34 Stat., 997.)

"That hereafter under such regulations and within such maximum rates as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War enlisted men may be reimbursed for actual expenses of travel, including subsistence and lodging, incurred while traveling under competent orders and not embraced in the movement of troops, or they may be paid a flat per diem therefor in lieu of such reimbursement." (Act Apr. 20, 1918, 40 Stat., 534.)

Travel allowance of discharged officers.—"That hereafter when an officer shall be discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for an offense, he shall receive for travel allowances from the place of his discharge to the place of his residence at the time of his appointment or to the place of his original muster into the service four cents per mile * * * : Provided further, That for sea travel on discharge actual expenses only shall be paid to officers." (Act Mar. 2, 1901, 31 Stat., 903.)

Prior laws repealed by section 1612.—The act of June 30, 1834, section 5 (embodied in section 1612, R. S.), repealed the joint resolution of May 25, 1832, respecting the pay and emoluments of the Marine Corps. (U. S. v. Freeman, 3 How., 556.)

It was provided by section one of the act of August 5, 1854 (now embodied in section 1612, R. S.), "that the noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the U. S. Marine Corps shall be entitled to and receive the same pay and bounty for reenlisting as are now or may hereafter be allowed to the noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates in the Infantry of the Army." It would seem that this provision was intended to supersede all laws then in force relating to the pay of enlisted men of the Marine Corps, and to repeal, among other provisions, that portion of the act of March 2, 1837, as amended, which gave marines one-fourth additional pay for serving beyond their enlistments. But the former practice of allowing marines this increase was continued as though the law did not apply to cases of that kind. This long-continued construction of the law should not be overturned. (5 Comp. Dec., 524; see sec. 1422, R. S., and note thereto.)

Section 1612 repealed as to bounty for reenlisting.—So much of section 1612, Revised Statutes, as provides that enlisted men of the Marine Corps shall be entitled to receive the same bounty for reenlisting, usually designated as honorable discharge gratuity, as enlisted men of like grades in the Infantry of the Army, is repealed and superseded by section 7 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 836), under the provisions of which enlisted men of the Marine Corps reenlisting on or after June 4, 1920, for four years, three years, or two years, are entitled to receive four months, three months, or two months' extra pay, respectively, at the rate of pay they were receiving at the time of honorable discharge. (27 Comp. Dec., 101; see Army law noted above, under "Enlistment and reenlistment allowance," and Marine Corps law noted above under "Bounty for reenlisting." See also sec. 1573, R. S., and note thereto.)

Section 1612 not repealed as to pay.—

So much of section 1612 as provides that enlisted men of the Marine Corps shall be entitled to receive the same pay as enlisted men of like grades in the Infantry of the Army is still in full force and effect. The pay of enlisted men of the Marine Corps is accordingly that prescribed for the corresponding grades of the Army by the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 761), plus the 20 per cent increase temporarily authorized by act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 601), plus longevity increase allowed by the Army act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 761), and additional pay for specialists as prescribed in that act. (27 Comp. Dec., 101; see also, 27 Comp. Dec., 170.)

General effect of section 1612.—The pay of the Marine Corps is regulated by the laws which govern the pay of the Army, and as changes are made in the Army pay those changes take effect simultaneously in the pay roll of the Marine Corps. This is the legal effect of section 1612. (Reid v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 625.)

Section 1612 was intended to operate upon future as well as existing legislation on pay, allowances, and bounty in the Army. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 616, 622.)

Limitations upon operation of section 1612.—The pay of the Marine Corps is regulated by the law which governs the Army pay, and this is accomplished automatically by the Revised Statutes (sec. 1612). But this does not extend to a case where Congress has made a specific provision for the pay of an officer or grade of officers or enlisted men in the Marine Corps. (Bristow v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 46.)

Where the pay of a new grade of officers is specifically prescribed by statute, the general provision of law that the pay of the Marine Corps shall be the same as the pay of the Army can not be construed so that the specific pay shall be either increased or diminished by reason of a change of Army pay. (Bristow v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 46.)

The fact that section 1612 provides that enlisted men of the Marine Corps shall receive the same pay, grade for grade, as enlisted men of the Army, does not add grades to the Marine Corps to correspond to additional grades added to the Army, especially where the law has made specific provision for the different grades in the Marine Corps and the number of men to be assigned to each. The law adding to the Army a grade of enlisted men unknown to the Marine Corps does not make a similar grade in the Marine Corps. (8 Comp. Dec., 419.)

officer or enlisted man absent from duty on account of disease resulting from his own intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquors or other misconduct shall receive pay for such period of absence; and second, that an enlistment shall not be regarded as complete until the soldier shall have made good any time in excess of one day lost by unauthorized absences.

Held, that the first provision is one affecting the pay to be received by officers and enlisted men in the Army, and therefore is made applicable to the Marine Corps by section 1612, Revised Statutes; but that the second provision is one affecting the term of enlistment in the Army, and does not apply to the Marine Corps, as the term of enlistment in the Marine Corps is governed by the laws and regulations of the Navy under section 1621, Revised Statutes. (Comp. Dec., June 3, 1914, 160 S. and A. Memo., 3250. See later law, above quoted, relating specifically to the Marine Corps.)

Enlisted men of the Marine Corps are not entitled to the bounty provided by act of July 29, 1861, section 5 (12 Stat., 280), for the men "enlisted in the regular forces." (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 100, Sept. 29, 1864.)

The act of June 16, 1890, entitled "An Act to prevent desertions from the Army, and for other purposes," provided in section one that there shall be retained from the pay of each enlisted man of the Army the sum of $4 per month for the first year of his enlistment, which shall not be paid to him until his discharge from the service and shall be forfeited unless he served honestly and faithfully to the date of his discharge; and that sums so retained shall be treated as deposits upon which interest shall be paid. This section of the act was applicable to the Marine Corps by force and effect of section 1612, Revised Statutes. Section 2 of the same act related to the terms of enlistment in the Army, and provided that soldiers discharged prior to expiration of enlistment shall not be entitled to the allowances provided in section 1290, Revised Statutes. This section held not applicable to the Marine Corps [although sec. 1290, Revised Statutes, relating to transportation on discharge, did apply to the Marine Corps]. Section 3 of said act, relating to the arrest of deserters by civil officers, and section 4, authorizing the President to permit enlisted men to purchase their discharge in time of peace, also held inapplicable to the Marine Corps. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 616.)

Sections 1305-1308, Revised Statutes, which provide for the deposit with any Army paymaster by any enlisted man of the Army of his savings, have no application to the Marine Corps, and the enlisted men of that corps have not the right or privilege of making such deposits with a paymaster of their branch of the service. Special legislation referring only to the Army, like these sections of the Revised Statutes, would not ordinarily be construed to apply to the Marine Corps any more than to the Navy. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 190. See later law above noted relating to the Marine Corps.)

Section 1216, Revised Statutes, as amended (act Mar. 29, 1892, 27 Stat., 12), which empowers the President to grant a certificate of merit to an enlisted man of the Army who has distinguished himself in the service and has been recommended therefor by the commanding officer of the regiment or the chief of the corps to which such man belongs, applies only to enlisted men of the Army, and not to members of the Marine Corps who have been similarly commended. Section 1612 is not applicable to the special reward for gallant service, so as to bring the Marine Corps within section 1216. There is a corresponding provision in section 1407, Revised Statutes, which was expressly amended to include enlisted men of the Marine Corps. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 579. See note to sec. 1407, R. S.)

Navy laws held applicable to Marine Corps.—Officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps are not entitled to reimbursement for loss of personal effects in accordance with laws relating to the Army; but are entitled to such reimbursement under the same circumstances as if they were in the Navy proper. (3 Comp. Dec., 659; Harlee v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 342; compare 4 Comp. Dec., 26. See note to sec. 290, R. S., and see act of Oct. 6, 1917, 40 Stat., 389.)

Section 1563, Revised Statutes, authorizing advances of pay to persons in the naval service, has been invariably construed by the accounting officers as applying to Marine officers. (Reid v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 625.)

Navy laws held inapplicable to Marine Corps.—Officers of the Marine Corps have not been considered as “appointed to the Navy,” within the meaning of the constructive service provision in the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 13 (30 Stat., 1007), providing that “all officers, including warrant officers, who have been or may be appointed to the Navy from civil life shall, on the date of appointment, be credited, for computing their pay, with five years’ service.” (23 Comp. Dec., 508.)

An officer of the Marine Corps attached to a seagoing vessel is not entitled to the ration allowed by Revised Statutes, section 1578, to a naval officer so attached. Such officer of the Marine Corps is by the Revised Statutes (section 1612), subjected to the provisions of Revised Statutes, section 1269, which restricts allowances to officers of the Army. Commissioned officers of the Army are not allowed rations, although they are allowed to noncommissioned officers and enlisted men by section 1293. The only advantage which the commissioned officer has in this respect is the right to purchase rations for his own use at cost when serving in the field. (R. S. 1145). (Reid v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 625.)

Section 1578, authorizing rations, is part of chapter 8 of Title XV, Revised Statutes, entitled “Pay, emoluments, and allowances.” The enactments regulating the pay of officers of the Marine Corps are contained in chapter 9 of the same title. Congress, by placing in another chapter the enactments relating to pay of the Marine Corps, indirectly but unmistakably indicated its intent to confine allowances made by chapter 8 to the naval officers whose pay is fixed by the provisions of that chapter, viz, those enumerated in section 1556, Revised Statutes. While section 1563, authorizing advances to persons in the naval service employed on distant stations, is part of chapter 8, and has nevertheless been construed as applying to Marine officers, the language of that section, which does not speak of “officers” but of “persons employed in the naval service,” is different from that in section 1578, and it would appear that Congress intended to give the marines the benefit of the legislation in section 1563. (Reid v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 625.)

The act of February 9, 1889 (25 Stat., 657), to provide for the deposit of savings by “seamen of the United States Navy,” does not extend to enlisted men of the Marine Corps. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 616. See note to sec. 1621, R. S.; and see later law noted above, relating to deposits by enlisted men of the Marine Corps.)

Pay grades, enlisted men.—See Army law of June 4, 1920, quoted above under “Pay of enlisted men.”

By Marine Corps orders No. 18, June 25, 1920, the enlisted grades of the Marine Corps are grouped as follows: First grade, sergeants major and quartermaster sergeants; second grade, first sergeants, gunnery sergeants, drum major; third grade, none; fourth grade, sergeants; fifth grade, corporals; sixth grade, privates first class; seventh grade, drummers, trumpeters, and privates. (27 Comp. Dec., 101.)

The following table shows the rates of pay of the above mentioned grades as fixed by the Army act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 761), plus the 20 per cent increase temporarily authorized by act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 761), and additional pay for specialists as prescribed in that act, as published by the Comptroller of the Treasury (27 Comp. Dec., 35 and 101; see Army laws quoted above):

Grade.	Base pay.	Add 20 per cent increase as of first 5 grades.	Less than five years' service.	After five years' service.	After ten years' service.	After fifteen years' service.	After twenty years' service.

7th.....	30. 00	(²)	30. 00	33. 00	36. 00	39. 00	42. 00

² Enlisted men of sixth and seventh grades may be rated as specialists and receive extra pay therefor per month, as follows: First class, $25; second class, $20; third class, $15; fourth class, $12; fifth class, $8; sixth class, $5.

Pay not reduced by act June 4, 1920.—

The effect of the saving clause in section 4 of the Army reorganization act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 762), that "nothing in this section shall operate to reduce the pay which any enlisted man is now receiving during his current enlistment and while he holds his present grade," is to grant to enlisted men of the Army and Marine Corps the right to continue to receive the higher rates of pay they were receiving on June 4, 1920, under earlier laws then in force, until the termination or extension of the enlistment in which serving on that date, if they continue in the same grade during such period, but not during service under an extended enlistment which may be extended on or after June 4, 1920, nor after a change in grade. (27 Comp. Dec., 31.)

Additional pay as specialists.—The provision of section 4 of the Army reorganization act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 761), that enlisted men of the Army of the sixth and seventh grades may be rated as specialists and receive extra pay therefor at certain specified rates per month, is applicable to the Marine Corps in so far as the Secretary of War may apply said provisions of law to the infantry of the Army. (27 Comp. Dec., 31.)

Extra-duty pay.—On and after July 1, 1920, the payment of any extra-duty pay to enlisted men of the Army and Marine Corps is prohibited notwithstanding provisions in Army and Navy appropriation acts authorizing such payments, section 4 of the Army reorganization act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 761), having repealed from July 1, 1920, all laws or parts of laws providing for extra-duty pay. (27 Comp. Dec., 31.)

The term "extra-duty" is obviously a relative one, and it can not be determined that an enlisted man was performing extra duty without a complete understanding of the scope of the duties which he might properly be expected to perform in accordance with his enlistment without receiving extra pay. A member of the hospital corps was as such bound to perform, without extra pay, any of the duties which pertain to that service. Duties incident to the conduct of hospitals as efficient institutions, including maintenance of telephone and telegraph offices, when necessary in the judgment of the military authorities, were part of the current duties of enlisted men of the hospital corps and did not entitle them to extra pay any more than any other necessary activities which the successful administration of the hospital might demand. (U. S. v. Ross, 239 U. S., 530.)

From an early date provision has been made for the payment of enlisted men on extra duty at "constant labor of not less than ten days." It may be assumed that section 1235 of the Revised Statutes, requiring written orders, was not intended to preclude a recovery of extra-duty pay where there had been a detail to extra duty by competent authority, although not in writing, and extra duty entitling the enlisted man to extra pay under the statute had actually been performed. However, where an enlisted man was not in fact assigned on extra duty, there being no such detail in accordance with regulations or the statute as there should have been if he was considered to be on extra duty, and where it was the judgment of the War Department that the man was not on extra duty, this Departmental judgment will not be overruled unless there is a clear abuse of the necessary official discretion. (U. S. v. Ross, 239 U. S., 530.)

It is well settled that the mere designation of duty as "special duty" can not of itself determine the character of the duty and deprive the man of his rights to compensation therefor if in fact the duty was "extra duty." Whether it was special duty or extra duty is to be determined from the facts themselves. (Scheid v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 247.)

The requirement of the statutes that details for extra duty must be in writing was not intended to preclude a recovery of extra-duty pay to which a man might be entitled under the law where it appeared that he had been detailed to such extra duty by competent authority, and that the extra duty had been actually performed. A provision in the Marine Corps "System of Accountability" could not in any manner serve to abridge a right which a man might have under the law. (Scheid v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 247.)

The appropriation in the Army act of March 3 1885 (23 Stat., 359), for enlisted men on extra duty, was limited in its provisions to the Quartermaster Corps, but the other language in the same section, amendatory of section 1287, Revised Statutes, had no relation to the Quartermaster Corps but was permanent legislation applicable to the rest of the service as well as to that corps. (Scheid v. U. S., 52 Ct. Cls., 247.)

A sergeant in the Marine Corps performed the duty of schoolmaster at the Marine Barracks for 15 years; he received, in addition to his pay as sergeant, one dollar per month from each apprentice in accordance with an agreement in their enlistment papers prescribed by the Navy Department. Held, that he was not entitled to extra-duty pay from the Government. Section 1287, Revised Statutes, providing extra-duty pay for the Army, and Army Regulations issued under authority of the appropriations for extra-duty, do not extend to one who performs the duties of a schoolmaster and who receives extra pay from his pupils. (Fugitt v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 253.)

Longevity pay, enlisted men.—Section 4 of the Army reorganization act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 761), repeals, from July 1, 1920, all preceding legislation providing for continuous-service pay in the Army and Marine Corps, except in so far as the saving clause in said section may prevent the reduction of the pay of enlisted men, continuous-service pay being "pay" within the term as used in the saving clause. (27 Comp. Dec., 31.)

In computing the longevity pay of an enlisted man now in the Marine Corps, or of any person who hereafter enlists or reenlists in the corps, under the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 761), all prior service on the active list in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, whether in consecutive or dis severed periods, shall be counted. (27 Comp. Dec., 170.)

The act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 761), repealing all laws providing for continuous-service

pay, substituted in lieu thereof longevity pay. (27 Comp. Dec., 170.)

Under the Army reorganization act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 761), the service which by existing law is held to be the equivalent of Army service in counting length of service for increase of pay or for retirement is service in the Marine Corps and service in the Navy. (27 Comp. Dec., 170, citing acts Feb. 24, 1881, 21 Stat., 346; Sept. 30, 1890, 26 Stat., 504; and June 22, 1906, and Mar. 2, 1907, 34 Stat., 451 and 1217.)

The provisions of sections 1281 and 1282, Revised Statutes, relating to increased pay for length of service and retention of pay until expirations of enlistment, form part of the legislation regulating the pay of enlisted men in the Army and are applicable to the Marine Corps by force of section 1612. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 616, 623.)

Reenlistment pay; honorable discharge gratuity.—So much of section 1612 as provided that enlisted men of the Marine Corps shall be entitled to receive the same bounty for reenlisting, usually designated as honorable discharge gratuity, as enlisted men of like grades in the infantry of the Army was repealed and superseded by section 7 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 836). (27 Comp. Dec., 101; see laws quoted above relating to Marine Corps.)

The provision of section 27 of the Army reorganization act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 775), that an enlistment allowance equal to three times the monthly pay of a soldier of the seventh grade shall be paid to every soldier who reenlists for a period of three years has no application to the Marine Corps, but the reenlistment pay, otherwise known as honorable discharge gratuity, of members of the Marine Corps, depends entirely upon laws providing therefor in effect prior to June 4, 1920, and the provisions of section 7 of the naval appropriation act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 836). (27 Comp. Dec., 31.)

Under the provisions of the naval appropriation act of June 4, 1920, section 7, enlisted men of the Marine Corps reenlisting on or after June 4, 1920, for four years, three years, or two years are entitled to receive four months, three months, or two months extra pay, respectively, at the rate of pay they were receiving at the time of honorable discharge. (27 Comp. Dec., 101; see sec. 1573, R. S., and note thereto.)

An enlistment in the Marine Corps after an honorable discharge from the Army or Navy is not a "reenlistment" within the meaning of section 7 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 836); the term "reenlistment" signifies an entry into the same branch of the service from which honorably discharged. (27 Comp. Dec., 170.)

An enlistment in the Marine Corps after an honorable discharge from the Army is a "reenlistment" within the meaning of section 1284, Revised Statutes, providing longevity pay in the Army, made applicable to the Marine Corps by section 1612, Revised Statutes. Such enlisted man is entitled to the same benefits that he would be entitled to if his reenlistment had been in the Army. (Walton v. U. S., 31 Ct. Cls., 196.)

Bounties on reenlistment in the Marine Corps were, by virtue of section 1612 of the Revised Statutes, based upon the law governing bounties to the enlisted men of the Army contained in the Army appropriation act of May 11, 1908 (35 Stat., 110). (21 Comp. Dec., 848.)

The bounty payable to enlisted men of the Marine Corps upon reenlistment should be computed on all items of pay, as distinguished from allowance, which they may be receiving at the time of discharge. (21 Comp. Dec., 848.)

Additional pay for special qualifications, details, etc.—There is no law that provides for cooks in the Marine Corps or for an increase of pay for extra duty of privates of that corps detailed in service as cooks. (8 Comp. Dec., 419.)

Enlisted men of the Marine Corps regularly detailed as messmen, whether for duty afloat or ashore, may be paid such additional compensation as provided for by regulations approved and promulgated by the Secretary of the Navy; Congress having appropriated for such additional compensation under the caption, "Pay, Marine Corps," but not having fixed the amount. These appropriations do not create the grade of messman in the Marine Corps, but do provide for additional pay to men regularly detailed to perform the duties of messmen. If additional pay were provided for like service in the Army, to which it would be assimilated, the additional pay would be fixed by law and would govern without regard to the President's order; but there is no grade in the Army to which the additional compensation of an enlisted man in the Marine Corps regularly detailed to perform the duties of messman can be assimilated. (13 Comp. Dec., 136.)

Under annual appropriation acts, and Executive Order of September 18, 1906, relating to additional pay for enlisted men of the Marine Corps regularly detailed as messmen, held that where a man is properly detailed as messman for a month or more, as prescribed by said order, he is entitled to the additional pay even though, by reason of illness or other cause, he is lawfully absent from duty for a part of the month. (13 Comp. Dec., 574.)

Enlisted men of the Marine Corps who have qualified as expert riflemen are entitled to the additional monthly pay allowed enlisted men of the infantry of the Army, which extra pay shall cease at the close of the first subsequent target year in which such riflemen shall fail to qualify. (Comp. Dec., Sept. 26, 1905, 55 S. and A. Memo., 7; modifying 11 Comp. Dec., 788.)

The act of May 11, 1908 (35 Stat., 110), providing "that hereafter enlisted men now qualified or hereafter qualifying as marksmen shall receive two dollars per month; as sharpshooters, three dollars per month; as expert riflemen, five dollars per month; * * * all in addition to their pay, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe," was made applicable to the Marine Corps by section 1612, Revised Statutes. (21 Comp. Dec., 123 and 848.)

The extra pay provided for gun pointers and gun captains is extra pay for special service.

and payable only when under detail for the special service. (21 Comp. Dec., 811, 814.)

The enlisted men of the Marine Corps derive their right to additional compensation or allowance as messmen, gun captains, and gun pointers from the annual appropriation acts and the regulations made in pursuance thereof. (21 Comp. Dec., 811, 812; citing 13 Comp. Dec., 136.)

Under the Navy Regulations of 1913, article 4442 (11), "all enlisted men of the United States Marine Corps regularly detailed as gun pointers, Navy mail clerks, gun captains, messmen, or signalmen, or holding good conduct medals, pins, or bars, shall receive the same extra compensation in addition to their monthly pay as is now or may hereafter be allowed enlisted men of the Navy." (See 21 Comp. Dec., 812.)

Retained pay.—Section 1281, Revised Statutes, and amendments thereto, authorizing certain increases in the pay of enlisted men during their first enlistment in the Army, such increased pay to be "considered as retained pay" and not to be paid until discharge, were held applicable to the Marine Corps. (See 19 Op. Att'y. Gen., 616, 623; U. S. v. Kingsley, 138 U. S., 87, 24 Ct. Cls., 219.) Said section of the Revised Statutes was expressly repealed by act of May 11, 1908 (35 Stat., 110.)

By act of June 4, 1920, section 27, relating to the Army (quoted above under "Enlistment and reenlistment allowance"), provision was made for an allowance to soldiers during their first enlistment, payment thereof "to be deferred until honorable discharge." (See decisions noted above under "Reenlistment pay; honorable discharge gratuity.")

Increased pay for sea duty and foreign shore service.—In computing the 20 per cent additional pay for foreign service of enlisted men of the Marine Corps, the additional monthly pay allowed as expert riflemen should be included. (Comp. Dec., Sept. 26, 1905, 55 S. and A. Memo., 67.)

Enlisted men of the Marine Corps are not entitled to have the additional compensation authorized for marksmanship qualifications included in their pay proper upon which is computed the 20 per cent increase for sea duty; but are entitled to have such increase computed on pay for good conduct medals. (21 Comp. Dec., 848.)

Enlisted men of the Marine Corps on sea duty are not entitled to have the additional compensation of gun pointers and gun captains included in their "pay proper" upon which is computed the 20 per cent increase of pay for foreign shore duty. (21 Comp. Dec., 811.)

Officers of the Marine Corps are not entitled to have the additional compensation as aid, or the allowance for mounts, included in their pay proper upon which is computed the ten per cent increase for sea duty. (21 Comp. Dec., 848.)

An officer of the Marine Corps was entitled, under section 1612, Revised Statutes, and the act of May 11, 1908, to the increased pay for service beyond seas allowed by the act of June 30, 1902, for service in Porto Rico, notwithstanding the provisions in the appropriation acts of 1906 and 1907, excepting Hawaii and Porto Rico from the operation of the said act of 1902. Those exceptions were temporary, and did not have a general and permanent application to all future appropriations. The Army act of May 11, 1908, having provided that "increase of pay for service beyond the limits of the states comprising the Union and the territories of the United States contiguous thereto shall be as now provided by law," the law contained in the act of 1902, and not the exception contained in the appropriations of 1906 and 1907, was thereby continued in effect. (U. S. v. Vulte, 233 U. S., 509; but see later act of Aug. 24, 1912, quoted above under Army laws relating to foreign shore service.)

Pay and allowances defined.—See cases noted above, under "Increased pay for sea duty and foreign shore service"; see also notes to sections 1558 and 1615, Revised Statutes.

Whether extra pay for special assignments (gun pointers and gun captains) is an "allowance" or "in the nature of an allowance," or "pay" in the broad meaning of that term, it is not "pay proper" within the meaning of the act of June 30, 1902 (32 Stat., 512), relating to foreign shore service pay. (21 Comp. Dec., 811.)

Mileage has been held both by the courts and the accounting officers to be an allowance. (13 Comp. Dec., 333.)

Extra duty pay is not "pay" within the meaning of the saving clause contained in the act of June 4, 1920, section 4 (41 Stat., 761), that "nothing in this section shall operate to reduce the pay which any enlisted man is now receiving" etc. (27 Comp. Dec., 31, 36. Compare 27 Comp. Dec., 31, holding that act of June 4, 1920, sec. 4, 41 Stat., 761, repealing Army laws as to extra duty pay, applied to Marine Corps.)

Continuous service pay is "pay" within the term as used in the saving clause of the Army act approved June 4, 1920, section 4 (41 Stat., 761). (27 Comp. Dec., 31.)

The Army act of March 3, 1885 (23 Stat., 350), providing for reimbursement of officers and enlisted men of the military service for private property lost in the service, does not provide an "allowance" to officers of the Army which, by virtue of section 1612, Revised Statutes, can be available to officers of the Marine Corps. (Harlee v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 342.)

The term "allowances" has acquired an extended meaning, but it has its limitations. It has been held that allowance does not include commutation for fuel and quarters, and is limited to compensation for services other than pay (citing Landers v. U. S., 30 Ct. Cls., 311; Sherburne's Case, 16 Ct. Cls., 491; McLean v. U. S., 226 U. S., 374, 382, 45 Ct. Cls., 95). Pay and allowances as used in the statutes relate to compensation for service. The allowance may at times take the form of reimbursement, but it is reimbursement for something expended in service and the amount of allowance is fixed or regulated by statute or regulation which has the effect of a statute. The term can not be applied to the case of a soldier claiming under the act of 1885 for losses sustained for which, under that act, he may recover. The act is one of indemnity; it does not purport to pay for service. (Harlee v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 342.)

See note below under "Mileage and transportation."

Mileage and transportation.—Officers of the Marine Corps are entitled, under section 1612, Revised Statutes, to the same allowance for sea travel with troops as is provided for officers of the Army by act of June 12, 1906 (34 Stat., 246, 247), and such allowance is payable from appropriations for pay and allowances of officers of the Marine Corps. (13 Comp. Dec., 332.)

The act of June 10, 1896 (noted above, under laws relating to the Marine Corps), which provides that officers of the Marine Corps traveling under orders, without troops, shall be allowed the same mileage as was then allowed officers of the Navy traveling without troops, applies both to travel within the United States and to travel abroad; and an officer of the Marine Corps so traveling is entitled to mileage at the rate of eight cents per mile for travel in the United States, and to actual and reasonable expenses only for travel abroad. (8 Comp. Dec., 123; see note to sec. 1566, R. S.)

The act of June 10, 1896, is applicable only to officers of the Marine Corps traveling without troops; and officers of the Marine Corps traveling with troops are governed by the provisions of section 1612 and the Army act of June 12, 1906 (34 Stat., 246, 247). In other words, an officer of the Marine Corps traveling under orders without troops is entitled to the same mileage as was allowed an officer of the Navy on June 10, 1896; but when traveling under orders with troops he is entitled to the same travel allowance as an officer of the Army traveling with troops. (Comp. Dec., Mar. 7, 1907, 73 S. and A. Memo., 248; 13 Comp. Dec., 333.)

There is no law providing for traveling expenses for officers of the Army or Marine Corps traveling with troops within the United States. (Comp. Dec., Mar. 7, 1907, 73 S. and A. Memo., 248.)

The expenses necessarily growing out of the transportation and subsistence of the marines detailed for the Navy Department exhibit at the World's Columbian Exposition may be paid from the fund provided for the Marine Corps and its subsistence. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 577.)

The provisions of section 1290, Revised Statutes, relating to allowance for transportation from the place of discharge to the place of enlistment, form part of the legislation regulating the pay of enlisted men in the Army, and are applicable to the Marine Corps by force of section 1612, Revised Statutes. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 616, 623.)

Revised Statutes, section 1290, as amended by act of February 27, 1877 (19 Stat., 240, 244), provided that "when a soldier is discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for an offense, he shall be allowed transportation and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment, enrollment, or original muster into the service. The Government may furnish the same in kind, but in case it shall not do so, he shall be allowed travel pay and commutation of subsistence, for such time as may be sufficient for him to travel from the place of discharge to the place of his enlistment, enrollment, or original muster into the service, computed at the rate of one day for every twenty miles." Held, that one who originally enlisted at Washington, and was discharged at Mare Island, California, receiving travel pay and commutation of subsistence from Mare Island to Washington, but did not return to Washington, reenlisting at Mare Island as a private; and in the course of his service was returned to Washington, where he was discharged at his own request, was not entitled to his commutation of travel and subsistence to the place of his second enlistment, as his service was practically a continuous one, and his second discharge occurred at the place of his original enlistment. (U. S. v. Thornton, 160 U. S., 654.)

A private in the Marine Corps, discharged from the service as a person of bad character and unfit for service, by order of the Secretary of the Navy through the commandant of the corps, without court-martial or other competent military proceeding, does not forfeit transportation and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment, enrollment, or original muster into the service, under the provisions of section 1290, Revised Statutes, which makes such allowance in all cases other than discharge from the service "by way of punishment for an offense." That section contemplates a discharge as a punishment, inflicted by the judgment of a court-martial or other military authority. While unfitness for service and general bad character may justify the proper authorities in ordering the discharge of the soldier as a worthless member of the service, such a discharge can not be considered as "a punishment for an offense." The question whether such punishment must necessarily be inflicted by the judgment of a court-martial, not presented by the record in this case and no opinion expressed on it. (U. S. v. Kingsley, 138 U. S., 87; 24 Ct. Cls. 219.)

The effect of section 6 of the naval appropriation act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 836), is to extend to enlisted or enrolled men of the Navy and Marine Corps, having war service, who, since November 11, 1918, have reenlisted in the Navy or Marine Corps, or who have extended their enlistments either before or after that date, or may hereafter do so, the right to receive the war service payment of $60 provided by the act of February 24, 1919 (40 Stat., 1151), and the travel allowance on discharge, under the act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1203); such persons having been theretofore excluded from the benefits of said acts. (27 Comp. Dec., 31.)

Longevity pay, officers.—See section 1600, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

The words "current yearly pay," as used in section 1262, Revised Statutes, allowing increased pay for periods of five years' service, mean the original salary of the officer's rank plus any additions previously earned for length of service; and the ten per cent increase for periods of five years' service should accordingly be computed upon the regular salary of the officer's rank plus previous increases for length of service. (U. S. v. Tyler, 105 U. S., 244.)

The act of June 30, 1882 (22 Stat., 118), directing that the longevity increase provided for in section 1262, Revised Statutes, should be "computed on the yearly pay of the grade," was passed for the express purpose of commanding a method of computation which would render inapplicable the construction adopted by the Supreme Court in the Tyler case (above noted). Accordingly, a subsequent enactment, allowing officers of the Navy ten per cent increase of their "current yearly pay" for each term of five years' service, should be construed as requiring that such increase be computed on the yearly pay of their grade, in accordance with the rule prescribed by the act of 1882, and not upon their base pay plus previous longevity increases, in accordance with the rule laid down in the Tyler case. (Plummer v. U. S., 224 U. S., 137, 144.)

As to allowance of constructive service in computing length of service for longevity increases in the Marine Corps, see note above, under "Navy laws held inapplicable to Marine Corps;" and note below, under "Pay clerks."

Quarters.—Commutation for quarters, fuel, and light not furnished to an officer or enlisted man can not be paid unless authorized by some statute or regulation; that is, the right to commutation does not arise automatically but must be based upon some specific provision of law. (Smith v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 313.)

Commissioned officers of the Army on duty where quarters can not be furnished are entitled to commutation by virtue of the Army Regulations; but there is no such provision for enlisted men. (Smith v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 313.)

In the absence of express appropriation therefor, the hiring of quarters for marines on duty in Washington was forbidden by act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 144), which provided that "hereafter no contract shall be made for the rent of any building, or part of any building, in Washington, not now in use by the Government, to be used for the purposes of the Government until an appropriation therefor shall have been made in terms by Congress." (Smith v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 313.)

See note under section 1613, Revised Statutes.

Pay clerks.—By virtue of the act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 625), clerks to assistant paymasters in the Marine Corps are entitled to the same pay and allowances provided by the act of June 3, 1916, section 9 (39 Stat., 170), for paymasters' clerks in the Army; that is, to the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant in the Army. (23 Comp. Dec., 508.)

Clerks to assistant paymasters in the Marine Corps are not entitled to credit for constructive service in computing their pay under the act of June 3, 1916, section 9 (39 Stat., 170), which entitled them to the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant by virtue of the act of June 24, 1910 (36 Stat., 625), giving them the same pay and allowances as Army paymasters' clerks; although they were previously entitled to constructive service in computing their pay under the act of March 3, 1911 (36 Stat., 1044), giving them the pay and allowances of warrant officers in the Navy, by virtue of the said act of June 24, 1910. Warrant officers in the Navy appointed from civil life were entitled to constructive service, but second lieutenants in the Army appointed from civil life were not. (23 Comp. Dec., 508. See note above, under "Navy laws held inapplicable to Marine Corps.")

Gunnery sergeants.—The grade of "gunnery sergeant" was first established in the Marine Corps by the Navy personnel act of March 3, 1899, section 23 (30 Stat., 1009) and the pay was specifically fixed by the same statute at $35 per month, while other sergeants received only $25. Subsequently the pay of sergeants in the Army was advanced by act of May 11, 1908 (35 Stat., 106, 109), to $45 per month. There was no statute specifically changing the pay of gunnery sergeants. Held, that gunnery sergeants of the Marine Corps did not become entitled to $45 per month under the Army appropriation act. (Bristow v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 46. But see act of Aug. 22, 1912, as to pay of gunnery sergeants, noted above under laws relating to the Marine Corps.)

Forfeiture of pay.—Neither the pay, lodging, nor clothing of enlisted marines taken by the civil authorities for violation of law can be withheld during their confinement and absence from their military stations. The existing law (act July 11, 1798, sec. 2), authorizes the President to fix the pay and subsistence of the noncommissioned officers, privates, and musicians of the Marine Corps. Under this authority it would be competent for the President not merely to determine the quantum of pay but to prescribe the conditions on which it shall be received. In the absence of such a regulation by him, or under his authority, recourse must be had to the implied contract entered into on the enlistment; this is a stipulation for payment, subsistence, and clothing, in consideration of services to be performed. A willful failure to perform this service would seem to exempt the Government from the obligation which would have resulted from its performance. But it does not follow that an enlisted marine, because taken by the civil authorities for violation of the laws, has violated them; he is presumed to be innocent until proved to be guilty. In cases where conviction takes place and is followed by a sentence which incapacitates him from the fulfillment of his duty as a marine, from the time of such conviction his pay might perhaps, properly be withheld; but in such a case it would be better for the Government to discharge the convicted marine from the service and thus terminate his claim for compensation. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 396. See cases noted under sections 1556 and 1569, Revised Statutes.)

A private in the Marine Corps discharged from the service as a person of bad character and unfit for service, by order of the Secretary of the Navy through the commandant of the corps, although without court-martial or other competent military proceeding, forfeits thereby his retained pay under the provisions of Revised Statutes 1281, which provides that such retained pay of an enlisted man "shall be forfeited unless he serves honestly and faithfully to the date of discharge." (U. S. v. Kingsley, 138 U. S., 87; see also note above, under "Mileage and transportation.")

Pay of two grades.—Where a captain in the Marine Corps acts as brevet lieutenant-colonel and is paid as such, he can not during the same period receive either the pay or allowances attached to the duties of captain. (U. S. v. Freeman, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,163.)

Deposits of savings.—The act of February 9, 1889 (25 Stat., 657), providing for the deposit of savings by "seamen of the United States Navy," does not extend to enlisted men of the Marine Corps. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 616.)

Sections 1305-1308, Revised Statutes, which provide for the deposit with any Army paymaster by any enlisted man of his savings, have no application to the Marine Corps, and the enlisted men of that corps have not the right or privilege of making such deposits with a paymaster of their branch of the service. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 190.)

If the act of 1889, for the benefit of enlisted men and petty officers of the Navy, could not properly be construed to apply to the Marine Corps, which is primarily a component part of the Navy, sections 1305-1308 of the Revised Statutes, for the benefit of enlisted men of the Army, can not be so construed. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 190.)

See later law quoted above with respect to deposit of savings by enlisted men of the Marine Corps.

Sale of fuel.—The provision in the act of June 12, 1906 (34 Stat., 250), amending the provision relative to furnishing fuel to officers of the Army in the act of June 18, 1878 (20 Stat., 150), by limiting the amount to be purchased to the "actual personal necessities" of commissioned officers on the active list as certified to by them, is applicable to commissioned officers of the Marine Corps on the active list. (13 Comp. Dec., 27.)

Illegal payments.—Payments made to officers of the Marine Corps under an act which had been repealed by a later law relating to the Army, although not construed by the accounting officers as repealed, are binding upon the Government and can not be recalled to the pecuniary disadvantage of any officer; but no erroneous practice of however long standing can justify the allowance of a claim, contested by the Government in a suit, contrary to what is the true meaning and intent of the statute. (U. S. v. Freeman, 3 How., 556. For other cases, see note to sec. 236, R. S.)

Pay of officers while out of the service.—Marine Corps officers who were reduced under the act of March 2, 1847, and restored under a subsequent act are not entitled to pay during the interval. Had it been the design of the act which restored them to give them pay during the interval of the reduction, as well as rank, it would have been so declared. The relation back was for rank, not for pay. The whole object of the act was to place these officers back in the service by a new commission. All principle is against the allowance of such pay. When no service is needed, no compensation should be allowed. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 101.)

Extra allowance for disbursing money.—Congress having prohibited extra allowance or compensation in any form to an officer of the Army on account of the disbursing of any public money appropriated by law, held that the quartermaster of the Marine Corps is not thereafter entitled to such extra compensation. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 516; compare, U. S. v. Kuhn, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15, 545.)

For other cases, see generally notes to section 1556, et seq., relating to "Pay, emoluments, and allowances" of the Navy; as to retired pay of officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps, see note to section 1622; as to brevet pay and emoluments, see note to section 1604; as to additional pay allowed officers exercising higher command in time of war, see note to section 1611; as to pay of enlisted men detained in the service after expiration of enlistment, see section 1422, and note thereto; as to pay of Marine Band, see section 1613, and note thereto.

Sec. 1613. [Marine band.] The marines who compose the corps of musicians known as the "Marine band" shall be entitled to receive at the rate of four dollars a month, each, in addition to their pay as non-commissioned officers, musicians, or privates of the Marine Corps, so long as they shall perform, by order of the Secretary of the Navy, or other superior officer, on the Capitol grounds or the President's grounds.—(5 Aug., 1854, c. 268, s. 1, v. 10, p. 586. 18 Aug., 1856, c. 162, s. 5, v. 11, p. 118.)

"A member of the said band shall not, as an individual, furnish music, or accept an engagement to furnish music, when such furnishing of music places him in competition with any civilian musician or musicians, and shall not accept or receive remuneration for furnishing music except under special circumstances when authorized by the President." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 612, relating to Marine Band.)

As to composition and pay of Marine Band, see section 1596, Revised Statutes, and act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 612), quoted thereunder.

Detail of musicians to companies or detachments of marines: See section 1611, Revised Statutes.

Worn-out band instruments, sewing machines, machinery, and rubber tires may be exchanged in part payment for the purchase of like articles. (Act Mar. 4, 1917, 39 Stat., 1189.)

Status of Marine Band.—While the Marine Corps was established in 1775, and its band is one of the best known organizations of the character in the country, curiously this band has never had formal statutory recognition. Drums and fifes were provided for the Navy as long ago as 1794 (1 Stat., 350), while in 1798 "musicians," then understood to mean drummers and fifiers, were given to the Marine Corps (1 Stat., 590). Section 1596, Revised Statutes, describes the organization of the Marine Corps as consisting of a certain number of officers, noncommissioned officers, and privates, together with a drum major, a principal musician, 30 musicians, 60 drummers, and 60 fifiers; but no mention is made of a musical organization until the enactment of the laws now condensed in section 1613 of the Revised Statutes. The only other provision looking even indirectly to a musical organization is that of section 1596. (Bond v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 457; see also, Keppler v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cls., 482.)

Not a "Navy" band.—The provisions of the act of May 13, 1908 (35 Stat., 153), which prohibit "Navy bands or members thereof" from receiving remuneration for furnishing music outside the limits of military posts, when the furnishing of such music places them in competition with local musicians, do not apply to the Marine Band, notwithstanding that similar provision for "Army bands" was made by act of May 11, 1908 (35 Stat., 106, 110). (27 Op. Att'y. Gen., 90.)

The words, "Navy bands," do not include the Marine Band, and in the service would not ordinarily be understood to include a band made up of marines. (27 Op. Att'y. Gen., 90.)

Section 1613, Revised Statutes, recognizes the band as having a particular title of its own, viz, "Marine Band." In construing subsequent legislation it should be assumed that Congress appreciated the significance of the fact that this organization was generally known as the "Marine Band," as recognized by said section. (27 Op. Att'y. Gen., 90.)

It is, however, undoubtedly true that attendant circumstances might show an intention on the part of Congress to include the Marine Band by the term "Navy bands." No such circumstances exist in this case, in which the statute restricting such bands in furnishing music outside is quasi penal and should be strictly construed. (27 Op. Att'y. Gen., 90.)

See later statute quoted above with specific reference to the Marine Band.

Private detailed to duty with Marine Band.—A private in the Marine Corps was assigned to duty with the Marine Band at the time of his enlistment, and remained and performed duty with the band, as a private, until he was rated as a musician. Held, that he was one of "the musicians who compose the organization known as the Marine Band," while so detailed; and having performed on the Capitol Grounds and on the President's grounds under proper orders, was entitled to the additional pay provided for by Revised Statutes, section 1613. (U. S. v. Bond, 124 U. S., 301.)

The additional compensation given by section 1613 to the marines who compose the organization known as the Marine Band, is not restricted to those who are formally rated as musicians, but extends to all marines attached to the band so performing. (Bond v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 457.)

The statute does not say that the "members of the Marine Band" shall receive extra compensation, for no such band is known to the law; but the pay is given to those "marines who compose the corps of musicians known as the Marine Band." The phraseology of section 1613 is extremely peculiar. It seems to recognize the fact that marines other than those rated as musicians performed in the band. (Bond v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 457.)

Pay of Marine Band.—See laws noted under section 1596, Revised Statutes, as to the composition and pay of the Marine Band.

Prior to the act of March 3, 1899, section 24 (30 Stat., 1009), relating to the pay of the Marine Band, the pay of enlisted men in the Marine Corps was assimilated to Army pay, which was less than that provided in said section; and it was doubtless for that reason that Congress added the last clause to that section, viz, "such musicians of the band to have no increased pay for length of service." Under this section, held that as to musicians of the band of the Marine Corps, section 1284, Revised Statutes, providing for pay for length of service to enlisted men of the Army, is superseded, and that an enlisted man in the Marine Corps, member of said band, who was retired after 30 years' service, is not entitled to recover the additional pay under section 1284, allowed soldiers for reenlistment. (Giacchetti v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 381.)

Under existing statutes relating to the Marine Band, the question of the emoluments of that excellent organization is unfortunately involved in some doubt. (Keppler v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cls., 482, 485.)

The band at the Military Academy, popularly known as the West Point Band, was once one of fifteen bands, all upon the same footing; but since the act of March 3, 1869, has been the only military band in the Army of the United States. Members of that band are allowed the pay of engineer soldiers; it is well settled that what the officers and enlisted men of the Army receive, the officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps shall likewise receive. Members of the Marine Band, under section 1612, Revised Statutes, are entitled to the pay of "enlisted men of like grades in the infantry of the Army." The only enlisted men of like grades in the infantry of the Army were, at the time of the enactment, the members of the West Point Band. Held, that members of the Marine Band are entitled to the same retained pay as received by members of the West Point Band and engineer soldiers. (Patyschke v. U. S., 31 Ct. Cls., 384.)

Allowances of second leader.—The "second leader" of the Marine Band is entitled by statute to the allowances of a sergeant major. By Army Regulations sergeants major are entitled to quarters at the rate of one room, and by the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1167), they are entitled to heat and light for the same. (Smith v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 313.)

No quarters being available for the second leader at the Marine Barracks, held that he is not entitled to commutation therefor, not being a commissioned officer, but only ranking as an enlisted man, and no statute or regulation providing for commutation of quarters for enlisted men of the Army. (Smith v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 313.)

By act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 388), an appropriation was made for the hire of quarters for certain enlisted men employed in the office of the Marine Corps in Washington, including the leader of the band, but no appropriation was made for quarters for the second leader, and in the absence of express appropriation therefor quarters can not be hired for him. (Smith v. U. S., 47 Ct. Cls., 313.)

Sec. 1614. [Deduction for hospitals.] The Secretary of the Navy shall deduct from the pay due each of the officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps at the rate of twenty cents per month for every officer and marine, to be applied to the fund for Navy hospitals.—(2 Mar., 1799, c. 36, s. 2, v. 1, p. 729. 26 Feb., 1811. c. 26, s. 1, v. 2, p. 650.)

Similar provision is made by section 4808, Revised Statutes.

See section 1586, Revised Statutes, and note thereto, as to medicine and medical attendance.

A clerk to a commandant of a navy yard is neither an officer, enlisted man, nor marine, and the Secretary of the Navy is not authorized under section 1614, to deduct 20 cents per month from his pay. Such a clerk is not entitled to reimbursement for medicines and medical attendance. (1 Comp. Dec., 289. But see 25 Comp. Dec., 745, in which clerks to commandants were held to be officers of the Navy in another connection.)

Sec. 1615. [Rations of enlisted men.] The non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians of the Marine Corps shall, each, be entitled to receive one Navy ration daily.—(1 July, 1797, c. 7, s. 6, v. 1, p. 524. 11 July, 1798, c. 72, s. 2, v. 1, p. 595.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat., 1189), under "Provisions, Marine Corps," as follows: "Hereafter no law shall be construed to entitle enlisted men on shore duty to any rations or commutation thereof other than such as are now or may hereafter be allowed enlisted men in the Army: Provided, That when it is impracticable or the expense is found greater to supply marines serving on shore duty in the island possessions and on foreign stations with the Army ration, such marines may be allowed the Navy ration or commutation thereof." (It had previously been provided by a clause in the annual naval appropriation act of March 2, 1891, and subsequent years, under "Provisions, Marine Corps," that "no law shall be construed to entitle enlisted marines on shore duty to any rations or commutation thereof other than such as now are or may hereafter be allowed enlisted men in the Army." Commencing with the act of Mar. 3, 1901, there was added to this clause in the annual appropriation act, the following proviso: "That when it is impracticable or the expense is found greater to supply marines serving on shore duty in the island possessions and on foreign stations with the Army ration, such marines may be allowed the Navy ration or commutation thereof." These clauses were thereafter repeated annually, until the act of Mar. 4, 1917, above quoted, in which they were made permanent legislation by the use of the word "hereafter.") Amendment was also made to this section by act of July 11, 1919 (41 Stat., 154).

By act of May 18, 1920, section 5 (41 Stat., 602), it was provided "that all noncommissioned officers of the Army of grade of color sergeant and above as fixed by existing Army Regulations and noncommissioned officers of the Marine Corps of corresponding grades shall be entitled to one ration or commutation thereof in addition to that to which they are now entitled. The commutation value shall be determined by the President on July 1 of each fiscal year, and for the current fiscal year the value shall be computed on the basis of 55 cents per ration." By section 13 of the same act (41 Stat., 604), it was provided that this provision shall remain effective until June 30, 1922, unless sooner amended or repealed. By act of June 4, 1920, section 4 (41 Stat., 761), establishing new grades and pay for enlisted men (noted under sec. 1612, R. S., under "Army laws applicable to Marine Corps"), it was provided that "the temporary allowance of rations authorized by section 5" of the act approved May 18, 1920, "shall apply only to enlisted men of the first three grades."

"Commutation of rations to recruiting parties, and enlisted men traveling on special duty, at such rate as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe," is authorized by clause in the annual naval appropriation act under "Provisions, Marine Corps." (Act June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 831.)

Rations of enlisted men of the Navy: See sections 1579-1585, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto.

Rations are "allowance" and not "pay."—The clause referring to additional ration or commutation thereof, in section 5 of the act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat., 602), which, under section 4 of the Army reorganization act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 761), shall apply only to enlisted men of the Army and Marine Corps of the first three grades, became effective from May 18, 1920, such additional ration being an allowance, and not one of the increases of pay which, under said act of May 18, 1920, became effective from January 1, 1920. (27 Comp. Dec., 31.)

Commutation defined.—Commutation in the military or naval service is money paid in substitution of something to which an officer, sailor, or soldier is entitled. Being regulated by statute, commutation can not be allowed by inferior authority. (Jaegle v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 133.)

Under a usage in the Marine Corps, musicians at their option were allowed to take the cost price of their rations, instead of being subsisted on the rations issued. This payment to musicians of the cost price of rations was not commu-

tation, but was virtually a purchase of the rations from them at the invoice price, and a musician who elected to take the price instead of subsistence in kind was not thereafter entitled to the commutation price of a Navy ration prescribed by Revised Statutes section 1585, notwithstanding that the money paid to him was not the commutation price of the Navy ration prescribed by sections 1580 and 1581, Revised Statutes, but was the actual cost of an inferior ration which during his period of service was issued to the corps. (Jaegle v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 133.)

Commutation is not necessarily equal to the value of the thing for which it is a substitute, but is supposed to be in the general average of cases a fair equivalent. (Jaegle v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 133.)

The principle which governs the commutation of rations in lieu of subsistence is that commutation will not be allowed where subsistence in kind is provided by the Government. (Jaegle v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 133.)

Rations of officers.—An officer of the Marine Corps attached to a seagoing vessel is not entitled to the ration allowed by Revised Statutes, section 1578, to a naval officer so attached. Such an officer is, by section 1612, subjected to the provisions of section 1269. Commissioned officers of the Army are not allowed rations, although they are allowed to the noncommissioned officers and enlisted men by section 1293. (Reid v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 625.)

Subsistence of enlisted men.—The expenses necessarily growing out of the transportation and subsistence of marines detailed for the Navy Department's exhibit at the World's Columbian Exposition may be paid from the fund provided for the Marine Corps and its subsistence. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 577.)

Sec. 1616. [Service on armed vessels.] Marines may be detached for service on board the armed vessels of the United States, and the President may detach and appoint, for service on said vessels, such of the officers of said corps as he may deem necessary.—(1 July, 1797, c. 7, s. 4, v. 1, p. 523. 11 July, 1798, c. 72, ss. 1, 3, v. 1, p. 595.)

By act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 773), making appropriations for pay of the Marine Corps for the ensuing fiscal year, it was provided "that no part of the appropriations herein made for the Marine Corps shall be expended for the purpose for which said appropriations are made unless officers and enlisted men shall serve as heretofore on board all battleships and armored cruisers, and also upon such other vessels of the navy as the President may direct, in detachments of not less than eight per centum of the strength of the enlisted men of the Navy on said vessels." (This proviso was not repeated in subsequent years.)

"When a force of marines is embarked on a naval vessel, or vessels, as a separate organization, not a part of the authorized complement thereof, the authority and powers of the officers of such separate organization of marines shall be the same as though such organization were serving at a navy yard on shore, but nothing herein shall be construed as impairing the paramount authority of the commanding officer of any naval vessel over the vessel under his command and all persons embarked thereon." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 586.)

Power of Congress to regulate duty of Marine Corps.—The Attorney General entertains no doubt as to the constitutionality of the clause contained in the naval appropriation act of March 3, 1909 (above quoted). If the President, as Commander in Chief, desires to direct the Marine Corps to perform any function which shall involve the application of the appropriation therein made, he must direct that officers and enlisted men of the corps shall serve as theretofore on board all battleships and armored cruisers, and upon such other vessels as he may direct, in detachments of not less than eight per centum of the strength of the enlisted men of the Navy on said vessels. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 259.)

Inasmuch as Congress has power to create or not to create, as it shall deem expedient, a Marine Corps, it has power to create such corps and make appropriation for its pay, but provide that such appropriation shall not be available unless the corps be employed in some designated way. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 259.)

See cases noted under Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 1, as to powers of the President as Commander in Chief.

Accounts of marines carried on vessels; serving on shore.—Marines doing duty in Cuba, whose pay accounts were kept on the paymaster's books of a vessel for convenience, but who were never attached to the vessel for naval duty, were not entitled to share in the bounty awarded said vessel. Never having served on the vessel, they could not be considered to be temporarily absent therefrom within the meaning of section 4633, Revised Statutes, which provided that "no officer or other person who shall have been temporarily absent on duty from a vessel on the books of which he continued to be borne, while so absent, shall be deprived, in consequence of such absence, of any prize money to which he would otherwise be entitled." (Engagement off Santiago Bay, 36 Ct. Cls., 200.)

The words "detached" and "detach" are undoubtedly used in this section in their proper military significance. Marines on board the armed vessels of the United States are for the time being out of their normal relations to the Marine Corps and removed from the direct command of those officers who would otherwise exercise such direct command under the law. (File 21277, Mar. 31, 1906; see note to sec. 1617.)

Sec. 1617. [Command of navy yards or vessels.] No officer of the Marine Corps shall exercise command over any navy-yard or vessel of the United States.—(30 June, 1834, c. 132, s. 4, v. 4, p. 713.)

Commandants of navy yards to be selected "from officers not below the grade of commander." (Sec. 1542, R. S.; see note to that section.)

The President is authorized "to formulate appropriate rules governing assignments to command of vessels and squadrons." (Act Mar. 3, 1901, 31 Stat., 1133; see note to sec. 1529, R. S.)

Purpose of section.—It seems clear that the act of June 30, 1834, embodied in this section, was passed to avoid the danger lest an officer of marines, who might be altogether ignorant of navigation and inexperienced in nautical matters, should find himself accidentally the officer of highest rank on board a ship and claim the command by virtue of his rank. Navy yards were evidently included in the terms of the act of 1834 because the objections to the exercise of command over them on the part of officers of marines, although less in degree, were the same in kind as those existing to the exercise of like command by such officers over ships of war. (File 21277, Mar. 31, 1906.)

Rank of officer immaterial.—Whatever the rank of a marine officer, he is always subject to the orders of the captain of the ship or the commandant of the navy yard on or at which he serves. (File 21277, Mar. 31, 1906.)

Authority of higher officers of corps.—Certain higher officers of the corps not only may legally but are evidently intended by this law to exercise some measure of authority over those officers and enlisted men who may be "detached" for service on board vessels or at navy yards; as they may and indeed must exercise a like measure of authority over any of the forces who may be detached for service with the Army under section 1621. (File 21277, Mar. 31, 1906.)

Jurisdiction at naval stations.—It will be noted that this statute refers only to navy yards, and does not apply to naval stations which are not navy yards, and moreover that it does not prohibit the exercise of command within a ship or within a navy yard by officers of marines; it merely provides that they shall not have command "over" the ship or "over" the yard. (File 21277, Mar. 31, 1906.)

"No officer of the Marine Corps shall exercise command over any naval station of the United States." (Navy. Regs., 1913, art. 4101, par. 6. See also file 5530, Nov. 8, 1906.)

While section 1617 refers only to navy yards and vessels, and "does not apply to naval stations which are not navy yards," nevertheless the Marine Corps is at all times subject to the regulations for the government of the Navy, except in the single contingency of being detached and assigned temporarily to duty with the Army; and as the Navy Regulations provide that no officer of the Marine Corps shall exercise command over any station, held that a marine officer could not exercise command over the naval station, Hawaii, by succession, in the absence of line officers of the Navy. (File 5530, Nov. 8, 1906.)

Marine brigade, Philippine Islands.—The officer commanding the marine brigade in the Philippines should have full command over so much of this force as is not "detached" for duty on board any armed vessel or at any navy yard. There is no legal impediment to his exercising authority for administrative or disciplinary purposes over the detachments which are on duty at navy yards, or in giving him control for such purposes over all the marines on duty in the Philippines. (File 21277, Mar. 31, 1906.)

The officer in command of the marine brigade in the Philippines is subject to the orders of the commander of the Philippine squadron, as well as of the commander in chief of the Asiatic fleet. (File 21277, Mar. 31, 1906.)

Sec. 1618. [Marines substituted for landsmen.] The President may substitute marines for landsmen in the Navy, as far as he may deem it for the good of the service.—(3 Mar., 1849, c. 103, s. 1, v. 9, p. 377.)

"The Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to establish such grades and ratings as may be necessary for the proper administration of the enlisted personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps." (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 7, 41 Stat., 836.)

The transfer of marines to the Hospital Corps of the Navy is authorized by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 572), which also authorizes similar transfers from the Hospital Corps to the Marine Corps.

Sec. 1619. [Duty on shore.] The Marine Corps shall be liable to do duty in the forts and garrisons of the United States, on the sea-coast, or any other duty on shore, as the President, at his discretion, may direct.—(11 July, 1798, c. 72, s. 6, v. 1, p. 596.)

See notes to sections 1616, 1617, and 1621, Revised Statutes.

Normal duty of marines.—This section indicates what are the duties of the Marine Corps under normal conditions contemplated by its organization. (File 21277, Mar. 31, 1906.)

Sec. 1620. [Regulations.] The President is authorized to prescribe such military regulations for the discipline of the Marine Corps as he may deem expedient.—(30 June, 1834, c. 132, s. 8, v. 4, p. 713.)

As to regulations in general, see sections 161 and 1547, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto.

As to regulations governing the Marine Corps, see section 1621, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Post exchanges.—Navy regulations authorizing the establishment of post exchanges in the Marine Corps conflict with no law. A post exchange so established is not a voluntary association but an institution established by the Government for the benefit of commissioned officers and enlisted men. A disbursing officer of the Marine Corps who receives money from enlisted men under such regulations is as responsible for it as for any other money confided to his care. The Government has such an interest in the funds of the post exchange as to justify a deduction of the pay of the disbursing officer in charge in order to reimburse the enlisted men for their losses incurred by reason of his neglect and want of care. (Woog v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cls., 80.)

Sec. 1621. [When detached for service with the Army.] The Marine Corps shall, at all times, be subject to the laws and regulations established for the government of the Navy, except when detached for service with the Army by order of the President; and when so detached they shall be subject to the rules and articles of war prescribed for the government of the Army.—(11 July, 1798, c. 72, s. 4, v. 1, p. 595. 30 June, 1834, c. 132, s. 2, v. 4, p. 713.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 651), now embodied in act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 787–812), prescribing new Articles of War, article 2 of which provides that “the following persons are subject to these articles and shall be understood as included in the term ‘any person subject to military law,’ or ‘persons subject to military law,’ whenever used in these articles: * * * (c) Officers and soldiers of the Marine Corps when detached for service with the armies of the United States by order of the President: Provided, That an officer or soldier of the Marine Corps when so detached may be tried by military court-martial for an offense committed against the laws for the government of the naval service prior to his detachment, and for an offense committed against these articles he may be tried by a naval court-martial after such detachment ceases.”

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 573), it was provided that “officers and enlisted men of the Medical Department of the Navy, serving with a body of marines detached for service with the Army in accordance with the provisions of section sixteen hundred and twenty-one of the Revised Statutes, shall, while so serving, be subject to the rules and articles of war prescribed for the government of the Army in the same manner as the officers and men of the Marine Corps while so serving.”

“Commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, detached for duty with the Army under the provisions of section sixteen hundred and twenty-one, Revised Statutes, shall be eligible, in the same manner as officers of the Regular Army, for temporary promotion to higher grades in any of the forces provided by the Act entitled ‘An Act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,’ approved May eighteenth, nineteen hundred and seventeen: Provided, That officers of the Marine Corps temporarily promoted to higher grades in any of the forces of the Army under the provisions of this Act shall not thereby vacate their permanent appointments or commissions or be prejudiced in their relative lineal standing in the Marine Corps: Provided further, That temporary vacancies in the Marine Corps caused by the appointment of officers to higher grades in the Army shall be temporarily filled in the same manner as is now prescribed by law: And provided further, That the temporary promotions herein authorized shall continue only while such officers are detached for duty with the Army.” (Act Jan. 12, 1919, 40 Stat., 1054.)

See section 1135, Revised Statutes, as to supplies and transportation for marine detachments cooperating with land troops.

The Secretary of War was authorized and directed to transfer to the Secretary of the Navy, for the use of the Marine Corps without payment therefor, such reserve stock of clothing, arms, equipment, and other necessary military supplies, inventoried at the cost to the Army, and not to exceed in the aggregate $7,000,000, as the same may from time to time be requisitioned. (Act Feb. 25, 1919, 40 Stat., 1174.)

Jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Navy.—The Secretary of the Navy is the organ through which the President, who is commander in chief, makes known his will to the Navy. Whether the Marine Corps shall be doing service on shipboard or on shore, the President's orders may properly pass through the Secretary of the Navy to it, except where the corps shall have been incorporated with the Army for a given service on land. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 380.)

The Marine Corps belonging to the naval establishment, and the orders issued by the Secretary of the Navy being, in contemplation of law, the orders of the President, it follows that the Secretary may suspend, modify, or rescind any order issued by the commandant of the corps or any subordinate officer, except where a direct authority has been given by Congress to an officer to perform any particular function, such as to order courts-martial in certain cases. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 380.)

In the absence of a special order from the President detaching the Marine Corps for service with the Army, the office of commandant of the Marine Corps is under the direct supervision and control of the Secretary of the Navy, and in the event of a vacancy its duties may be performed by the Secretary or by the Acting Secretary. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 486, 490.)

The Secretary of the Navy has authority, under section 1621, to detail men to guard and protect property of the Government placed on exhibition at the World's Columbian Exposition; the cost of transportation and sustenance of such detail must be paid from the fund provided for the Marine Corps and its subsistence, and is only limited by the consideration of the question whether there are sufficient funds available for that purpose, as to which the Secretary is the sole judge. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 576.)

Not a bureau of the Navy Department.—The Marine Corps is a part of the naval establishment, but it is not part of the Navy Department as established at the seat of government; it is under the supervision of an executive department, but that relation to the department is not the same as being part of it. The Navy Department is established by section 415, Revised Statutes, and section 419 establishes certain bureaus among which is to be distributed the business of the department; the Marine Corps is not one of the bureaus, and there is no law making it a bureau, office, or branch of the Navy Department. (11 Comp. Dec., 558; see also 28 Op. Atty. Gen., 487, where this question suggested but not decided.)

Jurisdiction over Marine Corps when serving alone.—This section clearly subjects the Marine Corps when serving alone and without the cooperation of either the Army or Navy, to the laws and regulations established for the government of the latter. (File 21277, Mar. 31, 1906.)

Normal status of Marine Corps part of the Navy.—See notes to sections 761, 1418, and 1422, Revised Statutes.

Does the Marine Corps belong to the Army or the Navy? Its name would seem to answer this question. It is called a marine corps; its characteristic action, then, is to perform duty at sea; and by its primary and fundamental character, therefore, it belongs to the Navy. It is true that the President may order it to perform service on shore; but it would still be the marine corps performing service on shore. The order directing it to such service would pass through the Secretary of the Navy, as would all the President's orders while engaged in such service, while its action was single or separate from that of the Army. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 380); compare 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 353, 354, where it is stated that the Marine Corps is more assimilated to the Army proper than to the naval branch of our military establishment.)

The act of July 1, 1797 (1 Stat., 523), "providing a naval armament," assigns to each ship, besides mariners, and so forth, a certain number of marines. The duty of marines is exclusively maritime; for sea service only. By this act they have no connection with the Army, in character of duty to be performed. Here they are not amphibious. The next act on the subject of the Marine Corps is that "for establishing and organizing a Marine Corps" of July 11, 1798 (1 Stat., 594). The use of the words in this act, "in addition to the present military establishment, there shall be raised a corps of marines," and so forth, did not constitute the marines in fact part of the military establishment, nor make applicable to the Marine Corps general provisions relating to the Army; nor did this follow from the last section of that act, authorizing the President to employ the marines on shore, and so forth. The marines were a body known to the law by act of July 1, 1797, as a purely maritime or naval force; and the enlargement of that force or the assigning to them of duties on shore, does not necessarily identify them with the Army, and those words could not have the effect of constituting as part of the Army, a force governed by different rules and regulations, and destined to a service unknown to and incompatible with the character and duties and service of the Army. The marines are certainly a military force as well as the Army, and are in addition to the then existing military establishment. It is to be remarked, also, that although the marines may be compelled to do duty on shore, it is not part of their ordinary duty but at the discretion of the President as in case of the invasion of the territories of an enemy's coast by a naval force the seamen may be compelled to do the duty of soldiers or marines at the discretion of the commander of the ship or squadron. (U. S. v. Kuhn, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,545, pp. 821, 822.)

The Marine Corps are at all times subject to the laws and regulations established for the better government of the Navy, except when detached for service with the Army by order of the President. They are organized, as the name implies, for sea service, and are subject to the direction and control of the Secretary of the Navy. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 116, 118; see also, 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 129.)

Although marines are not in some senses, "seamen," and their duties are in some respects different, yet they are, while employed on board public vessels, persons in the naval service, persons subject to the orders of naval officers, persons under the government of the naval code as to punishment, and persons amenable to the Navy Department. Their very name of "marines" indicates the place and nature of their duties generally. And besides the analogies of their duties in other countries, their first creation here to serve on board ships expressly declared them to be a part "of the crews of each of said ships" (act Mar. 27, 1794, 1 Stat., 350, sec. 4). Their pay was also to be fixed in the same way as that of seamen (sec. 6, p. 351). So it was again, by the act of April 27, 1798 (1 Stat., 552). And they have ever since been associated with the Navy, except when specially detailed by the President for service in the Army (see act July 11, 1798, 1 Stat., 595, 596). Thus paid, thus serving, and thus governed like and with the Navy, it is certainly no forced construction to consider them as embraced in the spirit of the act under consideration by the description of persons "enlisted for the Navy." (Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 89. See note below, under "Navy laws held applicable to Marine Corps.")

The act of June 30, 1834 (4 Stat., 713), adds much strength to these conclusions. By section 2 it provides "that the said corps shall at all times be subject to and under the laws and regulations which are or may hereafter be established for the better government of the Navy," etc. That corps thus in some respects became still more closely identified with the Navy. (Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 89.)

The Marine Corps occupies a position intermediate in some respects between the Army and the Navy. (See secs. 1616, 1619, 1620, and 1621, R. S.) It would thus seem to be, to some extent, an independent organization. There are several sections of the Revised Statutes which refer to it distinctively, apart from the naval service (see secs. 1551, 1596, 1600, 1609, 1612, 1617). Notwithstanding this intermediate character of the Marine Corps, and these several provisions allying it in several respects with the military service, held that it is properly classed with and is a part of the naval service of the United States. (In re Doyle, 18 Fed. Rep., 369, citing 1 Op. Atty. Gen., 381; 11 Op. Atty. Gen., 100; 10 Op. Atty. Gen., 118, 129; In re Bailey, 2 Taney, 200.)

In various acts of Congress making appropriations the Marine Corps are frequently referred to as a part of the naval service, and are sometimes described as "marines of the United States Navy" (see 10 Stat., 100; 22 Stat., 472, 479, 589, 284). In the revision of the statutes, the Marine Corps is provided for by chapter 9 of Title XV, "The Navy," while "The Army" is the subject of Title XIV. (In re Doyle, 18 Fed. Rep., 369.)

The military establishment of this country is divided by the general laws of the United States into the Army and the Navy, and over each of these one of the great heads of departments, called secretaries, is appointed to preside, to manage and to administer its affairs. The Marine Corps is a military body, designed to perform military services; and while they are not necessarily performed on board ships, their active service in time of war is chiefly in the Navy, and accompanying or aiding naval expeditions. In time of peace they are located in navy yards, mainly, although occasionally they may be used in forts and arsenals belonging more immediately to the Army. The statutes of the United States, in prescribing the duties which they may be required to perform, have not been very clear in any expression which goes to show how far these services are to be rendered under the control of the officers of the Navy or of the Army. It is clear that they may be ordered to service in either branch; but taking all these statutes and the practice of the Government together, held that they are a military body, primarily belonging to the Navy and under the control of the head of the naval department, with liability to be ordered to service in connection with the Army and in that case under the command of Army officers. (U. S. v. Dunn, 120 U. S., 249.)

It must be conceded that the Marine Corps, a military body in the regular service of the United States, occupies something of an anomalous position, and is often spoken of in statutes which enumerate "the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps," or "the Army and the Marine Corps," or "the Navy and the Marine Corps," in a manner calculated and intended to point out that it is not identical with either the Army or the Navy. And this argument is the one very much pressed to show that service in the Marine Corps is not service in the Army or in the Navy. On the other hand, the services rendered by that corps are always of a military character, and are rendered as part of the duties to be performed by either the Army or the Navy. If there are services prescribed for that corps by the statutes of the United States, or the regulations of either the Army or the Navy, which are not performed in immediate connection with the Army or the Navy, and under the control of the heads of the Army or Navy, either civil or military, the court is not aware of them. (U. S. v. Dunn, 120 U. S., 249.)

The provisions of the Revised Statutes (secs. 1599, 1600, 1613, 1614, 1615, 1616, 1621, and 1623), bringing together the enactments of Congress on the subject of the Marine Corps, show that the primary position of that body in the military service is that of a part of the Navy, and its chief control is placed under the Secretary of the Navy, there being exceptions when it may, by order of the President or some one having proper authority, be placed more immediately, for temporary duty, with the Army and under the command of superior Army officers. (U. S. v. Dunn, 120 U. S., 249.)

Whatever view may be taken, the Marine Corps can not be considered as a distinct military organization, independent of the departments of the Army and Navy, and under the supervision and control of neither of them, having no superior outside of its own officers except the President. While it may be true that it is not so exclusively a part of the Navy as ships and navy yards are, yet its general supervision and control remain with the Navy Department. (U. S. v. Dunn, 120 U. S., 249.)

The statutes relating to the Marine Corps, and decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, reviewed and held: "These provisions, together with many others that might be cited, indicate beyond doubt that the Marine Corps in the contemplation of Congress constitutes a constituent part of the naval service of the country, subject to the laws and regulations that govern that arm of the service, and this, we think, has been so held by the Supreme Court of the United States." (Elliott v. Harris, 24 App. D. C., 11; file 10245-03; followed and applied by Navy Department Aug. 19, 1913, file 26251-6297: 4&5; compare, McCalla v. Facer, 144 U. S., 61, noted under sec. 1418, R. S.)

The military establishment of the United States consists of three principal organizations, the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps. Each has an organization distinct from that of the others, as plainly appears in the Revised Statutes; and each is the subject of distinct annual appropriations by Congress. (19 Op. Attv. Gen., 616, 618, 619.)

The organization of the Marine Corps is assimilated to that of the Army, but its sphere of duty is mostly on board ships or at naval stations on land, and it may be called the police of the Navy; while on the other hand it is always liable to be ordered to service in conjunction with the Army, and is subject to the Articles of War or the Articles for the Government of the Navy, according as it serves with the one or the other of these branches of the service. (19 Op. Attv. Gen., 616, 618, 619.)

That the Marine Corps has a closer affinity with the Navy than with the Army is manifest both from its designation and from section 1621 of the Revised Statutes. According to this section, the service of the Marine Corps with the Navy is its usual and regular service, while that with the Army is unusual and exceptional. This view was substantially adopted by the Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Dunn and Wilkes v. Dinsman, above noted. (19 Op. Attv. Gen., 616, 618, 619.)

The Marine Corps, though a distinct organization from the Army or Navy is nevertheless subject to the laws and regulations for the government of the Navy, except when detached for service with the Army by order of the President (sec. 1621, R. S.). In relation to rank, the officers of the Marine Corps shall be on the same footing as officers of similar grades in the Army (sec. 1603). And they shall take the same oath prescribed for officers and enlisted men of the Army (sec. 1609). By section 1622, commissioned officers of the Marine Corps shall be retired in like cases, etc., as officers of the Army, except as provided in section 1623. The noncommissioned officers, privates and musicians of the Marine Corps are, by section 1615, entitled to receive one Navy ration daily, and by section 1617 it is provided that no officer of the Marine Corps shall exercise command over any navy yard or vessel of the United States. By section 1616 the officers and enlisted men of the corps are subject to duty on board the armed vessels of the United States; and by section 1619 the corps shall be liable to do duty in the forts and garrisons of the United States or other duty on shore, etc. Terms of enlistment in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps are prescribed by sections 1119, 1418, and 1608, respectively. In Wilkes v. Dinsman (above noted), the court, construing act of March 2, 1837 (5 Stat., 157), providing for enlistments in the Navy, held that the words "any person enlisted for the Navy" includes marines; see also, United States v. Dunn (above noted). It will thus be seen that the status of the Marine Corps is a variable one, and though subject to the laws and regulations established for the government of the Navy, except when detached by the President for service with the Army, they are, in relation to rank, oath, pay, and retirement, assimilated to the Army and subject to the direction of the President they may, under section 1619, be detached for service with the Army anywhere in the United States. (Walton v. U. S., 31 Ct. Cls., 196.)

A perusal of Revised Statutes, section 1612, 1621, and 1622, will indicate the somewhat anomalous position occupied by the Marine Corps in the military service. It looks to the Army statutes for its rate of pay and to the Navy for its laws and regulations, except where detached for service with the Army, and the same uncertainty as to its position runs all through the statutes relating to the Army and Navy. Nevertheless, generally speaking and as its name indicates the Marine Corps is a part of the Navy. It is that part of the Navy which may on occasions become a part of the Army. The courts have kept this fact in mind in the construction of statutes relating to the military service. (Jonas v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 281.)

The Marine Corps is clearly organized under the authority conferred by clause 13 of section 8 of Article I of the Constitution, which declares that the Congress "shall have power to provide and maintain a Navy," and it is governed under so much of the authority conferred by clause 14 of the same section as empowers the Congress "to make rules for the government and regulation of the * * * naval forces." This conclusion is established by the decision of the Supreme Court in Wilkes v. Dinsman (above noted), in which it was determined that a private in the Marine Corps was a "person enlisted for the Navy" in the language of the act under consideration in that case. That decision was cited with approval in United States v. Dunn (above noted). These two decisions support the statement made by the Attorney General while Secretary of the Navy, that "its legal status is, beyond a doubt or question, a part of the naval forces of the country, if not a part of the Navy in its strictest sense." (27 Op. Attv. Gen., 90.)

The Marine Corps has a composition and primary organization distinct from those of both the Army and the Navy, pursuant to chapter 9, Title XV of the Revised Statutes; but that chapter itself is a part of the title concerning the Navy. In United States v. Dunn (noted above), the Supreme Court states what the Revised Statutes, section 1621, makes altogether clear: that the Marine Corps is a part of the naval establishment, and is subject to the laws and regulations for the government of the Navy save in the single case when it has been detached for service with the Army by order of the President. Nothing but such order by the President or by his authority can alter the ordinary connection of the Marine Corps with the Navy and connect that corps with the Army. (28 Op. Attv. Gen., 15, 17.)

The statutes recognize the Marine Corps as part of the Navy; the Marine Corps is carried upon the Navy Register, and the Navy Regulations assign their duties, except where detached for duty in the Army. (Harlee v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 342. Compare Reid v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 625.)

The recent trend of legislation, and departmental regulations, as well as decisions of the courts and executive departments, has been in the direction of fixing the status of the Marine Corps even more definitely as an integral part of the naval service than was the case in prior years. (File 5252-66, May 13, 1915, citing, inter alia, act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 403). "that hereafter the number of enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps provided for shall be construed to mean the daily average number of enlisted men in the naval service during the fiscal year.")

There is properly speaking no warrant in law for regarding the Marine Corps as an anomalous body, intermediate between the Army and Navy, and having relations with both. It is true that the Marine Corps is assimilated to the Army in some respects, as by sections 1604, 1609, 1612, 1622 of the Revised Statutes, and the act of July 28, 1892 (27 Stat., 321); but its legal status is beyond a doubt or question a part of the naval forces of the country, if not a part of the Navy in the strictest sense. (File 21277, Mar. 31, 1906; quoted in 27 Op. Atty. Gen., 90.)

Giving to the word "detached" in section 1621, the same appropriate significance which it has in section 1616, it becomes evident that service with the Army and consequent subjection to the Articles of War is regarded as an exceptional and abnormal condition for the Marine Corps, as clearly as it would be for a force of blue-jackets landed and placed temporarily under the orders of an Army officer. (File 21277, Mar. 31, 1906.)

Status when detached for service with the Army.—The law is well settled that members of the Marine Corps detached by the President for service with the Army are, while so serving, a part of the Army and not under naval jurisdiction. (File 26250-2335, Dec. 18, 1920.)

Section 1621 is explicit in saying that when detached by order of the President for service with the Army the Marine Corps shall be subject to the rules and articles of war prescribed for the government of the Army; and then, of course, it becomes a "corps of the Army" within the scope of the 122d article of war. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 15, 19; see note to sec. 1342, R. S.)

Where the President should, by order, incorporate it with an army for any given service on land, its identity as a Marine Corps, pro hac vice, would be lost in that of the Army, and the whole body become, for the time, one. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 380.)

Court-martial jurisdiction.—See article 2 of the Articles of War, quoted above under this section.

Whether an officer of the Marine Corps is liable to be tried by a naval court-martial or one composed of officers of the Army will depend upon whether the alleged misconduct took place while he was employed in the land service. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 706.)

Courts-martial of marine officers stationed on shore and convened under the Articles of War may try and sentence to suffer corporal punishment marines who have deserted from the public ships, although it would have been otherwise had the offense been committed while the marines were employed in any service upon the land, as in the latter case the abolition of corporal punishment by act of May 16, 1812, in reference to the Army would be applicable and exclude its infliction upon marines. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 187.)

Under Revised Statutes, section 1621, a private in a brigade of the Marine Corps is not, while that brigade is detached for service with the Army by order of the President, subject to the laws and regulations of the Navy, and a naval court-martial has no jurisdiction over him based on an act constituting an offense both by the rules and regulations of war prescribed for the government of the Army and the laws and regulations established for the government of the Navy. (U. S. ex rel. Davis v. Waller, 225 Fed. Rep., 673.)

Section 1621 may be construed as though it read: "The Marine Corps is subject to the Articles of War while on service with the Army by order of the President. At all other times it is subject to the laws and regulations of the Navy." (U. S. ex rel. Davis v. Waller, 225 Fed. Rep., 673.)

Granted that the status of the Marine Corps was at first doubtful. It rendered service at times with the Navy and at times with the Army, without being definitely or permanently attached to either department. Its "primary" relation was finally settled to be with the Navy, but it had special and temporary Army relations when on service with the Army. The early statutes gave recognition to this by providing that it should be subject to the laws and regulations of the Navy, except when detached by order of the President for service with the Army. Later the statutes added the clause contained in section 1621, that when so detached it should be subject to the Articles of War. This confirms the conclusion that Congress did not intend by section 1621 that a marine should be subject to trial by naval court-martial for an offense committed by him while detached for service with the Army. (U. S. ex rel. Davis v. Waller, 225 Fed. Rep., 673.)

Under section 1621, Revised Statutes, a marine detached for service with the Army and thereafter returned to the jurisdiction of the Navy could not be tried by a naval court-martial for an offense committed by him while detached for service with the Army, which was a violation of Army Regulations. The same laws and regulations which define the offense constitute and designate the court which is to try the offender. (U. S. ex rel. Davis v. Waller, 225 Fed. Rep., 673.)

The fifth regiment of marines was organized by direction of the President under Confidential Orders 28790-3, dated May 29, 1917, and was by said order detached for service with the Army in accordance with section 1621, Revised Statutes. No order having been issued detaching said regiment from duty with the Army and returning it to the jurisdiction of the Navy, it would appear that the Army has jurisdiction to try a member of that regiment by court-martial for offenses alleged to have been committed by him while an inmate of an Army hospital in this country to which he had been transferred after his return to the United States, having in the meantime been under treatment in naval hospitals in Norfolk and Brooklyn. The said private, not having been detached from duty with the Army and returned to naval jurisdiction, continued subject to Army jurisdiction. (File 27228-547, May 26, 1919.)

By War Department General Orders No. 96, July 30, 1919, it was provided: "By direction of the President, it is ordered that all officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps who have heretofore been detached for service with the Army in connection with the war against Germany and her allies, and who shall hereafter arrive in the United States shall, upon reporting at any station, post, camp, garrison, hospital, office, or other unit or organization of the Navy or Marine Corps for duty, forthwith stand detached from service with the Army and shall revert to their former status of duty with the Navy. All officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps who have been detached as aforesaid and who have heretofore arrived in the United States shall stand detached from service with the Army from this date, provided they have not already been returned to duty with the Navy. Officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps who are patients in Army hospitals shall not come under the provisions of this order until they shall have been discharged therefrom."

Jurisdiction to review proceedings of Army board.—The naval authorities are without jurisdiction to review the proceedings or action of the Army authorities in the case of a private in the Marine Corps who died August 29, 1919, while serving with the American Forces in France, an Army board having convened on September 29, 1919, and reported that his death was in the line of duty and not the result of his own misconduct, which said report was approved by the convening authority and forwarded to the commanding general, headquarters American Forces in France, by whom it was transmitted to the Adjutant General of the Army and thence to the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps. At the time of his death, said private had not been returned to the jurisdiction of the Navy as he was still with the American Forces in France and did not return to the United States. (File 26250-2335, Dec. 18, 1920. See War Dept. G. O. 96, July 30, 1919, quoted above under "Court-martial jurisdiction.")

Status when cooperating or traveling with Army.—The Articles of War do not operate to give the officers of the Marine Corps any authority to exercise command in the Army unless they have been detached for service with the Army by order of the President and are still serving with the Army under that order. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 15; see note to sec. 1342, R. S., as to art. 120 A. W.)

When any part of the Marine Corps is present with the Army and engaged in a common enterprise with it, without an order of the President detaching it for service with the Army, the case is one of cooperation and not of incorporation; and in such a case no officer of the Marine Corps can exercise command over the Army any more than a naval officer can when some part of the Navy is cooperating with the Army; and the converse is true of Army officers cooperating with the Marine Corps. The Marine Corps is a part of the Naval Establishment, and is subject to the laws and regulations for the government of the Navy save in the single instance when it has been detached for service with the Army by order of the President. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 15; see notes to secs. 1342 and 1466, R. S.)

Enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, while being transported on board an Army transport are subject to the rules and regulations of said transport, but are not amenable to trial by Army court-martial unless attached to the Army by Executive order. (File 26287-534, June 15, 1910.)

The statutes are clear that marines are not subject to the Articles of War unless detached for service with the Army by order of the President. It is equally clear that officers and enlisted men of the Navy are not under any circumstances subject to the Articles of War except while serving with marines detached for service with the Army by order of the President, as provided in the act of August 29, 1916 (quoted above, under this section). (Op. J. A. G., Army, Nov. 19, 1920, No. 250401, Navy Dept. file No. 26287-7305:1.)

Officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps traveling on Army transports, but not detached for service with the Army, although subject to Army Transport Regulations, are not subject to trial by Army courts-martial. (Op. J. A. G., Army, Nov. 19, 1920, No. 250401, Navy Dept. file No. 26287-7305:1.)

Under first views the Marine Corps is to be taken as an adjunct of the Navy; nor can it be supposed that the mere fact of its bodily presence upon the law would be sufficient to divest the service which may have been there performed of the substantial characteristics of naval service. How long soever such bodily presence may have been continued, it may still well be conceived to have brought with it constructively but essentially nothing but the fulfillment of naval duty. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 706.)

What laws and regulations are included by section 1621.—The term, "the better government of the Navy," as used in the law (now embodied in sec. 1621, R. S.), need not be restricted to mere punishment, or to courts-martial, but may include any provision by law intended to secure the safety of the crew and vessel, and insure due subordination and sound discipline in any exigency of the public service. (Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 89, holding that the law now embodied in sec. 1422, R. S., affecting terms of enlistment in the Navy, was applicable to Marine Corps.)

The obvious purpose of section 1621, Revised Statutes, is to provide rules for the discipline of the Marine Corps in the different spheres of duty (military and naval) in which it is liable to serve. Its language does not warrant the inference that it was intended thereby to subject that corps to any other laws and regulations of the Navy than such as relate to discipline and its maintenance. Within this category section 1493, Revised Statutes (relating to examinations for promotion in the Navy), does not fall. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 117, 118. See act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 611, extending sec. 1493, R. S., to the Marine Corps; and see note to sec. 1599, R. S., under "Laws relating to promotion construed.") does not provide that the board shall consist of officers of that corps, but simply that it shall consist of commissioned officers; this being a law for the government of the Navy within the meaning of the act of 1834 (sec. 1621, R. S.), held that the Secretary of the Navy, under the President, has full power to organize boards for the retirement of marine officers from officers of the Navy of senior rank, under section 17 of said act of 1861. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 129, 130.)

The effect of the act of June 30, 1834, section 2 (sec. 1621, R. S.), is to subject this corps to the operation of laws for the government of the Navy, except where by special enactment they are made subject to different laws, as, for instance, by the act of June 30, 1834, section 5, relating to pay and allowances. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 129.)

Navy laws held applicable to Marine Corps.—See notes to sections 761, 1418, and 1422, Revised Statutes, as to enlistments in the Marine Corps; note to section 1596, under "Computing number of officers;" and note to section 1599, under "Appointment of former student at Naval Academy."

The act of Congress passed March 2, 1837 (5 Stat., 153), authorized a reenlistment of marines to serve during the cruise then about to take place, they being included in the denomination of "persons enlisted for the Navy." Under the same act the commander of a squadron had power to detain a marine after the term of his enlistment expired, if in the opinion of the commander public interest required it. (Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 89. See sec. 1422, R. S., and note thereto.)

At the time of enlistment the Marine Corps being subject to such laws and regulations as might at any time be established for the better government of the Navy, it was a part of the contract of enlistment that the marine in this case should obey them whenever passed; it was, therefore, no objection to such laws that they were passed after his entering the service. (Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 89.)

The limitations in sections 1418 and 1419, Revised Statutes, undoubtedly apply to enlistments in the Marine Corps, under section 1608. (In re Doyle, 18 Fed. Rep., 369; see notes to sections cited.)

The Marine Corps is part of the naval service, in which minors over 18 years of age may be enlisted, under sections 1608 and 1418, 1419, 1420, and 1624 (art. 19), without the consent of their parents or guardians. (In re Doyle, 18 Fed. Rep., 369; see also Elliott v. Harris, 24 App. D. C., 11, followed by Navy Dept., Aug. 19, 1913, file 26251-6297: 4 & 5, with reference to unauthorized detention of enlisted men of the Marine Corps after expiration of enlistment to make good time lost by unauthorized absence as provided for in Army laws.)

Service by an officer of the Navy as an enlisted man in the Marine Corps is to be credited to him in calculating his longevity pay, under the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 472, 473), providing that "all officers of the Navy shall be credited with the actual time they may have served as officers or enlisted men in the regular or volunteer Army or Navy, or both," etc. (U. S. v. Dunn, 120 U. S., 249.)

The naval appropriation act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 328), authorizing enlisted men of the Navy by their voluntary agreement to extend their enlistments for a period of one, two, three, or four years, held applicable to enlisted men of the Marine Corps. (File 26507-214 : 8, Apr. 5, 1915, following Wilkes v. Dinsman, above noted. See also note to sec. 1418, R. S.)

The act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 410), authorizing appointments to the Naval Academy from "enlisted men of the Navy," held to authorize such appointments to be made from enlisted men of the Marine Corps. (File 5252-66, May 13, 1915.)

The provisions contained in the naval appropriation act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 940), creating a "United States naval reserve," did not authorize the creation of a Marine Corps reserve, for the reason that several provisions contained in said legislation clearly manifested that Congress did not intend to include the Marine Corps therein. (File 28550-1 : 3, June 15, 1915.)

Section 1563, Revised Statutes, which forms part of chapter 8 of Title XV, authorizing advances of pay to "persons in the naval service," has been invariably construed by the accounting officers as applying to marine officers. (See Reid v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 625.)

Navy laws held not applicable to Marine Corps.—An officer in the Marine Corps attached to a seagoing vessel is not entitled to the ration allowed by Revised Statutes, section 1578, to a naval officer so attached. (Reid v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 625.)

The term "Navy bands" as used in the statute under consideration, held not to include the Marine Band. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 90, noted under sec. 1613, R. S.)

The act of February 9, 1889 (25 Stat., 657), "to provide for the deposit of savings of seamen of the United States Navy," does not extend to enlisted men of the Marine Corps. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 616; see also 25 Op. Atty. Gen., 190.)

For other cases, see note to section 1418, Revised Statutes, under "Enlistments in the Marine Corps not governed by Navy laws"; and see note to section 1422, Revised Statutes, with respect of marine officers for Civil War service.

Intention of Congress.—In many cases statutes relating to the Navy are obviously inapplicable to the Marine Corps; either because of express language used therein or because of the manifest purpose of Congress as apparent from a reading of the law itself or from a consideration of the conditions and circumstances surrounding its enactment. The word "Navy" may be given an extended meaning to embrace the Marine Corps, as has been done in many cases, while on the other hand the facts of a particular case may be such as to show that it was used in a more restricted sense as referring to the Navy proper, as has likewise been held in many cases. Accordingly, each statute must be construed with reference to specific questions arising thereunder; and the word "Navy" thus being susceptible of two interpretations, it is always permissible to consider the purpose and spirit of the law, and the object which it was intended to accomplish, as indicated not only by the language used in the statute but by other recognized aids to interpretation. (File 5252-66, May 13, 1915; 28687-5, Aug. 29, 1916.)

It does not follow from the decisions holding that the word "Navy" includes the Marine Corps that Congress can not enact any law with reference to the Navy which does not, ipso iure, include the Marine Corps. On the contrary, the Navy Department fully recognizes the fact that many laws relating to the Navy are not intended to include the Marine Corps, and that the question is largely one of intent. (File 28687-5, Aug. 29, 1916.)

In nearly all cases where Congress intends to legislate with reference to the Marine Corps it designates it especially, even in cases where it might properly be held to be included by the term "Navy," as, for example, in the pension laws, and the laws establishing hospitals for the Navy; which shows that Congress has not always regarded the term Navy as a sufficiently clear designation for the Marine Corps. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 616, 620.)

The literal sense of the law is not necessarily its true sense; for if, by taking the law by its four corners, or by looking at it in the light of the circumstances in which it was passed, or by doing both, it appears that its meaning should be restricted or enlarged in order to carry out the intention of the legislature, it is the duty of the expounder to limit or amplify that meaning as the case may require. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 616, 618.)

In view of the peculiar and irregular position of the Marine Corps in the public service, it is not at all surprising that instances occur where legislation in terms confined to the Army and Navy has been held to include the officers and men of the Marine Corps. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 616, 619.)

It is quite safe to say that, in the absence of language or attendant circumstances indicating different intention, the term in a statute, "officers of the Navy," would not include officers of the Marine Corps, and "enlisted men of the Navy" would not include enlisted men of the Marine Corps. (27 Op. Atty. Gen., 90.)

Army laws held inapplicable to Marine Corps.—Section 1117, Revised Statutes, prohibiting enlistment of any person under 21 years in the military service of the United States, without the written consent of his parents or guardians, applies only to enlistments in the Army, and does not include the Marine Corps. (In re Doyle, 18 Feb. Rep., 369; see note to sec. 1418, R. S.)

have not the right or privilege of making such deposits with a paymaster of their branch of the service. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 190.)

If the act of February 9, 1889 (25 Stat., 657), providing for deposits by enlisted men of the Navy, could not properly be construed to apply to the Marine Corps, which is primarily a component part of the Navy, the sections of the Revised Statutes authorizing such deposits by enlisted men of the Army can not be so construed. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 190.)

The act of March 3, 1885 (23 Stat., 350), relating to reimbursement for losses of personal effects by persons in the Army, does not apply to the Marine Corps, which is governed in this respect by the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 962), relating to losses by persons in the naval service. (Harlee v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 342.)

The Army appropriation act of April 27, 1914 (38 Stat., 353, 354), providing that no enlistment shall be regarded as complete until the soldier shall have made good any time in excess of one day lost by unauthorized absences, does not apply to the Marine Corps, although a provision in the same paragraph, as to forfeiture of pay in certain cases of absence from duty, is applicable to the Marine Corps by virtue of section 1612, Revised Statutes. (Comp. Dec., June 3, 1914, 160 S. and A. Memo., 3250.)

The provisions of sections 2, 3, and 4 of the act of June 16, 1890, entitled "An Act to prevent desertions from the Army, and for other purposes," are not applicable to the Marine Corps. Section 2 relates to the terms of enlistment in the Army, and provides that soldiers discharged prior to expiration of enlistment shall not be entitled to certain allowances; section 3 provides for the arrest of deserters by civil officers; and section 4 authorizes the President to permit enlisted men to purchase their discharges in time of peace. However, section one of the same act, relating to the retention of certain pay until discharge, is applicable to the Marine Corps by virtue of section 1612, Revised Statutes. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 616.)

Section 1216, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of March 29, 1892 (27 Stat., 12), providing for the issuance of certificates of merit to enlisted men of the Army distinguishing themselves in the service, etc., does not apply to enlisted men of the Marine Corps, who are entitled to the benefits of a corresponding provision in section 1407, Revised Statutes, as amended. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 579.)

See United States v. Freeman (3 How., 556), noted under section 1604, Revised Statutes, under "Brevet pay and emoluments," which held that the words "officers of the Army" in an act of April 16, 1818, included officers of the Marine Corps; see also note to section 1622, Revised Statutes, as to retirement of officers for Civil War service.

Sec. 1622. [Retirement.] The commissioned officers of the Marine Corps shall be retired in like cases, in the same manner, and with the same relative conditions, in all respects, as are provided for officers of the Army, except as is otherwise provided in the next section.—(3 Aug., 1861, c. 42, ss. 15, 16, 17, v. 12, p. 289. 17 July, 1862, c. 200, s. 12, v. 12, p. 596. 21 Jan., 1870, c. 9, s.

l, v. 16, p. 62. 15 July, 1870, c. 294, s. 4, v. 16, p. 317. 10 June, 1872, c. 419, s. 1, v. 17, p. 378.)

ARMY LAWS APPLICABLE TO MARINE CORPS.

Age or length of service.—"When an officer has served forty consecutive years as a commissioned officer, he shall, if he makes application therefor to the President, be retired from active service and placed upon the retired list. When an officer has been thirty years in service, he may, upon his own application, in the discretion of the President, be so retired, and placed on the retired list." (Sec. 1243, R. S.)

"When any officer has served forty-five years as a commissioned officer, or is sixty-two years old, he may be retired from active service at the discretion of the President." (Sec. 1244, R. S.)

"When an officer has served forty years either as an officer or soldier in the regular or volunteer service, or both, he shall, if he make application therefor to the President, be retired from active service and placed on the retired list, and, when an officer is sixty-four years of age, he shall be retired from active service and placed on the retired list." (Act June 30, 1882, 22 Stat., 118.)

Nothing contained in the act of June 30, 1882 (above quoted), "shall be so construed as to prevent, limit, or restrict retirements from active service in the Army, as authorized by law in force at the date of the approval of said act, retirements under the provisions of said act of June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, being in addition to those theretofore authorized by law." (Act Mar. 3, 1883, 22 Stat., 457.)

"That hereafter no officer holding a rank above that of colonel shall be retired except for disability or on account of having reached the age of sixty-four years until he shall have served at least one year in such rank." (Act June 12, 1906, 34 Stat., 245.)

"In the case of officers of the Regular Army, in determining rights of retirement, active duty performed while under appointment from the United States Government, whether in the regular, provisional, or temporary forces, shall be credited to the same extent as service under a Regular Army commission." (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 51, 41 Stat., 785, amending act June 3, 1916, sec. 127, 39 Stat., 217. See also note to sec. 1600, R. S.)

Disability.—"When any officer has become incapable of performing the duties of his office, he shall be either retired from active service, or wholly retired from the service, by the President, as hereinafter provided." (Sec. 1245, R. S.)

Composition of board.—"The Secretary of War, under the direction of the President, shall, from time to time, assemble an Army retiring board, consisting of not more than nine nor less than five officers, two-fifths of whom shall be selected from the Medical Corps. The board, excepting the officers selected from the Medical Corps, shall be composed, as far as may be, of seniors in rank to the officer whose disability is inquired of." (Sec. 1246, R. S.)

See section 1623, Revised Statutes, as to composition of retiring board in the cases of Marine officers. See also act of March 4, 1916 (39 Stat., 1171), noted below, under "Laws relating specifically to Marine Corps," as to retiring boards on foreign stations.

Oath of members.—"The members of said board shall be sworn in every case to discharge their duties honestly and impartially." (Sec. 1247, R. S.)

Powers and duties.—"A retiring board may inquire into and determine the facts touching the nature and occasion of the disability of any officer who appears to be incapable of performing the duties of his office, and shall have such powers of a court-martial and of a court of inquiry as may be necessary for that purpose." (Sec. 1248, R. S.)

Findings.—"When the board finds an officer incapacitated for active service, it shall also find and report the cause which, in its judgment, has produced his incapacity, and whether such cause is an incident of service." (Sec. 1249, R. S.)

Revision by the President.—"The proceedings and decision of the board shall be transmitted to the Secretary of War, and shall be laid by him before the President for his approval or disapproval and orders in the case." (Sec. 1250, R. S.)

See act of June 8, 1880 (21 Stat., 164), noted below under "Laws relating specifically to Marine Corps," as to revision of retiring boards by the Judge Advocate General.

Disability incident to service.—"When a retiring board finds that an officer is incapacitated for active service, and that his incapacity is the result of an incident of service, and such decision is approved by the President, said officer shall be retired from active service and placed on the list of retired officers." (Sec. 1251, R. S.)

Disability not incident to service.—"When the board finds that an officer is incapacitated for active service, and that his incapacity is not the result of any incident of service, and its decision is approved by the President, the officer shall be retired from active service, or wholly retired from the service, as the President may determine. The names of officers wholly retired from the service shall be omitted from the Army Register." (Sec. 1252, R. S.)

Officers entitled to hearing.—"Except in cases where an officer may be retired by the President upon his own application, or by reason of his having served forty-five years, or of his being sixty-two years old, no officer shall be retired from active service, nor shall an officer, in any case, be wholly retired from the service, without a full and fair hearing before an Army retiring board, if, upon due summons, he demands it." (Sec. 1253, R. S.)

Retired rank.—"Officers hereafter retired from active service shall be retired upon the actual rank held by them at the date of retirement." (Sec. 1254, R. S.)

See laws noted below, under "Laws relating specifically to Marine Corps," as to retirement of officers with higher rank than that held on the active list.

By act of October 1, 1890, sec. 3 (26 Stat., 563), relating to examinations for promotion of officers of the Army below the rank of major, it was provided "that should the officer fail in his physical examination, and be found incapacitated for service by reason of physical disability contracted in line of duty he shall be retired with the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted." By act of June 3, 1916, section 24 (39 Stat., 183), existing laws requiring examinations of officers of the Army prior to promotion were extended "to include promotions to all grades below that of brigadier general." By act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 774), existing laws providing for the examination of officers of the Army for promotion were repealed, "except those relating to physical examination, which shall continue to be required for promotion to all grades below that of brigadier general * * *." (See laws and decisions noted under section 1599, R. S., as to qualifications for promotion. See also secs. 1493 and 1494, R. S., and notes thereto.)

"Any officer now holding office in any corps or department who shall hereafter serve as chief of a staff corps or department and shall subsequently be retired, shall be retired with the rank, pay, and allowances authorized by law for the retired of such corps or department chief." (Act Feb. 2, 1901, sec. 26, 31 Stat., 755.)

"Any officer who shall have served four years as chief of a branch, and who may subsequently be retired, shall be retired with the rank, pay, and allowances authorized by law for the grade held by him as such chief." (Act June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 762, sec. 4, amending act June 3, 1916, sec. 4, 39 Stat., 167.)

Retired pay.—"Officers retired from active service shall receive seventy-five per centum of the pay of the rank upon which they are retired." (Sec. 1274, R. S.)

"Officers wholly retired from the service, shall be entitled to receive, upon their retirement, one year's pay and allowances of the highest rank held by them, whether by staff or regimental commission, at the time of their retirement." (Sec. 1275, R. S.)

"That hereafter, except in case of officers retired on account of wounds received in battle, no officer now on the retired list shall be allowed or paid any further increase of longevity pay, and officers hereafter retired, except as herein provided, shall not be allowed or paid any further increase of longevity pay above that which has accrued at the date of their retirement." (Act Mar. 2, 1903, 32 Stat., 932.)

"That hereafter any retired officer of the Army who has been detailed to active duty, and who has since his retirement, served on active detail shall be entitled to increases of longevity pay, to be computed as provided by existing statute for the computation of longevity pay, for the time of his service before retirement and on active detail since his retirement." (Act May 12, 1917, 40 Stat., 48.)

"That hereafter any retired officer who has been or shall be detailed on active duty, shall receive the rank, pay, and allowances of the grade, not above that of major, that he would have attained in due course of promotion if he had remained on the active list for a period beyond the date of his retirement equal to the total amount of time during which he has been detailed on active duty since his retirement." (Act June 3, 1916, 39 Stat., 183, sec. 24, repealed by act June 4, 1920, sec. 24, 41 Stat., 771.)

"Hereafter any retired officer who has been or shall be detailed on active duty shall receive the rank, pay, and allowances of the grade, not above that of colonel, that he would have attained in due course of promotion if he had remained on the active list for a period beyond the date of his retirement equal to the total amount of time during which he has been detailed to active duty since his retirement." (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 51, 41 Stat., 786, amending act June 3, 1916, sec. 127, 39 Stat., 217. See laws and decisions noted below, as to retired officers of the Marine Corps on active duty.)

"Hereafter retired officers below the grade of brigadier general and retired warrant officers and enlisted men shall, when on active duty, receive full pay and allowances." (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 33, 41 Stat., 777, amending act June 3, 1916, sec. 40, 39 Stat., 191, 192.)

"In time of war retired officers may be employed on active duty in the discretion of the President, and when so employed they shall receive the full pay and allowances of their grades." (Act June 4, 1920, sec. 51, 41 Stat., 785, amending act June 3, 1916, sec. 127, 39 Stat., 217.)

LAWS RELATING SPECIFICALLY TO MARINE CORPS.

Civil war service.—"Officers of the Marine Corps with creditable records who served during the civil war shall, when retired, be retired in like manner and under the same conditions as provided for officers of the Navy who served during the civil war." (Act Apr. 27, 1904, 33 Stat., 349.)

"Any officer of the Marine Corps below the grade of brigadier-general who served with credit as an officer or as an enlisted man in the regular or volunteer forces during the civil war prior to April ninth, eighteen hundred and sixty-five, otherwise than as a cadet, and whose name is borne on the official register of the Marine Corps, and who has heretofore been, or may hereafter be, retired on account of wounds or disability incident to the service, or on account of age or after forty years' service, may, in the discretion of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be placed on the retired list of the Marine Corps with the rank and retired pay of one grade above that actually held by him at the time of retirement: Provided, That this Act shall not apply to any officer who received an advance of grade since the date of his retirement or who has been restored to the Marine Corps and placed on the retired list by virtue of the provisions of a special Act of Congress." (Act June 29, 1906, 34 Stat., 554.)

New commissions.—"Commissioned officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps on the retired list whose rank has been or shall hereafter be advanced by operation of or in accordance with law shall be entitled to and shall receive commissions in accordance with such advanced rank." (Act Mar. 4, 1911, 36 Stat., 1354.)

Major General Commandant.—"Any officer appointed under the provisions of this Act who shall be retired from the position of commandant of the Marine Corps, in accordance with the provisions of sections twelve hundred and fifty-one, sixteen hundred and twenty-two, and sixteen hundred and twenty-three, Revised Statutes of the United States, or by reason of age or length of service, shall have the rank and retired pay of a major general; if retired for any other reason, he shall be placed on the retired list of officers of the grade to which he belonged at the time of his retirement." (Act Dec. 19, 1913, 38 Stat., 241, amended by act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 609.)

Retirement of colonels.—"That the provisions of the Act entitled 'An Act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and seventeen, and for other purposes,' approved August twenty-ninth, nineteen hundred and sixteen, which read as follows: * * * 'That officers of the Marine Corps with the rank of colonel who shall have served faithfully for forty-five years on the active list shall, when retired, have the rank of brigadier general; and such officers who shall hereafter be retired at the age of sixty-four years before having served for forty-five years, but who shall have served faithfully on the active list until retired, shall, on the completion of forty years from their entry in the naval service, have the rank of brigadier general,' are hereby repealed." (Act May 22, 1917, sec. 14, 40 Stat., 87.)

Revision of retiring board records.—"The office of the said judge advocate general shall be in the Navy Department, where he shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, receive, revise, and have recorded the proceedings of all * * * boards for the examination of officers for retirement * * * in the naval service." (Act June 8, 1880, 21 Stat., 161.)

Retiring boards on foreign stations.—"That hereafter the Secretary of the Navy may authorize the senior officer present, or other commanding officer, on a foreign station to order * * * retiring boards for the examination of such candidates for * * * retirement in the Navy and Marine Corps as may be serving in such officer's command and may be directed to appear before any such board." (Act Mar. 4, 1917, 39 Stat., 1171.)

Officers holding temporary rank.—"That any officer of the permanent Navy or Marine Corps, temporarily advanced in grade or rank in accordance with the provisions of this Act, who shall be retired from active service under his permanent commission while holding such temporary rank, except for physical disability incurred in line of duty, shall be placed on the retired list with the grade or rank to which his position in the permanent Navy or Marine Corps at the date of his retirement would entitle him, and any person originally appointed temporarily, as provided in this Act, shall not be entitled to any rights of retirement, except for physical disability incurred in line of duty." (Act May 22, 1917, sec. 9, 40 Stat., 86.)

Retired officers on active duty.—"That hereafter any retired officer of the naval service who shall be detailed on active duty shall, while so serving, receive the active-duty pay and allowances of the grade, not above that of lieutenant commander in the Navy or of major in the Marine Corps, that he would have attained in due course of promotion if he had remained on the active list for a period beyond the date of his retirement equal to the total amount of time during which he has been detailed on active duty since his retirement: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to reduce the pay of any retired officer on active duty whose retired pay exceeds the active-duty pay and allowances for the grade of lieutenant commander." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 581.)

"That hereafter, during the existence of war or of a national emergency declared by the President to exist, any commissioned or warrant officer of the Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard of the United States on the retired list may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be ordered to active duty at sea or on shore; and any retired officer performing such active duty in time of war or national emergency, declared as aforesaid, shall be entitled to promotion on the retired list to the grade or rank, not above that of lieutenant commander in the Navy or major in the Marine Corps or captain in the Coast Guard, and shall thereafter receive the pay and allowances thereof which his total active service as an officer both prior and subsequent to retirement, in the manner rendered by him, would have enabled him to attain in due course of promotion had such service been rendered continuously on the active list during the period of time last past." (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 717.)

"That during the existence of war or of a national emergency, declared as aforesaid, any commissioned or warrant officer of the Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard of the United States on the retired list, while on active duty, may be temporarily advanced to and commissioned in such higher grade or rank on the retired list, not above that of lieutenant commander in the Navy or major in the Marine Corps or captain in the Coast Guard, as the President may determine, and any officer so advanced shall, while on active duty, be entitled to the same pay and allowances as officers of like grade or rank on the active list: Provided, That any such commissioned or warrant officer who has been so temporarily advanced in grade or rank shall, upon his relief from active duty, or in any case not later than six months after the termination of the war or of the national emergency, declared as aforesaid, revert to the grade or rank on the retired list and to the pay and allowance status which he would have held had he not been so temporarily advanced: Provided further, That nothing in this Act shall operate to reduce the pay and allowances now allowed by law to retired officers." (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 717.)

As to details to educational institutions, see section 1225, Revised Statutes, and laws and decisions noted thereunder.

Retired enlisted men.—"That when an enlisted man shall have served thirty years either in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, or in all, he shall, upon making application to the President, be placed upon the retired list, with seventy-five per centum of the pay and allowances he may then be in receipt of, and that said allowances shall be as follows: Nine dollars and fifty cents per month in lieu of rations and clothing and six dollars and twenty-five cents per month in lieu of quarters, fuel, and light: Provided, That in computing the necessary thirty years' time all service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps shall be credited." (Act Mar. 2, 1907, 34 Stat., 1217. By act of Mar. 3, 1899, sec. 17, 30 Stat., 1008, service in the Civil or Spanish-American War was to be credited as double time in computing the 30 years necessary for retirement of enlisted men, and applicants for retirement thereunder were required to be at least 50 years of age unless physically disqualified for service.)

"The Secretary of the Navy is authorized in time of war or when a national emergency exists to call any enlisted man on the retired list into active service for such duty as he may be able to perform. While so employed such enlisted men shall receive the same pay and allowances they were receiving when placed on the retired list." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 591, superseding similar provision in act Mar. 3, 1915, 38 Stat., 941.)

"That any enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps upon the retired list who has been ordered into active service since April sixth, nineteen hundred and seventeen, or who may hereafter be ordered into active service, shall be eligible for promotion and he shall be entitled to the pay and benefits of continuous service of such rank and for such length of time as he is or has been employed in active service, and when relieved of active service shall retain upon the retired list the rank and service held by him at the time of such relief, with the pay and allowances of such rank on the retired list; and the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby directed to allow in the accounts of any enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who resigned from the retired list in order to reenlist for appointment in a higher grade the same continuous service pay and the benefits of such rank to which he may have been appointed upon reenlistment, as if his service had been continuous, and any difference in pay from the date of reenlistment shall be credited to his account." (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 719.)

"That so much of the Act of July 1, 1918 (Public Numbered 182), as authorizes the promotion of retired enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps ordered to active duty shall not be so construed as to make illegal promotions of such men as have heretofore been made to warrant grades or as to deprive them of any of the pay, allowances, or other benefits accruing under such promotion." (Act July 11, 1919, 41 Stat., 153.)

Construction of section 1622 in general.

—Section 1622, Revised Statutes, simply provides for the conditions precedent to the retirement of an officer of the Marine Corps, but in no way changes the jurisdiction to which he is subject or the conditions under which he may be again placed on active duty. (Jonas v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 281.)

These "conditions" unquestionably are conditions precedent to retiring, and not conditions subsequent. Section 1622 is simply a provision that a commissioned officer of the Marine Corps is entitled to the same right of retirement as an officer of the Army. When so retired, he is a retired officer of the Marine Corps, subject to the laws and regulations established for the government of the Navy. (Jonas v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 281.)

It will be observed that while section 1622 refers to the retirement of officers of the Marine Corps and entitles them to the benefit of all laws relating to the retirement of officers of the Army, the provision in the act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat., 259, 264), relating to advancement of Army officers on the retired list who had Civil War service, refers to what may be done in the discretion of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for the benefit of certain officers of the Army after their retirement is an accomplished fact, whether theretofore or thereafter retired. In other words, the provision is not a law in reference to the retirement of officers of the Army, but an act authorizing special benefits to certain officers of the Army who have been or may be retired. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 262.)

The conditions mentioned in section 1622 are unquestionably conditions precedent to retirement, and not conditions subsequent; accordingly, held that the Army act of June 3, 1916, section 24, above quoted, is not applicable to the Marine Corps, under section 1622, in so far as it affects the rank of retired officers who have performed or who may in the future perform the required amount of active duty. (File 26509-158 : 2, June 27, 1916.)

It is well settled that the Marine Corps, while in many respects a separate and distinct organization, is primarily a part of the Navy. In the matter of retirement, however, as of pay, the Marine Corps has been classed with the Army (secs. 1612, 1622). The language of section 1622 is broad and sweeping, and as it is the only provision upon the subject of retirement it must be held to mean just what it says; in other words, officers of the Marine Corps, in the matter of retirement, were placed by that section upon exactly the same footing as officers of the Army. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 262.)

Employment of retired officers on active duty.—When a marine officer was put upon the retired list he was subject to the orders of the Secretary of the Navy within the statutory conditions, and came within the provisions of the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 329), as to assignment of retired "naval" officers to active duty, and not the act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat., 264), relating to assignment of retired officers of the Army to active duty. Each of these statutes contained provisions relating to the pay of retired officers assigned to active duty thereunder. Held, that the retired marine officer so assigned to active duty under the act of 1912, became entitled upon such assignment to the pay and allowances provided for in said act. (Jonas v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 281.)

The act of June 7, 1900 (31 Stat., 703), authorized the assignment of "any naval officer on the retired list" to active duty during a period of twelve years from its passage. During the life of this statute the Secretary of the Navy detailed retired officers of the Marine Corps to active duty, and his right to do so seems never to have been questioned. And during the interim between the expiration of this statute by limitation and its substantial reenactment by the act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 329), neither retired naval nor marine officers were employed on active duty. After the enactment of the latter statute, the Secretary of the Navy renewed the practice followed under the former statute. This substantial reenactment of the statute by Congress was indicative of legislative approval of the departmental construction of the same, as stated. (Jonas v. U. S., 50 Ct. Cls., 281.)

Congress, by the act of June 3, 1916 (39 Stat., 183), gave to retired officers of the Army detailed on active duty the longevity pay which would accrue to them by reason of their added active service after retirement, which pay they could not thereafter receive by reason of the act of March 2, 1903 (32 Stat., 932). The said act of June 3, 1916, applied to a retired officer of the Marine Corps on active duty so as to entitle him to increase in longevity pay, although he held the rank of major, and an Army officer of the rank of major could not be advanced to a higher rank under said act. (Jonas v. U. S., 53 Ct. Cls., 254. See above, under "Construction of section 1622, in general." See also act of Aug. 29, 1916, quoted above, with respect to retired officers of the Marine Corps on active duty.)

Rank on retirement.—The Army law (sec. 1254, R. S.), providing that "officers hereafter retired from active service shall be retired upon the actual rank held by them at the date of retirement," is applicable to the Marine Corps. A captain in that corps, holding the office of Judge Advocate General of the Navy with the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel while so serving, was in law and in fact a colonel in the Marine Corps while holding said office of Judge Advocate General, and was entitled to be retired as such; and under section 1274, R. S., was entitled to receive 75 per centum of the pay of colonel. Under the act of June 8, 1880 (21 Stat., 164), the rank of a Judge Advocate General of the Navy is not assimilated but actual rank. (Remey v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cls., 218. See note to sec. 421, R. S., as to retirement of chiefs of bureaus.)

Rank on retirement for Civil War service.—See note above, under "Construction of section 1622, in general."

Section 11 of the act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), which fixes the rank and pay of retired officers of the Navy who served with credit during the Civil War, held not applicable to officers of the Marine Corps. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 709.)

The said act of March 3, 1899, was evidently drafted with care, and with a clear understanding of the distinctions between the Navy and the Marine Corps. The first seventeen sections, in definite terms, apply to the Navy; then follow the sections which with equal exactness apply to the Marine Corps. These two arms of the service are recognized and treated throughout the entire statute as separate and distinct, and for each of them appropriate provision is made. The unambiguous language of section 11 makes it apply only to officers of the Navy, and there is nothing within the entire act which in any way indicates that any officer not in the Navy was intended to be included within the provisions of said section. The mere fact that one set of officers, not mentioned, are as meritorious as those expressly provided for can not justify a construction liberal enough to give to the former benefits granted in clear terms only to the latter. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 709, June 26, 1903.)

In the matter of retirement, officers of the Marine Corps with creditable records who served during the Civil War are governed entirely by the act of April 27, 1904 (33 Stat., 324, 349), which provides that they shall be retired "in like manner and under the same conditions as provided for officers of the Navy who served during the Civil War." To this extent that act alters and amends section 1622, Revised Statutes. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 262.)

By act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat., 259, 264), provision was made for the advancement on the retired list of Army officers who served during the Civil War. By act of April 27, 1904 (33 Stat., 324, 349), passed four days later, special provision was made for the retirement of officers of the Marine Corps who served during the Civil War, in accordance with Navy laws. Held, that the Army act of April 23, 1904, has no application by virtue of section 1622, Revised Statutes, to officers of the Marine Corps who served during the Civil War. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 262.)

That Congress never intended the Army act of April 23, 1904, to apply to the Marine Corps is shown by its incorporation in the Navy act, passed four days later, of a provision specifically dealing with the retirement of officers of the Marine Corps with creditable records who served during the Civil War. This practically contemporaneous legislative interpretation of the former act must be held to be conclusive. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 262.)

Retirement for disability not incident to the service.—A board of officers duly constituted was convened by order of the Secretary of the Navy July 30, 1874, to inquire into and determine whether a lieutenant of marines was incapacitated for active service. The board found him so incapacitated, and that the cause of his incapacity was not an incident of the service. The President, August 18, 1874, endorsed on the proceedings and findings of the board: "I concur in opinion with the retiring board in the case of * * *. Let him be retired on furlough pay." Held, first, that the action of the President amounted to an approval of the finding of the board and to a retirement of the officer from active service within section 1252, Revised Statutes, and that he was retired in conformity with the law applicable to officers of the Marine Corps; and second, that the officer thereby became entitled to receive pay according to the rates established by law for retired officers of the Army, viz, 75 per centum of the pay of the actual rank held by him at the date of retirement, notwithstanding a different rate of pay, viz, furlough pay, was named by the President in retiring him. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 442.)

For officers of the Marine Corps who are retired from active service, as for officers of the Army who are so retired, there is but one rate of pay established by law, viz, 75 per centum of the pay of the rank upon which they are retired (sec. 1274, R. S.); and it is not competent to the President to place these retired officers on a different rate of pay than that which the law has fixed. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 442.)

The first sentence of the endorsement of the President upon the record of the proceedings of the board (above quoted) admits of no other construction than that it was meant to express his approval of the finding of the board. Having thus approved the finding, it rested entirely in his discretion whether the officer should be retired from active service or be wholly retired from the service (sec. 1232, R. S.); but it was necessary that one or the other be done, as the law is imperative that when the decision of the board is approved by the President the officer "shall be retired," etc. The direction given in the last sentence of the endorsement clearly indicates that it was the determination of the President that the officer be retired from "active service" simply. The compensation of an officer thus retired being fixed by statute and not left to be determined by the President, in so far as that direction limits the officer's pay on the retired list it must be treated as of no effect. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 442.)

Sections 1454 and 1593 Revised Statutes, as to the retirement of naval officers on furlough pay for disability not incident to the service, do not apply to officers of the Marine Corps, for that corps different legislation is provided. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 442. See secs. 1454 and 1593, R. S., and notes thereto.)

Retirement for length of service.—The act of June 30, 1882 (22 Stat., 118), referring to the retirement of officers of the Army who have served 40 years "in the regular or volunteer service, or both," was intended by the use of the words, "volunteer service," to refer to the volunteer service in the Civil War, and did not intend to anticipate a new volunteer service such as that authorized under the act of April 22, 1898. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 199.)

Under the Army reorganization act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., 761), the service which by existing law is held to be the equivalent of Army service in counting length of service for increase of pay or for retirement is service in the Marine Corps and service in the Navy. (27 Comp. Dec., 170, citing acts of Feb. 24, 1881, 21 Stat., 346; Sept. 30, 1890, 26 Stat., 504; and June 22, 1906 and Mar. 2, 1907, 34 Stat., 451 and 1217.)

Retirement for age.—The Army act of June 30, 1882 (22 Stat., 118), relative to retirement, applies to an officer of the regular Army who is 64 years of age, temporarily serving under a volunteer commission, but his retirement thereunder does not affect his status in the volunteer service. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 199.)

The said act of June 30, 1882, does not apply to a volunteer officer who is 64 years of age and who does not at the same time hold a commission in the regular Army. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 199.)

An officer of the regular Army who at the same time holds a commission in the volunteer Army may continue to hold and exercise his latter commission after having been placed upon the retired list of the regular Army by reason of the age limit. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 199.)

The Army retired lists apply to the regular Army alone, with due credit given for the time of volunteer service of officers of the regular Army in the Civil War. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 199.)

Status of retired officer.—An officer of the Marine Corps retired from active service only, and not wholly retired from service, is an officer in the employ of the Government and so within the prohibition of section 1782 of the Revised Statutes prohibiting compensation to "any officer or clerk in the employ of the Government" for rendering services in relation to any claim or other matter in which the United States is a party, before any department, court-martial, bureau, officer, or any civil, military, or naval commission. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 397.)

In determining the status of a retired officer of the Marine Corps, as to whether or not he is an officer of the Government, the Marine Corps must, under section 1622, Revised Statutes, be considered as part of the Army. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 397, 400.)

Retired enlisted men.—Officers on the retired list are a part of the Army; they may be assigned to duty and wear the uniform and continue to be borne on the Army Register, and are subject to trial by court-martial; enlisted men after retirement are not a part of the Army. (Murphy v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 511.)

Section 1094, Revised Statutes, in express terms declares that "the officers of the Army on the retired list" are a part of the Army. By act of March 2, 1899, section 7 (30 Stat., 979), the President was authorized to employ retired officers of the Army on active duty in time of war. This act is a recognition by Congress that, though retired officers of the Army were in express terms declared to be a part of the Army, they were not theretofore subject to active military duty. There are no such laws with respect to enlisted men on the retired list. There is no statute declaring them to be a part of the Army, nor is there any statute subjecting them to military duty. When he is retired, an enlisted man thereby severs his connection with the Army to go on the retired list, and can not thereafter be said to be a component part of the Army. (Murphy v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 511.)

It is no answer to say that enlisted men on the retired list are a part of the Army because subject to court-martial; if that were true, which the court does not concede, they nevertheless could not be assigned to military duty. Their retired pay is given them, not for services to be rendered in the future, but for services which they have faithfully rendered prior to their retirement. (Murphy v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 511.)

On reconsideration, the decision affirmed that retired enlisted men are not entitled to the additional pay for length of service given by section 1284, Revised Statutes, because they do not "remain continuously in the Army" within the intent of the statute; notwithstanding the existence of statutes (overlooked in the former decision) wherein it is expressly provided that "the Army of the United States shall consist of * * * the officers and enlisted men of the Army on the retired list." Under these statutes the Army consists in part of enlisted men on the retired list, and to that extent, therefore, the court was in error in certain statements contained in the previous decision. But those acts do not make enlisted men on the retired list a part of the organization of the Army, subject to military duty as enlisted men on the active list; on the contrary, it is conceded that such retired enlisted men are not subject to military duty, even at the command of the President. If not subject to military duty, then in what way and for what purpose can it be said that enlisted men on the retired list are a part of the Army? (Murphy v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 178.)

Retired enlisted men en route to their homes after retirement are not "troops of the United States" (as used in the land grant acts relating to transportation for the Government). They travel for their own purposes. Congress has declared that such retired enlisted men shall for certain purposes be deemed a part of the Army (act Feb. 2, 1901, 31 Stat., 748); but they may be employed only after Congress has authorized the raising of volunteer forces; and not even then for field duty (act Apr. 25, 1914, sec. 11, 38 Stat., 347, 350). The Army Regulations for 1913 make no provision requiring any service from retired enlisted men. Practically they have retired from, and not simply into, a different branch of, the Army. The fact that they may thereafter be called into the Army does not make them "troops of the United States." Any male citizen may at some time be called into the service. (U. S. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 249 U. S., 354, 360, affirming 52 Ct. Cls., 226.)

There is no statute specifically providing that retired enlisted men shall constitute a part of the Navy or that retired enlisted men of the Navy shall be amenable to trial by naval court-martial, although it is provided by statute that retired officers of the Navy shall be amenable to trial by court-martial. (File 26251-22500, Mar. 9, 1920.)

Under present laws it is very doubtful whether an enlisted man on the retired list of the Navy, who is not employed on active duty, is subject to trial by naval court-martial. However, a trial having taken place in such a case, and the accused acquitted, the proceedings, findings, and acquittal were approved, instead of being set aside for lack of jurisdiction, as the latter action would have exposed the accused to trial by the civil authorities of the United States for the same offense. (File 26251-22500, Mar. 9, 1920.)

As to retired pay of enlisted men in the Marine Band, see note to section 1613, Revised Statutes.

The provision in the act of July 1, 1918, relating to promotion of retired enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps ordered into active service (quoted above under this section), authorizes the promotion of such retired enlisted men to higher enlisted ranks and ratings on the retired list; and does not authorize the appointment of retired enlisted men to warrant or commissioned rank either on the active or retired lists. (File 7657-634:1, Aug. 30, 1918, citing 7657-634, Aug. 12, 1918.)

It is lawful to appoint retired enlisted men as temporary warrant and temporary commissioned officers on the active list, under the act of May 22, 1917 (40 Stat., 84). (File 7657-634:1, Aug. 30, 1918, citing 27321-103, July 17, 1917.)

There is no doubt that retired enlisted men may be permanently appointed as warrant or commissioned officers on the active list, if properly qualified. (File 7657-634:1, Aug. 30, 1918.)

If appointed a temporary commissioned or warrant officer on the active list under the act of May 22, 1917, on the termination of such appointment a retired enlisted man would revert to the rating held by him on the retired list at the time of his appointment. If appointed a permanent commissioned or warrant officer on the active list, he would not revert, nor should he be relieved from active duty, as such an appointment takes him off the retired list and destroys his status as an enlisted man. (File 7657-634:1, Aug. 30, 1918.)

Retirement of Major General Commandant.—See note to section 1601, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1623. [Retiring board, how composed.] In case of an officer of the Marine Corps, the retiring board shall be selected by the Secretary of the Navy, under the direction of the President. Two-fifths of the board shall be selected from the Medical Corps of the Navy, and the remainder shall be selected from officers of the Marine Corps, senior in rank, so far as may be, to the officer whose disability is to be inquired of.—(3 Aug., 1861, c. 42, s. 17, v. 12, p. 289.)

See note to section 1622, Revised Statutes, and particularly section 1246, R. S., noted thereunder, as to composition of Army retiring boards.

Membership of retiring board.—The act of August 3, 1861 (sec. 1623, R. S.), does not authorize the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to assemble a mixed board of Army and Marine officers for inquiry into the cases of disabled officers of the Army and of the Marine Corps. (10 Op. Att'y. Gen., 116.)

The act of August 3, 1861, providing for the better organization of the Military Establishment, authorized the creation of boards to determine the disabilities of officers of the Army and Marine Corps. Section 16 provided that if any commissioned officer of the Army or Marine Corps shall become incapable of performing the duties of his office, he shall be placed upon the retired list, etc.; section 17 enacted that in order to carry out the provisions of the act the Secretary of War or Secretary of the Navy, as the case might be, under the direction and approval of the President of the United States, shall, from time to time as occasion may require, assemble a board of not more than nine nor less than five commissioned officers, two-fifths of whom shall be of the medical staff; the board, except those taken from the medical staff, to be composed, as far as may be, of his seniors in rank. Held, that the intent of the act was to cause disabled officers to be retired by a board composed of commissioned officers of their own branch of the service; that it authorized no joint action of the Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy in forming a retiring board; nor did it give either Secretary the power to convene a mixed board composed in part of officers not under his control. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 116.)

An officer of one branch of the service can not with accuracy be called senior in rank to an officer of another branch; a major in the Army is no more senior to a captain of marines than he is to a captain in the Navy. The term in its military sense is applicable only to relatively higher grades of the same service. Its use otherwise would create confusion. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 116.)

Under the act of August 3, 1861, section 17, for the better organization of the Military Establishment, the Secretary of the Navy has discretionary power to select for the retirement of officers of the Marine Corps such commissioned officers subject to his control and orders as he may deem proper. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 129.)

The act of August 3, 1861, section 17, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to assemble boards for the retirement of marine officers, does not provide that the board shall consist of officers of that corps, but simply that it shall consist of commissioned officers. That the section did not contemplate a board composed exclusively of marine officers is clear, because it provides that two-fifths of the board shall be of the medical staff; and there being no medical staff attached to the Marine Corps this requirement of the statute could only be fulfilled by placing on the board naval surgeons. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 129, 130.)

There being no provision in the law which directs the Secretary of the Navy to organize these boards for the retirement of marine officers from the officers of the Marine Corps, and this being a law for the government of the Navy within the meaning of the act of 1834 (sec. 1621, R. S.), held that the Secretary of the Navy, under the President, has full power to organize boards for the retirement of marine officers of the Navy of senior rank, under section 17 of said act of August 3, 1861. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 129, 130.)

Retiring board illegally constituted.—The proceedings of a board constituted without authority and in violation of the act of August 3, 1861, section 17 (embodied in sec. 1623, R. S.), would be open to future question as to their validity. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 116.)

The action of a retiring board can only be valid as it accords with the law of its creation. From that law alone it must draw the breath of life. If, therefore, it is constituted without the direct authority of that law, or in violation of its provisions, the validity of its action would be open to very serious future question. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 116, 119.)

Sec. 1624. [Persons amenable to articles.] The Navy of the United States shall be governed by the following articles.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, v. 12, p. 600.)

General rule.—Everyone connected with the military or naval service of the United States is amenable to the jurisdiction which Congress has created for their government, and while thus serving surrenders his right to be tried by the civil courts. (In re Davison, 21 Fed. Rep., 618.)

The discipline necessary to the efficiency of the Army and Navy required other and swifter modes of trial than are furnished by the common-law courts; and in pursuance of the power conferred by the Constitution, Congress has declared the kinds of trial and the manner in which they shall be conducted for offenses committed while the party is in the military or naval service. Everyone connected with those branches of the public service is amenable to the jurisdiction which Congress has created for their government, and while thus serving surrenders his right to be tried by the civil courts. All other persons, citizens of states where the courts are open, if charged with crime are guaranteed the inestimable privilege of trial by jury. (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 2, 123.)

By the articles of war "any person in the military service of the United States" may be tried by court-martial for the offenses described in those articles. But the words, "in the military service" there used are not to be taken in so general a sense as to include all who are employed in connection with that service in any capacity whatever. They must be construed with the provision by which the articles are preceded, and which declares that the latter shall govern "the armies of the United States." So construed, they properly include only such as belong to and serve in the Army fixed by law. Hence, the question of the amenability of an individual to court-martial jurisdiction under the above-quoted provision is not to be determined according to the nature of his employment; that is to say, whether it is military or not, but solely according to the circumstance of his belonging or not belonging to the military establishment as defined by law. (16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 13, 16.)

To have the effect of subjecting to trial by court-martial a person not otherwise subject to such jurisdiction an act of Congress ought to be clear and unambiguous. (14 Op. Att'y. Gen., 268, 274.)

In passing upon the question whether a clerk in the Army is subject to court-martial, it is proper to inquire at the outset whether he belongs to any of those classes of persons who are, by the terms of the statutes in force, made liable to military law, as the inclusion of an individual in some one of such classes is essential to bring him under court-martial jurisdiction. (16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 13, 14.)

In every instance in which Congress has impressed a military character on any body of men whom they intended to divest of the civil right of a trial by jury, besides the impressment of a military character they have uniformly and expressly declared that they should be subject to the rules and articles of war. A course of legislation so long continued and so uniform marks the sacred respect in which Congress have ever regarded the right of trial by jury, and will justify us in assuming it as their sense that this right is never to be taken away by implication, never by the mere impressment of a military character on a body, never without a positive provision to that effect. (1 Op. Att'y. Gen., 276.)

Civilians.—The right to trial by jury is preserved to everyone accused of crime who is not attached to the Army or Navy, or militia in actual service. (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 2, 123.)

A statutory provision that any person who shall contract to furnish supplies of any kind or description in the Army or Navy shall be deemed and taken as a part of the land or naval forces of the United States for which he shall contract to furnish said supplies is unconstitutional in so far as it would operate to subject a contractor to trial by court-martial. Congress may, no doubt, under their power to raise armies, declare who shall be soldiers; that is, what citizens shall be liable to perform military duty, but they can not by mere enactment place a man in the Army who is not. If they could, then they might, by a simple declaration, place every person in the United States in the Army, no matter what his pursuits actually continued to be, and subject him to trial by court-martial; a proposition so monstrous that it is believed no one would be found so hardy as to maintain it. (Ex parte Henderson, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6349; compare Holmes v. Sheridan, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6644; see also note to Art. 63, A. G. N., as to cruel and unusual punishments.)

A quartermaster's clerk in the Army, that is, a civilian employed in that capacity, is not amenable to the jurisdiction of a court-martial; nor are superintendents of national cemeteries, appointed under sections 4873 and 4874, Revised Statutes. (16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 13; see also, 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 48; compare decisions noted below as to paymasters' clerks in the Navy.)

In this country military tribunals, whether courts-martial or military commissions, can not constitutionally be granted jurisdiction to try persons charged with acts or offenses committed outside of the field of military operations or territory under martial law or other peculiarly military territory, except members of the military or naval forces or those immediately attached to the forces, such as camp followers. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 356, 361; compare note to art. 5, A. G. N.)

Military jurisdiction is of two kinds—first, that which is conferred and defined by statute; second, that which is derived from the common law of war. Military offenses under the statute must be tried in the manner therein directed, but military offenses which do not come within the statute must be tried and punished under the common law of war. The first is exercised by courts-martial—while the latter are tried by military commissions. (Ex parte Vallandigham, 1 Wall., 243, 249.)

The Supreme Court of the United States has no power to review by certiorari the proceedings of a military commission ordered by a general officer of the United States Army commanding a military department. (Ex parte Vallandigham, 1 Wall., 243.)

The clause in the Constitution providing that "the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish," refers only to courts of the United States, which military courts are not. (Mechanics, etc., Bank v. Union Bank, 22 Wall., 276, 295.)

A military commission is not a court within the meaning of the Fourteenth section of the judiciary act of 1789. (Ex parte Vallandigham, 1 Wall., 243, 251.)

The Constitution did not prohibit the creation by military authority of courts for the trial of civil causes during the Civil War in conquered portions of the insurgent States. The establishment of such courts is but the exercise of the ordinary rights of conquest. Though called in the order establishing it a "provost court," a larger jurisdiction than one over minor criminal offenses might, in fact, have validly been given to it by the power which constituted it. (Mechanics, etc., Bank v. Union Bank, 22 Wall., 276, 296.)

As to military commissions and their jurisdiction over civilians, see generally note to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, clause 11.

Persons discharged from the Navy.—See article 14, A. G. N., and note thereto; and see notes to articles 61 and 62, A. G. N.

Whether, when an officer while under charge of a military offense is dismissed from the service by the President, he may afterwards be arrested and tried by court-martial for the offense, dubitatur. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 328.)

In this case the officer was placed under arrest on charges of breaking arrest, killing his commanding officer, and desertion. For the homicide involved in killing his commanding officer he had been indicted for murder, and tried and acquitted before a civil court of the State. Afterwards he was dropped from the rolls for absence without leave. The question presented was whether a dismissed officer can be tried by court-martial for a military offense committed by him prior to his dismissal. This question not decided, but remarked that there is no express provision in the statutes to settle the question definitely, one way or the other; nor is there any authoritative adjudication on the subject, at least in the United States; and that the case of a seaman whose enlistment expires while he is under charges is very different from that of an officer who in the same circumstances is dismissed by the President. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 328.)

(Contingencies will undoubtedly arise in which it becomes desirable to drop from the rolls a deserting officer in order to supply his place by promotion; where, still due regard to the principles of justice and the discipline of the service unite to call for the exemplary punishment of the offender. Can it be indicted without authority of statute? That is the doubt. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 328, 332.)

Charges and specifications were preferred against an officer of the Navy who deserted, at the time of desertion, and sent to a permanent general court-martial for trial, where they were held pending apprehension of the deserter. Held, that the removal of said officer from the Navy by filling his place and grade by the appointment of a successor, with the advice and consent of the Senate, does not divest the jurisdiction of a naval court-martial to try him upon the charge which had been previously preferred; that the statute of limitations is not involved in the case, inasmuch as the charges and specifications were preferred by the Secretary of the Navy and sent to the general court-martial in ample time to assure his trial whenever apprehended. (Naval Dig., 1916, p. 177, citing file 26251-6278, Aug. 17, 1915.)

A charge of desertion was preferred against an officer of the Navy on May 31, 1912, and was tried by general court-martial April 9, 1917, the said officer having in the meantime been dropped from the Navy and superseded by the appointment of a successor by the President of the United States with the advice and consent of the Senate. He was found guilty of the charge, the specification of which was "proved by plea"; and was sentenced "to be dismissed from the United States naval service." The proceedings and findings were approved by the Secretary of the Navy, who set aside the sentence, owing to the fact that the officer's connection with the service had already been terminated. (C. M. O. 26, 1917.)

A court-martial has no jurisdiction over an officer after he has left the service, although his offense was committed while in the service. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 570; citing 5 Op. Atty. Gen., 55, 58.)

A person discharged from the naval service before proceedings are instituted against him for violations of the Articles for the Government of the Navy, excepting article 14, can not thereafter be brought to trial before a court-martial for such violations, though committed while he was in the service. However, in view of the unsatisfactory state of the authorities, and of the grave objections on principle to this conclusion, suggested that there is no reason why jurisdiction should not be asserted by the Secretary of the Navy in such a case, in order to obtain, if possible, an authoritative judicial determination of the question. (31 Op. Att'y. Gen., 521.)

Article 14, paragraph 11, A. G. N., makes express provision for the trial of persons who have been discharged from the Navy; a proviso of somewhat similar import is inserted in article 62, fixing a period of limitation in cases of desertion, viz, "that said limitation shall not begin until the end of the term for which such person was enlisted in the service." These provisions, extending the jurisdiction after severance from the service in certain cases only, seem to indicate, on well-known principles of construction, that Congress did not intend so to extend the jurisdiction in other cases. (31 Op. Att'y. Gen., 521, 527; compare notes to arts. 61 and 62, A. G. N.)

An enlisted man of the Army furloughed for the unexpired portion of his enlistment, held, not thereby discharged from the Army. (In re Markun, 232 Fed. Rep., 1018.)

Where jurisdiction attached prior to discharge.—The principle that where jurisdiction has attached it can not be divested by mere subsequent change of status, has been applied as justifying the trial and sentence of an enlisted man after the expiration of the term of enlistment, and the execution of a sentence after the lapse of many years and the severance of all connection with the Army. (Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 383; citing Barrett v. Hopkins, 7 Fed. Rep., 312; Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S., 509; and 16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 349.)

It appears to be well settled that where jurisdiction has once attached it can not be divested by mere subsequent change of status; and this principle justifies the trial and sentence of a person out of the service, where jurisdiction has attached while he was in the service. (31 Op. Att'y. Gen., 521, 528; citing Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 383; Coleman v. Tenn., 97 U. S., 509; 16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 349, 352; Barrett v. Hopkins, 7 Fed. Rep., 312; in re Walker, 3 Am. Jurist, 281; in re Bird, 2 Sawyer, 33; in re Dew, 25 Law Reporter, 538, 540; U. S. v. Reaves, 126 Fed. Rep., 127, 131; Winth. Mil. L., p. 120, etc.)

A soldier in the Army, sentenced in 1865 to be hanged, but who made his escape, and some years later was dishonorably discharged from the Army, may nevertheless be legally executed in 1879, pursuant to the sentence of the court, his status as a military prisoner awaiting execution of sentence not having been altered by his discharge. But recommended that the sentence be commuted to imprisonment for life or for such term of years as the President may in his discretion determine. (16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 349.)

Where the jurisdiction of the military court has attached in respect of an officer of the Army, this includes not only the power to hear and determine the case but the power to execute and enforce the sentence. The different provisions of the sentence (dismissal, fine, and imprisonment) took effect concurrently, while the accused was under the control of the military authorities of the United States as a commissioned officer of the Army; the date of the order of dismissal, of the infliction of the fine, and of the beginning of the imprisonment, were the same date. The accused was proceeded against as an officer of the Army, and jurisdiction attached in respect of him as such; having been sentenced, his status was that of a military prisoner held by the authority of the United States as an offender against its laws. He was a military prisoner, though he had ceased by execution of the sentence of dismissal to be a soldier. Where jurisdiction has attached, it can not be divested by mere subsequent change of status. (Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 382.)

Where discharge revoked as illegal.—Where by sentence of a court-martial a soldier is discharged from the Army before the expiration of his term of enlistment, and such sentence is afterwards set aside as null and void, the status of the soldier is not affected in any way by such sentence, and he is deemed to have been in the service all the time between the sentence and the order setting it aside. While in fact discharged from the Army, but before the expiration of his term of enlistment, the said soldier committed a homicide: Held, that he might be arrested and tried for such homicide by the military authorities, the discharge being in the meantime set aside as null and void, and the accused being at the time a soldier de jure. (In re Bird, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,428.)

A naval prisoner made a bogus confession, claiming that he had committed a murder for which he was wanted by the civil authorities; he was thereupon discharged from the Navy and delivered to the civil authorities in accordance with their request: Held, that the Secretary of the Navy has authority to revoke the discharge so granted, being the result of fraudulent representations made by said enlisted man, and thereupon to reinstate him in his former status in the Navy and to bring him to trial by court-martial for his misconduct. (28 Op. Att'y. Gen., 170.)

An honorable discharge granted to a soldier, based on certain statements made by him and afterwards discovered to be false, may legally be revoked on the ground that it was given under a misapprehension of the facts, caused by the false statements aforesaid; such discharge must be treated as a nullity, having been obtained by the grossest falsehood and perjury. (16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 349.)

See also notes to articles 32 and 54, A. G. N.

Where enlistment expired but not discharged.—Where the enlistment of a marine has expired, and there is no legal authority for retaining him in the service, he is in point of law entirely discharged from the Marine Corps, and can not be prevented from leaving. If he choose to remain and perform military service until obtaining a regular discharge, although not a soldier he would be liable in a limited degree to the regulations necessary to the peace and subordination of a military garrison. (U. S. v. Travers, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16537; see note to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, clause 14, under "IV. Jurisdiction of courts-martial," subheading, "Persons not subject to jurisdiction of Federal courts-martial;" and see below, "Court-martial prisoners in confinement after discharge."")

The jurisdiction of a court-martial over an enlisted man for offenses committed during the period of enlistment extends after the termination of said period, whether or not he has in the meantime been arrested or other steps taken to enforce the jurisdiction; he continues in the naval service and amenable to court-martial until there has been some further action, such as a discharge, to terminate the status created by his contract of service. (Op. Atty. Gen., Feb. 27, 1922, file 26251-26615: 8; see note to Art. 61, A. G. N.; and note to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, clause 14, under "IV. Jurisdiction of courts-martial.")

Court-martial prisoners in confinement after discharge.—Section 1361, Revised Statutes, relating to the Army, providing that "all prisoners under confinement in said military prisons, undergoing sentence of courts-martial, shall be liable to trial and imprisonment by courts-martial under the Rules and Articles of War, for offenses committed during the said confinement," is intended to confer jurisdiction in the cases of "all" such prisoners, including those who were discharged from the Army by the same sentence which condemned them to imprisonment; a prisoner, though thus discharged from the Army, is subject to trial by court-martial for offenses committed while serving sentence; and section 1361, as thus construed, is not liable to constitutional objection. Under the power to make rules for "the government and regulation of the land and naval forces," Congress has provided that cases of this kind, arising in the Army, shall be tried by court-martial. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 293, 295.)

Section 1361, Revised Statutes, providing that prisoners under confinement in military prisons, undergoing sentences of Army courts-martial, shall be liable to trial and punishment by courts-martial, etc., is not in conflict with the fifth amendment to the Constitution, as applied to a prisoner undergoing confinement imposed by sentence of court-martial, pursuant to which sentence he had been dismissed from the Army. (Ex parte Wildman, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,653a.)

An act of Congress providing that prisoners confined in military prisons under sentence of court-martial shall be liable to trial and punishment by court-martial for offenses committed during said confinement is not in conflict with the Constitution providing for trial by jury; and said statute is applicable to one confined in a military prison, though at the time of his sentence to such confinement he was likewise sentenced to be discharged from the service, and that part of the sentence had been executed. (In re Craig, 70 Fed. Rep., 969.)

A person held as a military prisoner for punishment for a military offense of which he has been convicted is subject to military law, and to trial by court-martial for offenses committed during such imprisonment, even if the prior sentence resulted in his discharge as a soldier. (Kahn v. Anderson, 255 U. S., 1, citing Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 383; 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 292; in re Craig, 70 Fed. Rep., 969; ex parte Wildman, Fed. Cas. No. 17,653a; see also art. 22, par. e, A. W., June 4, 1920, 41 Stat., 787.)

A general court-martial prisoner in the Navy may be tried by summary court-martial or deck court prior to the expiration of his period of enlistment, and may afterwards be held to serve out the sentence imposed by such court, irrespective of whether or not his enlistment expires in the meantime (file 26504-100, Dec. 21, 1910); as to trial by court-martial of naval prisoners for offenses committed after expiration of enlistment, see file 26509-259, March 12, 1918, recommending legislation similar to that above cited with respect to the Army.

See also note above, under "Where enlistment expired but not discharged."

Naval reservists released from active duty.—An enrolled member of the Naval Reserve Force can not be tried by a naval court-martial for an offense alleged to have been committed while in active service after he has been released from active service and entered civil life, no charges or specifications having been preferred against him prior to his release from active duty, and the offense not being governed by article 14, A. G. N. (U. S. v. Warden or Keeper of Naval Prison, 265 Fed. Rep., 787.)

Under the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 587), subjecting enrolled members of the Naval Reserve Force to the laws governing the Navy only during such time as they may by law be required to serve in the Navy, held that such enrolled member of said force can not be arrested and tried by court-martial after release from active service for an offense committed while in active service; nor can he be recalled to active duty, even in time of war, where the motive of the order recalling him is to make him subject to naval discipline. (U. S. v. MacDonald, 265 Fed. Rep., 695. See note to art. 24, A. G. N.)

Such member can be recalled into active service only in conformity with the laws and regulations on that subject, and can not be recalled to give the naval court-martial jurisdiction to try him for an offense committed while he was in active service. (U. S. v. Warden or Keeper of Naval Prison, 265 Fed. Rep., 787.)

A person discharged from the naval service can be prosecuted under the criminal laws of the United States for any act during the period of his active duty, made a crime under the general laws of the United States, unless he has been previously placed in jeopardy. (U. S. v. MacDonald, 265 Fed. Rep., 695.)

See note below, under "Naval Reserve Force."

Void enlistment.—While a minor between certain ages is eligible for enlistment with the consent of his parents or guardians, and in such cases his enlistment without their consent is not void but voidable, held that the enlistment of a minor below the minimum age of enlistment, and who belongs to one of the classes whose enlistment is prohibited by statute, is not merely voidable but void; and in such a case, as the minor never became a soldier subject to military law, he could not be a deserter under the Articles of War and so is not amenable to the jurisdiction of a court-martial for that offense. (Hoskins v. Pell, 239 Fed. Rep., 279; L. R. A., 1917 D, 1053, construing sec. 1118, R. S., relating to enlistments in the Army, corresponding to sec. 1420, R. S., relating to enlistments in the Navy.)

The enlistment of such a minor is peremptorily forbidden by statute, without regard to the consent of his parent or guardian; his enlistment is as invalid as the enlistment of an insane or intoxicated person. (Hoskins v. Pell, 239 Fed. Rep., 279; L. R. A., 1917 D, 1053; see also ex parte Rush, 246 Fed. Rep., 172, 174; ex parte Beaver, 271 Fed. Rep., 493, 496.)

If the enlistment of a person in the Navy was void, then there is no right to discipline him at any period of his service, even though he was not undertaking to escape it. If his enlistment was void (which means that he was never in the service), then for any act by any person claiming to be in authority over him, whereby any of the natural rights of the alleged enlisted man were denied him, as, for instance, if he had been imprisoned for an hour, or a day, or a week, because of some infraction of the rules, a civil action for damages would lie in his favor against the particular individuals who were responsible for such punishment. No rule of law can be cited that will ever protect a public officer from the consequences of any act which he may imagine he is performing as a public officer, but which involves an exercise of authority by him as to some person over whom he is absolutely without authority. (Ex parte Rock, 171 Fed. Rep., 240, 242.)

For other cases, see note to section 1420, Revised Statutes.

Voidable enlistment.—An enlisted soldier can not avoid a charge of desertion by showing that at the time when he voluntarily enlisted he had passed the age at which the law allows enlisting officers to enlist recruits. (In re Grimley, 137 U. S., 147.)

Under section 1624, Revised Statutes, article 8, providing for punishment for desertion, where a minor between the ages of 14 and 18 years, without the consent of his father, then living, enlisted in the Navy and received the usual pay from the date of his enlistment until he deserted, was arrested and detained as a deserter, held that he could not be discharged from the custody of the naval authorities on a writ of habeas corpus sued out by his father, although the latter was entitled to demand his son's discharge from the Navy as soon as he had answered and satisfied the charge for desertion then pending against him. (U. S. v. Reeves, 126 Fed. Rep., 127.)

For other cases, see notes to sections 761 and 1419, Revised Statutes, and see note to article 22, A. G. N.

Detailed to duties other than military.—Where a military officer detailed for duty in the Freedmen's Bureau has been guilty of misappropriation of money or any violation of the rules and regulations governing disbursing officers of the Army, he may be tried by court-martial in the same manner as any other such Army officer. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 268, 269.)

Regularly enlisted men of the Navy employed on vessels in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, pursuant to section 4685, Revised Statutes, would be governed by the Articles for the Government of the Navy just as if serving on a vessel of war. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 182, 183.)

Officers of the Army are in the eye of the law on military duty although employed as such officer under statutes of the United States in the public service on duties not in themselves pertaining to the Army; the status of such an officer was not changed by his detail to such duties, and he was still subject to the military jurisdiction. (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 399-400.)

Consent of accused.—Conceded, that the possession by the accused of a status essential to the exercise by the court-martial of its power was jurisdictional, and therefore may not be held to have existed merely because of an estoppel. (Givens v. Zerst, 255 U. S., 11, 19, affirming ex parte Givins, 262 Fed. Rep., 702.)

Chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department.—The chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery in the Navy Department is amenable to the jurisdiction of a naval court-martial upon charges and specifications preferred against him for acts done as such chief. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 176.)

A naval court-martial has jurisdiction to try the Paymaster General of the Navy and sentence him to be dismissed from the position of chief of bureau, and to be suspended from rank and duty as pay inspector. Though chief of a bureau in the Navy Department, he is not a civil officer. (Smith v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 143.)

A writ of prohibition will not be issued to prohibit a naval court-martial from trying a naval officer, being Paymaster General and chief of a bureau in the Navy Department, upon a charge of "scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals," with specifications alleging that as such chief of bureau he made contracts and payments in disregard of the interests of the Government, and to promote the interests of contractors, in violation of law and to the great scandal and disgrace of the service and injury of the United States; and upon the additional charge of "culpable inefficiency in the performance of duty," with specifications setting forth acts similar to those specified under the first charge. (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167.)

An offense committed by a naval officer serving as chief of a bureau in the Navy Department, relating to the duties of his office as bureau chief, is a case arising in the naval forces and therefore punishable by court-martial under the articles and regulations made or approved by Congress in the exercise of the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution. (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167, 186.)

See also note to section 421, Revised Statutes; and see Wales v. Whitney (114 U. S., 564), and Swain v. United States (165 U. S., 553), the latter case referring to the trial of the Judge Advocate General of the Army.

Paymasters' clerks.—See note to section 1386, Revised Statutes, as to status of paymasters' clerks appointed pursuant thereto, and for amendatory statutes abolishing paymasters' clerks and substituting the grades of acting pay clerk, pay clerk, and chief pay clerk.

A paymaster's clerk on duty in the Navy is a person "in the naval forces of the United States" within the meaning of those terms as used in the act of March 2, 1863 (12 Stat., 696, sec. 1; art. 14, A. G. N.), and amenable to the jurisdiction of a court-martial as provided for in that act. (In re Bogart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1596; see also in re Reed, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11636; U. S. v. Bogart, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14616; ex parte Reed, 100 U. S., 13.)

A paymaster's clerk in the Navy, regularly appointed and assigned to duty on a receiving ship, is a person in the naval service of the United States, subject to be tried and convicted and sentenced to imprisonment by a general court-martial for a violation of section 1624, Revised Statutes. (Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S. 109.)

Civil engineers.—See "historical note" to section 1413, Revised Statutes, as to status of civil engineers in the Navy.

Civil engineers in the Navy are subject to jurisdiction of naval courts-martial. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 597; see note to art. 36, A. G. N.)

Marine Corps.—See section 1621, Revised Statutes, and note thereto, as to laws and regulations governing the Marine Corps and members of the Medical Department serving therewith, and the discipline of its officers and enlisted men.

Whether a naval court-martial ordered under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy has jurisdiction to try a lieutenant colonel of the Marine Corps will depend upon whether the alleged misconduct of the accused took place while he was employed in the land service or in the naval service. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 706, construing act of July 11, 1798, sec. 4; see later laws and decisions noted under sec. 1621, R. S.)

Naval Reserve Force.—"Men transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve shall be governed by the laws and regulations for the government of the Navy * * *." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 591.)

"Enrolled members of the Naval Reserve Force when in active service shall be subject to the laws, regulations, and orders for the government of the Regular Navy, and the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, permit the members of the Naval Reserve Force to wear the uniform of their respective ranks, grades, or ratings while not in active service, and such members shall, for any act committed by them while wearing the uniform of their respective ranks, grades, or ratings, be subject to the laws, regulations, and orders for the government of the Regular Navy." (Act July 1, 1918, 40 Stat., 712.)

See note above, under "Naval reservists released from active duty."

Coast Guard.—"Whenever, in time of war, the Coast Guard operates as a part of the Navy in accordance with law, the personnel of that service shall be subject to the laws prescribed for the government of the Navy: Provided, That in the initiation, prosecution, and completion of disciplinary action, including remission and mitigation of punishments for any offense committed by any officer or enlisted man of the Coast Guard, the jurisdiction shall hereafter depend upon and be in accordance with the laws and regulations of the department having jurisdiction of the person of such offender at the various stages of such action: Provided further, That any punishment imposed and executed in accordance with the provisions of this section shall not exceed that to which the offender was liable at the time of the commission of his offense." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 600.)

Lighthouse Service.—"That any of the personnel of the Lighthouse Service who may be transferred as herein provided shall, while under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department or War Department, be subject to the laws, regulations, and orders for the government of the Navy or Army, as the case may be, in so far as the same may be applicable to persons whose retention permanently in the military service of the United States is not contemplated by law." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 602.)

Coast and Geodetic Survey.—"That any of the personnel of the Coast and Geodetic Survey who may be transferred as herein provided shall, while under the jurisdiction of the War Department or Navy Department, have proper military status and shall be subject to the laws, regulations, and orders for the government of the Army or Navy, as the case may be, in so far as the same may be applicable to persons whose retention permanently in the military service of the United States is not contemplated by law." (Act May 22, 1917, sec. 16, 40 Stat., 88.)

Public Health Service.—"When officers of the United States Public Health Service are serving on Coast Guard vessels in time of war, or are detailed in time of war for duty with the Army or Navy in accordance with law, they * * * shall be subject to the laws prescribed for the government of the service to which they are respectively detailed." (Act July 9, 1917, 40 Stat., 242.)

For other cases, see note to article 5, A. G. N., as to jurisdiction over civilians acting as spies; article 6, A. G. N., as to jurisdiction of murder by civilian on naval hospital ship; article 22, as to concurrent jurisdiction of civil authorities; articles 32 and 53, as to revocation of illegal discharge; section 1422, Revised Statutes, as to men detained after expiration of enlistment; section 1519, Revised Statutes, as to court-martial of midshipmen; and see, generally, notes to articles 61, 62, and 63, A. G. N., and to the Constitution, Article 1, section 8, clauses 11, 13, and 14.

Article 1. [Commander's duty of example and correction.] The commanders of all fleets, squadrons, naval stations, and vessels belonging to the Navy, are required to show in themselves a good example of virtue, honor, patriotism, and subordination; to be vigilant in inspecting the conduct of all persons who are placed under their command; to guard against and suppress all dissolute and immoral practices, and to correct, according to the laws and regulations of the Navy, all persons who are guilty of them; and any such commander who offends against this article shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, v. 12, p. 601, art. 1.)

Art. 2. [Divine service.] The commanders of vessels and naval stations to which chaplains are attached shall cause divine service to be performed on Sunday, whenever the weather and other circumstances allow it to be done; and it is earnestly recommended to all officers, seamen, and others in the naval service diligently to attend at every performance of the worship of Almighty God.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, v. 12, p. 601, art. 2.)

Art. 3. [Irreverent behavior.] Any irreverent or unbecoming behavior during divine service shall be punished as a general or summary court-martial may direct.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, v. 12, p. 601, art. 2.)

As to deck courts and their power to punish, see note to article 24, A. G. N.

As to limitations of punishment which may be adjudged by courts-martial, see note to article 63, A. G. N.

Art. 4. [Offenses punishable by death.] The punishment of death, or such other punishment as a court-martial may adjudge, may be inflicted on any person in the naval service—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, v. 12, p. 601, art. 3.)

FIRST. [MUTINY.] Who makes, or attempts to make, or unites with any mutiny or mutinous assembly, or, being witness to or present at any mutiny, does not do his utmost to suppress it; or, knowing of any mutinous assembly or of any intended mutiny, does not immediately communicate his knowledge to his superior or commanding officer;

SECOND. [DISOBEDIENCE OF ORDERS.] Or disobeys the lawful orders of his superior officer;

THIRD. [STRIKING SUPERIOR OFFICER.] Or strikes or assaults, or attempts or threatens to strike or assault, his superior officer while in the execution of the duties of his office;

FOURTH. [INTERCOURSE WITH AN ENEMY.] Or gives any intelligence to, or holds or entertains any intercourse with, an enemy or rebel, without leave from the President, the Secretary of the Navy, the commander-in-chief of the fleet, the commander of the squadron, or, in case of a vessel acting singly, from his commanding officer;

FIFTH. [MESSAGES FROM AN ENEMY.] Or receives any message or letter from an enemy or rebel, or, being aware of the unlawful reception of such message or letter, fails to take the earliest opportunity to inform his superior or commanding officer thereof;

SIXTH. [DESERTION IN TIME OF WAR.] Or, in time of war, deserts or entices others to desert; [See §§ 1996, 1998.]—(23 April, 1800, c. 33, art. 17, v. 2, p. 47.)

SEVENTH. [DESERTING TRUST.] Or, in time of war, deserts or betrays his trust, or entices or aids others to desert or betray their trust;

EIGHTH. [SLEEPING ON WATCH.] Or sleeps upon his watch;

NINTH. [LEAVING STATION.] Or leaves his station before being regularly relieved;

TENTH. [WILLFUL STRANDING OR INJURY OF VESSEL.] Or intentionally or willfully suffers any vessel of the Navy to be stranded, or run upon rocks or shoals or improperly hazarded; or maliciously or willfully injures any vessel of the Navy, or any part of her tackle, armament, or equipment, whereby the safety of the vessel is hazarded or the lives of the crew exposed to danger;

ELEVENTH. [UNLAWFUL DESTRUCTION OF PUBLIC PROPERTY.] Or unlawfully sets on fire, or otherwise unlawfully destroys, any public property not at the time in possession of an enemy, pirate, or rebel;

TWELFTH. [STRIKING FLAG OR TREACHEROUSLY YIELDING.] Or strikes or attempts to strike the flag to an enemy or rebel, without proper authority, or, when engaged in battle, treacherously yields or pusillanimously cries for quarters;

THIRTEENTH. [COWARDICE IN BATTLE.] Or, in time of battle, displays cowardice, negligence, or disaffection, or withdraws from or keeps out of danger to which he should expose himself;

FOURTEENTH. [DESERTING DUTY IN BATTLE.] Or, in time of battle, deserts his duty or station, or entices others to do so;

FIFTEENTH. [NEGLECTING ORDERS TO PREPARE FOR BATTLE.] Or does not properly observe the orders of his commanding officer, and use his utmost exertions to carry them into execution, when ordered to prepare for or join in, or when actually engaged in, battle, or while in sight of an enemy;

SIXTEENTH. [NEGLECTING TO CLEAR FOR ACTION.] Or, being in command of a fleet, squadron, or vessel acting singly, neglects, when an engagement is probable, or when an armed vessel of an enemy or rebel is in sight, to prepare and clear his ship or ships for action;

SEVENTEENTH. [NEGLECTING TO JOIN ON SIGNAL FOR BATTLE.] Or does not, upon signal for battle, use his utmost exertions to join in battle;

EIGHTEENTH. [FAILING TO ENCOURAGE THE MEN TO FIGHT.] Or fails to encourage, in his own person, his inferior officers and men to fight courageously;

NINETEENTH. [FAILING TO SEEK ENCOUNTER.] Or does not do his utmost to overtake and capture or destroy any vessel which it is his duty to encounter;

TWENTIETH. [FAILING TO AFFORD RELIEF IN BATTLE.] Or does not afford all practicable relief and assistance to vessels belonging to the United States or their allies when engaged in battle.

"Such other punishment" construed.—See note to article 63, A. G. N., under "Cruel and unusual punishments."

Imprisonment in penitentiary.—See article 7, A. G. N.

"Superior officer" construed.—The article of war which prescribes the punishment of an officer or soldier who offers violence to or disobeys the command of his superior officer does not apply as between an undergraduate cadet at the Military Academy and a fellow undergraduate, whatever may be their relative rank in the academic organization; the rank of cadets within the academy, as commissioned officers, noncommissioned officers, and privates, is not rank in the Army. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 332, 333.)

See note to section 1623, Revised Statutes, as to construction of "senior in rank"; and see note to article 8, A. G. N.

Mutiny.—See note to article 6, A. G. N., as to officers charged with murder for execution of seaman for mutinous conduct.

Disobedience of orders.—Question whether disobedience of orders is such conduct as may be punished under the provision of the law relating to "scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals," discussed but not decided. (Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 89, 127; see note to art. 8, A. G. N.)

It sometimes happens that a prompt and unhesitating obedience to orders is indispensable to the complete attainment of the object. While subordinate officers or soldiers are pausing to consider whether they ought to obey or are scrupulously weighing the evidence of the facts upon which the commander in chief exercises the right to demand their services, the hostile enterprise may be accomplished without the means of resistance. (Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 89, 130.)

A prompt and unhesitating obedience to orders is indispensable to the complete attainment of the object. The service is a military service, and the command of a military nature; and in such cases every delay and every obstacle to an efficient and immediate compliance necessarily tends to jeopardize the public interests. (Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat., 19, 30.)

If a superior officer has a right to contest the orders of the President upon his own doubts as to the exigency having arisen, it must be equally the right of every inferior officer and soldier; and any act done by any person in furtherance of such orders would subject him to responsibility in a civil suit in which his defense must finally rest upon his ability to establish the facts by competent evidence. Such a course would be subversive of all discipline and expose the best disposed officers to the chances of ruinous litigation. (Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat., 19, 30.)

The belief of a subordinate as to his rights does not furnish any justification for his disobedience of orders. For there would be an end of all discipline if the seamen and marines on board a ship of war on a distant service were permitted to act upon their own opinion of their rights, and to throw off the authority of the commander whenever they supposed it to be unlawfully exercised. (Dinsman v. Wilkes, 12 How., 390, 403.)

For other cases, as to duty of obeying orders and whether illegal order is a defense to a civil suit against the subordinate obeying same, see note to Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 13, under "Responsibility of military authorities for illegal acts."

Assault and battery.—An "assault" is an attempt which, if consummated, would result in a battery. It is essential to a battery that some force shall be actually applied, not merely threatened or attempted to be applied, to the person of another, or to some article so closely connected with his person as to be regarded as a part of it. And the conduct of a soldier in shooting at another, without hitting him, does not constitute an assault and battery. (Anderson v. Crawford, 265 Fed. Rep., 504.)

While a battery always includes an assault, assaults often fall short of a battery. (Anderson v. Crawford, 265 Fed. Rep., 504.)

The definition of an assault is an offer or attempt by force to do a corporal injury to another, as if one person strikes at another with his hands or with a stick and misses him; for if the other be stricken, it is a battery which is an offense of a higher grade. (Anderson v. Crawford, 265 Fed. Rep., 504.)

See note to article 43, A. G. N., as to charges and specifications.

Desertion in time of war.—See section 1998, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 356), providing for disabilities to be suffered by persons who desert in time of war, including the forfeiture of the rights of citizenship and incapacity to hold office under the United States. See also article 19, A. G. N., as amended by said act of August 22, 1912, as to reenlistment of war-time deserters.

The provisions of sections 1996 and 1998, Revised Statutes, which subject persons deserting the military service of the United States to additional penalties, can only take effect upon conviction by a court-martial. (Kurtz v. Moffitt, 115 U. S., 487, 501. As to effect of pardon, see note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 1, under "III. Power to pardon offenses against United States," subheading, "The effect of the pardon is prospective.")

See note to article 8, A. G. N., as to definition of desertion, etc. See articles 61 and 62, A. G. N. and notes thereto, as to statute of limitations.

"Time of war" construed.—Whether a condition of war exists within the articles of war relating to the trial of certain offenses committed by soldiers is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the political department of the Government. (Hamilton v. McClaughry, 136 Fed. Rep., 445.)

The "Boxer uprising" in China in June, 1900, during which the United States assembled an army of 15,000 men, over 5,000 of whom were ordered to and did proceed to China to assist the forces of the allied nations in quelling the uprising and to release the accredited representatives of the United States then imprisoned within the city of Pekin, during which the pay of officers and men in the United States military service was increased to a war basis, constituted a "time of war," within the articles of war providing for the trial of certain offenses by military court-martial. (Hamilton v. McClaughry, 136 Fed. Rep., 445.)

Art. 5. [Spies, etc.] All persons who, in time of war, or of rebellion against the supreme authority of the United States, come or are found in the capacity of spies, or who bring or deliver any seducing letter or message from an enemy or rebel, or endeavor to corrupt any person in the Navy to betray his trust, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as a court-martial may adjudge.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, v. 12, p. 602, art. 4. 13 Feb., 1862, c. 25, s. 4, v. 12, p. 340. 3 Mar., 1863, c. 75, s. 38, v. 12, p. 737.)

- "Time of war" construed.—See note to article 4, A. G. N.

"Such other punishment" construed.—See note to article 63, A. G. N., under "Cruel and unusual punishments."

Imprisonment in penitentiary.—See article 7, A. G. N.

Punishment of persons not belonging to Navy.—In time of war or rebellion the military jurisdiction is extended over "all persons" found lurking or acting as spies. Persons who do not belong to the military establishment, who are not a part of the Army, are not subject to military jurisdiction except in the cases specifically provided for by law, as, for example, where they come within the description of this statute. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 13, 15, referring to sec. 1343, R. S., relating to the Army.)

Certain offenses committed by persons not belonging to the Army, and which affect the safety, the government, and discipline of the Army, are by statute punishable by court-martial, as, for example, section 1343, Revised Statutes, by which spies are made amenable to military justice. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 292, 294.)

The articles of war denounce penalties only against officers and soldiers, with the exception of a few provisions respecting sutlers, retainers to the camp, and persons serving with the armies in the field, and one provision respecting spies. (Ex parte Henderson, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,349.)

Endeavor to corrupt person in Marine Corps.—The accused, a corporal of marines, was charged with endeavoring to corrupt two privates belonging to a marine guard on board a steamer conveying state prisoners to Fort Lafayette, by offering them a large pecuniary reward if they would assist him in effecting the escape of certain of the prisoners. The prisoner was convicted of one of the gravest offenses enumerated in the calendar of naval crimes. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 158.)

Spy outside field of operations.—A person apprehended upon United States territory not under martial law, who had not entered any camp, fortification, or other military premises of the United States, and who had not come through the fighting lines or field of military operations, can not be tried as a spy by an Army court-martial, and to such a case section 1343, Revised Statutes, and article 82 of the Articles of War, can not be applied. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 356.)

German spy amenable to naval court-martial.—Under article 5, A. G. N., the jurisdiction of a naval court-martial to punish a German spy who entered the United States under a false name and on a forged passport, and who was arrested in New York City, can not be denied on the ground that the port of New York was outside the field of active operations and outside the theater of war. (U. S. v. MacDonald, 265 Fed. Rep., 754.)

Art. 6. [Murder.] If any person belonging to any public vessel of the United States commits the crime of murder without the territorial jurisdiction thereof, he may be tried by court-martial and punished with death.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, v. 12, p. 602, art. 5.)

Jurisdiction of manslaughter.—See note to article 22, A. G. N.

Under a charge of murder, courts-martial as well as criminal courts of law may convict the accused of manslaughter. (U. S. v. Mackenzie, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18313.)

Execution of subordinate without trial.—Upon allegation that officers of the U. S. Brig Somers in 1812 had committed the crime of Military authorities should have power to try spies wherever found; otherwise they may not be subject to trial for that offense. (U. S. v. MacDonald, 265 Fed. Rep., 754.)

In the recent World War the field of operations which existed after the United States entered the war, and especially in regard to naval operations, brought the port of New York within the field of active operations. With the progress made in obtaining ways and means for devastation and destruction, the territory of the United States was certainly within the field of active operations. Great numbers of troops were being sent abroad, and in large numbers sailing from the port of New York; vessels loaded with ammunition and supplies for the Army were daily leaving this port; German submarines were landing, unheralded and unaware, in our ports before the United States entered the war; ships were being destroyed within easy distance of the Atlantic coast; there was the constant threat of airships above the harbor and city of New York on missions of destruction. A spy of the enemy might well have aided these hostile operations. It is not necessary that it be said of the accused that he entered forts or armed encampments for the purposes of his mission; it is sufficient if he was here on the mission of a spy and communicated his intelligence or information to the enemy. (U. S. v. MacDonald, 265 Fed. Rep., 754.)

Under international law, spying is not a crime, and the offense against the laws of war consists of being found during the war in the capacity of a spy. The guaranties of the Constitution apply only where a crime is charged, and a "crime" means an offense against the Government as understood when the Constitution was adopted, which does not include the offense of being a spy. (U. S. v. MacDonald, 265 Fed. Rep., 754.)

This article is applicable to all persons acting as spies, whether citizens of the United States or not. (U. S. v. MacDonald, 265 Fed. Rep., 754.)

Spies who were present in our midst were dangerous agencies of war, and it is proper that the naval authorities deal with them as the act of Congress provides that courts-martial might. Whatever may be the right of an alien to protection of the law in this country, he surrenders his right to constitutional protection when he joins the armed forces of an alien enemy, assuming duties as a spy. (U. S. v. MacDonald, 265 Fed. Rep., 754.)

murder on the high seas, it appeared in their defense that they arrested a member of the crew on a charge of mutinous conspiracy with others of the crew to murder the officers and piratically possess themselves of the vessel; that after detaining the prisoner for several days they ordered him to be put to death under apprehension of his rescue by his confederates and in the belief that there was no other means of saving the ship and the lives of the officers; held that the setting up of an accusation of this character against the deceased, under whatever solemnity of asseveration, most certainly can not be received as a justification for employing the last extreme of power by the accused; that the watchful solicitude of the law over life and personal security can not be so quieted or satisfied; that the necessity of the case must be made apparent beyond any fair ground to doubt before any functionary, under whatever plenitude of power, can on his own mandate take the life of a citizen. Nevertheless, held further that a civil court of the United States will not grant a warrant to arrest the aforesaid officers pending completion of proceedings before a court of inquiry, which had been ordered by the Secretary of the Navy, of which court the United States attorney for the district was judge advocate, even though the offense were one within the jurisdiction of the civil courts to punish. (U. S. v. Mackenzie, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15690; see also U. S. v. Mackenzie, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18313; and see note to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 14, under "V. Jurisdiction of civil courts.")

Jurisdiction of civil courts.—The civil courts of the United States are without jurisdiction to try the commanding officer of a naval vessel on a charge of murder or manslaughter, growing out of his conduct in executing certain subordinates on board the U. S. Brig Somers in 1842, the jurisdiction of a naval court-martial in such case being exclusive under the existing legislation of Congress. (U. S. v. Mackenzie, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18313; see note to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 14, under "V. Jurisdiction of civil courts.")

In the case of Commander Mackenzie, the charge of Mr. Justice Betts is legal authority to the point that a court-martial having lawfully entered upon the cognizance of a case, the civil magistrate can not lawfully interrupt or disturb its jurisdiction and right of complete and final action. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 426, 427.)

Concurrent jurisdiction of civil and naval courts.—Article 6, A. G. N., does not vest exclusive jurisdiction in a naval court-martial of the crime of murder. The general rule is that jurisdiction of civil courts is concurrent as to offenses triable before courts-martial. Accordingly, held that homicide committed on a naval hospital ship at Olongapo, P. I., by a member of the civilian crew may be tried by a Federal court in the first judicial district of the United States to which the offender is brought. Courts of the Philippine Islands did not have jurisdiction in this case, as the offense, if any, was against the United States and the Philippine courts only have jurisdiction of offenses against the Philippine Government. It does not appear upon what grounds the assumption rests that a naval court-martial has not jurisdiction under article 8, A. G. N. But since there is reasonable doubt as to the applicability of this article to the offense, such doubt should be resolved against a trial before a court-martial which is a court of limited jurisdiction. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 24. NOTE.—According to regulations then in force, the master and crew of naval hospital ships and naval auxiliaries were civilians, and in practice were held not subject to the Articles for the Government of the Navy, or to trial by court-martial.)

Naval court-martial without jurisdiction.—Naval courts-martial may not try and punish murder which they suppose to have been committed on board a frigate at Norfolk. Jurisdiction in such cases belongs to the civil tribunals. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 698; compare note to Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 14, under "V. Jurisdiction of civil courts," as to jurisdiction of civil authorities of the crime of murder committed on board a naval vessel.)

Art. 7. [Imprisonment in penitentiary.] A naval court-martial may adjudge the punishment of imprisonment for life, or for a stated term, at hard labor, in any case where it is authorized to adjudge the punishment of death; and such sentences of imprisonment and hard labor may be carried into execution in any prison or penitentiary under the control of the United States, or which the United States may be allowed, by the legislature of any State, to use; and persons so imprisoned in the prison or penitentiary of any State or Territory shall be subject, in all respects, to the same discipline and treatment as convicts sentenced by the courts of the State or Territory in which the same may be situated.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, v. 12, p. 602, art. 6.)

Imprisonment in cases not punishable by death.—A naval court-martial, upon conviction of an offense not capital, may sentence to imprisonment at hard labor. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 510.)

The right to impose imprisonment at hard labor is not limited to cases of conviction of offenses which may be punished capitally, notwithstanding that the construction given to this law by the Navy Department from the time of its enactment has been that punishment by imprisonment at hard labor in a penitentiary under sentence of a naval court-martial could be inflicted only in the case expressed in the law; that is, a case where a naval court-martial is authorized to adjudge the punishment of death. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 510.)

Article 7, section 1624, Revised Statutes, is the only statute now in force authorizing sentences to hard labor in a public penitentiary by a naval court-martial; therefore, such punishment can not be inflicted except in the cases punishable by death, enumerated in the 2) clauses of article 4. The expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. (Ex parte Van Vranken, 47 Fed. Rep., 888; reversed in 163 U. S., 694, without opinion.)

Where a seaman was charged with deserting, and the court-martial found him guilty of attempting to desert, the court had jurisdiction over the subject matter, and an action of trespass for false imprisonment will not lie against the ministerial officer who executes the sentence of imprisonment in the penitentiary of the District of Columbia, at hard labor, for attempting to desert. (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65.)

Courts-martial, in cases within their lawful jurisdiction, may condemn persons to imprisonment at hard labor in the penitentiary of the District of Columbia in punishment of crime. This is too well settled to be now open to question. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 248.)

Miscellaneous.—A naval court-martial may lawfully sentence a seaman to confinement at hard labor in the penitentiary in the District of Columbia for striking, disobeying, and treating with contempt his superior officer. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 80.)

For an offense against article 12, act April 23, 1800 (2 Stat., 45; now art. 5, sec. 1624, R. S.), a marine general court-martial may legally sentence the prisoner to imprisonment in the penitentiary of the District of Columbia at hard labor for a term of years, that punishment not being against the usages of the service. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 158.)

For other cases, see note to article 14, A. G. N.

Transportation to penitentiary.—A prisoner sentenced by an Army court-martial to confinement in a penitentiary of the United States should not be turned over to a marshal, but should be conducted to the prison by the proper officers of the War Department. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 204. But see Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65, 78, where it appears that prisoner was turned over to the marshal for the District of Columbia, who received him and committed him to the keeper of the penitentiary, and it was held that the marshal was authorized to receive the prisoner and to turn him over to the keeper.)

A statute providing for the transportation of all United States prisoners sentenced to imprisonment in a United States penitentiary held applicable only to prisoners convicted by the civil courts of the United States. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 204.)

Transportation, clothing, and gratuity on discharge.—See acts of February 16, 1909, section 13 (35 Stat., 622), and March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 756).

Art. 8. [Offenses punishable at discretion of court-martial.] Such punishment as a court-martial may adjudge may be inflicted on any person in the Navy—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, v. 12, p. 602, art. 7.)

FIRST. [PROFANITY, FALSEHOOD, &C.] Who is guilty of profane swearing, falsehood, drunkenness, gambling, fraud, theft, or any other scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals;

SECOND. [CRUELTY.] Or is guilty of cruelty toward, or oppression or maltreatment of, any person subject to his orders;

THIRD. [QUARRELING.] Or quarrels with, strikes, or assaults, or uses provoking or reproachful words, gestures, or menaces toward, any person in the Navy;

FOURTH. [FOMENTING QUARRELS.] Or endeavors to foment quarrels between other persons in the Navy;

FIFTH. [DUELS.] Or sends or accepts a challenge to fight a duel or acts as a second in a duel;

SIXTH. [CONTEMPT OF SUPERIOR OFFICER.] Or treats his superior officer with contempt, or is disrespectful to him in language or deportment, while in the execution of his office;

SEVENTH. [COMBINATIONS AGAINST COMMANDING OFFICER.] Or joins in or abets any combination to weaken the lawful authority of, or lessen the respect due to, his commanding officer;

EIGHTH. [MUTINOUS WORDS.] Or utters any seditious or mutinous words;—(23 April, 1800, c. 33, art. 13, v. 2, p. 47.)

NINTH. [NEGLECT OF ORDERS.] Or is negligent or careless in obeying orders, or culpably inefficient in the performance of duty;

TENTH. [PREVENTING DESTRUCTION OF PUBLIC PROPERTY.] Or does not use his best exertions to prevent the unlawful destruction of public property by others;—(23 April, 1800, c. 33, art. 25, v. 2, p. 48.)

ELEVENTH. [NEGLIGENT STRANDING.] Or, through inattention or negligence, suffers any vessel of the Navy to be stranded, or run upon a rock or shoal, or hazarded;

TWELFTH. [NEGLECT IN CONVOY SERVICE.] Or, when attached to any vessel appointed as convoy to any merchant or other vessels, fails diligently to perform his duty, or demands or exacts any compensation for his services, or maltreats the officers or crews of such merchant or other vessels;

THIRTEENTH. [RECEIVING ARTICLES FOR FREIGHT.] Or takes, receives, or permits to be received, on board the vessel to which he is attached, any goods or merchandise, for freight, sale, or traffic, except gold, silver, or jewels, for freight or safe-keeping; or demands or receives any compensation for the receipt or transportation of any other article than gold, silver, or jewels, without authority from the President or Secretary of the Navy;

FOURTEENTH. [FALSE MUSTER.] Or knowingly makes or signs, or aids, abets, directs, or procures the making or signing of, any false muster;

FIFTEENTH. [WASTE OF PUBLIC PROPERTY, &c.] Or wastes any ammunition, provisions, or other public property, or, having power to prevent it, knowingly permits such waste;

SIXTEENTH. [PLUNDERING ON SHORE.] Or, when on shore, plunders, abuses, or maltreats any inhabitant, or injures his property in any way;

SEVENTEENTH. [REFUSING TO APPREHEND OFFENDERS.] Or refuses, or fails to use, his utmost exertions to detect, apprehend, and bring to punishment all offenders, or to aid all persons appointed for that purpose;

EIGHTEENTH. [REFUSING TO RECEIVE PRISONERS.] Or, when rated or acting as master-at-arms, refuses to receive such prisoners as may be committed to his charge, or, having received them, suffers them to escape, or dismisses them without orders from the proper authority;

NINETEENTH. [ABSENCE FROM DUTY WITHOUT LEAVE.] Or is absent from his station or duty without leave, or after his leave has expired;

TWENTIETH. [VIOLATING GENERAL ORDERS OR REGULATIONS.] Or violates or refuses obedience to any lawful general order or regulation issued by the Secretary of the Navy;

TWENTY-FIRST. [DESERTION IN TIME OF PEACE.] Or, in time of peace, deserts or attempts to desert, or aids and entices others to desert; [See §§1996–1998.]

TWENTY-SECOND. [HARBORING DESERTERS.] Or receives or entertains any deserter from any other vessel of the Navy, knowing him to be such, and does not, with all convenient speed, give notice of such deserter to the commander of the vessel to which he belongs, or to the commander-in-chief, or to the commander of the squadron.—(23 April, 1800, c. 33, art. 17, v. 2, p. 47.)

Discretionary punishment.—For offenses defined by article 8, A. G. N., a court-martial may impose the sentence of forfeiture of pay, both due and to become due, though fines or forfeitures are not in terms authorized as a punishment by that article. (Williams v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 306.)

The fact that article 14, A. G. N., expressly authorizes fines for the punishment of the offenses therein enumerated, does not operate to exclude forfeiture of pay for offenses enumerated in article 8. (Williams v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 306.)

See note to articles 7, A. G. N., as to imprisonment in penitentiary; note to article 48, A. G. N., as to forfeiture of pay; and note to article 63, as to limitations of punishment in time of peace.

Drunkness.—While drunkenness is not ordinarily considered as criminal, the intoxication of a naval officer, while on duty, is a gross breach of discipline and liable to be attended by very serious consequences. (Bishop v. U. S., 197 U. S., 334, 343.)

An officer of the Army was charged with "habitual drunkenness"; found guilty of "conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline in being drunk on various occasions." Held, that when it appears that an offense of which an officer was convicted is embraced in the one with which he was charged, it is a lesser offense of the same character and the conviction is authorized by the articles of war. (Bankhead v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 405.)

Various acts of drunkenness prejudicial to good order and military discipline may be found by a court-martial as a "partial verdict" within the decision of the Supreme Court in Dynes v. Hoover (20 How., 65), though the charge be habitual drunkenness. (Bankhead v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 405.)

Falsehood.—See note to article 22, A. G. N., as to conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman.

Fraud.—There are two broad classes of fraud under the Articles for the Government of the Navy, viz, fraud against the United States and fraud not against the United States. The first class is punishable under article 14, A. G. N., and the other under article 8, A. G. N. (Naval Dig., 1916, p. 245; C. M. O. 4, 1916.)

To constitute fraud against a private person, in violation of article 8, A. G. N., the specification must show that such person had actually been defrauded by and parted with something of value in consequence of the false representations of the accused. If the accused had not actually defrauded the person concerned, the specification might be laid under a charge of "attempt to commit fraud." (Nav. Dig., 1916, p. 245; C. M. O. 4, 1916.)

Scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals.—See note to article 22, A. G. N., as to charge of scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals, in violation of that article.

By the Articles for the Government of the Navy of April 23, 1800 (2 Stat., 45), it was provided in article 3 that officers or enlisted men guilty of "oppression, cruelty, fraud, profane swearing, drunkenness, or any other scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals" should be punished as therein prescribed, viz, in the case of an enlisted man, that he be put in irons or flogged, at the discretion of the captain, not exceeding 12 lashes; or if the offense required severer punishment, that he be tried by a court-martial and suffer such punishment as said court should inflict. The question whether disobedience of orders was such conduct as covered by said article 3, discussed but not decided, as, if not punishable under said article, it was punishable under article 30, limiting the punishments to be inflicted by commanding officers of their own authority (see art. 24, sec. 1624, R. S.); and if not punishable under either of said articles, it was punishable under article 32, which provided that "all crimes committed by persons belonging to the Navy, which are not specified in the foregoing articles, shall be punished according to the laws and customs in such cases at sea." (Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 89, 127. NOTE.—Disobedience of orders was specifically provided for, to be punished by court-martial, by article 14 of the said act of 1800.)

A charge against an enlisted man of the Navy for scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals, in that on one occasion he made an affidavit confessing certain frauds against the Government, while on another occasion he testified under oath, before a duly constituted court of inquiry, and denied the truth of his former statements, was sufficient under article 8, A. G. N., notwithstanding that the specification did not aver which of said statements was false, as required in a charge of perjury, but concluded by averring that the accused did, "by submitting the said written statement or confession, and by testifying as above shown, make statements inconsistent the one with the other, and one of which must have been, and was, known by him to be false and misleading, and intended to deceive and defeat the ends of justice." (Ex parte Dickey, 204 Fed. Rep., 322.)

Where the pleading upon which the accused was tried made a substantial charge of false swearing, although it did not set forth the charge with the clearness and definiteness required in a civil court, held that it was sufficient; that the pleadings did not attempt to charge the accused with "perjury," but alleged a lesser offense than "perjury," viz, "scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals"; and that the specification was not objectionable in that it did not allege which statement was true or which was false. (Ex parte Dickey, 204 Fed. Rep., 322, 324; see also note to art. 43, A. G. N.)

The general charge of scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals is well known in courts-martial, and authorized by article 8 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy. (Ex parte Dickey, 204 Fed. Rep., 322, 324.)

Assaulting another person in the Navy.—See note to article 4, A. G. N., as to definition of assault; and see note to article 22, A. G. N., under "Conduct to the prejudice of good order and discipline."

Contempt of superior officer.—See note to article 4, A. G. N., as to construction of "superior officer."

The term "superior officer" includes an officer of the line, senior in rank to another line officer of the same grade, although not associated on duty together with the right of command and requirement of obedience. The fact that the two officers may be "so nearly of the same seniority" is necessarily immaterial. (C. M. O. 5, 1917. In this case the officer was charged with conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman in writing and publishing a letter containing "abusive, disrespectful, and defamatory" language of and about a superior officer, in violation of article 22, A. G. N., and not with a violation of article 8, A. G. N.)

Receiving articles for freight, etc.—The wide discretion possessed by the commanding officer of a naval vessel concerning the receipt on board, for the protection of private rights, of gold, silver, or jewels, which it was the obvious purpose of this article

(par. 13) not to modify, since the power as to such articles was excepted from the additional limitation which the statute imposed as to other articles, affords no ground for the implication that contract obligations would automatically arise against the United States from the mere exercise by the commanding officer of his discretion. (Cartas v. U. S., 250 U. S., 545, affirming 48 Ct. Cls., 161.)

The Secretary of the Navy can not deprive a commanding officer of his right to compensation for transportation of gold. (Phillips v. U. S. Grain Corporation, 279 Fed. Rep., 244.)

Paragraph 13 of article 8, A. G. N., recognizes and limits the preexisting discretion of commanding officers to receive property on board for the protection of private rights; and neither under this statute nor under the Navy Regulations, by which compensation for the permitted service is to be applied to the benefit of officers and men, does such a deposit of gold give rise to any contract with the United States. (Cartas v. U. S., 250 U. S., 545, affirming 48 Ct. Cls., 161.)

The Government does not become a common carrier; the Navy Regulations negative any such assumption by providing that a captain who is to receive a part of the freight as compensation "shall be responsible." (Cartas v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 161.)

A suit can not be maintained against the United States to recover back the value of gold deposited with the commanding officer of a naval vessel for safe-keeping, and turned over by him to a party who, the captain of the vessel had good reason to believe, was entitled to receive it. The Government is not liable for the miscarriage of a naval officer under this law and the Navy regulation made pursuant thereto. (Cartas v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 161.)

Maltreating inhabitants on shore.—It is a matter well known that the march, even of an army not hostile, is often accompanied with acts of violence and pillage by straggling parties of soldiers which the most rigid discipline is hardly able to prevent. The act of March 3, 1863, section 30 (12 Stat., 736), was enacted to protect citizens not in the military service from the violence of soldiers. But said section did not make the jurisdiction of the military tribunals exclusive of that of the State courts. (Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S., 509, 513.)

Desertion defined.—Desertion may in general be defined to be the willful abandonment of the military service by a soldier or officer duly enlisted or in the pay of the Government, without leave and without an intention to return. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 152, 158.)

Under regulations of the Navy Department relating to the payment of rewards, a "deserter" is one who is absent without leave and with a manifest intention not to return, while a "straggler" is one absent without leave with the probability that he does not intend to desert, but, if his absence continues for 10 days, he becomes a deserter. (Reed v. U. S., 252 Fed. Rep., 21.)

Desertion exclusively a military offense.—A court-martial has exclusive jurisdiction to try a party duly enlisted in the Army for the military offense of desertion. (In re White, 17 Fed. Rep., 723.)

From the very year of the Declaration of Independence Congress has dealt with desertion as exclusively a military crime, triable and punishable in time of peace, as well as in time of war, by court-martial only, and not by the civil tribunals. (Kurtz v. Moffitt, 115 U. S., 487, 501.)

Attempting to desert.—Where a seaman was charged with deserting, and the court-martial found him guilty of attempting to desert, the court had jurisdiction over the subject matter, and an action of trespass for false imprisonment would not lie against the ministerial officer who executed the sentence of imprisonment for attempting to desert. (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65. Note that "attempting to desert" is specifically provided for by par. 21 of art. 8, A. G. N.)

Desertion by one illegally enlisted.—See notes above, under preamble to section 1624, entitled "Void enlistment," and "Voidable enlistment."

Apprehension of deserters.—See note to Constitution, fourth amendment, under "Arrest of military offenders."

A police officer of a State or a private citizen has no authority as such, without any warrant or military order, to arrest and detain a deserter from the Army of the United States. Section 1014, Revised Statutes, which provides that "for any crime or offense against the United States" the offender may be arrested and imprisoned, etc., manifestly applies to proceedings before the civil courts only. (Kurtz v. Moffitt, 115 U. S., 487.)

The arrest of deserters from the Navy by civil officers is now provided for by act of February 16, 1909, section 15 (35 Stat., 622). A similar enactment for the Army was contained in act of June 18, 1898 (30 Stat., 484).

Under the Criminal Code, section 32 (act Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1095), declaring that whoever, with intent to defraud either the United States or any person, shall falsely assume or pretend to be an officer acting under the authority of the United States, etc., shall be punished as therein provided, held that detectives engaged in arresting naval deserters and stragglers for the reward prescribed by the regulations must be deemed guilty of the offense denounced where they represented to enlisted men arrested as stragglers that they were naval officers. (Reed v. U. S., 252 Fed. Rep., 21.)

Making good time lost by absence.—The article of war requiring enlisted men to make good time lost by desertion from the Army applies to a soldier who has been convicted of desertion, or having deserted is restored to duty without trial, which carries with it an acknowledgment on his part of the fact of desertion; but does not apply to a soldier who, after trial and conviction, has been ordered to duty after the sentence has been expressly disapproved by the proper reviewing officer. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 239; see note to art. 53, A. G. N., as to effect of disapproval; note to Constitution, Art. 1, sec. 9, cl. 3, as to bills of attainder; and notes to secs. 1418 and 1608, R. S., as to detention of men after expiration of enlistment.)

In the case of a naval deserter, in determining when the term for which he enlisted ends, the period of desertion must be deducted from the contract period of enlistment, and the latter accordingly extended until the enlisted man has fully served the term for which he contracted. His contract is to serve for a certain period; this contract can not be performed by desertion; nor can the status and obligation created thereby be dissolved at the will of the enlisted man. The obligation can only be ended by complete performance. (Op. Atty. Gen., Feb. 27, 1922, file 26251-26615: 8; see notes to arts. 61 and 62, A. G. N.; and to sec. 1418, R. S., under "Detention of enlisted men after expiration of enlistment.")

Effect of acquittal; desertion.—An acquittal by a court-martial of the charge of desertion operates as an acquittal of any lesser offense included within that charge; and as desertion includes the lesser offense of absence without leave, acquittal thereof is also an acquittal of the latter offense. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 459.)

Effect of disapproval; desertion.—Where the sentence of a court-martial which found a soldier guilty upon his plea of desertion was disapproved by the proper reviewing officer, being deemed inadequate, and the soldier ordered at his own expense to join his regiment, held that such disapproval operated as an acquittal of the charge; and as the term of enlistment had expired, there was no warrant for ordering said soldier to further duty; nor can he be again tried for that offense; he may plead the former proceedings as an acquittal in bar of a second trial. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 239, distinguishing 12 Comp. Dec., 328, as to forfeiture of pay by deserter in such a case; see note to art. 53, A. G. N.)

Art. 9. [Reduction of officer to enlisted rating.] Any officer who absents himself from his command without leave, may, by the sentence of a court-martial, be reduced to the rating of an ordinary seaman.—(16 May, 1864, c. 86, s. 2, v. 13, p. 75.)

Punishment not authorized for other offenses.—The only provision of law authorizing the reduction of an officer to an enlisted rating is found in article 9, A. G. N., and it authorizes such punishment only in the case of an officer "who absents himself from his command without leave." Held, that such punishment is limited to the particular offense specified by this article, and can not be adjudged by a general court-martial for offenses under article 8, A. G. N. (C. M. O. 34-1918, citing precedents; see also C. M. O. 73-1918, 31-1919, and 279-1919.)

President's approval of sentence.—It is deemed advisable, as a matter of policy, although not specifically required by statute, to submit to the President for confirmation the sentence of a general court-martial reducing a warrant officer to the rating of ordinary seaman, inasmuch as such sentence deprives the Enticing or assisting others to desert.—Under the act of Congress of 1855, section 11 (10 Stat., 628), making the enticing of a seaman who has enlisted to desert, an offense, held that a seaman who has passed the examination at the naval rendezvous merely, and has not been examined and passed on the receiving ship, is not enlisted, and a verdict of acquittal on the charge was proper. (U. S. v. Thompson, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,491; see also notes to secs. 1418 and 1608, R. S., as to when enlistment is complete.)

Section 5455, Revised Statutes (now sec. 42, Criminal Code, Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1097), merely provides for the punishment of civilians not subject to the articles of war who are accessories to the crime of desertion by a soldier, or who do any of the acts specified tending to promote his commission of that crime. It has no application to the crime of the soldier himself. (Kurtz v. Moffit, 115 U. S., 487, 502.)

An attorney employed by the father of a soldier, 16 years old, who had enlisted without his father's consent, to obtain his release on the ground of nonage, and who advised the soldier, then a deserter, to remain away from the authorities until notified, held not to have "harbored, concealed, or assisted" the deserter, within section 42 of the Criminal Code (above cited), which requires, to constitute either of the offenses, some positive physical act, done with knowledge and intent to aid in the wrongful purpose of the deserter. (Firpo v. U. S., 261 Fed. Rep., 850.)

To "conceal," as used in section 42 of the Criminal Code (above cited), providing for punishment of anyone who shall harbor, conceal, protect, or assist any soldier who has deserted from service, means to hide, secrete, or keep out of sight. (Firpo v. U. S., 261 Fed. Rep., 850.)

To "harbor," as used in section 42 of the Criminal Code (above cited), means to lodge, to care for, after secreting the deserter. (Firpo v. U. S., 261 Fed. Rep., 850.)

accused of his position as a warrant officer in the Navy. (Naval Dig., 1916, p. 517; C. M. O. 11-1916; C. M. O. 185-1919; see art. 53, A. G. N.)

Rating of ordinary seaman changed. By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 575), the rating of "ordinary seaman" was changed to "seaman, second class." This change has been construed as authorizing the reduction of officers to the rating of seaman, second class, for the offense specified in this article. (See, e. g., C. M. O. 185-1919.)

Reduction of officer to another office.—The sentence of a court-martial reducing an officer to a lower grade and rank was disapproved by the President because it could not be carried into effect by the Executive alone, but would require a nomination by the President and confirmation by the Senate, and then only in the case of an existing vacancy. (See Swaim v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553, 563.)

Art. 10. [Desertion by resignation.] Any commissioned officer of the Navy or Marine Corps who, having tendered his resignation, quits his post or proper duties without leave, and with intent to remain permanently absent therefrom, prior to due notice of the acceptance of such resignation, shall be deemed and punished as a deserter.—(5 Aug., 1861, c. 54, s. 2, v. 12, pp. 316, 317.)

Necessity of acceptance.—"The resignation of an officer of the Navy is not effective until it has been duly accepted by the President, who possesses the power of compelling the officer to remain in the service by declining to accept such resignation." (File 26505-21 and 28, citing Edwards v. U. S., 103 U. S., 471; file 26262-2146.)

Implied resignation.—"If any officer of the Navy accepts or holds an appointment in the diplomatic or consular service of the Government, he shall be considered as having resigned his place in the Navy, and it shall be filled as a vacancy." (Sec. 1440, R. S.)

If an officer is illegally dismissed from the service, it becomes his duty at once or within a reasonable time to appeal to the highest authority for revocation, modification, or correction of the illegal order. If he obeys and submits for an unreasonable length of time, he must be held to have abandoned all title and claim to the office and its emoluments, and to have waived his right to both. And it is immaterial that he may have submitted to the order because he was ignorant of the law. (Ide v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cls., 401; affirmed on other grounds, 150 U. S., 517. See also Armstrong v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 387.)

The principle that an officer who acquiesces in his dismissal from the service for a long period of time has abandoned said office, which abandonment is equivalent to a resignation, does not apply to an officer on the retired list, who who owed no service to the Government, (Fletcher v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 541, 563.)

The doctrine of resignation by implication, applicable to civil officers, is not to be favored in the Army and Navy, where forms and regulations are prescribed and must be enforced.

A resignation by a naval officer is inoperative until accepted by the proper authority, and even if the acceptance of another office be held equivalent to the tender of his resignation as an officer of the Navy, he still remains an incumbent of the naval office until such implied resignation is accepted. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 395.)

A cadet engineer who graduated from the Naval Academy and was honorably discharged from the service under an erroneous interpretation of the law by the Navy Department, and who thereupon accepted another and incompatible office under the United States, is entitled to be recognized as having continued in the service, notwithstanding his discharge, which was null and void; and under the circumstances which existed, and which were owing to the fault of the Government and not to fault of his, acceptance by him of an incompatible office was not tantamount to an implied resignation of his office in the Navy. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 395; see also Winchell v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 30; and see art. 36, A. G. N.)

Certain cadet engineers who had graduated from the Naval Academy were honorably discharged under an erroneous interpretation by the Navy Department of an act approved August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285). Such discharges were held by the courts to be void (see Perkins v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 438; 116 U. S., 483). Held, that the fact such officers may have accepted pay on discharge as provided by said act of 1882, without protest, or in some cases protested against their discharge and subsequently accepted pay, is not tantamount to a resignation. Protests and acceptance of pay could not change the legal force of the statute, either for or against them. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 373.)

Art. 11. [Dealing in supplies.] No person in the naval service shall procure stores or other articles or supplies for, and dispose thereof to, the officers or enlisted men on vessels of the Navy, or at navy yards or naval stations, for his own account or benefit.—(26 Aug., 1842, c. 206, s. 1, v. 5, p. 535.)

Art. 12. [Importing dutiable goods.] No person connected with the Navy shall, under any pretense, import in a public vessel any article which is liable to the payment of duty.—(30 July, 1846, c. 74, s. 10, v. 9, p. 44.)

Art. 13. [Distilled spirits only as medical stores.] Distilled spirits shall be admitted on board of vessels of war only upon the order and under the control of the medical officers of such vessels, and to be used only for medical purposes.—(14 July, 1862, c. 164, s. 4, v. 12, p. 565.)

The possession of alcoholic liquors by any person at any place under naval jurisdiction designated by the President, except as permitted by regulations for medicinal purposes, and the sale of such liquors to any person in the naval forces while in uniform, were prohibited by act of May 18, 1917, section 12 (40 Stat., 82), as amended by act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 393). See also national prohibition act of October 28, 1919, section 7 (41 Stat., 307).

Art. 14. [Fraud against United States; embezzlement; etc.] Fine and imprisonment, or such other punishment as a court-martial may adjudge, shall be inflicted upon any person in the naval service of the United States.—(2 Mar., 1863, c. 67, s. 1, v 12, p. 696.)

[PRESENTING FALSE CLAIMS.] Who presents or causes to be presented to any person in the civil, military, or naval service thereof, for approval or payment, any claim against the United States or any officer thereof, knowing such claim to be false or fraudulent; or

[AGREEMENT TO OBTAIN PAYMENT OF FALSE CLAIM.] Who enters into any agreement or conspiracy to defraud the United States by obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the allowance or payment of any false or fraudulent claim; or

[FALSE PAPERS.] Who, for the purpose of obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the approval, allowance, or payment of any claim against the United States or against any officer thereof, makes or uses, or procures or advises the making or use of, any writing, or other paper, knowing the same to contain any false or fraudulent statement; or

[PERJURY.] Who, for the purpose of obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the approval, allowance, or payment of any claim against the United States or any officer thereof, makes, or procures or advises the making of, any oath to any fact or to any writing or other paper, knowing such oath to be false; or

[FORGERY.] Who, for the purpose of obtaining, or aiding others to obtain, the approval, allowance, or payment of any claim against the United States or any officer thereof, forges or counterfeits, or procures or advises the forging or counterfeiting of, any signature upon any writing or other paper, or uses, or procures or advises the use of, any such signature, knowing the same to be forged or counterfeited; or

[DELIVERING LESS PROPERTY THAN RECEIPT CALLS FOR.] Who, having charge, possession, custody, or control of any money or other property of the United States, furnished or intended for the naval service thereof, knowingly delivers, or causes to be delivered, to any person having authority to receive the same, any amount thereof less than that for which he receives a certificate or receipt; or

[GIVING RECEIPTS WITHOUT KNOWING TRUTH OF.] Who, being authorized to make or deliver any paper certifying the receipt of any money or other property of the United States, furnished or intended for the naval service thereof, makes, or delivers to any person, such writing, without having full knowledge of the truth of the statements therein contained, and with intent to defraud the United States; or

[STEALING, WRONGFULLY SELLING, &C.] Who steals, embezzles, knowingly and willfully misappropriates, applies to his own use or benefit, or wrongfully and knowingly sells or disposes of any ordnance, arms, equipments, ammunition, clothing, subsistence stores, money or other property of the United States, furnished or intended for the military or naval service thereof; or

[BUYING PUBLIC MILITARY PROPERTY.] Who knowingly purchases, or receives in pledge for any obligation or indebtedness, from any other person who is a part of or employed in said service, any ordnance, arms, equipments, ammunition, clothing, subsistence stores, or other property of the United States, such other person not having lawful right to sell or pledge the same; or

[ANY OTHER FRAUD AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.] Who executes, attempts, or countenances any other fraud against the United States.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, art. 7, v. 12, p. 602.)

[TRIAL OF OFFENDER AFTER DISCHARGE.] And if any person, being guilty of any of the offenses described in this article while in the naval service, receives his discharge, or is dismissed from the service, he shall continue to be liable to be arrested and held for trial and sentence by a court-martial, in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had not received such discharge nor been dismissed.—(2 Mar., 1863, c. 67, s. 2, v. 12, p. 697.)

See sections 3617-3652, Revised Statutes, as to duties of disbursing officers; and see Criminal Code, act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., 1094, et seq.), sections 28-48, as to frauds, etc., upon the United States, and sections 36, 47, 86-97, as to embezzlement, etc.

Article 14 not repealed by later legislation.—Section 5438, Revised Statutes, provided for the punishment by civil courts of "every person" who committed offenses included by article 14, A. G. N. Said section 5438 was embodied in the Criminal Code (act Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1095) as section 35 thereof. Said section 35 of the Criminal Code was reenacted, with amendments, by act of October 23, 1918 (40 Stat., 1015), applying to "whoever" shall do the acts therein described. Held, that the amendment of section 35 by said act of October 23, 1918, did not in any manner refer to or repeal the article of war (corresponding to art. 14, A. G. N.), and does not deprive courts-martial of their jurisdiction of persons in the military and naval service. (U. S. v. Barry, 260 Fed. Rep. 291.)

Discretionary punishment.—See note to article 63, A. G. N., as to limitations of punishment in time of peace; and note to article 8, as to discretionary punishments. See also note to article 22, A. G. N., as to punishment for embezzlement.

Offenses under the article of war (corresponding to this article) may be of greater or less gravity, and the necessity for the exercise of discretion in the matter of punishment is obvious. Conviction in some cases might deserve the punishment of fine, or of imprisonment, or of both, as well as of dismissal in addition to either or both; for others, lesser penalties might suffice. The word "or" was properly used to give play to discretion. In any event, fine might be inflicted for the commission of one of the offenses enumerated in this article, and imprisonment for the commission of another; and dismissal under another charge of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 392; the article of war under consideration in this case read, "fine or imprisonment, or by such other punishment as a court-martial may adjudge.")

The word "imprisonment" as used in the article of war was not employed in a technical sense to signify imprisonment at a military post without hard labor, but has a broader significance and empowers an Army court-martial to sentence a person in the military service to imprisonment at hard labor, or to a penitentiary where hard labor is a part of the discipline, where the offense of which he is convicted is one for which the civil tribunals could impose a like sentence. (In re Langan, 123 Fed. Rep., 132; see note to art. 7, A. G. N. The articles of war expressly prohibited confinement in a penitentiary, unless the offense was one so punishable by the civil courts.)

It is not probable that Congress intended to prescribe a different penalty for the theft or embezzlement of Government property, depending upon the tribunal before whom the accused happened to be tried. No reason is perceived why the sentence in one case should be less severe than in the other. The offense of stealing Government property or embezzling is quite as heinous when committed by a person in the military service as when committed by a civilian. It is not believed, therefore, that the omission of the word "hard labor" in the article of war is any evidence of a design not to subject persons in the military service to imprisonment at hard labor, provided that they commit offenses which would subject them to such punishment if they happened to be tried before a civil tribunal. (In re Langan, 123 Fed. Rep., 132.)

A person sentenced by Army court-martial to fine and imprisonment for presenting fraudulent claims to the United States may be punished by dismissal from the service for the same offense as conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. (Rose v. Roberts, 99 Fed. Rep., 948. See note to art. 22, A. G. N.)

Under the article of war, providing that a person in the military service who shall be guilty of certain offenses shall on conviction thereof be punished by "fine or imprisonment, or by such other punishment as a court-martial may adjudge," a person convicted of two offenses named in said article may be punished by fine as to one, and by imprisonment as to the other. (Rose v. Roberts, 99 Fed. Rep., 948.)

Conspiring to defraud the United States, and causing false and fraudulent claims to be made against the United States, are separate and distinct offenses; and the fact that the charges related to and grew out of the same transaction made no difference. Accordingly, the military court was empowered to punish the accused, as to one, by fine, and as to the other, by imprisonment, and dismissal might have been added to fine and imprisonment as part of the punishment for either or both of the offenses. The accused was not twice put in jeopardy because the sentence was greater than the court-martial had jurisdiction to inflict on conviction of any one of the offenses charged, taken singly, the offenses not being the same within the meaning of the constitutional provision. (Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S., 365.)

Jurisdiction of civil authorities.—A paymaster's clerk in the Navy is a "person in the naval forces of the United States" within the meaning of the act of March 2, 1863 (12 Stat., 696, now embodied in art. 14, A. G. N.), and if he embezzles funds of the United States he is not liable to the penalty provided in the third section of that act (now sec. 3490, R. S., relating to such offenses by persons not in the military or naval forces), but is liable in a civil suit against him by the United States for the amount embezzled. (U. S. v. Bogart, 24 Fed. Cas., No. 14,616.)

A district court of the United States has jurisdiction to try a person charged with having forged an obligation of the United States (a certificate of deposit issued by an Army paymaster to a soldier), with intent to defraud, which is made an offense by section 5414, Revised Statutes (now sec. 148, Criminal Code, act Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1115), although he was at the time an officer of the Army and the alleged offense was committed at a military post and with intent to defraud the United States and an enlisted soldier, where the accused has since been discharged from the Army without any action against him having been taken by the military authorities, there being no provision, either constitutional or statutory, conferring exclusive jurisdiction on courts-martial to punish such offense. (Neall v. U. S., 118 Fed. Rep., 699.)

The civil courts of the United States have concurrent jurisdiction with courts-martial to try an officer of the Army for conspiracy to defraud the United States. (U. S. v. Hirsch, 254 Fed. Rep., 109.)

The 60th (now 90th) article of war (corresponding to art. 14, A. G. N.) dealt solely with those in the military service; and section 5438, Revised Statutes (now sec. 35, Criminal Code, Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1095, as amended Oct. 23, 1918, 40 Stat., 1015), dealt with any person, whether in civil life or in the military or naval service. Where an offense of this character was committed by both a civilian and a member of the military or naval service it might be highly important to try both accused before the same tribunal at the same time; hence Congress provided that members of the military and naval forces could be tried before civil courts of competent jurisdiction. (U. S. v. Barry, 260 Fed. Rep., 291.)

An officer of the Army is subject to trial by the civil courts of the United States for violation of section 5438, Revised Statutes (now sec. 35, Criminal Code, above cited). (Franklin v. U. S., 216 U. S., 559.)

Jurisdiction after discharge from the service.—See cases noted above, under preamble to section 1624, as to jurisdiction over persons discharged from the Navy; see also note to article 61, A. G. N.

An offense committed by a party while actually in the naval service is a "case arising in the naval forces," within the meaning of this term as used in the fifth amendment to the Constitution; and Congress has power to authorize the trial for such an offense by a court-martial upon proceedings commenced after the connection with the service of the party charged has been severed. (In re Bogart, 3 Fed. Cas., No. 1,596.)

Under this article, a party charged with embezzlement as therein provided, committed while employed in the naval service, and afterwards dismissed or discharged, is liable to be arrested and tried by a court-martial in the same manner as if he had not been dismissed or discharged. (In re Bogart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,596.)

Where the charges against an enrolled member of the Naval Reserve Force were laid under article 22, his case does not come within the clause of article 14 providing for the trial of offenses after discharge of the accused from the service, notwithstanding that the specifications of the charge against him could be construed as working a fraud upon the United States in violation of article 14. (U. S. v. MacDonald, 265 Fed. Rep., 695.)

Fraud against the United States.—Where an enrolled member of the Naval Reserve Force attempted by the payment of money to bribe a chief boatswain's mate in the Navy to obtain illegally and unlawfully the transfer of a seaman from sea duty to shore duty, such conduct could be construed as working a fraud upon the United States under this article. (U. S. v. MacDonald, 265 Fed. Rep., 695, 698.)

A conspiracy to defraud the United States does not necessarily involve a direct pecuniary loss to the United States, but the statute includes any conspiracy to impair, obstruct, or defeat the lawful function of any department of the Government. (Woog v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 80, 89.)

The authorities will show that it is not essential to charge or prove an actual financial or property loss to the Government to make a case under the statute relating to conspiracies to defraud the United States. (Woog v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 80, 89, citing Hyde v. Shine, 199 U. S., 81; U. S. v. Keitel, 211 U. S., 394; Curley v. U. S., 130 Fed. Rep., 1; McGregor v. U. S., 134 Fed. Rep., 195; Benson v. Henkel, 198 U. S., 11; U. S. v. Plyler, 222 U. S., 15.)

Property rights of the Government are by no means all of its rights. Financial losses to the Government are but incidents to the discharge of those functions for which the Government was established. The proper discharge of these functions is of the utmost concern, regardless of the matter of financial loss to the Treasury of the United States. (Woog v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 80, 89.)

Evidence in conspiracy cases.—In conspiracy cases, proof of the acts and declarations of alleged conspirators is not properly admissible when community of intent and design has not been established; but if received, the error may be cured by the subsequent introduction of proof of the conspiracy existing at the time the alleged declarations were made. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 589; see note to art. 45, A. G. N., as to evidence before courts-martial.)

Testimony tending to show such a relation or understanding between alleged conspirators as would be indicative of a purpose to defraud the Government by means of contracts for public works to be given out and carried on under charge of the accused would be admissible before a court-martial even though it related to matters antedating the time of the particular conspiracy charged. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 589.)

Fraud not against the United States.—See note to article 8, A. G. N.

Embezzlement.—See note to article 22, A. G. N., as to embezzlement of property not furnished or intended for the naval service of the United States; and see cases noted below, under this article.

The word "embezzlement" is not defined by article 14, A. G. N., and consequently it is necessary to look to the offense as defined in the penal statutes relating to United States officials who are charged with the duty of holding and disbursing funds belonging to the Government, in order to determine of what element the act consists. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 286, citing secs. 86-92, Criminal Code, Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1105.)

Where a common-law offense is named in an act of Congress without defining it, undoubtedly the courts will construe the statutes as applying to the offense as defined at common law; but embezzlement is not a common-law offense. No resort can be had to the definitions of embezzlement given in the laws of the several States, as there is no uniformity in the State statutes upon the subject. If embezzlement as defined in the Revised Statutes and now in the Criminal Code is not the offense referred to in article 14, A. G. N., what is the precise nature of the offense therein specified? (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 563, 569.)

Where an assistant paymaster in the Navy was charged with embezzlement in that he "did fail to safely keep and account for the sum" specified, held that this was sufficient to sustain the charge, although it was not proved that the money was actually appropriated by the accused or that he made any particular disposition of it. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 286.)

An assistant paymaster in the Navy, charged with the duty of keeping safely money intrusted to his care, who was furnished a safe with combination locks on both the outer and inner doors for the safe-keeping of this money, and who, after removing the lock from the inner door of the safe and failing to lock the outer door, left the vessel, knowing the condition of the safe, and as a result a portion of the money was lost, is chargeable with negligence equivalent to a criminal intent, and is guilty of embezzlement under the provisions of article 14, A. G. N., and section 88 of the Criminal Code. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 286.)

A general principle recognized by all the authorities is that there may be such character of negligence as will take the place of criminal intent. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 286, 296; see note to art. 43, A. G. N., as to charges and specifications.)

The authorities are in sharp conflict and the question is not one definitely settled by the United States courts, but there is an apparent leaning in favor of the position that there must be knowledge of the act which constitutes the offense, and an intent to commit such act, although knowledge that the act will constitute a criminal offense is not necessary, as the want of such knowledge would be only ignorance of the law. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 286, 296.)

Neither section 87 nor section 89 of the Criminal Code requires an intent to defraud the Government, but only an intent to do the thing prohibited. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 563, 566.)

The willful use of Government funds by a pay officer of the Navy for the purpose of cashing a certificate of deposit as an accommodation to a personal friend constitutes embezzlement under the provisions of article 14, A. G. N., and sections 87 and 89 of the Criminal Code (above cited). (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 563, 567.)

The overpayment by a pay officer of the Navy to himself from public funds, where the officer is guilty of such negligence or indifference as to indicate a willful disregard of the duties imposed upon him by law with respect to the safe-keeping of the moneys in his charge, is in violation of article 14, A. G. N., and sections 87 and 89 of the Criminal Code (above cited), although there may have been no criminal intent involved. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 563, 568.)

The willful withdrawing of public funds by a pay officer of the Navy for his personal use while absent from his station of duty, even though there be no intent on his part to defraud the United States and the funds withdrawn are subsequently replaced, is a violation of the provisions of article 14, A. G. N., and sections 87 and 89 of the Criminal Code (above cited), against converting public funds to his own use except as authorized by law. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 563, 568.)

Embezzlement of property not furnished for naval service.—See note to article 22, A. G. N.

Under the grant of jurisdiction to a court-martial conferred by the articles of war, providing that any person in the military service who misappropriates any money of the United States "furnished or intended for the military service thereof," shall be punished, etc., such a court has no power under that provision to convict an officer of the Army of misappropriating money appropriated by Congress for the improvement of rivers and harbors. (In re Carter, 97 Fed. Rep., 496.)

Most of the enumerated classes of property in the articles of war are obviously military stores used for military purposes, and on the principle of noscitur a sociis all the classes designated fall into the same category; and this seems to be put beyond question by the words "furnished or intended for the military service thereof." The military service as used in this connection means the land forces or the Army. The fact that money appropriated for river and harbor improvements is disbursed by an officer of the Army and the work supervised by the engineer force in the service of the Government does not make the moneys so appropriated moneys "furnished or intended for the military service" as the words are used in the articles of war concerning embezzlement. (Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 399; see note to art. 22, A. G. N.)

Punishment for embezzlement.—Sentence requiring amount embezzled to be turned over to Government officer held legal: See note to article 22, A. G. N., under "Embezzlement."

Art. 15. [List of persons claiming prize money. Repealed.]

This article reads as follows:

"Art. 15. The commanding officer of every vessel in the Navy entitled to or claiming an award of prize-money shall, as soon as it may be practicable after the capture, transmit to the Navy Department a complete list of the officers and men of his vessel entitled to share, stating therein the quality of each person rating; and every commanding officer who offends against this article shall be punished as a court-martial may direct." [See § 4615.]—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 5, v. 12, p. 607.)

It was repealed by section 13 of the Navy personnel act approved March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1007), which contained the following clause:

"And all provisions of law authorizing the distribution among captors of the whole or any portion of the proceeds of vessels, or any property hereafter captured, condemned as prize, or providing for the payment of bounty for the sinking or destruction of vessels of the enemy hereafter occurring in time of war, are hereby repealed."

See, generally, on the subject of "Prize," sections 4613-4652, Revised Statutes.

Art. 16. [Removing property from prize.] No person in the Navy shall take out of a prize, or vessel seized as a prize, any money, plate, goods, or any part of her equipment, unless it be for the better preservation thereof, or unless such articles are absolutely needed for the use of any of the vessels or armed forces of the United States, before the same are adjudged lawful prize by a competent court; but the whole, without fraud, concealment, or embezzlement, shall be brought in, in order that judgment may be passed thereon; and every person who offends against this article shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 7, v. 12, p. 607.)

Art. 17. [Maltreating persons on prize.] If any person in the Navy strips off the clothes of, or pillages, or in any manner maltreats, any person taken on board a prize, he shall suffer such punishment as a court-martial may adjudge.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 8, v. 12, p. 607. Lively and Cargo, 1 Gallis, 314.)

Civil liability.—If captors wantonly injure the captured crew, the prize court will award damages for personal ill usage. (The Lively, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,403.)

Art. 18. [Returning fugitives from service.] If any officer or person in the naval service employs any of the forces under his command for the purpose of returning any fugitive from service or labor, he shall be dismissed from the service.—(13 Mar., 1862, c. 40, s. 1, v. 12, p. 354.)

Art. 19. [Enlisting deserters, minors, etc.] Any officer who knowingly enlists into the naval service any person who has deserted in time of war from the naval or military service of the United States, or any insane or intoxicated person, or any minor between the ages of fourteen and eighteen years, without the consent of his parents or guardian, or any minor under the age of fourteen years, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

This article was reenacted to read as above by act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 356). As originally enacted it read as follows:

"ART. 19. Any officer who knowingly enlists into the naval service any deserter from the naval or military service of the United States, or any insane or intoxicated person, or any minor between the ages of sixteen and eighteen years, without the consent of his parents or guardian, or any minor under the age of sixteen years, shall be dishonorably dismissed from the service of the United States." [See. §§ 1418, 1419.]—(3 Mar., 1865, c. 79, s. 18, v. 13, p. 490.)

It had previously been amended by act of May 12, 1879 (21 Stat., 3), which reenacted said article, substituting the word "fifteen" for the word "sixteen" in the two places in which the latter word appeared, and substituting the words, "punished as a court-martial may direct," for the words, "dishonorably dismissed from the service of the United States."

It was further amended, by implication, by the act of February 23, 1881, section 2 (21 Stat., 338), which changed the qualifications for enlistment in the Navy, as prescribed by sections 1418-1420, Revised Statutes, "by striking out the word 'fifteen' and inserting in its stead the word 'fourteen.'"

Status of persons illegally enlisted.—See notes to sections 761, 1418-1420, Revised Statutes, and see note above, under preamble to section 1624, subheadings, "Void enlistment" and "Voidable enlistment." See also note to article 22, A. G. N.

Art. 20. [Duties of commanding officers.] Every commanding officer of a vessel in the Navy shall obey the following rules:—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 16, v. 12, p. 609.)

FIRST. [MEN RECEIVED ON BOARD.] Whenever a man enters on board, the commanding officer shall cause an accurate entry to be made in the ship's books, showing his name, the date, place, and term of his enlistment, the place or vessel from which he was received on board, his rating, his descriptive list, his age, place of birth, and citizenship, with such remarks as may be necessary.

SECOND. [LIST OF OFFICERS, MEN, AND PASSENGERS.] He shall, before sailing, transmit to the Secretary of the Navy a complete list of the rated men under his command, showing the particulars set forth in rule one, and a list of officers and passengers, showing the date of their entering. And he shall cause similar lists to be made out on the first day of every third month and transmitted to the Secretary of the Navy as opportunities occur, accounting therein for any casualty which may have happened since the last list.

THIRD. [DEATHS AND DESERTION.] He shall cause to be accurately minuted on the ship's books the names of any persons dying or deserting, and the times at which such death or desertion occurs.

FOURTH. [PROPERTY OF DECEASED PERSONS.] In case of the death of any officer, man, or passenger on said vessel, he shall take care that the paymaster secures all the property of the deceased, for the benefit of his legal representatives.

FIFTH. [ACCOUNTS OF MEN RECEIVED.] He shall not receive on board any man transferred from any other vessel or station to him, unless such man is furnished with an account, signed by the captain and paymaster of the vessel or station from which he came, specifying the date of his entry on said vessel or at said station, the period and term of his service, the sums paid him, the balance due him, the quality in which he was rated, and his descriptive list.

SIXTH. [ACCOUNTS OF MEN SENT FROM THE SHIP.] He shall, whenever officers or men are sent from his ship, for whatever cause, take care that each man is furnished with a complete statement of his account, specifying the date of his enlistment, the period and term of his service, and his descriptive list. Said account shall be signed by the commanding officer and paymaster.

SEVENTH. [INSPECTION OF PROVISIONS.] He shall cause frequent inspections to be made into the condition of the provisions on his ship, and use every precaution for their preservation.

EIGHTH. [HEALTH OF CREW.] He shall frequently consult with the surgeon in regard to the sanitary condition of his crew, and shall use all proper means to preserve their health. And he shall cause a convenient place to be set apart for sick or disabled men, to which he shall have them removed, with their hammocks and bedding, when the surgeon so advises, and shall direct that some of the crew attend them and keep the place clean.

NINTH. [ATTENDANCE AT FINAL PAYMENT OF CREW.] He shall attend in person, or appoint a proper officer to attend, when his crew is finally paid off, to see that justice is done to the men and to the United States in the settlement of the accounts

TENTH. [ARTICLES FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE NAVY.] He shall cause the articles for the government of the Navy to be hung up in some public part of the ship and read once a month to his ship's company.

[PUNISHMENT FOR OFFENDING AGAINST THIS ARTICLE.] Every commanding officer who offends against the provisions of this article shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

Effects of deceased persons.—Disposition of money and other effects of deceased persons in the naval service is regulated by act of March 29, 1918 (40 Stat., 499).

Manner of settling accounts of deceased officers and enlisted men in the Navy, where amount due is less than $500, is provided for by act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., 373).

Payment of arrears due deceased seamen: See section 274, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Accounts of pay officer of lost vessel, fixing date of loss of missing vessel, and accounts of seamen on lost vessel: See sections 284, 286, and 287, Revised Statutes.

The regulations of the Navy concerning payments to administrators of balances due deceased seamen and marines, payments of arrearages claimed under wills, the wills of persons in actual service and the attestation of the same, etc., are not applicable to or binding upon the accounting officers of the Treasury Department in the settlement of naval accounts; they extend to and govern only those persons who are in the naval service. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 494; see notes to sections 161 and 1547, Revised Statutes, as to regulations in general.)

Art. 21. [Authority of officers after loss of vessel.] When the crew of any vessel of the United States are separated from their vessel by means of her wreck, loss, or destruction, all the command and authority given to the officers of such vessel shall remain in full force until such ship's company shall be regularly discharged from or ordered again into service, or until a court-martial or court of inquiry shall be held to inquire into the loss of said vessel. And if any officer or man, after such wreck, loss, or destruction, acts contrary to the discipline of the Navy, he shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 14, v. 12, p. 608.)

Lost or captured vessels.—See sections 1574–1575, Revised Statutes, as to pay of crews of lost or captured vessels. See also sections 284, 286, and 287, Revised Statutes, as to accounts of pay officer of lost vessel, fixing date of loss of missing vessel, and accounts of seamen on lost vessel. See also note to article 20, A. G. N., as to effects of deceased persons and settlement of their accounts.

Art. 22. [Offenses not specified.] All offenses committed by persons belonging to the Navy which are not specified in the foregoing articles shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, v. 12, p. 603, art. 8.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 716), reading as follows: "And fraudulent enlistment, and the receipt of any pay or allowance thereunder, is hereby declared an offense against naval disciplin(e) and made punishable by general court-martial, under article twenty-two of the articles for the government of the Navy; but this provision shall not take effect until sixty days after the passage of this act."

Nature of offenses punishable under this article.—Article 22, A. G. N., applies only to offenses "not specified in the foregoing articles," and which are recognized as military offenses by the usages of the naval service. (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167, 183.)

This article is not intended to confer upon a court-martial general criminal jurisdiction, but only jurisdiction over those offenses (not specified in the preceding articles of the section) which are injurious to the order and discipline of the Navy, the jurisdiction being given for the purpose of preserving that order and discipline. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 578.)

The reference is to crimes created or made punishable by the common law, or by the statutes of the United States, when directly prejudicial to good order and military discipline. (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 397, construing article of war corresponding to art. 22, A. G. N.)

Where an offense is specifically provided for in any of the articles of war prior to the 62d (corresponding to article 22, A. G. N.), the grant of jurisdiction to a court-martial to try and punish such offenses is conferred by the particular article which mentions it, and not by the general language of the 62d article providing for the punishment of offenses, not capital, though not mentioned in the preceding articles. (In re Carter, 97 Fed. Rep., 496.)

A charge laid under article 22, A. G. N., would be of doubtful validity where the offense so charged is specifically provided for in one of the "foregoing articles," as in such case it could with much reason be urged that the offense is excluded by express language from article 22. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 563, 570; see below, under "Embezzlement"; and see note to art. 43, A. G. N., as to charges and specifications in general.)

Under the article of war providing that all crimes not capital, etc., which officers and soldiers may be guilty of to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, "though not mentioned in the foregoing articles," are to be taken cognizance of by courts-martial and punished at the discretion of such court, the construction would not be unreasonable if it were held that the words, "though not mentioned in the foregoing articles of war," meant "notwithstanding they are not mentioned," and that the article was intended to cover all crimes, whether previously enumerated or not. It would be going much too far to say that if a court-martial so construed the words, and sentenced for a crime previously mentioned, the sentence, when made his own by the President by approval thereof, would be absolutely void. (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 397; see note to art. 53, A. G. N.)

Under every system of military law for the government of either land or naval forces, the jurisdiction of courts-martial extends to the trial and punishment of the acts of military or naval officers which tend to bring disgrace and reproach upon the service of which they are members, whether those acts are done in the performance of military duties, or in a civil position, or in a social relation, or in private business. According to precedent, it includes acts having no relation to the public service, military or civil, except so far as they tend to bring disgrace and reproach upon the former, such as making an unfounded claim for the price of a horse, or attempting to seduce a brother officer's wife during his illness, or for not attempting to vindicate his honor and reputation when accused by fellow passengers of stealing property on board a vessel while traveling on leave of absence, regardless of whether such accusation was true. (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167, 183.)

Courts-martial derive their jurisdiction and are regulated by an act of Congress in which the crimes which may be committed, the manner of charging the accused, and of the trial and the punishments which may be inflicted are expressed in terms; or they may get jurisdiction by a fair deduction, from the definition of the crime, that it comprehends, and that the legislature meant to subject to punishment one of a minor degree of a kindred character which has already been recognized to be such by the practice of courts-martial in the army and navy services of nations, and by those functionaries in different nations to whom has been confided a revising power over the sentences of courts-martial. And when offenses and crimes are not given in terms or by definition, the want of it may be supplied by a comprehensive enactment such as contained in the articles for the government of the Navy, which means that courts-martial have jurisdiction of such crimes as are not specified, but which have been recognized to be crimes and offenses by the usages in the navy of all nations, and that they shall be punished according to the laws and customs of the sea. Notwithstanding the apparent indeterminateness of such a provision, it is not liable to abuse; for what those crimes are and how they are to be punished is well known by practical men in the Navy and Army, and by those who have studied the law of courts-martial and the offenses of which the different courts-martial have cognizance. (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65, 82; Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167, 182.)

A court-martial can take no cognizance of the validity of a contract. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 177, 178.)

For other cases, see notes below, under this article.

Embezzlement.—The charge of embezzlement of public funds, furnished and intended for the naval service, by a disbursing officer of the Navy, should be formulated under paragraph 9 of article 14, A. G. N.; but there is no rule of practice which prohibits the formulation of the same charge under more than one article and as a matter of precaution it might be advisable to formulate the charge under both articles 14 and 22, A. G. N. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 563, 568–570; see also note to art. 14, A. G. N.)

Under the 62d article of war (corresponding to art. 22, A. G. N.), and section 5488, Revised Statutes (now sec. 87, Criminal Code, Mar. 4, 1909, 35 Stat., 1105), providing for punishment of embezzlement by disbursing officers, held that where an officer of the Army has been found guilty by court-martial of willfully misappropriating money appropriated by Congress for the improvement of rivers and harbors, the court has authority to impose a penalty both by fine and imprisonment. (In re Carter, 97 Fed. Rep., 496; see note to art. 14, A. G. N.)

A charge of embezzlement in violation of the 62d article of war (corresponding to art. 22, A. G. N.), based on the action of the accused in applying to a purpose not prescribed by law large sums of public money intrusted to him for river and harbor purposes, was not the same offense as specified in article 60, subdivision 9 of the articles of war (corresponding to art. 14, par. 9, A. G. N.), because it was not embezzlement of money "furnished or intended for the military service." Such embezzlement would seem to be detrimental to the service within the intent and meaning of article 62, but it is enough that it was peculiarly for the court-martial to determine whether the crime charged was "to the prejudice of good order and military discipline." (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 396, citing Swain v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553; Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 178; U. S. v. Fletcher, 148 U. S., 84. See also note to art. 14, A. G. N.)

Where an officer of the Army was charged with embezzlement in violation of section 5488, Revised Statutes, in violation of the 62d article of war, held that the specified crime was not mentioned in the preceding articles, because the embezzlement charged was not of money "furnished or intended for the military service." (Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S., 365.)

Where an officer of the Army without authority received sums of money paid by drafted men for the purpose of obtaining substitutes, such men paying the money to him in reliance upon his official station and duty as an officer of the Government, and he converted same to his own use, held that the subsequent action of the military authorities in seizing the money, followed by his court-martial for embezzlement thereof and execution of the sentence adjudged by the court, constituted ratification of his unauthorized act in receiving such money; and it can not be claimed that the money was paid to him in his private capacity and that the Government is required to return same to his estate. (Colman v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 315.)

An officer of the Army was convicted by court-martial of embezzlement and sentenced to be dismissed from the service, to forfeit all pay and allowances due or to become due, to be compelled to turn over to such officer as the commanding general should designate the sum of $18,963 (being the amount he was found guilty of embezzling), to pay a fine of $700 to the United States, and to be imprisoned for the period of seven months at such place as the commanding general shall designate, and thereafter until said fine is paid and said sum of money is turned over: Held, that the portion of said sentence that the money be turned over to the military authorities was not illegal. (Colman v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 315.)

Manslaughter.—See note to article 6, A. G. N., as to finding of manslaughter under charge of murder.

Where an assault was committed on board a steamer belonging to the Navy (the vessel being at the time under way in the Thames River opposite the city of New London, Conn.), by a coal heaver in the naval service upon a second-class fireman in the same service, from the effects of which the latter subsequently died: Held, that a naval general court-martial can, under article 22 of section 1624, Revised Statutes, take jurisdiction of the offense as manslaughter. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 578.)

It requires no argument to show that an assault, of a character so serious as to result in the death of the person assaulted, who was also in the naval service, is an offense against the order and discipline of the Navy, especially when among the enumerated offenses is found that of "assault and battery." (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 578.)

The Articles for the Government of the Navy confer jurisdiction upon courts-martial of all crimes committed by persons belonging to the Navy which are not specified in the foregoing articles; manslaughter falls within the general denomination of a crime, and naval courts-martial have jurisdiction to punish the offense of manslaughter committed at sea on board of ships of war. (U. S. v. Mackenzie, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18313.)

Scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals.—Where an officer is charged with scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals, it is not important to inquire whether by the rules that govern military courts the charge should be considered as made under the concluding words of the first clause of article 8, A. G. N., or under article 22; for in either view it should, under the regulations of 1870, recognized and sanctioned by Congress, be charged as "scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals." (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167, 183.)

For other cases, see notes to article 8, A. G. N.; see also article 43, A. G. N., as to charges and specifications in general, and see note to article 14, A. G. N., under "Jurisdiction after discharge from the service."

Conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman.—See article 43, A. G. N., as to charges and specifications; and see notes to article 14, A. G. N., under "Discretionary punishment."

Unofficerlike and ungentlemanly conduct is one of the most indefinite and comprehensive of all the offenses mentioned in the articles of war. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 601, 605.)

The court appreciates the high requirement and purpose of the article of war providing that an officer or cadet convicted of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman shall be dismissed from the service; but confesses a lack of knowledge of its definite limitations and also admits a superior capacity in the military court over the civil to deal with it. The same comments and admission go to the general article of war relating to offenses not specified. (McRae v. Henkes, 273 Fed. Rep., 108, reversing ex parte Henkes, 267 Fed. Rep., 276.)

It must be confessed that in the affairs of civil life and under the rules and principles of municipal law, what we ordinarily know as fraud relates to the obtaining of a man's money and not to the refusal to pay it back. It is hard for the trained lawyer to conceive of an indictment or declaration which should allege that the defendant defrauded A or B by refusing to return to him the money which he had borrowed from him. Our legal training, the legal habit of mind as it is termed, inclines us to dissociate punishment from acts which the law does not define as offenses. That it is fraud to obtain a man's money by dishonest representations, but not a fraud to keep it afterwards by any amount of lying and deceit, is a distinction of statutory tracing. (Fletcher v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 541, 562; reversed on other grounds, U. S. v. Fletcher, 148 U. S., 84.)

In military life there is a higher code, termed honor, which holds its society to stricter accountability; and it is not desirable that the standard of the Army shall come down to the requirements of a criminal code. (Fletcher v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 541, 562; reversed on other grounds, U. S. v. Fletcher, 148 U. S., 84.)

It may or may not be dishonorable for a retired officer not to pay his debts; but that may depend upon how he incurred them, and whether it is within his human possibilities to pay them. In this case, the specifications aver, in one instance, that the officer used his honorable military position to borrow money upon and assured his creditors of payment from the pay which the Government allows to officers on the retired list. Certainly the Government does not give officers the respectability of rank and the support of retired pay to enable them to prey upon their fellow citizens. Remembering the honorable military record of the claimant, the court is averse to commenting upon the details of the specifications, especially as it is not at liberty to review the evidence, but at the same time can not hold that refusing to pay a debt may not be conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. (Fletcher v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 541, 562; reversed on other grounds, U. S. v. Fletcher, 148 U. S., 84.)

An officer of the Army was tried for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman; it was objected that the court-martial had no jurisdiction, because the charges and specifications stated no offense whatever within the rules and articles of war, or known to the military law and custom of the United States; the specifications related to the incurring by the accused of certain indebtedness; it was argued that nonpayment of debts does not justify conviction of the charge: Held, that the specifications went further than that, and contained the element that the circumstances under which the debts were contracted and not paid were such as to render the officer amenable to the charge; and as the specifications were not objected to, and the court-martial had jurisdiction, errors in its exercise, if any, can not be reviewed by the civil courts in a suit by the accused officer for the pay of the office from which he had been dismissed pursuant to sentence of the court-martial. (U. S. v. Fletcher, 148 U. S., 84.)

"Of course, the failure to pay debts and the circumstances under which the debts were contracted, when their payment is postponed or neglected, may constitute conduct unbecoming an officer. But here the debts have been paid; and they were not so great in amount or so many as to indicate utter recklessness when it is considered that Lieut. Burt is a married man and, necessarily, had the expense of a family upon him in addition to that attendant upon his sea service. I am bound to say that the specifications which were handed to me as to the immorality involved in his relation to debts seem to be, many of them, strained, and I can not think that it is just to eliminate him from the naval service for such delinquency." (Action of President Taft, case of Lieut. Charles P. Burt, U. S. N., reported not morally qualified for promotion, file 26260-1392:15, Jan. 2, 1912; see note to sec. 1456, R. S.)

The charge of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman specified in the articles of war is not properly limited to only offenses of the grossest and basest character, of such a nature as to render the guilty party a moral and social outlaw. It should not be necessary to prove that an individual is a moral monstrosity in order to demonstrate his unfitness to be a trusted officer of the Army. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 113, 117.)

Undoubtedly, charges of mere indecorum should not be made the basis of prosecutions under the article of war specifying conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. The punishment annexed to a conviction under that article clearly indicates that prosecutions should be limited to the more serious classes of offenses. But between the grossest offenses of which an officer may be guilty and which are not specially enumerated in the articles of war, and those of a character simply prejudicial to good order and military discipline, such as are apparently contemplated by the 62d article of war (corresponding to art. 22, A. G. N.), there are intervening grades of offenses, many of which are in every proper sense of the words unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, and the commission of which by any person is a sure indication that he is unfitted to hold an office of trust and honor in the military service. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 113, 118.)

Conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman is not the same offense as conspiring to defraud the United States, or causing false and fraudulent claims to be made against the United States, although to be guilty of the latter charges involves being guilty of the former. (Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 395.)

The same conduct constituting an offense elsewhere provided for in the articles of war may also warrant a finding of guilty by a court-martial under the article providing that "any officer who shall be convicted of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman shall be dismissed from the service." (In re Carter, 97 Fed. Rep., 496.)

It is not possible for an officer to do any act punishable by the known laws of the land, however foreign that act may be to his duties or immediate relations as a soldier, which shall not be cognizable by court-martial. To commit a crime of any sort is, to say the least of it, in general, unofficerlike and ungentelemanly conduct. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 413, 415.)

The plea of autrefois acquit, averring a former trial and acquittal for manslaughter in the supreme court of a State, and that said charge was sustainable only by the same evidence as must be used to sustain the charge of unofficerlike or ungentelemanly conduct, is not a bar to the proceedings before an Army court-martial to punish the accused for the latter offense. The two offenses are altogether different. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 749.)

The fact that three specifications under the charge of violating the 95th article of war (conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman) were identical with those under the charge of violating the 96th article (offenses not specified) did not operate to put the accused twice in jeopardy for the same offense. As a question of pleading it is quite clear that the two charges are not one and the same offense. It was necessary to establish a fact under one charge not required under the other; conviction could not be had on the first charge unless it be proven that the accused was an officer; no such proof was needed under the general article. Furthermore, that was a question of procedure, not of jurisdiction, which the court-martial having obtained jurisdiction was competent to decide. (McRae v. Henkes, 273 Fed. Rep., 108.)

Where the court finds upon certain specifications that the accused was guilty of presenting to the Secretary of War a written indorsement containing certain specific statements which the accused knew to be false, and of making such statements for the purpose and with the intention of deceiving the Secretary of War, it should have found him guilty of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, as charged, and not merely of conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline. Untruthful statements made by a high military officer to the official head of the War Department have not been regarded in the past as any less of an offense than one unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 113; see art. 8, A. G. N., first paragraph.)

Conduct to the prejudice of good order and discipline.—See note above, under “Embezzlement”; and see note to article 8, A. G. N., under “Drunkenness”; see also note below, under “Jurisdiction of courts-martial concurrent with civil courts.”

The offense committed by an enlisted man of the Army on guard duty at the United States jail in the District of Columbia, in maliciously and with intent to kill assaulting a civilian prisoner confined in said jail, was clearly one to the prejudice of good order and military discipline in violation of the 62d article of war. Shooting with intent to kill is a civil crime, but shooting by a soldier of the Army standing guard over a prison with intent to kill a prisoner confined therein is not only a crime against society but an atrocious breach of military discipline, although the prisoner who was shot at was not himself connected with the military service. The offense was not simply an assault with intent to kill, but an assault by a soldier on duty with intent to kill a prisoner confined in a jail over which he was standing guard, such shooting being in direct violation of orders under which he was acting. (Ex parte Mason, 105 U. S., 696.)

When the act charged as “conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline” is actually a crime against society which is punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, an Army court-martial is authorized to inflict that kind of punishment under the 97th article of war providing that “no person in the military service shall, under the sentence of a court-martial, be punished by confinement in a penitentiary, unless the offense of which he may be convicted would, by some statute of the United States, or by some statute of the State, Territory, or District in which such offense may be committed, or by the common law, as the same exists in such State, Territory, or District, subject such convict to such punishment.” The act done is a civil crime and the trial is for that act; the proceedings are had in a court-martial because the offender is personally amenable to that jurisdiction and what he did was not only criminal according to the laws of the land but prejudicial to the good order and discipline of the Army to which he belonged. (Ex parte Mason, 105 U. S., 696, 700.)

Fraudulent enlistment.—See notes to sections 761, 1418-1420, Revised Statutes; and see note above, under preamble to section 1624, subheadings “Void enlistment” and “Voidable enlistment”; and see article 19, A. G. N.

Where a minor under the required age did nothing but attempt to enlist, receiving no pay or allowances, he is not guilty of the offense of fraudulent enlistment denounced by the articles of war. (Hoskins v. Pell, 239 Fed. Rep., 279.)

Whether a minor charged with fraudulent enlistment is innocent of the charge made against him, or whether he, a boy less than 17 years old, should be punished for an offense possibly committed under impulses that were patriotic, are matters for the exclusive consideration and action of the court-martial. (Ex parte Foley, 243 Fed. Rep., 470.)

The civil courts should not interfere by habeas corpus to discharge a minor under 18 years of age who has been enlisted in the naval service without the consent of his parents or guardian if at the time of the presentation of the petition for the writ the minor is under arrest and held for trial by court-martial on a charge of desertion or fraudulent enlistment or other charge cognizable by a naval court. (Dillingham v. Booker, 163 Fed. Rep., 696.)

The crime of fraudulent enlistment is exclusively a military or naval offense, triable and punishable only by court-martial, and it has been found necessary so to legislate in order to maintain the discipline and efficiency of the military and naval establishments of the Government. (Dillingham v. Booker, 163 Fed. Rep., 696.)

A minor under 18 who fraudulently enlists in the Navy is nevertheless both de facto and de jure in the Navy until discharged therefrom by operation of law; and while he is such a seaman he is subject to the rules and regulations of the Navy and liable to be tried and punished for any infraction of the law relating thereto. (Dillingham v. Booker, 163 Fed. Rep., 696. But see Hoskins v. Pell, 239 Fed. Rep., 279, holding that the enlistment of a minor below the age at which he could legally be enlisted, even with the consent of his parents or guardian, was not merely voidable but void ab initio.)

Where a minor under 18 years of age who enlisted without the consent of his parents was, before they obtained his release on habeas corpus, arrested by the military authorities for fraudulent enlistment, the question whether he was so arrested before or after the issue and service of the writ is immaterial with respect to the right of the military authorities to punish him for such military offense; and the jurisdiction of the military authorities could not be displaced by the act of the court in issuing a writ of habeas corpus. (Ex parte Foley, 243 Fed. Rep., 470.)

The fact that a person was enlisted in the Navy before reaching the required age, and in violation of the statute requiring consent of his parents or guardian, does not render his enlistment void; and he is subject to arrest and punishment for desertion or other infraction of the rules and regulations of the Navy, and can not be discharged on writ of habeas corpus pending proceedings against him therefor. (Ex parte Rock, 171 Fed. Rep., 240. NOTE.—In this case the court considered the following provision in the annual naval appropriation act which had not been before the courts in prior cases: “No part of this appropriation shall be expended in recruiting seamen, ordinary seamen, or apprentice seamen, unless a certificate of birth or written evidence other than his own statement, satisfactory to the recruiting officer, showing the applicant to be of the age required by naval regulations, shall be presented with the application for enlistment,” which certi-ificate or statement was not furnished by the applicant in this case.)

Where a minor who falsely stated his age when enlisting in the Army was arrested for fraudulent enlistment in violation of the articles of war, after service of a writ of habeas corpus sued out by his mother but before the hearing thereon, held that he would not be taken from the custody of the military authorities. (U. S. v. Williford, 220 Fed. Rep., 291.)

The civil courts will not, on habeas corpus brought by the parent of a minor over 16 and under 18 years of age to avoid his enlistment in the National Guard while in the service of the United States, command his immediate surrender by the military authorities where by reason of his enlistment he committed a military offense; but will allow his retention by the military authorities so that he may be punished by the proper military tribunal for the military offense. (Hoskins v. Dickerson, 239 Fed. Rep., 275.)

Jurisdiction of courts-martial concurrent with civil courts.—An officer may be tried by court-martial for the military relations of an act, after having been tried by the civil authorities of a state for the civil relations of the same act. In such case the offender is punishable both as a citizen, subject to the municipal law of the place, and also as a soldier or officer subject to the military law of the United States. Such double accountability to two different jurisdictions, and the different and double punishments for the same act, making two different offenses, is settled to be lawful by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 506, following 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 413, and citing Moore v. Illinois, 14 How., 20; Fox v. Ohio, 5 How., 434, 435; U. S. v. Marigold, 9 How., 569.)

The jurisdiction of military tribunals is not exclusive in time of peace and in territory where the supremacy of the United States is recognized and the relations between the local government and the National Government normal, and where the jurisdiction of the local civil courts is not disturbed. But when the armies of the United States are in hostile territory, and engaged in actual warfare, the jurisdiction of such tribunals over offenses by persons in the military service is exclusive; and this applies to the condition which existed in the Philippine Islands during the insurrection. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 570, 574.)

Where a United States soldier killed a fellow soldier during a military encampment, and on being surrendered to the civil authorities of the State was prosecuted for murder and acquitted, such acquittal, though a final determination of his innocence of murder and of each lesser offense necessarily included therein, was no bar to his subsequent military arrest and trial by a general court-martial for "conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline" in violation of the articles of war, though based on the same act. (In re Stubbs, 133 Fed. Rep., 1012.)

Although the act prohibited in the specification of the charge upon which the soldier was brought to trial before a court-martial was identical with the act alleged in the information for murder upon which he was acquitted by the State court, the elements constituting the offense charged are radically different. After having surrendered him to the civil authorities, his military superiors could not lawfully deal with him for murder, manslaughter, or a criminal assault, considered as a crime against society in general; but it is equally true that the civil court had no jurisdiction to adjudicate any question with respect to the soldier's conduct as a soldier. Although the same act was specified, the gist of the offense charged was unsoldierly conduct by a soldier, subversive of military discipline. For that offense the prisoner continued to be amenable to military law notwithstanding the acquittal by the State court. (In re Stubbs, 133 Fed. Rep., 1012.)

The surrender of the soldier to the civil authorities did not have the effect to absolve him from his obligation under the terms of his enlistment; nor to divest his superior military officers of their authority to proceed against him for the military offense. (In re Stubbs, 133 Fed. Rep., 1012.)

It is well settled that an acquittal or conviction in a State court is not a good defense in the courts of the United States; but the rule is different where both courts derive their power from the same sovereignty. (U. S. v. Block, 262 Fed. Rep., 205, holding that acquittal by court-martial is bar to trial in Federal civil court.)

An army general court-martial may take cognizance of all crimes not capital committed against public law by an officer or soldier of the Army, within the limits of the territory within which he is serving; and while this jurisdiction is not exclusive but only concurrent with that of the civil courts, if a court-martial first acquires jurisdiction its judgment can not be disregarded by the civil courts for mere error or for any reason not affecting the jurisdiction of the court rendering it. (Grafton v. U. S., 206 U. S., 333, 348, holding that acquittal of a soldier by Army court-martial was a bar to his trial by the courts of the Philippine Islands for the same offense, though called by a different name, both courts having derived their jurisdiction from the same sovereignty.)

Any possible conflict as to jurisdiction between civil and military courts can be obviated, either by withholding from courts-martial all authority to try officers or soldiers for crimes prescribed by the civil power, leaving the civil tribunals to try such offenses, or by investing courts-martial with exclusive jurisdiction to try such officers and soldiers for all crimes not capital. (Grafton v. U. S., 206 U. S., 333, 352.)

The 62d article of war (relating to offenses not specified) does not vest nor purport to vest exclusive jurisdiction in courts-martial; and civil courts have concurrent jurisdiction over all offenses committed by a military officer which may be punished under the provisions of that article. (Franklin v. U. S., 216 U. S., 559.)

The articles of war contain no direct and clear expression of a purpose on the part of Congress, conceding for the sake of the argument that authority exists under the Constitution to do so, to bring about, as the mere result of a declaration of war, the complete destruction of State authority and the extraordinary extension of military power which would be involved in making the jurisdiction of Army courts-martial exclusive of State authority in the case of murder and other offenses committed by persons in the military service. (Caldwell v. Parker, 252 U. S., 376, 385.)

It can not be disputed that the effect of this grant was to confer upon courts-martial, as to offenses inherently military, an exclusive authority to try and punish. In so far, however, as respects acts which were criminal under the State law, but which became subject to military authority because they could also be treated as prejudicial to good order and military discipline, a concurrent power necessarily arose. (Caldwell v. Parker, 252 U. S., 376, 381.)

Ships of war enjoy the full rights of extritoriality in foreign ports and territorial waters. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 73.)

Jurisdiction of civil courts," and note to fifth amendment, under "11. Protection against double jeopardy"; see also note to article 14, A. G. N., under "Jurisdiction of civil authorities."

Punishment for violation of article 22.—See note above, under "Embezzlement"; and see note to article 14, A. G. N., under "Discretionary punishment"; see also notes to articles 8 and 63, A. G. N.

Art. 23. [Offenses committed on shore.] All offenses committed by persons belonging to the Navy while on shore shall be punished in the same manner as if they had been committed at sea.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, v. 12, p. 603, art. 9.)

Art. 24. [Punishments by order of commander.] No commander of a vessel shall inflict upon a commissioned or warrant officer any other punishment than private reprimand, suspension from duty, arrest, or confinement, and such suspension, arrest, or confinement shall not continue longer than ten days, unless a further period is necessary to bring the offender to trial by a court-martial; nor shall he inflict, or cause to be inflicted, upon any petty officer, or person of inferior rating, or marine, for a single offense, or at any one time, any other than one of the following punishments, namely:

First. Reduction of any rating established by himself.

Second. Confinement, with or without irons, single or double, not exceeding ten days, unless further confinement be necessary, in the case of a prisoner to be tried by court-martial.

Third. Solitary confinement, on bread and water, not exceeding five days.

Fourth. Solitary confinement not exceeding seven days.

Fifth. Deprivation of liberty on shore.

Sixth. Extra duties.

No other punishment shall be permitted on board of vessels belonging to the Navy, except by sentence of a general or summary court-martial. All punishments inflicted by the commander, or by his order, except reprimands, shall be fully entered upon the ship's log.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, v. 12, p. 603, art. 10. Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 89. Dinsman v. Wilkes, 12 How., 390.)

Deck courts for the punishment of minor offenses were authorized by act of February 16, 1909 (35 Stat., 621), amended by acts of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 586), and October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 393).

"Hereafter all officers of the Navy and Marine Corps who are authorized to order either general or summary courts-martial * * * shall have the same authority to inflict minor punishments as is conferred by law upon the commander of a naval vessel." (Act Aug. 29, 1916. 39 Stat., 586.)

"The use of irons, single or double, as a form of punishment in the Navy of the United States is hereby abolished, except for the purposes of safe custody or when part of the sentence imposed by a general court-martial." (Act May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 132.)

"The use of irons, single or double, is hereby abolished, except for the purpose of safe custody or when part of a sentence imposed by a general court-martial." (Act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 8, 35 Stat., 621.)

"When * * * empowered by the Secretary of the Navy to order summary courts-martial, the commanding officer of a naval hospital or hospital ship shall be empowered to * * * inflict the punishments which the commander of a naval vessel is authorized by law to inflict, upon all enlisted men of the naval service attached thereto, whether for duty or as patients." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 586.)

"When a force of marines is embarked on a naval vessel, or vessels, as a separate organization, not a part of the authorized complement thereof, the authority and powers of the officers of such separated organization of marines shall be the same as though such organization were serving at a navy yard on shore, but nothing herein shall be construed as impairing the paramount authority of the commanding officer of any naval vessel over the vessel under his command and all persons embarked thereon." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 586.)

Necessity of commander's power.—It is a matter of most common information that it is essential to the efficiency and discipline of the Navy that a commanding officer should have the right and the power, promptly, by arrest and otherwise, to enforce obedience to orders and fidelity to duty. To this end article 24, A. G. N., recognizes the right of such commander to reprimand, suspend from duty, arrest, or confine the delinquent inferior officer; and recognizing such right puts limitations thereon. That such a power in a commanding officer is essential is too plain for argument. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 472, 474.)

Civil liability for abuse of power.—The almost despotic power with which the law clothes the commanding officer for the time being, and which is absolutely necessary for the safety and efficiency of the ship, make it more especially his duty not to abuse it. And if, from malice to an individual, or vindictive feeling, or a disposition to oppress, he inflicts punishment beyond that which in his sober judgment he would have thought necessary, he is liable to an action for damages. If the punishment inflicted was forbidden by law or beyond the power which the law confided to him, he would be liable whatever were his motives. (Dinsman v. Wilkes, 12 How., 390, 403.)

It is not to be lost sight of, that while the commanding officer is to be protected under mere errors of judgment in the discharge of his duties, yet he is not to be shielded from responsibility if he acts out of his authority or jurisdiction, or inflicts private injury, either from malice, cruelty, or any species of oppression founded on considerations independent of public ends. The humblest seaman or marine is to be sheltered under the aegis of the law from any real wrong, as well as the highest in office. (Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 89, 123, 129.)

An action by a marine against his commanding officer for punishment inflicted upon him for refusing to do duty in a foreign port, upon the ground that the time of his enlistment had expired and that he was entitled to his discharge, is a case of much delicacy and importance as regards our naval service. For it is essential to its security and efficiency that the authority and command confided to the officer, when it has been exercised from proper motives, should be firmly supported in the courts of justice as well as on shipboard. But at the same time it must be remembered that the nation would be equally dishonored if it permitted the humblest individual in its service to be oppressed and injured by his commanding officer from malice or ill will, or the wantonness of power, without giving him redress in the courts of justice. (Dinsman v. Wilkes, 12 How., 390, 402.)

Discretion of commander.—The commanding officer, in causing punishments to be inflicted upon a seaman for disobedience of orders, was acting as a public officer invested with certain discretionary powers, and can not be made answerable by civil suit for any injury when acting within the scope of his authority and not influenced by malice, corruption, or cruelty. His position is quasi judicial. In order to hold him civilly liable for damages, it is not enough to show that he committed an error in judgment, but it must have been a willful and malicious error. (Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 89, 123, 129.)

The commanding officer is the judge of the degree of punishment necessary to suppress a spirit of disobedience and insubordination; and he is not liable to an action for a mere error in judgment, even if the jury suppose that milder measures would have accomplished his object. But at the same time he is bound never to inflict any severer punishment than he conscientiously believes to be necessary to maintain discipline and due subordination in his ships. (Dinsman v. Wilkes, 12 How., 390.)

As regards the degree of punishment, it was the duty of the commanding officer to maintain proper discipline and order among the officers and men under his command, and if a spirit of disobedience and insubordination manifested itself in the squadron, he was bound to suppress it; and he might use severe measures for that purpose, if he deemed such measures necessary. And if in his judgment the continued refusal of the plaintiff to do duty made it necessary to confine him on shore rather than on shipboard, in order to reduce him to obedience, or necessary to deter others from a like offense, he was justified in so doing; and while he acted honestly and from a sense of duty, and with a single idea to the welfare of the service in which he was engaged, the law protects him. He is not liable to an action for a mere error in judgment. (Dinsman v. Wilkes, 12 How., 390, 403.)

Repeated disobedience of orders.—By the Articles for the Government of the Navy the commanding officer is authorized to cause certain punishments to be inflicted upon an enlisted man for scandalous conduct without a court-martial. Every successive disobedience of orders is a fresh offense and subjects the offender to additional punishment. It has been settled in a penal prosecution that a like act when prohibited, if distinctly repeated even on the same day, constitutes a second offense and incurs an additional penalty. (Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 89, 128.)

The commanding officer has not only a right to cause corporal punishment to be inflicted but to resort to any reasonable measures necessary to insure submission. He had, therefore, a right to imprison the refractory party on shore, if done without malice. (Wilkes v. Dinsman, 11 How., 89; see art. 49, A. G. N., as to prohibited punishments.)

Suppression of mutiny.—See note to article 6, A. G. N.

Commander Alexander Slidell Mackenzie, U. S. N., commanding the U. S. Brig Somers, was tried by court-martial and acquitted of the charge of murder, three specifications, alleging that he executed by hanging, "without form of law," Philip Spencer, acting midshipman; Samuel Cromwell, boatswain's mate; and Elisha Small, seaman, on board the said brig Somers, December 1, 1842. (Court-Martial Rec. No. 844, vol. 46, 1843, Navy Dept.)

The opinion of the court of inquiry in the same case was as follows:

"The court are therefore of opinion: That, a mutiny had been organized on board the United States brig Somers, to murder the officers, and take possession of the brig.

"That Midshipman Philip Spencer, Boat-swain's Mate Samuel Cromwell, and Seaman Elisha Small were concerned in, and guilty of, such mutiny.

"That, had not the execution taken place, an attempt would have been made to release the prisoners, murder the officers, and take command of the brig.

"That such attempt, had it been made in the night, or during a squall, would, in the judgment of the court, from the number and character of the crew, the small size of the brig, and the daily decreasing physical strength of the officers, occasioned by almost constant watching, and broken slumbers, have been successful.

"That Commander Mackenzie, under the circumstances, was not bound to risk the safety of his vessel, and jeopard the lives of the young officers and the loyal of his crew, in order to secure to the guilty the forms of trial, and that the immediate execution of the prisoners was demanded by duty, and justified by necessity.

"The court are further of opinion: That throughout all these painful occurrences, so well calculated to disturb the judgment, and try the energy, of the bravest and most experienced officer, the conduct of Commander Mackenzie and his officers was prudent, calm, and firm, and that he, and they, honorably performed their duty to the service and their country (Court-Martial Rec. No. 844, vol. 46, 1843, Navy Dept.)

Reduction in rating.—The act of March 2, 1855, establishing summary courts-martial in the Navy, did not interfere with the power of the commander of a vessel, as it existed prior to that act, to reduce seamen to inferior rate for incompetency. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 168.)

The Articles for the Government of the Navy (Apr. 23, 1800, 2 Stat., 49, art. 30) forbade a commanding officer who had received any petty officer or man "turned over from any other vessel" to rate him in a lower or worse station than that in which he formerly served. That prohibition placed a limit on the authority of commanding officers to punish their seamen, but was a recognition by Congress of the general discretion of the commander to disrate petty officers and seamen not protected by the legislative prohibition referred to. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 168.)

A seaman on board a vessel of the Navy, having received his rating under a former commander of that vessel, the actual commander, upon a report to him of the man's incompetency to perform the duties of a seaman, did not consider himself authorized to disrate him, but represented the case to the department, and by the authority of the department the man was reduced from the rate of seaman to that of ordinary seaman. It was contended in the latter's behalf that the law creating summary courts-martial and giving them authority to disrate as a punishment was intended to repeal and exclude any other authority to disrate. The conclusion of the Attorney General was as stated above. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 168.)

See article 30, A. G. N., as to punishments by summary courts-martial, and article 31, A. G. N., as to disrating for incompetency.

Reprimand.—See note to section 417, Revised Statutes, under "Power of Secretary to reprimand subordinates."

A private reprimand administered by the commander in chief of a fleet to a naval officer in accordance with the recommendation of a court of inquiry, as a punishment for an offense such as neglect of duty, is no bar to a subsequent trial of such officer by a general court-martial for the same offense. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 623.)

The fact that article 24, A. G. N., pro forma recognizes a private reprimand as a "punishment" does not affect the conclusion that a proceeding before a court of inquiry which recommended that a private reprimand be administered to an officer by the commander in chief of the fleet did not constitute a "trial" and did not expose the officer to the peril of punishment so as to bar subsequent trial of the officer by court-martial. Said reprimand was not real punishment. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 623.)

The jeopardy of the law means a real peril, originally of life or limb, and always of substantial punishment or penalty. There must be a trial upon an indictment for an offense, or upon some equivalent charge and presentment, as by court-martial, submitting a definite issue and involving conviction or acquittal. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 623.)

Disapproval of the conduct and censure by the Secretary of the Navy of a subordinate officer for misconduct will not prevent a court-martial proceeding upon the same charge. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 622.)

The Secretary of the Navy may, within his discretion, when he believes it for the good of the service, send communications to subordinate officers which may be in the nature of a reprimand. This right is necessarily vested in him as the chief officer of that department; but such communications can not be regarded in the nature of a punishment as defined in the regulations. Regardless of whether a proceeding under the Navy Regulations constitutes a jeopardy within the meaning of the fifth amendment to the Constitution, it is apparent that the action of the Secretary of the Navy in writing a letter to an officer censuring him for misconduct can not be regarded as a jeopardy, there having been nothing more than a private investigation of the matter by the commandant of the navy yard, and a report thereon to the Secretary of the Navy. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 622. See note to Constitution, fifth amendment; and note to article 43, A. G. N.)

Arrest not bar to subsequent trial.—A plea before a court-martial of a former arrest and discharge is bad; a former trial only is a defense. A mere arrest, even in cases punishable in life or limb, is not considered as constituting the jeopardy intended by the fifth amendment to the Constitution. To give the accused the benefit of the common-law maxim from which is derived our constitutional amendment, it is necessary that a man shall have been actually acquitted or convicted on a former trial, and the record of this fact must be produced. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 294.)

It is not free from legal censure to bring an officer to trial by court-martial after the charge against him has been knowingly passed over, although the officer in such case can not successfully plead in bar of trial the fact that he had been previously arrested for the same offense. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 294.)

A naval court-martial loses jurisdiction to try for an offense committed by an enrolled member of the Naval Reserve Force during active service in the Navy, by discharging the offender from arrest without charges having been preferred against him, and by his subsequent release from active duty. (U. S. v. Warden or Keeper of Naval Prison, 265 Fed. Rep., 787; see note to preamble to section 1624 as to jurisdiction over Naval Reserve Force.)

An officer was placed under arrest on his vessel for drunkenness and neglect of duty. Later, on the same day, he was, by order of the rear admiral, restored to duty to await an opportunity to investigate the case. Subsequently he was placed under arrest for trial, and served with copy of charges and specifications, and a court-martial was convened. The accused proceeded to trial without objection; subsequently, he claimed the salary of his office on the ground that he was illegally dismissed by sentence of said court, as his first arrest was an expiation of the offense and a bar to trial pursuant to existing regulations of the Navy: Held, that his first arrest and temporary confinement were not intended as a punishment, but as a reasonable precaution for maintenance of good order and discipline aboard, and did not bar his trial, notwithstanding the existing regulations which provided that the arrest and restoration to duty of a person in the Navy, for an offense, shall be a bar to further proceedings against him for that offense. (Bishop v. U. S., 197 U. S., 334; 38 Ct. Cls., 473.)

See note to article 43, A. G. N., as to arrest for trial.

Scandalous conduct.—See note to article 8, A. G. N.

Other punishments on naval vessels.—See note to Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 14, under "IV. Jurisdiction of courts-martial," subheading, "Courts-martial other than naval can not convene on vessels of regular Navy."

Under this article it was held that naval militia officers could not impose punishments on men belonging to their organization, while cruising on board a vessel of the regular Navy, nor could naval militia officers convene State courts-martial on such vessels. (File 3973-107, Feb. 16, 1915). Thereafter, by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 598), naval militia courts-martial were authorized to convene on board naval vessels; said enactment, however, was repealed by naval appropriation act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 708), which latter act repealed all laws relating to the Naval Militia.

See note to Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 16, as to authority of commanding officer of a naval vessel over members of the Naval Militia participating with the Regular Navy in cruises for the purpose of training and instruction.

Art. 25. [Punishment by officer temporarily commanding.] No officer who may command by accident, or in the absence of the commanding officer, except when such commanding officer is absent for a time by leave, shall inflict any other punishment than confinement.—(23 Apr., 1800, c. 33, s. 1, v. 2, p. 49, art. 30.)

Art. 26. [Summary courts-martial; convening authority.] Summary courts-martial may be ordered upon petty officers and persons of inferior ratings, by the commander of any vessel, or by the commandant of any navy-yard, naval station, or marine barracks to which they belong, for the trial of offenses which such officer may deem deserving of greater punishment than such commander or commandant is authorized to inflict, but not sufficient to require trial by a general court-martial.—(2 Mar., 1855, c. 136, s. 4, v. 10, p. 627. 15 July, 1870, c. 295, s. 14, v. 16, p. 334.)

By act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 586), it was provided that "summary courts-martial may be ordered upon enlisted men in the naval service under his command by the commanding officer of any brigade, regiment, or separate or detached battalion, or other separate or detached command, and, when empowered by the Secretary of the Navy, by the commanding officer or officer in charge of any command not specifically mentioned in the foregoing: Provided, That when so empowered by the Secretary of the Navy to order summary courts-martial, the commanding officer of a naval hospital or hospital ship shall be empowered to order such courts * * *."

"Hereafter all officers of the Navy and Marine Corps who are authorized to order either general or summary courts-martial may order deck courts upon enlisted men under their command * * * when so empowered by the Secretary of the Navy to order summary courts-martial, the commanding officer of a naval hospital or hospital ship shall be empowered to order * * * deck courts * * * upon all enlisted men of the naval service attached thereto, whether for duty or as patients." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 586. Deck courts were created by act Feb. 16, 1909, 35 Stat., 621, amended by acts Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 586, and Oct. 6, 1917, 40 Stat., 393.)

See note to article 38, A. G. N., as to convening of general courts-martial.

Art. 27. [Constitution of summary courts-martial.] A summary court-martial shall consist of three officers not below the rank of ensign, as members, and of a recorder. The commander of a ship may order any officer under his command to act as such recorder.—(2 Mar., 1855, c. 136, s. 6, v. 10, p. 628.)

Commissioned officers of the Naval Reserve Force, Marine Corps Reserve, Coast Guard, Lighthouse Service, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service are empowered to serve on naval courts-martial when actively serving under the Navy Department in time of war or emergency as part of the naval forces of the United States. (Act Oct. 6, 1917, 40 Stat., 393.)

See note to article 39, A. G. N., as to constitution of general courts-martial.

Art. 28. [Oaths of members and recorder.] Before proceeding to trial the members of a summary court-martial shall take the following oath or affirmation, which shall be administered by the recorder: "I, A B, do swear (or affirm) that I will well and truly try, without prejudice or partiality, the case now depending, according to the evidence which shall be adduced, the laws for the government of the Navy, and my own conscience." After which the recorder of the court shall take the following oath or affirmation, which shall be administered by the senior member of the court: "I, A B, do swear (or affirm) that I will keep a true record of the evidence which shall be given before this court and of the proceedings thereof."—(2 Mar., 1855, c. 136, s. 5, v. 10, p. 628.)

See note to article 40, A. G. N., as to oaths of general courts-martial.

Art. 29. [Testimony before summary courts-martial.] All testimony before a summary court-martial shall be given orally, upon oath or affirmation, administered by the senior member of the court.—(2 Mar., 1855, c. 136, s. 7, v. 10, p. 628.)

The use of depositions before naval courts was authorized by act of February 16, 1909, section 16 (35 Stat., 622).

See note to article 42, A. G. N., as to evidence before general courts-martial.

Art. 30. [Punishments by summary courts.] Summary courts-martial may sentence petty officers and persons of inferior ratings to any one of the following punishments, namely:

First. Discharge from the service with bad conduct discharge; but the sentence shall not be carried into effect in a foreign country.

Second. Solitary confinement, not exceeding thirty days, in irons, single or double, on bread and water, or on diminished rations.

Third. Solitary confinement in irons, single or double, not exceeding thirty days.

Fourth. Solitary confinement not exceeding thirty days.

Fifth. Confinement not exceeding two months.

Sixth. Reduction to next inferior rating.

Seventh. Deprivation of liberty on shore on foreign station.

Eighth. Extra police duties, and loss of pay, not to exceed three months, may be added to any of the above-mentioned punishments. (2 Mar., 1855, c. 136, s. 7, v. 10, p. 628.)

"The use of irons, single or double, as a form of punishment in the Navy of the United States is hereby abolished, except for the purposes of safe custody or when part of the sentence imposed by a general court-martial." (Act May 13, 1908, 35 Stat., 132.)

"The use of irons, single or double, is hereby abolished, except for the purpose of safe custody or when part of a sentence imposed by a general court-martial." (Act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 8, 35 Stat., 621.)

"The courts authorized to impose the punishments prescribed by article thirty of the Articles for the Government of the Navy may adjudge either a part or the whole, as may be appropriate, of any one of the punishments therein enumerated." (Act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 8, 35 Stat., 621.)

Reduction in rating.—See notes to articles 24 and 31, A. G. N.

The law of March 2, 1855, creating summary courts-martial, included among the punishments which they might inflict, "reduction to next inferior rating." The object of that act was to provide for the punishment of petty offenders, and the reduction in rating therein mentioned is imposed as a penalty. It had no application whatever to seamen who were only incompetent, from physical or other causes, to perform the duties of their grades, but who were not offenders. Such persons could not be reduced to an inferior rating under the provisions of said act, nor was there any other law providing for their reduction by sentence of a court-martial. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 168.)

Courts-martial sit for the trial and punishment of crimes of greater or less magnitude; and mere incompetency is not of itself a crime. Their sentence of reduction to an inferior grade is imposed as a punishment, but such reduction by a commanding officer for incompetency is not a punishment. A reduction in grade on the ground of incompetency is at worst a misfortune, importing no reflection on the character of the person reduced, and does not require a formal trial. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 168.)

(The opinion of the Attorney General above noted was rendered to the Secretary of the Navy, January 16, 1862. The provision now embodied in article 31, A. G. N., as to disrating for incompetency, was enacted July 17, 1862.)

Art. 31. [Disrating for incompetency.] A summary court-martial may disrate any rated person for incompetency.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 10, v. 12, p. 603.)

Disrating not a punishment.—See note to article 30, A. G. N., under "Reduction in rating"; see also note to article 24, A. G. N., under "Reduction in rating."

Authority of commanding officer.—See note to article 24, A. G. N.

If the appointments under which the men are serving are of a permanent nature, commanding officers of the Navy, who did not establish the ratings, have no authority to disrate them, either as punishment for offenses or for incompetency. Such men may be disrated by sentence of a general or summary court-martial or deck court as a punishment, or in accordance with article 31, A. G. N., by summary court-martial for incompetency. If they are serving under acting appointments, they can be disrated by any commanding officer of the Navy under whom they may be serving, for incompetency, but not as punishment for an offense. They may be disrated as a punishment in the same manner as though holding permanent appointments. (File 3973-190, June 4, 1917, as to authority of commanding officers of the Navy to disrate members of the National Naval Volunteers called into active service and subject to the laws and regulations governing the Navy.)

Article 24, A. G. N., authorizes commanding officers to punish a rated man by reduction in rank only if the rating was established by the commanding officer who inflicts the punishment; but any commanding officer may disrate a man holding under an acting appointment, for incompetency, whether the rating was established by himself or by another commanding officer. (File 7657-249; see also file 3973-190, June 4, 1917.)

Art. 32. [Execution of summary court sentence.] No sentence of a summary court-martial shall be carried into execution until the proceedings and sentence have been approved by the officer ordering the court and by the commander-in-chief, or, in his absence, by the senior officer present. And no sentence of such court which involves loss of pay shall be carried into execution until the proceedings and sentence have been approved by the Secretary of the Navy.—(2 Mar., 1855, c. 136, s. 8, v. 10, p. 628. 2 Mar., 1867, c. 174, s. 5, v. 14, p. 516.)

"That the Secretary of the Navy may set aside the proceedings or remit or mitigate, in whole or in part, the sentence imposed by any naval court-martial convened by his order or by that of any officer of the Navy or Marine Corps." (Act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 9, 35 Stat., 621.)

"That all sentences of summary courts-martial may be carried into effect upon the approval of the senior officer present * * *." (Act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 17, 35 Stat., 623.)

"No sentence of a summary court-martial shall be carried into execution until the proceedings and sentence have been approved by the officer ordering the court, or his successor in office, and by his immediate superior in command: Provided, That if the officer ordering the court, or his successor in office, be the senior officer present, such sentence may be carried into execution upon his approval thereof." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 586.)

The Judge Advocate General of the Navy "shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, receive, revise, and have recorded the proceedings of all courts-martial * * * in the naval service." (Act June 8, 1880, 21 Stat., 164.)

Power of the Secretary of the Navy.—The act of March 2, 1867 (embodied in art. 32, A. G. N.), gave the Secretary of the Navy power to approve or disapprove that part of any sentence of a summary court-martial which involved loss of pay. The act of February 16, 1909, purports to enlarge his power still further, by authorizing him to set aside the proceedings, or remit or mitigate, in whole or in part, the sentence imposed by any naval court-martial. Under the act of 1867 his power of review was very limited, being confined to sentences involving loss of pay, while under the act of 1909 his power is extended to all sentences. (U. S. ex rel. Harris v. Daniels, McDonald, et al., U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, Jan. 6, 1922, 279 Fed. Rep. 844.)

Previously to the act of February 16, 1909, sentences of summary courts-martial under section 1624, Revised Statutes, could not be carried into execution, if loss of pay was involved, until their proceedings in each instance had been approved by the Secretary of the Navy. As many courts were held on ships at long distances from the United States, the delay of months in the execution of the sentence imposed proved very vexatious and subverted the whole object of a summary court, that of prompt and summary punishment for minor offenses. Hence the desirability of section 17 of the act of 1909, allowing the sentences to be carried into effect upon the approval of the senior officer present at the trial. After the enactment of section 17 of that act the distinction between sentences of summary courts-martial which involved loss of pay and those which did not ceased to exist, so that both classes of sentences could be carried into execution without awaiting the approval of the Secretary of the Navy. All sentences of such courts-martial may be carried into effect upon the approval of the senior officer present. (U. S. ex rel. Harris v. Daniels, McDonald, et al., U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, Jan. 6, 1922, 279 Fed. Rep. 844.)

There is an apparent conflict between sections 9 and 17 of the act approved February 16, 1909 (above quoted); but it is not one in reality. In view of section 9, it does not seem that sentences imposed by any naval courts-martial can be regarded as final until the Secretary of the Navy has acted. The sentence of every summary court-martial by section 9 is made conditional, being subject to the final action of the Secretary of the Navy. (U. S. ex rel. Harris v. Daniels, McDonald, et al., U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, Jan. 6, 1922, 279 Fed. Rep. 844.)

The situation is analogous to that of a man convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for a term of years. The sentence may have been carried into effect, and the man actually imprisoned under it; but if the appellate court decides the conviction was illegal and sets the proceedings aside because the trial court had no jurisdiction to try him on the indictment, his original status is restored. (U. S. ex rel. Harris v. Daniels, McDonald, et al., U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, Jan. 6, 1922, Navy Dept. file No. 26251-25651:13.)

Under section 17 of the act of 1909, the sentence may be carried into effect upon the approval of the senior officer present, as therein provided. But when so carried into effect, if it is thereafter set aside by the Secretary of the Navy, the status of an enlisted man whose discharge was only conditional is thereby restored and continues as it was before the sentence was imposed. (U. S. ex rel. Harris v. Daniels, McDonald, et al., U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, Jan. 6, 1922, 279 Fed. Rep. 844.)

Discharge set aside as illegal.—An enlisted man was discharged from the Navy pursuant to the sentence of a summary court-martial duly convened and approved by the convening authority and immediate superior in command; subsequently, the proceedings, findings, and sentence were disapproved by the Secretary of the Navy on the ground that the specification failed to state an offense, and the accused was ordered to return and resume his former status in the Navy, which he did under protest and surrendered his discharge to the naval authorities. After performing duty for several weeks, he left his station, returned home, and after an absence of more than two months surrendered himself to the naval authorities for the purpose of having his status adjudicated. He was immediately placed in custody and his trial by general court-martial ordered for unauthorized absence, copy of the charge was served upon him, and he was placed under arrest for trial. While awaiting trial upon this charge, he was ordered released from naval authority by habeas corpus proceedings; on appeal, held that as the Secretary of the Navy found in this case that the Naval summary court-martial which tried the accused was without jurisdiction because he was not legally charged with the commission of an offense, and set aside the proceedings, the sentence became a nullity; and it follows that the discharge of the accused from the service pursuant to such sentence was a nullity ab initio. The order of the court below directing his discharge from the naval custody and adjudging that the naval authorities are without jurisdiction to try him for any offense committed since the date of his supposed discharge, reversed. (U. S. ex rel. Harris v. Daniels, McDonald, et al., U. S.

Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, Jan. 6, 1922, 279 Fed. Rep. 844.

If the proceedings of the court-martial were declared by competent authority to be void, and its sentence set aside as a nullity, on the ground that he had been tried on a specification which failed to state an offense against him, it needs no argument to establish the fact that his status as an enlisted man was not changed in contemplation of law in any particular by reason of the sentence which was imposed. A void sentence can no more affect the status of the person upon whom it is pronounced than a void judgment can affect the property against which it is rendered. (U. S. ex rel. Harris v. Daniels, McDonald, et al., U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals Second Circuit, Jan. 6, 1922, 279 Fed. Rep. 844, citing in re Bird, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1428.)

For other cases, see note to article 53 A. G. N.

Art. 33. [Remission of summary court sentence.] The officer ordering a summary court-martial shall have power to remit, in part or altogether, but not to commute, the sentence of the court. And it shall be his duty either to remit any part or the whole of any sentence, the execution of which would, in the opinion of the surgeon or senior medical officer on board, given in writing, produce serious injury to the health of the person sentenced, or to submit the case again, without delay, to the same or to another summary court-martial which shall have power, upon the testimony already taken, to remit the former punishment and to assign some other of the authorized punishments in the place thereof.—(2 Mar., 1855, c. 136, s. 8, v. 10, p. 628.)

"That the Secretary of the Navy may set aside the proceedings or remit or mitigate, in whole or in part, the sentence imposed by any naval court-martial convened by his order or by that of any officer of the Navy or Marine Corps." (Act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 9, 35 Stat., 621.)

See note to article 54, A. G. N., as to sentences of general courts-martial; and see note above, under article 32, A. G. N., as to construction of act of February 16, 1909.

Art. 34. [Proceedings and record of summary court.] The proceedings of summary courts-martial shall be conducted with as much conciseness and precision as may be consistent with the ends of justice, and under such forms and rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President, and all such proceedings shall be transmitted in the usual mode to the Navy Department, where they shall be kept on file for a period of two years from date of trial, after which time they may be destroyed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy.

This article was reenacted to read as above by act of February 16, 1909, section 14 (35 Stat. 622). As originally enacted it read as follows:

"ART. 34. The proceedings of summary courts-martial shall be conducted with as much conciseness and precision as may be consistent with the ends of justice, and under such forms and rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President; and all such proceedings shall be transmitted, in the usual mode, to the Navy Department."—(2 Mar., 1855, c. 136, s. 9, v. 10, p. 628.)

The Judge Advocate General of the Navy "shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, receive, revise, and have recorded the proceedings of all courts-martial * * * in the naval service." (Act June 8, 1880, 21 Stat., 164.)

Proceedings as evidence in other cases.—Where the law requires that a document or paper shall be kept on file in one of the departments at Washington, quære, whether a civil court of the United States has the right to compel, by a subpoena duces tecum, the production in any part of the United States of any such document. If the department is compelled to produce it in court in New York or San Francisco, it certainly is not kept on the files of the department during the time required for its production and return. (Cohn v. U. S., 258 Fed. Rep., 355.)

Documents used as evidence in a naval court-martial, and required by statute to be transmitted to the Navy Department and there kept on file for two years, are "official documents" while so kept, and under section 882, Revised Statutes, authenticated copies of such documents are admissible in evidence equally with the originals, notwithstanding that the originals were on file in the office of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, and that no evidence was introduced to show that it was impossible, or even difficult, to produce the originals or that a request had been made upon anyone to produce them. Unauthenticated copies are inadmissible as secondary evidence. (Cohn v. U. S., 258 Fed. Rep., 355.)

Section 882, Revised Statutes, was intended to apply, at least, to any document or paper which is by law required to be filed and kept in any of the executive departments of the Government; and is not limited to documents or papers written or published by an officer in his official character or in the performance of an official duty. (Cohn v. U. S., 258 Fed. Rep., 355.)

For other cases, see notes to articles 42 and 52, A. G. N.; and see section 882, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Art. 35. [Same punishments by general courts-martial.] Any punishment which a summary court-martial is authorized to inflict may be inflicted by a general court-martial.—(2 Mar., 1855, c. 136, s. 10, v. 10, p. 628.)

See article 63, A. G. N., and note thereto, as to limitations of punishment by general courts-martial.

Art. 36. [Dismissal of officers.] No officer shall be dismissed from the naval service except by the order of the President or by sentence of a general court-martial; and in time of peace no officer shall be dismissed except in pursuance of the sentence of a general court-martial or in mitigation thereof.—(13 July, 1866, c. 176, s. 5, v. 14, p. 92.)

By act of April 2, 1918 (40 Stat., 501), the President was authorized "to drop from the rolls of the Navy or Marine Corps any officer thereof who is absent from duty without leave for a period of three months or more, or who, having been found guilty by the civil authorities of any offense, is finally sentenced to confinement in a state or Federal penitentiary: Provided, That no officer so dropped shall be eligible for reappointment."

Similar provision to article 36, A. G. N., is contained in section 1229, Revised Statutes; see that section and historical note thereunder. See also article 37, below.

What officers included.—Civil engineers appointed under section 1413, Revised Statutes, are officers of the Navy within the meaning of articles 36 and 37 of section 1624, Revised Statutes. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 165; see note to sec. 1413, R. S., as to status of civil engineers.)

Officers holding temporary appointments in the Navy are not either commissioned or warrant officers, as is recognized by the act of 1862, chapter 204 (sec. 1410, R. S.); therefore, legislation as to the manner in which such officers are to be cashiered, etc., does not apply to an acting master appointed by the Secretary of the Navy. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 560. The grade of "master" has since been changed to lieutenant, junior grade; see note to sec. 1362, R. S.)

In October, 1861, S was appointed by the Secretary of the Navy "an acting master in the Navy, on temporary service," and was dismissed from the service by the Secretary in March, 1862. Held, that the dismissal was lawful; that in the absence of legislation the Secretary had power to determine the time at which an appointment expressly temporary should come to an end. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 560. In this case the appointment was made by the Secretary of the Navy, under the act of July 24, 1861, 12 Stat., 272.)

In January, 1864, S was appointed by the Secretary of the Navy "an acting gunner on temporary service" in the Volunteer Navy, and in July, 1865, was dismissed from the service by the Secretary. Held, that as an acting gunner he was liable to dismissal at the will of the Secretary. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 564.)

An acting gunner is not, as such, even a petty officer (citing sec. 1410, R. S.). Articles 36 and 37, A. G. N., make provision as to the dismissal of "officers" from the naval service; therefore do not apply to the case of an acting gunner. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 564.)

The provisions of article 36, A. G. N., do not extend to cadets at the Naval Academy; they may accordingly be dismissed from the academy and from the naval service for misconduct, without trial by court-martial. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 634. The ruling in this opinion does not affect the question as to the status of cadets under other laws relating to "any officer of the Navy," but has reference only to the sense in which that word is used in art. 36, A. G. N. See 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 329, 332.)

The President has the power to dismiss a delinquent midshipman from the Naval Academy for violation of regulations; and that power is not restricted by the Revised Statutes, section 1624. (Weller v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 324.)

The statutes on the subject of hazing do not confer upon the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, or the Secretary of the Navy, or upon both conjointly, the power summarily to dismiss from the academy without trial by court-martial a midshipman guilty of that offense. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 543.)

For other cases, see note to section 1512, Revised Statutes, as to the status of midshipmen; note to section 1519, Revised Statutes, as to court-martial of midshipmen and dismissal without court-martial; notes to articles 39 and 53, A. G. N., as to who are officers within the meaning of those articles; and note to Constitution, Article II, sec. 2, clause 2, under "VIII. Power of removal."

"Time of peace" construed.—The law assumes to control the President in the matter of dismissing officers from the military and naval service only in time of peace. Its purpose was, upon the declaration of peace, to suspend the broad power which he exercised during the recent rebellion to dismiss an officer from the service whenever in his judgment the public interests would thereby be promoted. But peace was not inaugurated until August 20, 1866, on which date the President announced by proclamation that "peace, order, tranquillity, and civil authority" then existed "in and throughout the whole of the United States of America" (14 Stat., 814). Since peace in contemplation of law could not exist while rebellion against the National Government remained unsuppressed, the close of the rebellion and the complete restoration of the national authority as announced by the President and recognized by Congress must be accepted as the beginning of the "time of peace," during which the President was deprived of the power of summarily dismissing officers from the military and naval service. (McElrath v. U. S., 102 U. S., 426, 438.)

The limitation, "except in time of peace," on the power of the President to summarily dismiss a military officer contemplates not a mere cessation of hostilities, but peace in the complete sense, officially proclaimed. (Kahn v. Anderson, 255 U. S., 1, 10, citing McElrath v. U. S., 102 U. S., 426, 438. Compare, 32 Op. Atty. Gen., 505.)

Dismissal by the President with the consent of the Senate.—Where the President nominated A to the Senate to be a first lieutenant in the Marine Corps, vice B "dismissed," and the Senate advised and consented to the appointment agreeably to the nomination, and A was commissioned, held that such appointment, followed by a commission, operated to discharge B from the service as effectually as if he had been dismissed by the direct order of the President. (McElrath v. U. S., 102 U. S., 426.)

This law may be construed as prohibiting the dismissal of officers of the Navy in time of peace under any circumstances or for any cause or by any authority whatever, except in pursuance of the sentence of a court-martial to that effect or in commutation thereof; or it may be construed as prohibiting their dismissal by the President alone, in time of peace, without the sentence of a court-martial or in commutation thereof. Although the question is not free from difficulty, held, that the latter is the true construction of the act. Whether the power of the President and Senate in this regard could be constitutionally subjected to restrictions by statute, quaere. (Blake v. U. S., 103 U. S., 227, 235, 236; Wallace v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 396, 400.)

The President has the power to supersede or remove an officer of the Army or the Navy by the appointment, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of his successor. It was not the purpose of the fifth section of the act of July 13, 1866 (14 Stat., 92, now embodied in secs. 1229 and 1624, art. 36, R. S.), to withdraw that power. (Blake v. U. S., 103 U. S., 227; Keyes v. U. S., 109 U. S., 336.)

It is in substance and effect nothing more than a declaration that the power theretofore exercised by the President, without the concurrence of the Senate, in summarily dismissing or discharging officers of the Army or Navy whenever in his judgment the interest of the service required it to be done, shall not be exercised in time of peace except in pursuance of the sentence of a court-martial or in commutation thereof. (Blake v. U. S., 103 U. S., 227, 236.)

The President has power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to displace an officer in the Army or Navy by the appointment of another person in his place. (Mullan v. U. S., 140 U. S., 240, affirming and following Blake v. U. S., 103 U. S., 227.)

It was competent to the President, if he deemed the further continuance of G, a civil engineer, in the service not advisable, to nominate W in his place; the confirmation and appointment of W operated to remove G, and the fact that the latter received no notice of his dismissal is unimportant. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 203.)

For other cases, see note to Constitution article II, section 2, clause 2, under "VIII. Power of removal." See also act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 530), "for the relief of Edward Bellows."

Illegal dismissal revoked.—Certain cadet engineers who had graduated from the Naval Academy were honorably discharged under an erroneous interpretation by the Navy Department of an act enacted August 5, 1882 (22 Stat., 285). Such discharges were held by the courts to be void. (See Perkins v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cls., 438, 116 U. S., 483; see also U. S. v. Redgrave, 116 U. S., 474; Harmon v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cls., 132.) In the meantime, others had been promoted to the vacancies in commissioned grades to which said cadet engineers would have been promoted but for their erroneous discharge: Held, that the promotions which were so made can not well be disturbed, but that said cadet engineers, erroneously discharged, should be recognized as in the immediate line of promotion in their proper order to fill the first vacancies that may occur in the office of assistant engineer. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 373. See also note to art. 10, A. G. N., as to implied resignations; and note to art. 53, A. G. N., as to dismissal of officer pursuant to sentence of a court-martial which had not been confirmed by the President.)

Power of Congress to reduce number of officers.—An officer in the Army or Navy of the United States does not hold his office by contract but at the will of the sovereign power; and it is within the power of Congress to provide for the honorable discharge of officers not needed in the Navy. The country is not compelled, after the conclusion of a war, to maintain the entire official force of the Army and Navy and a host of sinecurists in full pay so long as they shall live. (Crenshaw v. U. S., 134 U. S., 99, 107.)

Article 36, A. G. N., does not give officers of the Navy a contract right to hold their offices, nor deprive Congress of the power of enacting laws for the honorable discharge of officers. One legislature can not deprive its successor of the power of revocation. That article was not intended to place an officer beyond the power of Congress to make any provision for his removal, even by the executive who appointed him. (Crenshaw v. U. S., 134 U. S., 99, 107.)

Officers dropped from the rolls.—See act of April 2, 1918, quoted above under this article; and see note to article 37, A. G. N.

By order of the President an officer was dropped from the rolls of the Army for unauthorized absence. The fact that the order may have been issued "under a misapprehension of the facts" could not change its legal effect; it still remains an authorized act of the Executive, even if prompted by an erroneous impression. The law does not provide for nor contemplate recourse to a court-martial, or other examination to ascertain the facts. His decision as to any officer having been made, the President is, as to the case of that individual, functus officio, the statute giving him no right to review, annul, affirm, or reverse his own adjudication. Certainly a succeeding administration has no power of review. The action of the President in such case is not merely discretionary, but quasi judicial. Action once had is final. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 13.)

The statute did not contemplate any formal trial by the President, either through an "indictment" or a court-martial, before dropping an absent officer. No form of procedure was prescribed, but the means of discovering the facts was left to the sound judgment of the President, upon whom was conferred the power to act. It may well be inferred that it was anticipated that recourse would be had to the records of the War Department to discover who were thus delinquent. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 13.)

The law authorizing the President to drop officers of the Army from the rolls for unauthorized absence was intended to give to the President a fresh grant of power, to be exercised at that time independent of the laws prohibiting dismissal of officers without trial by court-martial, and making such dismissal void if the officer demanded a trial by court-martial and it was not granted. (Newton v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 435.)

Under the law authorizing the President to drop from the rolls of the Army an officer absent from duty three months without leave, the jurisdiction to find the fact of desertion was vested in the President alone, and his decision thereon can not be reviewed by the Court of Claims in an action by the officer for the pay of his office. Congress undoubtedly supposed that the Commander in Chief of the Army was capable of deciding this simple fact without mistake or bias. Right or wrong, the court must presume the fact to be as the President determined it. (Newton v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 435.)

Art. 37. [Dismissed officer may demand trial.] When any officer, dismissed by order of the President since 3d March, 1865, makes, in writing, an application for trial, setting forth, under oath that he has been wrongfully dismissed, the President shall, as soon as the necessities of the service may permit, convene a court-martial to try such officer on the charges on which he shall have been dismissed. And if such court-martial shall not be convened within six months from the presentation of such application for trial, or if such court, being convened, shall not award dismissal or death as the punishment of such officer, the order of dismissal by the President shall be void.—(3 Mar., 1865, c. 79, s. 12, v. 13, p. 489.)

Amendment to this article was made by act of June 22, 1874, section 2 (18 Stat., 192), as follows: "The accounting officers of the Treasury be, and are hereby, prohibited from making any allowance to any officer of the Navy who has been, or may hereafter be, dismissed from the service and restored to the same under the provisions of the twelfth section of the act of March third, eighteen hundred and sixty-five, entitled 'An Act to amend the several acts heretofore passed to provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes,' [art. 37, A. G. N.] to exceed more than pay as on leave for six months from the date of dismissal, unless it shall appear that the officer demanded in writing, addressed to the Secretary of the Navy, and continued to demand as often as once in six months, a trial as provided for in said act."

Enactment held constitutional.—The twelfth section of the act of March 3, 1865 (13 Stat., 489; now art. 37, A. G. N.), providing in certain contingencies for the restoration of an officer dismissed from the military or naval service, is constitutional and imperative. It falls within the fourteenth clause of section 8 of Article I of the Constitution, "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces." (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 4.)

It does not seem to be obnoxious to the objection that it invades or frustrates the power of the President to dismiss an officer. On the contrary, it proceeds upon an admission that the power of dismissal belongs to the President. It is simply a regulation which is to follow dismissal, providing in certain contingencies for the restoration of the officer to the service, and leaving the dismissal in full force if those contingencies do not happen. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 4. See note to art. 32, A. G. N., as to conditional discharge under summary court-martial sentence.)

Not limited to time of peace.—The terms of the act of March 3, 1865 (13 Stat., 489; art. 37, A. G. N.), do not confine it to time of peace. Its terms are general. (Wallace v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 396, 402.)

Not a limitation on power of dismissal.—It does not express any purpose to limit the President's power to dismiss. On the contrary, it recognizes that power and clearly imports, by its language, that there shall have been a dismissal before the officer can invoke its provisions. It does not speak of suspension, but does mention dismissal. It is not to be presumed, nor does the language of the act indicate, that the power which Congress had "requested" the President to employ, to dismiss officers from the military service (act July 17, 1862, 12 Stat., 596), was intended to be taken away from him or limited in 1865, the war then continuing. (Wallace v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 396, 402.)

If it be said that the language of the act, though specific in its reference, does not imply that the officer is or can be dismissed by the President's order, but means that the order has the effect of only suspending him from duty, then the act provides no method of determining the status of the officer if he fails to demand a trial; nor does it provide, if a court-martial be convened, for any execution of its award. (Wallace v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 396, 404.)

Meaning of law obscure.—The language is not aptly chosen, and the meaning to be ascribed to it is obscure. (Wallace v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 396, 403.)

Whether the purpose of the law is fully met by a court-martial or some other body, authorized by order of the President, whose findings can go to the officer's record or make him eligible to reappointment, or whether a broader meaning should be accorded to it, not decided. (Wallace v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 396, 404.)

Restoration requires new appointment.—If it be assumed that it was not its intention to limit the power of dismissal (and its terms certainly import that it treats the dismissal as a fact), then the declaration that the order of dismissal shall be void, because of something subsequently occurring, could not be effective to restore the officer to his office. Let it once be admitted that the officer was dismissed from the service, and it must follow that the effect of the order dismissing him was to sever his relations with the Army. The vacancy so created could be filled only by a new and original appointment, to which, by the Constitution, the advice and consent of the Senate is necessary. (Wallace v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 396, 403, citing U. S. v. Corson, 114 U. S., 619, 622.)

Where a person has ceased to be an officer of the Army, he could not again become one except upon a new appointment, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. (Blake v. U. S., 103 U. S., 227, 237, citing Mimmack v. U. S., 97 U. S., 426.)

The act of June 22, 1874, section 2 (quoted above, under this article), contains a reference to the act of March 3, 1865 (now art. 37, A. G. N.), but relates to the case of an officer of the Navy dismissed from the service and "restored" to the same. It does not appear how the restoration took place, and from the whole section it appears that the officer is not restored to office. (Wallace v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 396, 401.)

It can not be seriously questioned that if a vacancy in his office was created by an officer's dismissal, it could only be filled by a new appointment made by the Executive, with the consent of the Senate. It could not be filled by legislative enactment. (Wallace v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 396, 399, citing Wood's Case, 107 U. S., 414, 15 Ct. Cls., 151; Mimmack Case, 97 U. S., 426, 437; Corson Case, 114 U. S., 619, 622.)

See note to Constitution, Article I, section 7, clause 2, under "Veto of bill authorizing restoration of dismissed officer."

Execution of court-martial sentence.—While the language of the act justifies the conclusion that the power of dismissing an officer was not taken away, his reinstatement is not left to stand upon the action of a court-martial, because the order of dismissal, it is declared, shall be void if a court-martial be not convened. Nor does the act contemplate any execution of a sentence of a court-martial, if convened. It declares that the order of dismissal "shall be void" if the court-martial does not award dismissal or death, but implies that the President's order shall stand if the court-martial's sentence should call for severer punishment. In other words, the effect upon the order of dismissal is the same, whether the court-martial be not convened or, being convened, award a different punishment than mere dismissal. (Wallace v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 396, 403.)

Article prospective only.—The phrase in section 1230, Revised Statutes (corresponding to art. 37, A. G. N.), "any officer dismissed," is prospective only in its meaning, and an officer dismissed without court-martial in 1863, by order of the President, held not entitled to a trial upon his application therefor in 1878. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 599.)

Time for making application for trial.—Though no time is limited in the act for making the application for a court-martial, the general rule of law would require the claim to be made within a reasonable time. It is not reasonable to wait until the statute of limitations has run against the offense, witnesses have disappeared, and memory failed; or until we may naturally expect these things to have occurred. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 13, 20.)

When an officer of the Army claims that he has been illegally dismissed or dropped from the rolls, and seeks the benefit of section 1230, Revised Statutes (corresponding to art. 37, A. G. N.), he must make his application thereunder for trial by court-martial within a reasonable time after dismissal, or his acquiescence will be presumed. Long delay, by changes, promotions, and appointments, may work great confusion in the Army Register and great injury to many officers. Witnesses disappear, and facts are forgotten. A delay of nine years in asking for a trial was unreasonable, and the officer in such case must be presumed to have acquiesced in the order of the President. (Newton v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cls., 435.)

Officer dropped from the rolls.—The act of March 3, 1865, section 12 (now art. 37, A. G. N.), was passed while the war was flagrant, and while the President had authority under the act of July 17, 1862, section 17 (12 Stat., 596), "to dismiss and discharge from the military service, either in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or volunteer force, in the United States service, any officer for any cause which, in his judgment, either renders such officer unsuitable for, or whose dismissal would promote, the public service." Neither said act of March 3, 1865, nor that of July 13, 1866, section 5 (now art. 36, A. G. N.), applies to cases expressly and specifically provided for by subsequent legislation authorizing the President to drop from the rolls officers absent from duty without leave for three months. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 13, 19; see note to art. 36, A. G. N.)

Officer superseded by appointment of successor.—Where an officer was dismissed by the President without trial, and his successor appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the officer can not thereafter claim the pay of his office on the ground that the President failed to grant his request for trial by court-martial, except, possibly, for the short period elapsing between the date of the President's order of dismissal and the date of the new appointment. (Wallace v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 396, 401.)

Pay of officer dismissed without trial.—Since the restoration of an officer who has been lawfully dismissed from his office requires a new appointment, it would seem that the act (embodied in art. 37, A. G. N.) does not in any event affect the office that was held, or entitle him to its emoluments. (Wallace v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 396, 404.)

A retired naval officer was dismissed from the Navy by order of the President on December 30, 1865. In May, 1876, upon his application for trial by court-martial, made under section 12 of the act of March 3, 1865 (art. 37, A.

G. N.), a court was awarded which in June, 1876, pronounced him innocent of every charge and specification, and the dismissal being thereby annulled he was ordered, June 5, 1876, to be restored to the retired list. Between the date of his dismissal and the date of his restoration he had not demanded in writing from the Secretary of the Navy, as often as once in six months, a trial; but pay was claimed by him for that period. Held, that the right of the claimant to pay is governed by section 2 of the act of June 22, 1874, chapter 392 (quoted above under this article), under the provisions of which he is not entitled to more than "pay as on leave for six months from the date of dismissal." It was competent to Congress to modify, in the matter of pay, the effect of a restoration under the act of 1865. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 569.)

Similar law for Army repealed.—The right of the President to dismiss an officer of the Army in time of war, in so far as it may have been limited by section 1230, Revised Statutes (corresponding to art. 37, A. G. N.), is now unimpaired, as the latter section has been superseded by the articles of war enacted August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 651, 669). (Wallace v. U. S., 55 Ct. Cls., 396.)

Art. 38. [General courts-martial; convening authority. Superseded.]

This article provided as follows:

"ART. 38. General courts-martial may be convened by the President, the Secretary of the Navy, or the commander-in-chief of a fleet or squadron; but no commander of a fleet or squadron in the waters of the United States shall convene such court without express authority from the President."—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 11, v. 12, p. 603.)

It was superseded by act of February 16, 1909, section 10 (35 Stat., 621), as follows: "That general courts-martial may be convened by the President, by the Secretary of the Navy, by the commander in chief of a fleet or squadron, and by the commanding officer of any naval station beyond the continental limits of the United States."

Further amendment was made by act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 586), which provided as follows: "When empowered by the Secretary of the Navy, general courts-martial may be convened by the commanding officer of a squadron, of a division, of a flotilla, or of a larger naval force afloat, and of a brigade or larger force of the naval service on shore beyond the continental limits of the United States: Provided, That in time of war, if then so empowered by the Secretary of the Navy, general courts-martial may be convened by the commandant of any navy yard or naval station, and by the commanding officer of a brigade or larger force of the Navy or Marine Corps on shore not attached to a navy yard or naval station."

The act last cited further provided that "when a force of marines is embarked on a naval vessel, or vessels, as a separate organization, not a part of the authorized complement thereof, the authority and powers of the officers of such separate organization of marines shall be the same as though such organization were serving at a navy yard on shore, but nothing herein shall be construed as impairing the paramount authority of the commanding officer of any naval vessel over the vessel under this command and all persons embarked thereon."

It was also provided by the act last cited that "all officers of the Navy and Marine Corps who are authorized to order either general or summary courts-martial may order deck courts upon enlisted men under their command, and shall have the same authority to inflict minor punishments as is conferred by law upon the commander of a naval vessel." (See art. 24, A. G. N., as to punishments by commanding officers; and see act Feb. 16, 1909, 35 Stat., 621, as to deck courts.)

Courts-martial for trial of midshipmen.—See laws and decisions noted under section 1519, Revised Statutes.

Statutory authority necessary to convene courts.—It belongs exclusively to Congress to ordain or provide for courts-martial, to define their jurisdiction, to make their sentences final and conclusive or subject to some revisory power, to designate by whom they shall be convened and by whom their sentences shall be revised or confirmed, and generally to make such provision concerning them as they deem proper. It follows from the exclusive power of Congress over the subject that no one can have any authority, either to convene a court-martial or to affirm or disaffirm its decision, unless it can be shown that such authority has been delegated by Congress. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 508.)

The objection that the officer who convened the court was not empowered by the President to do so, as required by the statute then in force, if well taken, is jurisdictional. (U. S. v. Smith, 197 U. S., 386, 392. See note to art. 53, A. G. N. as to effect of jurisdictional defects.)

Where an officer in 1865 was sentenced by court-martial, inter alia, to be dismissed from the service, and the sentence was approved and executed by order of the commanding general by whom the court was convened, held (in 1882) that the court was illegally constituted, and the findings and sentence therefore null and void, for the reason that the convening authority had no power to appoint said court if he were disqualified by the fact that he was himself the "accuser or prosecutor" who was forbidden by the articles of war to convene a court in such case. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 436. See note to art. 39, A. G. N., as to courts illegally constituted; see note to art. 53, A. G. N., as to jurisdictional defects; and see note to art. 10, A. G. N., as to acquiescence in dismissal.)

President's power not dependent on statute.—It is within the power of the President, as Commander in Chief, to convene a general court-martial even in cases where he is not expressly authorized to do so by statute. (Swaim v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553, 556.)

As Commander in Chief the President is authorized to give orders to his subordinates, and the convening of a court-martial is simply the giving of an order to certain officers to assemble as a court, and when so assembled to exercise certain powers conferred upon them by the articles of war. (Swaim v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553, 556, citing Runkle v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 396, 409. See 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 297-303, for complete note on this subject.)

Evidence of convening authority's power.—A recital in the precept forming part of the record of a naval court-martial that it was convened by virtue of express authority vested in the officer convening the same by the President of the United States is sufficient evidence of such authority in habeas corpus proceedings. (In re Crain, 84 Fed. Rep., 788.)

The designation of an officer in the proceedings of a naval court-martial as "Commander in Chief, U. S. Naval Forces, North Atlantic Station," raises the presumption, under the Navy Regulations, that he was in command of a fleet or squadron and was therefore a proper officer to convene the court. (In re Crain, 84 Fed. Rep., 788.)

Under the law authorizing certain officers of the Army to convene courts-martial when empowered by the President, held that a general order of the President lodging this power in the commanders of designated military camps is judicially noticed as part of the law of the land, and the legality of a court-martial established under it is not affected by omission to refer to it in the order convening the court-martial. (Givens v. Zerbst, 255 U. S., 11, affirming ex parte Givins, 262 Fed. Rep., 702.)

See note to article 52, A. G. N., under "Omission of record to show jurisdictional facts."

Changes in convening order.—The original order directed the court to convene on board the U. S. S. Maine at 10 a. m., on Monday, January 11, 1897, or as soon thereafter as practicable; subsequently, on January 22, the convening authority issued a second order directing that the court convene on board the U. S. S. Montgomery as soon as practicable after her arrival at Hampton Roads. The court met on January 25, 1897. We are unable to discover any illegality or anything that was prejudicial to the accused in changing the date of trial. (In re Crain, 84 Fed. Rep., 789; see notes to arts. 39, 46, and 47, as to personnel of courts-martial.)

Convening authority outside his command.—In the absence of legislation or of orders from competent authority to the contrary, personal presence within the territorial limits of his command is not essential to the validity of an order given by an officer appointing a court-martial within such limits. He may appoint general courts-martial and act upon the record of proceedings of the same when outside the territorial limits of his command. Whether there may be exceptions to the foregoing, growing out of special circumstances attending absence, can be best determined when those circumstances arise. The ground of this opinion is that there is at present nothing else to indicate the will of the President or other superior authority that the functions of commanding officers should be so limited. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 678.)

When courts convened.—This power may be exercised on information received by the officer invested with it from his own sense of official duty, or on the application of other persons accompanied by charges which such officer may deem sufficient to require a trial. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 410.)

General courts-martial have been convened by the Secretary of the Navy upon resolution of the House of Representatives requesting the trial of designated officers. (See, e. g., G. O. 156, May 24, 1870, publishing case of Commander John H. Upshur, U. S. N.)

"Waters of the United States" construed.—The provision in article 38 of section 1624, Revised Statutes, that no commander of a fleet or squadron "in the waters of the United States" shall convene a general court-martial without express authority from the President, was enacted in 1862, and will be construed as intending to apply to waters within the continental limits of the United States, and not to waters in the territory beyond seas (Philippine Islands) acquired since the passage of that act, and the acquisition whereof was not contemplated at that time. (U. S. v. Smith, 197 U. S., 386.)

Art. 39. [General courts; constitution of.] A general court-martial shall consist of not more than thirteen nor less than five commissioned officers as members; and as many officers, not exceeding thirteen, as can be convened without injury to the service, shall be summoned on every such court. But in no case, where it can be avoided without injury to the service, shall more than one-half, exclusive of the president, be junior to the officer to be tried. The senior officer shall always preside and the others shall take place according to their rank.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 11, v. 12, p. 603. Wise v. Withers, 3 Cr., 337. Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 81, 84.)

Commissioned officers of the Naval Reserve Force, Marine Corps Reserve, Coast Guard, Lighthouse Service, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service are empowered to serve on naval courts-martial when actively serving under the Navy Department in time of war or emergency as part of the naval forces of the United States. (Act Oct. 6, 1917, 40 Stat., 393.)

Rank and precedence of officers associated together on duty: See sections 1485, 1486, and 1489, Revised Statutes.

Number of members.—The execution of a sentence of death is murder unless the court pronouncing it consisted of 13 commissioned officers, where that number could have been convened without manifest injury to the service. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 296.)

A court-martial which consisted of five members only was not a legal court if 13 could have been convened without manifest injury to the service. The language of the law does not provide that the court shall consist of 13 members where that number can be “conveniently” convened; but where they can be convened at all, not only without probable injury but without “manifest” injury to the service. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 296, construing Army law.)

It is difficult to conceive an emergency in time of peace so pressing as to disable the general officer who orders the court from convening 13 commissioned officers on a trial of life and death, “without manifest injury to the service.” (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 296.)

Suggested, that in every case of life and death, at least, the President ought to be satisfied of the manifest injury which the service would have sustained in convening a court of 13 before he gives his sanction to a sentence of death by a smaller number. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 296.)

Although naval courts-martial shall have been organized with five members only, under the orders appointing them, their sentences are not invalid for that reason. Although the Navy article, reading, “without injury to the service,” is not in the same words as the article of war, they contain substantially the same provisions in relation to general courts-martial; and the discretion vested in the officer appointing the court to regulate the number by the exigencies of the public service is obviously of the same character in both cases. The Supreme Court have declared that the language used in the article of war is merely directory to the officer appointing the court, and his decision as to whether that number can be convened without manifest injury to the service, being in a matter submitted to his sound discretion, must be conclusive. The discretion vested in the officer appointing a naval court-martial, being of the same character, his decision must be equally conclusive. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 534, citing Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat., 34, 35.)

Objection to a naval court-martial, because consisting of only nine members, must be taken during the trial as only involving the question of fact whether a greater number of officers could have been detailed without injury to the service, and not being a ground of nullity. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 369.)

This objection is matter, not of nullity in the face of the record but of possible error merely, depending on a question of fact, viz, what number of officers could have been summoned “without injury to the service”? That question of fact was required to be raised at the time, in order that the court or the President of the United States might judge and decide thereon, as they or he had the power to do. If raised at the time, the decision of the court, or certainly of the President in approving the sentence, would have been final and conclusive on the point. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 369; see note to art. 53, A. G. N., as to irregularities and fatal defects.)

The number of persons detailed to constitute a court-martial, provided it do not fall below the minimum number of five prescribed by the statute, is a matter of discretion within the lawful authority of the officers appointing the court. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 506.)

Article 39, A. G. N., which requires that as many officers not exceeding 13 as can be convened without injury to the service shall be summoned on every general court-martial was fully complied with in this case. Admiral Bunce in his letter to Capt. Wise designated eight officers who were to compose the court, and this communication expressly stated that no other officers could be summoned without manifest injury to the service. The order of Admiral Bunce to Capt. Wise designating the members of the court was a summons, within the meaning of the statute. The fact that Admiral Bunce subsequently, in another letter to Capt. Wise, substituted Lieut. Berry in place of Lieut. Comly as a member of the court-martial, is immaterial. (In re Crain, 84 Fed. Rep., 788.)

It is very clear that the article of war providing that general courts-martial shall “consist of not less than 13, where that number can be convened without manifest injury to the service,” is merely directory to the officer appointing the court; and that his decision as to the number which can be convened without manifest injury to the service, being in a matter submitted to his sound discretion, must be conclusive. (Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat., 19, 35.)

It is a question for the officer convening the court to determine whether more members could be convened without injury to the service; and his action in this respect can not be attacked collaterally, and if the accused express satisfaction with the court-martial as constituted, it is a clear waiver of any objection to its personnel. (Bishop v. U. S., 197 U. S., 334.)

The rank and number of members of a court-martial must necessarily be, and is, left somewhat to the discretion of the officer convening the court. There is nothing in this case to indicate an abuse of discretion, or that a larger number of officers might have been convened without injury to the service, although if the accused had taken prompt advantage of the defect it might have been necessary to show that a larger number could have been obtained. His expressed satisfaction with the court as constituted was a clear waiver of any objection to its personnel. (Bishop v. U. S., 197 U. S., 334, 340.)

Under the articles of war which provide that a court-martial shall be composed of not less than five officers and must be composed of 13, when so many may be convened without manifest injury to the service, held that the fixing of the number within those limits, with reference to the conditions of the service, is an act of executive discretion not subject to judicial review. (Kahn v. Anderson, 255 U. S., 1, citing Martin v. Mott and Bishop v. U. S., above noted. The court in this case was composed of eight members, the order certifying that more than that number could not be convened without manifest injury to the service; and the legality of the organization of the court and its jurisdiction were at once challenged.)

See note to article 46, A. G. N., as to absence of members during the trial; note to article 38, A. G. N., as to fatal defect in convening court-martial; and note to article 53, A. G. N., as to irregularities not fatal.

Supernumerary members.—See note to article 47, A. G. N., under "Member absent at commencement of proceedings."

Rank of members.—See note to article 45, A. G. N., as to absence of member resulting in more than one-half of the remaining members, exclusive of the president, being junior to the accused.

The fact that one of the officers composing a court-martial is junior in rank and another inferior in grade to the accused, does not of itself render either of them incompetent to sit. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 397.)

When the commander in chief of a squadron not in the waters of the United States convenes a court-martial to try an officer attached to the squadron, more than one-half of whose members are junior in rank to the accused, the courts of the United States will assume, when his action in this respect is attacked collaterally, and nothing to the contrary appears on the face of the order convening the court, that he properly exercised his discretion and that the trial of the accused by such a court could not be avoided without inconvenience to the service. (Mullan v. U. S., 140 U. S., 240. In the order convening the court in this case it was stated: "No other officers than those named can be assembled without manifest injury to the service." When the court convened, the accused objected and protested to being tried by the court, because five of its seven members were his juniors. At the time of the organization of the court there were 12 naval officers superior in rank to the accused on waiting orders in the city of Washington. He was sentenced to dismissal and the sentence confirmed by the President. He brought suit two years after dismissal to recover pay on the ground that the action of the court-martial was void. Judgment was rendered against him.)

In detailing officers to compose a court-martial the presumption is that the convening authority acts in pursuance of the law; and the sentence of the court can not be collaterally attacked by going into an inquiry as to whether the trial by officers inferior in rank to the accused was or was not avoidable, even though the record does not affirmatively disclose that the appointment of officers inferior in rank to the accused was unavoidable by reason of some necessity of the service. Several considerations might have determined the selection of the members of the court, such as the health of the officers within convenient distance or the injury to the public interests by detaching officers from their stations. (Swain v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553, 559.)

What officers eligible as members.—Undergraduates at the Military Academy, West Point, are in the eye of the law not commissioned officers, but warrant officers, and are not therefore eligible to sit as members of an Army court-martial. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 323, 328.)

The legal condition of undergraduate cadets at the Military Academy appears from the law and regulations to be in some respects analogous to that of midshipmen in the Navy. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 323, 329.)

Whether or not the words "commissioned officers," as used in the articles of war relating to the constitution of courts-martial, include all commissioned officers, it is at least certain that they exclude all persons who are not commissioned officers. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 323, 330.)

Chaplains, surgeons, pursers, and all other noncombatant officers are incompetent to officiate as members of naval courts-martial. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 297.)

Under Army statutes a cadet graduated from the Military Academy, if no vacancy existed to which he could be appointed in a particular corps, was attached to such corps by brevet of the lowest grade, as a supernumerary officer, until a vacancy should happen, when he was to receive his line commission. When so brevetted as a second lieutenant and attached as a supernumerary officer to some corps of the Army, such graduated cadet, while in this intermediary state, was a "commissioned officer" within the meaning of the articles of war prescribing who shall be members of a general or regimental court-martial. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 323, overruling 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 251. As to status of brevet officers, see note to sec. 1604, R. S.)

Volunteer naval officers appointed under the act of July 24, 1861, for the temporary increase of the Navy, were "commissioned officers" and competent to serve on general courts-martial. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 522. The volunteer officers referred to were "acting" officers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy under the act of July 24, 1861, sec. 2, 12 Stat., 272, and were held by the Attorney General not to be "officers" within the meaning of art. 36, A. G. N.; see note to that article.)

The word "commissioned" is used in the Articles for the Government of the Navy only to indicate the rank of officers capable of serving on a general court-martial, and to distinguish them from noncommissioned officers and petty officers, terms well understood in the Navy and the country. (10 Op. Att'y. Gen., 522.)

The appointment of an officer may, indeed, be temporary, but as long as it lasts he is, to all intents and purposes, an officer of the Navy; and he is as fully commissioned as any other officers of the Navy are to perform all naval services and duties appropriate to his rank. (10 Op. Att'y. Gen., 522.)

Minority of member.—The minority of some of the members of a court-martial is not available as an objection to the validity of its proceedings. Whatever effect minority of a junior would have at common law upon the verdict, it has nothing to do with the action of a court-martial which exists by virtue of statutes and regulations conformable thereto. (16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 550.)

Retired officers.—Retired officers and officers of the United States Guards are competent, under the articles of war, to sit on courts-martial as officers "in the military service of the United States"; the former because they are officers in the military service of the United States, and because the order assigning them to the court was within the authority conferred by the act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat., 264), which provides that "the Secretary of War may assign retired officers of the Army, with their consent, to active duty * * * upon courts-martial." The latter because, under sections 1 and 2 of the selective service act of May 18, 1917 (40 Stat., 77), and regulations of the President thereunder, the United States Guards were a part of the Army of the United States, and these officers were therefore competent to be assigned to court-martial duty. (Kahn v. Anderson, 255 U. S., 1; see note to art. 52, A. G. N., under "Omission of record to show jurisdictional facts.")

Changes in membership by Bureau of Navigation.—The conviction by a general court-martial can not be ratified or confirmed by the Secretary of the Navy where one member of the court was relieved, and another member substituted in his stead, by the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, without authority of the Secretary of the Navy by whom the court was convened. Trial by a court-martial not legally constituted is not a trial which can be said to be "due process of law." (22 Op. Att'y. Gen., 137; see note to art. 53, A. G. N., as to irregularities and fatal defects.)

New trial; former members ineligible.—The officers who sat upon the first trial should all be excluded from the second trial. They have formed and expressed opinions upon the case which would disqualify them from service as jurors in a criminal case in a common-law court; and there is no reason why, under the same circumstances, officers should not be excluded from a court-martial and especially as they are the triers of the facts as well as the law. (3 Op. Att'y. Gen., 396.)

Challenge of member.—The decision of a court-martial in overruling an objection made by the accused to an officer sitting on the trial whom the accused in the performance of his official duty on several occasions severely criticised for official reports, and whose enmity and dislike had been thereby incurred, could not be reviewed by the civil courts in a collateral action by the accused for the pay of his office. (Swaim v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553, 560. See note below, under "Court illegally constituted"; and see note to art. 53, A. G. N., as to review of errors by civil courts.)

Court illegally constituted.—Where a court-martial is illegally constituted, all of the members thereof being incompetent by statute to sit thereon for the trial of the case before it, the invalidity of the court can be raised by habeas corpus. The judgment, even after approval of the officers provided by statute, is that of a court of limited jurisdiction only, whose judgments may be attacked collaterally. The question is one of jurisdiction simply. If the court-martial had jurisdiction over the subject matter of the charge and of the person of the accused, or if his consent gave such jurisdiction, the writ of habeas corpus will afford no relief, for generally in such case any error committed by a court-martial regularly organized and with full jurisdiction is not assailable before the civil courts. But where the court is illegally constituted, it has no jurisdiction over the person of the accused or of the subject matter of the charge against him, and his consent could confer none in opposition to the statutory requirement for members of a court-martial, convened to try him. (McClaghry v. Deming, 186 U. S., 49, 68, affirming 113 Fed. Rep., 639.)

The consent of the accused can not confer jurisdiction upon a court not possessing it by virtue of statutory authority. (22 Op. Att'y. Gen., 137.)

By the articles of war it was provided that "officers of the Regular Army shall not be competent to sit on courts-martial, to try the officers or soldiers of other forces," with an exception referring to officers of the Marine Corps detached for service with the Army: Held, that the trial of an officer of volunteers by a court-martial all the members of which were officers of the Regular Army was illegal, and the objection to it could be taken on habeas corpus. (McClaghry v. Deming, 186 U. S., 49, affirming 113 Fed. Rep., 639.)

A court-martial is the creature of statute, and must be convened and constituted in entire conformity with the provisions of the statute, or else it is without jurisdiction. As to the officer to be tried, there was no court. No challenge of the members was necessary, for there was no court to hear and dispose of the challenge. It is unlike an officer who might be subject to challenge as under some bias. A failure to challenge in such a case might very well be held to waive the defect and the officer could sit and the finding of the court-martial be legal. In this case it is an objection that the whole court as a court was illegally constituted, because in violation of the express provision of statute, and the challenge to the whole court is not provided for by the statute. (McClaghry v. Deming, 186 U. S., 49, affirming 113 Fed. Rep., 639.)

Where a court is illegally constituted, none of the members being competent to sit thereon, it can not be said that the defendant waived the question of invalidity by not objecting to being tried by it. His consent could no more give jurisdiction to the court, either over the subject matter or over his person, than if it had been composed of a like number of civilians or of women or of privates. (McClaghry v. Deming, 186 U. S., 49, 66, affirming 113 Fed. Rep., 639.)

The articles of war provided that "officers of the Regular Army shall not be competent to sit on courts-martial to try the officers or soldiers of other forces." A court-martial for the trial of a volunteer officer was composed of five members one of whom was an officer of the Regular Army who also held a commission as an officer of volunteers under which he was serving at the time, having been granted indefinite leave of absence from the Regular Army while so serving: Held, that the language of the article is peremptory; that the officer in question was not competent to sit on a court-martial to try a volunteer officer; and that, as without him there would have been an insufficient number, there was no court and the sentence of dismissal was void. (U. S. v. Brown, 206 U. S., 240, affirming 41 Ct. Cls., 275. Compare, Brown v. Root, 18 App. D. C., 239.)

Member of court as witness.—Where the accused was tried and convicted by a general court-martial on three distinct charges, one of which had been preferred by a member of the court who testified as a witness in support of the same and afterwards sat upon the trial, no objection being made thereto by the accused, and the sentence of the court was duly confirmed, held, that the fact that a member of the court sat upon the trial after testifying did not render its proceedings invalid or make its sentence void and inoperative. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 432.)

The objection, where it is not distinctly waived by the accused, goes to the propriety of the member sitting after he had testified, not to his legal capacity to sit; and if seasonably made it would afford good grounds for disapproval of the proceedings by the reviewing officer, though not of itself sufficient to invalidate them. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 432.)

For other cases see note to Constitution, sixth amendment, under "IV. Impartial trial"; and see Keyes v. United States (109 U. S., 336), cited in note to article 53, A. G. N., under "Jurisdiction of civil courts."

Art. 40. [Oaths of members and judge-advocate.] The president of the general court-martial shall administer the following oath or affirmation to the judge-advocate or person officiating as such:

"I, A B, do swear (or affirm) that I will keep a true record of the evidence given to and the proceedings of this court; that I will not divulge or by any means disclose the sentence of the court until it shall have been approved by the proper authority; and that I will not at any time divulge or disclose the vote or opinion of any particular member of the court, unless required so to do before a court of justice in due course of law."

This oath or affirmation being duly administered, each member of the court, before proceeding to trial, shall take the following oath or affirmation, which shall be administered by the judge-advocate or person officiating as such:

"I, A B, do swear (or affirm) that I will truly try without prejudice or partiality, the case now depending, according to the evidence which shall come before the court, the rules for the government of the Navy, and my own conscience; that I will not by any means divulge or disclose the sentence of the court until it shall have been approved by the proper authority; and that I will not at any time divulge or disclose the vote or opinion of any particular member of the court, unless required so to do before a court of justice in due course of law."—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 12, v. 12, pp. 603, 604.)

Judge advocate.—See notes to sections 189 and 362, Revised Statutes.

According to the law regulating courts-martial the judge advocate is the official prosecutor; and in cases arising in the Navy he is, by custom, either a naval officer specially designated or a lawyer employed for that purpose. However, held, that where the case before the court-martial is of such a character as to render it expedient that the proceeding be conducted by a lawyer, the Secretary of the Navy is not at liberty to employ counsel, but should call upon the Department of Justice to supply an officer for the service. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 514.)

The head of the Navy Department can not, consistently with the provisions of section 17 of the act of June 22, 1870 (sec. 189, R. S.), employ an attorney or counsellor at law to conduct proceedings before a naval court-martial. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 13, affirming 13 Op. Atty. Gen., 515.)

Special counsel may be employed by the Attorney General, at the request of the Secretary of the Navy, to assist the judge advocate in a trial by court-martial—the compensation of such counsel (in the absence of other provision) to be paid from the appropriation for the contingent expenses of the Navy. Such counsel should be commissioned by the Attorney General under section 366, Revised Statutes. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 135.)

A judge advocate need not be a professional person. His qualifications must, of course, be of the sort required by members of the bar, but there is no law limiting choice of judge advocates, or of their assistants when needed, to that class. Although there is no statutory provision in regard to naval judge advocates like that for those of the Army, to the effect that they shall belong to the Navy, yet in fact this is generally the case. Such assistants for judge advocates might be detailed from the same branch of the service, or, indeed, specially intelligent persons might be selected from any line of civil life. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 135, 137.)

Prosecutor; evidence; closing argument.—As to the right of a private prosecutor, there is a diversity between military and naval courts-martial, the former allowing and the latter rejecting it. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 286.)

The judge advocate has the right of a reply in a military trial, and so has the accuser when acting as prosecutor; but such reply ought to be a commentary on the evidence introduced by the prisoner, and on his remarks in enforcing it, or in arraigning the testimony offered in support of the prosecution. No new matter ought to be introduced at this stage of the trial without the special leave of the court, and then it should be supported by witnesses, and the prisoner should be allowed to rejoin and remark upon such new matter. Especially, the prosecutor ought not to be permitted, under color of replying to the prisoner's defense, to give additional testimony at this stage of the trial, and by a statement of the facts made when the prisoner has not the opportunity to cross-interrogate him and which he had not made when sworn as a witness, to attempt to explain or contradict what has been previously given in evidence. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 286.)

After the officer upon whose information the charges and specifications were preferred has given his testimony before a naval court-martial, he may be permitted to remain in court as the prosecutor, to aid by his suggestions the judge advocate in bringing out the evidence. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 714.)

There can be no doubt as to the competency of the evidence of the prosecutor. How far his credibility may be affected by the relation in which he stands toward the accused is a question of discretion for the court itself. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 714.)

It is settled law in England that the prosecutor, after giving evidence, may remain in court to conduct the prosecution. This, in the absence of uniform practice to the contrary, is the rule to be followed by our courts-martial. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 714.)

Irregularity in administering oaths.—Where at the organization of a naval court-martial each member of the court was first sworn by the judge advocate, who was then sworn by the president of the court, instead of the oath being first administered by the president to the judge advocate and then by the latter to each member of the court, as prescribed by the act of July 17, 1862 (12 Stat., 603, 604), which reversed the order required by the previous act of April 23, 1800 (2 Stat., 50): Held, that notwithstanding the irregularity in the order of administering the oaths, the proceedings of the court must now be held valid. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 374.)

No objection appears to have been made at the time. The accused submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court. The sentence of dismissal was duly executed. The irregularity was not so material as to render the whole proceedings void, especially when no exception was taken at the time. There are many sorts of exceptions sustainable if taken at the time, but which come too late after the completion of the trial. Such is the case here. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 374.)

See note to article 53, A. G. N., as to irregularities and fatal defects.

Judge advocate not sworn.—The objection that the judge advocate was not sworn goes to the construction and organization of the court. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 396.)

Judge advocates of naval courts-martial are required to be sworn; and where the proceedings of such courts do not show that they were it may be properly considered that the fact does not exist and that they were not sworn; and that therefore the proceedings were illegal and void. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 396; See note to art. 52, A. G. N., as to omissions in record.)

The duties of the judge advocate are very important; he is to keep the record of the evidence given and the proceedings of the court; and upon this evidence and the proceedings as recorded by him the fate of the accused is ultimately to be decided. His fidelity should be secured by at least the usual sanctions. In addition to which, Congress has given the form of oath to be administered by the president of the court to the judge advocate before proceeding to trial. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 396.)

It is fatal error in proceedings before courts-martial for the president to omit an oath or affirmation to the judge advocate before proceeding to trial. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 544.)

The articles for the government of the Navy distinctly require that the president of every court-martial shall administer a certain oath or affirmation therein set forth to the judge advocate before proceeding to trial. The justice and propriety of this, whether the prosecution of the accused or his defense is considered, are not less apparent than its necessity in point of law. There is nothing whatever in the record which gives reason to believe that this requisition was complied with in the present case. Accordingly, held that its omission is fatal. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 544.)

Objections were made to the action of a court-martial in that, among other things, it permitted a person to act as judge advocate who was not appointed by the convening officer of the court-martial nor sworn to the faithful performance of his duty. Held, that such questions were merely those of procedure, and the court-martial having jurisdiction of the person accused and of the offense charged, and having acted within the scope of its lawful powers, its proceedings and sentence can not be reviewed or set aside by the civil courts. (Swaim v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553, 561.)

See note to article 53, A. G. N., as to irregularities and fatal defects; and note to article 52, A. G. N., under "Omission of record to show jurisdictional facts."

Whether oath should be repeated in each case.—See note to article 58, A. G. N., as to courts of inquiry.

Where a general court-martial was convened for the trial, generally, of such persons as might be brought before it, but the warrant for the court was accompanied with a specification of certain persons who were to be tried, with a reference to the charges to be exhibited against them, a renewed administration of the oath was not necessary before the trial of an officer so specially named. As to others, if the action of the court in trying them without reswearing the court conformed to the general practice in the Navy, the proceedings may be considered legal on the ground of such precedents. If this practice is disapproved by the department, it may be controlled prospectively by an order enjoining the administration of the oath in each case. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 297.)

In the absence of any practice or precedent upon the subject, it would appear that the words of the law imply that the oath is to be taken in every case; and the omission to do so would render the proceedings invalid and void. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 460.)

If, however, it has been the usage of naval courts-martial to take the oath but once, and this practice has been sanctioned by the Government, such usage and practice should be regarded as sufficient evidence of the construction given to the law in question by the proper authorities, and that the oath directed to be taken was held by them to apply to all cases that should come before the court. The sentence, in that event, might be sustained on the ground that the law in question had in like cases received a construction to which the court conformed in their proceedings. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 460.)

The whole question is one of form, and no injustice is done by either interpretation. For if the oath is in practice to be taken but once, it must be on the ground that it applies to all cases that may come before the court. The accused has, therefore, upon this construction, the same security and the same hold on the conscience of the court that he would have if the oath were taken in his particular case. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 460.)

Obligation of secrecy.—The obligation assumed under oath by the members of a naval court-martial to keep secret the sentence of the court is entirely removed, by the very terms of the oath, when that sentence has been approved by the proper authority; and even the vote or opinion of any particular member of the court may be divulged without a violation of duty when the party is required to disclose it before a court of justice in due course of law. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 137, 141.)

Responsibility for correctness of record.—See note to article 52, A. G. N.

Art. 41. [Oath of witness.] An oath or affirmation in the following form, shall be administered to all witnesses, before any court-martial, by the president thereof:

"You do solemnly swear (or affirm) that the evidence you shall give in the case now before this court shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and that you will state everything within your knowledge in relation to the charges. So help you God; (or 'this you do under the pains and penalties of perjury.')"—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 14, v. 12, p. 604.)

Witness not properly sworn.—See note to article 53, A. G. N., under "Irregularities and fatal defects."

Compelling attendance of witnesses.—See note to article 42, A. G. N.

Art. 42. [Evidence; witnesses; perjury; contempt.] Whenever any person refuses to give his evidence or to give it in the manner provided by these articles, or prevaricates, or behaves with contempt to the court, it shall be lawful for the court to imprison him for any time not exceeding two months.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 13, v. 12, p. 604.)

Amendment to this article was made by act of February 16, 1909, sections 11 and 12 (35 Stat., 621, 622), as follows:

"SEC. 11. That a naval court-martial or court of inquiry shall have power to issue like process to compel witnesses to appear and testify which United States courts of criminal jurisdiction within the State, Territory, or District where such naval court shall be ordered to sit may lawfully issue.

"SEC. 12. That any person duly subpoenaed to appear as a witness before a general court-martial or court of inquiry of the Navy, who willfully neglects or refuses to appear, or refuses to qualify as a witness or to testify or produce documentary evidence which such person may have been legally subpoenaed to produce, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, for which such person shall be punished on information in the district court of the United States; and it shall be the duty of the United States district attorney, on the certification of the facts to him by such naval court, to file an information against and prosecute the person so offending, and the punishment of such person, on conviction, shall be a fine of not more than five hundred dollars or imprisonment not to exceed six months, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That this shall not apply to persons residing beyond the State, Territory, or District in which such naval court is held, and that the fees of such witnesses and his mileage at the rates provided for witnesses in the United States district court for said State, Territory, or District shall be duly paid or tendered said witness, such amounts to be paid by the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts out of the appropriation for compensation of witnesses: Provided further, That no witness shall be compelled to incriminate himself or to answer any question which may tend to incriminate or degrade him."

Perjury before naval general court-martial.—See section 1023, Revised Statutes. See also note to article 8, A. G. N., under "Scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals."

The use of depositions before naval courts-martial was authorized by act of February 16, 1909, section 16 (35 Stat., 622).

Use of court of inquiry records in evidence before courts-martial; see article 60, A. G. N.

Compelling attendance of civilian witnesses.—There was no law in 1859 authorizing an Army court-martial to compel the attendance of witnesses who were not in the military service. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 311.)

Section 25 of the sundry civil appropriation act of March 3, 1863 (12 Stat., 754), embodied in section 1202, Revised Statutes, authorized "every judge advocate of a court-martial or court of inquiry" to issue like process to compel witnesses to appear and testify which courts of criminal jurisdiction within the State, Territory, or District where such "military courts" shall be ordered to sit may lawfully issue. Held, that said enactment of 1863 did not apply to naval courts-martial. The use of the words "military courts" seems to limit the effect of the act to courts-martial in the Army. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 501.)

Articles 42 and 57, A. G. N., do not apply to civilian witnesses. Nothing in the way of control by courts-martial over civilians is to be taken in its favor by implication. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 501.)

A naval court-martial or judge advocate thereof has no power to compel a civilian witness, who is not subject to the Articles for the Government of the Navy, to appear and testify before such court. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 501, Feb. 26, 1890.)

The act of March 3, 1863 (above noted), empowered the judge advocate of an Army court-martial to issue a writ of attachment, a perfect, complete, and effective writ, to compel the attendance of a civilian witness. An attachment is directed to a sheriff or marshal and commands him to have the party named therein before the court, and differs from a subpoena which is simply a summons addressed to witnesses and may be served upon them by anyone who is interested in their attendance. In issuing an attachment to compel the attendance of a civilian witness, the judge advocate may direct such process to such officers as are, by practice of the service, ordinarily charged with the duty of performing the executive business of military courts. The process is not complete; it is no process at all, unless directed to some one by whom it is to be executed. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 501.)

Fees must be paid or tendered.—See act of February 16, 1909, quoted above under this article.

The act of March 2, 1901 (31 Stat., 950), which provides that a person who, being duly subpoenaed to appear as a witness before a general court-martial of the Army, willfully neglects or refuses to appear, or refuses to qualify as a witness, or to testify, or produce documentary evidence which he may have been legally subpoenaed to produce, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, for which he may be punished on information in the district court of the United States, requires that the legal fees of such witness shall be first duly paid or tendered to him at the time of service of the subpoena, in order to lay the foundation for a prosecution under that act. A mere statement in the subpoena, signed by the judge advocate of the court-martial, to the effect that the United States tenders or guarantees the payment of the authorized fees, is not a sufficient compliance with that act to support a prosecution thereunder. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 424.)

As to witnesses' fees in general, see sections 848-851, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto.

Refusal to testify or produce documents.—Where a civilian witness was brought before a court-martial of the Army, but refused to testify, the court was not invested with any inherent power to punish the witness for contempt. Such power can only be exercised when given to it by the positive terms of some statute. The law (sec. 1202, R. S.) armed the court with authority to compel the witness to appear and testify, so far as this could be done by process; but in securing his testimony the court was restricted to the means which it was thus authorized to employ. It could not inflict any punishment where the power to impose it was not clearly conferred by Congress. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 278.)

Where a civilian subpoenaed in accordance with statute as a witness before an Army court-martial was advised by competent counsel that certain questions asked of him, if answered, might subject him to a civil or criminal prosecution for libel; and for this reason he refused to answer on advice of counsel, and not from any evil intent or with legal malice, his refusal did not constitute a violation of the statute. (U. S. v. Praeger, 149 Fed. Rep., 474.)

Where a civilian witness refused to answer certain questions because the answer might tend to incriminate him, the decision of the court-martial that the questions were proper was not conclusive on the civil courts of the question whether the witness was guilty of contempt in refusing to answer. (U. S. v. Praeger, 149 Fed. Rep., 474.)

Under the articles of war providing that a court-martial may punish at its discretion any person who uses any menacing words, signs, or gestures in its presence, or who disturbs its proceedings by any riot or disorder, such court has no final jurisdiction over a civilian subpoenaed to testify before it, or power to punish him for contempt for refusing to testify. (U. S. v. Praeger, 149 Fed. Rep., 474.)

Where a witness subpoenaed to produce certain documents before an Army court-martial testified that he had destroyed the documents before service of the process, his failure to produce did not constitute a willful refusal to produce such documents within the statute making such act a misdemeanor. (U. S. v. Praeger, 149 Fed. Rep., 474.)

Member of Congress as witness.—See cases noted under Constitution, Article I, section 6, clause 1.

Self-incrimination; requiring witness to answer.—See note above, under "Refusal to testify or produce documents"; and see note to Constitution, fifth amendment, under "III. Compelling person to be witness against himself."

A cadet at the Military Academy was tried by court-martial and found guilty of the offense charged. At the trial a witness objected to answering a question on the ground of self-incrimination; but the court required him to answer: Held, That if the court committed error in compelling the witness to answer, the error is not such as to require disapproval of the proceedings. Where the right of a witness is violated, it is for him to complain and not the defendant. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 616; see note to art. 53, A. G. N., as to effect of irregularities.)

Depositions.—Witnesses who were not in military service could not be compelled in 1859 to make depositions to be used in evidence before courts-martial on the trial of cases not capital. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 311.)

An officer about to be put upon trial before a naval court-martial consented that the deposition of witnesses abroad, taken upon interrogatories and cross-interrogatories, should be used on the trial. Held, That the rule of law that no evidence shall be given against a prisoner except in his presence is a personal privilege which he may waive; and that it was waived by the officer in this case; the point of time at which his consent was expressed will not affect the competency of the testimony; but suggested that it might be well to have such waiver in writing, after the arrest and after the order convening the court. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 706.)

It would not be competent for an officer of the Navy, under arrest, and the Navy Department to dispense with the attendance of witnesses before a naval court-martial and by common consent to take depositions to be used on the trial, when objected to by the officer preferring the charges. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 343.)

The 37th article of the Articles for the Government of the Navy (act Apr. 23, 1800, 2 Stat., 50), requiring that "all testimony given to a general court-martial shall be on oath or affirmation," etc., seems to contemplate exclusively the examination of witnesses before the court. The articles of war, providing that under certain restrictions and in cases not capital depositions may be taken for use before Army courts, negatives their allowance in other cases; and the existence of the provision sufficiently proves that without it such testimony would not be competent even in those minor cases. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 343. Compare note to art. 60, A. G. N.)

See note to Constitution, sixth amendment, under "VI. Confronting witnesses."

The use of depositions before naval courts in certain cases and under certain restrictions was authorized by act of February 16, 1909, section 16 (35 Stat., 622).

Absent witness.—See note to Constitution, sixth amendment, under "VI. Confronting witnesses;" and see note to article 57, A. G. N.

Copies of papers in evidence.—See section 882, Revised Statutes, and note thereto; see also note to art. 34, A. G. N.

The introduction in evidence of copies of letters on file in the Department of the Navy at Washington, and which are required by law to be kept there, and which were not authenticated under the seal of the department, was error. Copies so authenticated would have been as admissible as the originals; copies not so authenticated were not as admissible as the originals. (Cohn v. U. S., 258 Fed. Rep., 355.)

It is not understood that copies of official papers on file in an executive department can be received in evidence only when they are authenticated under the seal of the department; but if copies not authenticated as provided by section 882, Revised Statutes, are to be introduced in evidence, it is certainly necessary that a proper foundation for their admission should be laid, having in mind the general rule that no evidence shall be received which presupposes that the party who offers it can obtain better evidence. (Cohn v. U. S., 258 Fed. Rep., 355.)

Papers illegally seized as evidence.—See notes to Constitution, fourth amendment, and fifth amendment under "III. Compelling person to be witness against himself."

The fact that certain private papers belonging to the accused may have been illegally seized by the authorities and illegally retained against his protest would not render their use in evidence against him unlawful. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 589, 597, 598.)

The admission in evidence over and against the objection of the accused of a paper belonging to him which was abstracted by the Government from his possession, without his knowledge or consent, compels him to be a witness against himself in violation of the fifth amendment to the Constitution. (Gould v. U. S., 255 U. S., 298.)

Where in the progress of a criminal trial it becomes probable that there has been an unconstitutional seizure of papers of the accused, it is the duty of the trial court to entertain an objection to their admission in evidence against him, or a motion for their exclusion, and to decide the question as then presented, even where a motion to return the papers has been denied before trial and by another judge. (Gould v. U. S., 255 U. S., 298.)

The seizure of documents belonging to an Army officer charged with an offense, from his desk, to which he voluntarily turned over the key, held not a violation of his constitutional rights, whether or not the documents were used on his trial by court-martial. (U. S. v. Barry, 260 Fed. Rep., 291.)

Evidence of handwriting.—By act of February 26, 1913 (37 Stat., 683), it is provided that "in any proceeding before a court or judicial officer of the United States where the genuineness of the handwriting of any person may be involved, any admitted or proved handwriting of such person shall be competent evidence as a basis for comparison by witnesses, or by the jury, court, or officer conducting such proceeding, to prove or disprove such genuineness."

A knowledge of the handwriting of a defendant charged with forgery, by a witness who is not an expert, does not qualify such witness to state his opinion whether or not the forged signature, made in imitation of the handwriting of another, was written by defendant. (Neall v. U. S., 118 Fed. Rep., 699.)

Evidence of handwriting by comparison of hands is inadmissible on a trial by court-martial, excepting where the writing acknowledged to be genuine is already in evidence in the case or the disputed writing is an ancient document. It was, therefore, error for the court-martial to admit in evidence a considerable number of papers which were not in evidence for any other purpose than to be used as such standards and which were so used by experts. In view of the error so made by the court, its sentence should be set aside on review of its proceedings by the Secretary of War. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 310. But see act of Feb. 26, 1913, above quoted, which was enacted after this opinion.)

General rules of evidence before courts-martial.—English writers on this subject insist upon the propriety in trials before naval and military courts-martial of adhering to the rules of evidence established for the common-law courts of criminal jurisdiction. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 343.)

General courts-martial are governed by the same rules of evidence which govern the ordinary courts of criminal jurisdiction. These rules, where not prescribed by statute, are supplied by the common law. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 310.)

See below under "Character evidence"; see sections 859-906, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto, as to evidence in civil courts of the United States; and see notes to Constitution, fifth and sixth amendments.

Character evidence.—The "System of Orders and Instructions" for the Navy, issued by the President December 15, 1853, is without legal validity and in derogation of the powers of Congress. In this "System" articles appear on the subject of courts-martial which are in pari materia with provisions of the acts of Congress, and are in effect abrogatory or amendatory of the same as plainly as a new act of Congress could be. Again, one of the articles in the same chapter changes the whole theory of judicial procedure by forbidding the court to receive evidence of previous good character and former services of the accused in mitigation of the punishment to be awarded. This provision, which is the more observable when compared with another article which allows evidence to be introduced of previous bad character, may or may not be wise; it is, at any rate, a very positive act of legislation beyond the power of the President. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 10, 18. See note to art. 45, A. G. N., as to procedure of courts-martial; secs. 161 and 1547, R. S., as to regulations in general; and note to art. 43, A. G. N., under "Charging offenses not specifically provided for.")

Evidence after plea of guilty.—Courts-martial may, and it is their duty to, receive such testimony as the judge advocate may offer for the purpose of illustrating the actual degree of the offense, notwithstanding that the party accused shall have pleaded guilty, if the punishment shall be discretionary, and especially where the discretion includes a wide range and great variety of punishments, and if the specifications do not show all the circumstances. In all cases subject to a discretionary punishment a full knowledge of the circumstances attending the offense is essential to an enlightened exercise of discretion by the court measuring the punishment; and where a formal trial is rendered unnecessary by a plea of guilty, it is only by affidavits or other incidental evidence that they can obtain that knowledge. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 636.)

In a case where several of the specifications were quite general and the punishment was not definitely prescribed, but, on the contrary, a wide discretion was allowed, held that, upon general principles and in reference to the analogies furnished by the proceedings in civil tribunals, the court-martial erred in excluding the evidence offered by the judge advocate after a plea of guilty; and as they proceeded to impose the highest penalty in their power this error involves a serious violation of principle. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 636.)

Admissibility of evidence; decision of court-martial.—It is not the official duty of the Secretary of War to give to the judge advocate, and thus to the court-martial, an opinion as to the admissibility of certain evidence in the trial of a case before the court; nor as to the construction of a statute. Such questions should be left to the decision of the court-martial itself. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 54.)

Objections were made to the action of a court-martial in that, among other things, it received oral and secondary evidence of an account, when books of original entry were available; received evidence to implicate the accused in signing false certificates relating to money which formed no part of the subject matter of the charges on trial; refused to permit evidence as to the bad character of a principal witness for the prosecution, and refused to hear the testimony of a material witness for the defense: Held, that the errors so assigned could not be reviewed collaterally in a civil suit by the accused for the pay of his office; such questions were merely those of procedure, and the court-martial, having jurisdiction of the person accused and of the offense charged, and having acted within the scope of its lawful powers, its proceedings and sentence can not be reviewed or set aside by the civil courts. (Swaim v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553, 561; see note to art. 53, A. G. N., as to irregularities and fatal defects.)

Evidence in conspiracy cases.—See note to article 14, A. G. N.

False testimony before courts-martial.—See note to article 8, A. G. N., under “Scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals”; and see section 1023, Revised Statutes, as to prosecutions for perjury before naval general courts-martial.

Expert witnesses.—See notes to section 848, Revised Statutes; Constitution, sixth amendment, under “VII. Compulsory process for obtaining witnesses”; section 1451, Revised Statutes, under “Evidence in line of duty cases”; and article 59, A. G. N., under “Experts.”

A witness is one who may be compelled to testify concerning a transaction which he has fortuitously beheld; an expert is one who testifies as to his own self-acquired knowledge, which he can not be compelled to impart by the expedient of calling him as a witness. (Smith v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 209.)

The Government can not acquire the services, skill, or knowledge of an expert without his consent and without just compensation. (Smith v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 209.)

The employment of experts before a court-martial is within the legal and proper discretion of the Secretary of War; and his order to employ and pay them is official authority to an officer who in the ordinary discharge of his duty makes such payments, and protects him from the summary remedy of having his pay stopped. (Smith v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 209.)

What are termed experts are not necessarily or properly witnesses. Their office may be simply to aid in the preparation of a case without being called to testify, and they are frequently employed to aid counsel in the cross-examination of witnesses. In the complexities of modern civilization they are constantly resorted to in all courts, civil and criminal. (Smith v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 209.)

All persons in the course of ordinary life are liable to witness transactions, or casualties, or crimes of their fellow men. In such cases, public necessity requires that they may be compelled to testify. The burden of doing so must be borne by him on whom it falls, and the chance is a chance which may fall upon any member of the community. A surgeon walking down the street and witnessing an accident or murder may describe the injuries of the victim more clearly than an ordinary beholder. But he is not an expert; he is merely the fortuitous witness of an occurrence concerning which he may be made to testify. (Smith v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 209.)

For other cases see note to article 45, A. G. N., as to receiving evidence while court is cleared, and as to evidence of insanity.

Art. 43. [Charges and specifications; arrest of accused.] The person accused shall be furnished with a true copy of the charges, with the specifications, at the time he is put under arrest; and no other charges than those so furnished shall be urged against him at the trial, unless it shall appear to the court that intelligence of such other charge had not reached the officer ordering the court when the accused was put under arrest, or that some witness material to the support of such charge was at that time absent and can be produced at the trial; in which case reasonable time shall be given to the accused to make his defense against such new charge.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 15, v. 12, p. 604.)

“Arrest” construed.—Upon consideration of articles 24, 43, and 44, A. G. N., held that there may be two arrests, namely (1) an arrest in an emergency or upon discovery of the alleged wrongdoing, with a view to a preliminary examination, and, if necessary, the formulation and specification of charges; and (2) an arrest for trial. Held, further, that article 43, in the provision declaring that “the person accused shall be furnished with a true copy of the charges, with the specifications, at the time he is put under arrest,” has reference to the arrest for trial and not the arrest in the first instance. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 472; see art. 44, A. G. N., referring in terms to the arrest “for trial.”)

Article 43, A. G. N., refers to the arrest of the accused for trial by court-martial, and not to any previous arrest, either by way of punishment or to await the action of a court of inquiry. If he is already in custody to await the result of a court of inquiry, this article is sufficiently complied with by delivering a copy to him immediately after the Secretary of the Navy has informed him of that result and has ordered a court-martial to convene to try him. Being already in custody to await the result of a court of inquiry, he could not be considered as put under arrest for trial by court-martial before the Secretary of the Navy had informed him of the report of the court of inquiry and had ordered a court-martial to convene to try him. Immediately after that, and four days before the court-martial met, the accused in this case was furnished with a copy of the charge and specification on which he was to be tried. This was a sufficient compliance with the article in question. (Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S., 109, 117.)

Under the Articles for the Government of the Navy, the provision as to service of charges upon the accused at the time he is put under arrest refers not to the temporary arrest necessary for order and discipline at the time of the commission of the offense, but to the subsequent arrest for trial by court-martial. (Bishop v. U. S., 197 U. S., 334.)

The word "arrest" as employed in article 43 A. G. N., does not relate to the preliminary arrest or detention of an accused person awaiting the action of higher authority to frame charges and specifications and order a court-martial, but to the arrest resulting from preferring the charge by the proper authority and the convening of a court-martial. (U. S. v. Smith, 197 U. S., 386, approving, 19 Op. Atty. Gen., 472; Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S., 109; and Bishop v. U. S., 197 U. S., 334.)

Both the spirit and the letter of the Articles for the Government of the Navy require that a copy of such charges and specifications be furnished within a reasonable time after the first arrest; and what would be such reasonable time would depend on the circumstances of each case. However, if they were not furnished within a reasonable time, or if the convening of the court-martial were too long delayed, such would seem to be objections going only to the regularity of the proceedings and not to the jurisdiction of the court. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 472, 476.)

Waiver of objection by the accused.—Where the record of a court-martial shows that the accused stated at the beginning of the trial that he had received a copy of the charges and specifications against him, but it does not appear that such copy was served upon him at the time of his arrest, and no objection on that ground was made at the trial, it will be presumed that they were served as required by the statute. (In re Crain, 84 Fed. Rep., 789.)

It is at least doubtful whether the objection (that the accused did not receive a true copy of the charge and specification at the time he was put under arrest) did not come too late, after he had admitted before the court-martial that he had received a copy of the charge and specification, and after objections to the jurisdiction of the court, and to the form of the accusation, had been overruled and he had pleaded not guilty and the evidence of the United States had been introduced. (Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S., 109, 117.)

Whether an objection as to the lateness of service of specifications is jurisdictional and can be collaterally inquired into, where such objection was not made at the trial, not decided. (U. S. v. Smith, 197 U. S., 386, 391.)

Had the court been regularly and legally organized, the fact of its not appearing on the record that the prisoner had been furnished with a copy of charges or been asked if he had any objection to the members of the court might not be sufficient cause for setting aside the proceedings. If any injustice was done to the accused in these particulars, he should make the question before the court and in that way make it appear on the face of the proceedings. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 396, holding the proceedings illegal in this case because the court was not legally organized.)

See note to article 53, A. G. N., as to irregularities and fatal defects; and note to article 52, A. G. N., under "Omission of record to show jurisdictional facts."

Arrest of officer while on bail.—Full power is possessed by the Secretary of the Navy to cause the arrest of any officer of the Navy charged with the commission of crime and to have him brought before a naval court-martial for trial. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 504.)

Where a disbursing officer of the Navy has been arrested by the civil authorities of the United States for embezzlement and misappropriation of public funds, and released on bail, the Attorney General will not instruct a United States attorney, at the request of the Secretary of the Navy, to cause the arrest of the officer by the United States marshal, as it would be both unnecessary and improper to cause the arrest of the said naval officer by the civil officers of the Government in order that he might be tried before a naval court-martial, while adequate power resides in the Secretary of the Navy to arrest and confine him and bring him before such court-martial for trial. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 504.)

See note to Constitution, fourth amendment, under "Arrest of military offenders"; and see note to Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 14, under "Jurisdiction of courts-martial," subheading "Persons in constructive custody of civil courts."

"Charge" and "specification" explained.—In the American service the custom is to present a "charge" so called, in general terms indicative of the offense imputed, as "desertion," "disobedience of orders," "mutiny," or "conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman," and to subjoin a "specification" or "specifications," in which are set forth the particular facts which it is conceived by the party preferring the accusation, or by the authority ordering the trial, constitute the offense designated in the "charge." In the British service, on the other hand, there is no distinction between the "charge" as such and the "specification." Each separate fact or set of facts constituting the matter of accusation is set forth in a distinct charge, even though there should be a plurality of subjects of charge each one importing a variety of the same offense, and therefore susceptible of classification under general heads of charge. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 601.)

Our practice has convenience in many cases. If the crime be of a genus which has but one species, as "sleeping on post," then the "charge" is in general but a title, as it were, to the "specification"; but even in such a case there may be a plurality of acts of the same offense, which it is proper to charge, although if proved to be followed by but one possible sentence for all the acts. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 601.)

But where the offense is of a genus comprehending many species, the convenience of classification under general heads of charge is apparent. Still more is that convenience manifest when the accusation is of a plurality of offenses, as "disobedience of orders," "neglect of duty," and "mutiny," and there is a plurality of acts of each offense. Then it is clear to see how our practice tends not only to methodize the proceedings, but, what is more important, to methodize the elements of decision in the minds of the triers and of the superior authority which is to approve or disapprove their final action. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 601.)

The law governing Army courts-martial is found in the statutory enactments of Congress, particularly in the articles of war, in the Army regulations, and in the customary military law. According to military usage and practice, the charge is in effect divided into two parts, the first technically called the "charge" and the second the "specification." The charge proper designates the military offense of which the accused is alleged to be guilty; the specification sets forth the acts or omissions of the accused which form the legal constituents of the offense. (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 386.)

Sufficiency of charges; technical averments.—If the description of the offense is sufficiently clear to inform the accused of the military offense for which he is to be tried, and to enable him to prepare his defense, it is sufficient. Hence a charge which uses the word "inebriation" is sufficient under the articles of war which use the technical word "drunkenness," although it would certainly have been more formal to use the term which is used in the articles of war. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 294.)

The writers on military law require minuteness and precision in specifying the time, "whenever it is possible to be thus particular"; but they all agree that this minuteness and precision are not always within the reach of the prosecutor; hence they allow him a latitude in the statement of the time, and examples cited by them permit a range of three months as to the laying of the time. This latitude is not allowable in courts of civil jurisdiction. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 294.)

A specification of charge is good and will support the finding and sentence upon it, with or without descriptive designation of the quality of the imputed criminal act, provided it appear that the facts alleged and proved constitute in any point of view the offense charged. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 601.)

Under a charge of "conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman," the specifications alleged that the accused did certain acts, and concluded, "all which was an abuse of his trust, a violation of his public duty, and was conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman." The court, in its findings upon the specifications, excepted the words quoted; but found the accused guilty upon the charge. Held, that what remained of each specification, after the exceptions made by the court, although less full and explicit than the whole original specification, yet plainly appears on careful inspection of the matter to be competent to justify the finding and to sustain the charge; that the words excepted were words of description, merely; and that the proceedings were therefore valid. Held, further, that while the words excepted by the court were not words of necessary insertion in specifications, neither were they words of necessary exclusion therefrom; that while a specification is maintainable without the words excepted, so it is with them; that the words were descriptive of the facts alleged; that the practice of including such words is well sustained by practice as by principle; that particularity of description would seem to be in the interest of the party accused as well as the service. Suggested, that to prevent exception in future cases, the very words of the charge be employed as the concluding or commencing words of specifications, and that such expressions of qualification as the nature of the facts may require and justify be incorporated in the narrative part of the specification. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 601.)

Certain it is that charges and specifications for trial by court-martial do not need to possess the technical nicety of indictments at common law. Trials by court-martial are governed by the nature of the service, which demands intelligible precision of language, but regards the substance of things rather than their form; which eschews looseness or confusion in all things, but reflects that military administration must be capable of working in peace, it is true, but more especially amid the privations and the dangers of war. Hence, undoubtedly, the most bald statement of the facts alleged as constituting the offense, provided the legal offense itself be distinctively and accurately described in such terms of precision as the rules of military jurisprudence require, will be tenable in court-martial proceedings and will be adequate ground work of conviction and sentence. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 601.)

All the technicalities which have been applied to common-law indictments are not required in specifications in court-martial proceedings. Here it is sufficient if the facts constituting the offense be described with such certainty as to clearly inform the accused of his alleged misconduct and the offense with which he is charged. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 286, 292.)

In cases where a fraudulent or criminal intention or knowledge upon the part of the accused may be necessary to constitute the offense, it would not be necessary to specifically declare their presence in the specification of a charge to be tried by a naval court-martial; their absence would be a matter of defense. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 286, 292.)

A charge of assault with a rifle and the infliction of a mortal wound by accused upon a fellow soldier, with particulars of time and place clearly stated, sufficiently alleged an offense within the article of war providing for the trial and punishment of all crimes not specified in the foregoing articles (see art. 22, A. G. N.). The charge and specification did not accuse the prisoner of any willful or felonious act, but the facts alleged constituted an offense cognizable by court-martial. (In re Stubbs, 133 Fed. Rep., 1012.)

It would be extremely absurd to expect the same precision in a charge brought before a court-martial as is required to support a conviction by a justice of the peace. (See Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167, 185.)

The pleading need not possess the technical nicety of an indictment as at common law. (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 386, citing 7 Op. Atty. Gen., 604.)

See note to article 8, A. G. N., as to form of charge and specification for "scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals."

See note to article 14, A. G. N., as to charge and specification for embezzlement.

Charging offenses not specifically provided for.—The “Orders, Regulations, and Instructions for the Administration of Law and Justice in the United States Navy,” issued by the Secretary of the Navy, under authority of the President, in 1870, provided, in section 126 thereof, that when a charge “comes directly under any enactment it should be set forth in the terms used therein”; and in section 127, that “when the offense is a disorder or neglect not specially provided for, it should be charged as ‘scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals.’” Section 1547 of the Revised Statutes is a legislative recognition of the Navy Regulations of 1870, and “must be understood as giving to these regulations the sanction of the law.” (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167, 180; see also notes to articles 8 and 22, A. G. N.; compare note to art. 42, A. G. N., under “Character evidence”; and see note to Art. 45, A. G. N.)

Description of accused in charges.—Where a naval court-martial tried a master-at-arms for desertion on a charge headed with a caption styling the accused, “master-at-arms,” and discharged him on the ground that since his arrest he had not been borne on the ship’s books as such, held that the decision was erroneous, and that the grounds stated were insufficient to deter the court from proceeding to judgment on the merits. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 548.)

In this case the accused pleaded guilty to a charge of desertion. The court, notwithstanding the plea, proceeded to hear the evidence produced by the judge advocate. And the accused questioned both the witnesses in his behalf, offering no objection at any time to the proceedings. Held, (1) that the error in the designation of the accused was not made in the charge and specification on which he was tried, but merely in the general heading thereto; (2) that it was admitted that the accused was master-at-arms when the offense alleged in the charge was committed, and there was no conclusive proof that he had been dismissed from that rank when the charge was preferred; (3) that supposing this, however, to have been clearly established, yet the facts of his having pleaded to the charge, of his never having in any way made such an exception or defense, and of their being no dispute whatever as to the identity of the person, would have prevented the accused himself from taking advantage of the error at this stage of the case; and, of course, it afforded no ground for the court to refuse to proceed to judgment on the merits. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 548.)

A midshipman was nominated and confirmed in March, 1868, to be an ensign, the promotion being made “subject to examination.” In July, 1868, having never been examined, he was tried by a naval court-martial as a midshipman and sentenced to dismissal from the service. Held, that under the circumstances he was properly tried as a midshipman. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 550; see note to Art. 54, A. G. N., as to promotion of officer under charges.)

Amendment of charges.—In a trial by court-martial the charges can not be so amended after arraignment as to entirely obliterate the original specifications and insert new ones describing wholly different offenses; hence, where the prisoner, pending his trial by court-martial, seeks relief from a civil court by habeas corpus, and the charges are found to be wholly insufficient to show jurisdiction in the court-martial, a discharge will be granted. (Ex parte Henderson, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6349.)

Sufficiency of charges question for court-martial.—Where a charge against a person tried by a military court is within the court’s jurisdiction, and is authorized by the Army or Navy regulations, the manner of setting out the offense is a matter of pleading, rather than jurisdiction, the sufficiency of which is for the exclusive determination of the court-martial. (Ex parte Dickey, 204 Fed. Rep., 322.)

Joinder of charges.—There is no objection to the joinder of separate and incongruous charges in the same prosecution before a court-martial, as such is permitted by the military usage and procedure. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 589.)

Unlike the ordinary criminal procedure, when but one indictment, setting forth in one or more counts a single offense or connected criminal transaction, is in general brought to trial at one time, the military usage and procedure permit of an indefinite number of offenses being charged and adjudicated together in one and the same proceeding. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 589, 595.)

With a view to the summary and final action so important in military cases, whenever an officer or soldier has been apparently guilty of several or many offenses, whether of a similar character or distinct in their nature, charges and specifications covering them all should, if practicable, be preferred together and together brought to trial. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 589, 595.)

An indefinite number of offenses may be adjudicated together in one proceeding by a court-martial and a single sentence rendered covering all the convictions. (Rose v. Roberts, 99 Fed. Rep., 948.)

Not only do military usage and procedure permit of an indefinite number of offenses being charged and adjudicated together in one and the same proceeding, but the rule is recognized that whenever an officer has been apparently guilty of several offenses, whether of similar character or distinct in their nature, charges and specifications covering them all should, if practicable, be preferred together and together brought to trial. (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 386.)

Additional charges; trial by different courts.—Specifications of charge known to the Secretary of the Navy, by whom a naval court-martial was ordered, when former charges against the accused were prepared by him before another and a distinct court upon a different and distinct matter, may be tried before a subsequent court-martial together with other charges not previously known. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 410, construing art. 38, act Apr. 23, 1800, 2 Stat., 50.)

For reasons which are very manifest, incongruous charges may be tried by a court-martial which would vitiate an indictment. It is generally desirable that all charges against an officer should be tried by one court; but there is no such restriction on the Secretary of the Navy, who may deem it his official duty to cause an officer to be tried. Considerations of the greatest importance to the interests of the service, of deference to the wishes of the accused himself, and the due execution of public justice, may induce and require him, without injustice to the accused, not to unite several different charges in one and the same prosecution. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 410, 414.)

Consent on the part of the accused could not give jurisdiction if it did not exist by law. But where such jurisdiction exists, his wishes might very properly influence the department in its discretionary power in arranging the charges which it felt bound to prefer for trial. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 410, 414.)

If this article had the effect of protecting the accused from conviction upon additional charges known to the convening authority when the former trial was ordered, it is well settled that the defense under it could be made only by plea in bar, or under the general issue of not guilty, and not by plea in abatement. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 410, 413.)

Even under this restrictive article a new charge, in addition to those exhibited, may be submitted to the same court if some witness material to the support of the charge, who was absent, can be produced; but the court is not to proceed with this new charge without giving the accused time for his defense. Suppose that this witness can not be produced? Can it be supposed that this article was intended to bar any future prosecution of the offense? The charge is not before the court; no decision is made on it; no part of the trial involves it; and the finding of the court does not conclude it, but such new charge may be tried before another and distinct court-martial. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 410, 414.)

Lesser offense included in charge.—

Where accused was found not guilty of the offense charged, but guilty of a lesser offense, such finding was what is known in the administration of criminal law as a partial verdict, in which the accused is acquitted of a part of the accusation against him and found guilty of the residue; as when there is an acquittal on one count and a verdict of guilty on another; or when the charge is of a higher degree, including one of a lesser, there may be a finding by a partial verdict of the latter; as upon the charge of burglary there may be a conviction for a larceny and an acquittal of the nocturnal entry; so upon an indictment for murder there may be a verdict of manslaughter, and robbery may be reduced to simply larceny, and a battery into an assault. (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65, 79; see also note to art. 8, A. G. N.)

Charging same offense under two articles.—See note to article 22, A. G. N.; and see note to article 14, A. G. N., under "Discretionary punishment," as to punishment on conviction of two charges based on the same transaction; see also note to article 63, A. G. N., as to limitations of punishment.

Charging offense previously punished.—See note to article 24, A. G. N., as to punishments by commanding officer or reprimand by Secretary of the Navy not being a bar to subsequent trial by court-martial; see also note to article 53, A. G. N., as to effect of disapproval of former trial.

Absent witness.—See note to Constitution, sixth amendment, under "VI. Confronting witnesses"; and see note to art. 57, A. G. N.

Art. 44. [Duty of officer arrested.] Every officer who is arrested for trial shall deliver up his sword to his commanding officer and confine himself to the limits assigned him, on pain of dismissal from the service.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 15, v. 12, p. 604.)

See note to article 43, A. G. N., as to arrest of accused for trial.

Nominal arrest of officer.—An officer of the Navy against whom charges had been preferred for trial by court-martial was given the following order by the Secretary of the Navy: "You are placed under arrest and you will confine yourself to the limits of the city of Washington." The facts showed that he was not under "physical restraint" and that the above-mentioned order did not operate to restrain his movements any more than would have been the case had it directed him to remain in Washington to serve as a member of the court-martial. Held, that there was no such "restraint of liberty" in this case as to justify the use of habeas corpus; and that the fear of being forcibly arrested and returned should he leave the city of Washington, if sufficient to keep the officer within the limits of the city, "is a moral restraint, which concerns his own convenience and in regard to which he exercises his own will." (Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S., 564; see note to sec. 752, R. S.)

Art. 45. [Proceedings of general court-martial.] When the proceedings of any general court-martial have commenced, they shall not be suspended or delayed on account of the absence of any of the members, provided five or more are assembled; but the court is enjoined to sit from day to day, Sundays excepted, until sentence is given, unless temporarily adjourned by the authority which convened it.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 16, v. 12, p. 604.)

See notes to articles 45 and 46, A. G. N., as to absence of members.

Right to speedy trial.—This article intends to secure to the accused a speedy and impartial trial when charged with offenses and put under arrest, and to give him protection against delays of justice and protracted arrest. It is enacted in the spirit of the sixth article of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 200, 207; see note to Constitution, sixth amendment.)

Requirement directory only.—The provisions of article 45, A. G. N., are directory only and not mandatory; hence the adjournment of a court-martial from Tuesday to Friday without permission from the convening authority, although an irregularity, did not invalidate the proceedings. (C. M. O. 27, 1898, pp. 1-2; Nav. Dig. 1916, p. 20.)

A general court-martial should not adjourn over a holiday or any other day during a trial, except Sunday, without permission being expressly granted, although such action would not necessarily invalidate the proceedings. (C. M. O. 51, 1914, p. 4; Nav. Digest, 1916, p. 20.)

Procedure governed by regulations and usage.—The "Regulations for the Administration of Law and Justice," established by the Secretary of the Navy with the approval of the President on April 15, 1870, regulating the procedure of courts-martial, have the force of law. (Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S., 13, 22, citing sec. 1547, R. S.; see note to art. 43, A. G. N., under "Charging offenses not specifically provided for," and note to art. 42, A. G. N., under "Character evidence.")

The law by which courts-martial are bound to execute their duties and to regulate their mode of proceeding in the absence of positive enactments is "the general usage of the military service or what may not unfittingly be called the customary military law." (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167, 179, approving, Dyne v. Hoover, 20 How., 65, 82; see also note to art. 29, A. G. N., as to procedure of courts of inquiry.)

In the absence of a regulatory statute the proceedings of courts-martial are controlled by the usages and customs of the military service, otherwise called customary military law, and not by the common-law rules applicable to the proceedings of civil courts. (Kirkman v. McClaughry, 160 Fed. Rep., 436.)

Evidence after court cleared.—The accused, charged with disobedience of orders, declined to plead to the charges, but objected to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that his term of service expired previous to the time mentioned in the specifications, and that his term of service commenced before the act of March 2, 1837 (sec. 1422, R. S.), and that therefore he was no longer amenable to the laws of the United States for the government of the Navy. To sustain this plea the accused offered no evidence whatever, nor was such evidence offered to the court in his presence or while the court was in public session. Instead, immediately after the plea was submitted, the record shows that the court was cleared to deliberate on said plea, and that the muster book and transfer roll of a certain vessel were produced by order of the court; and that, it appearing therefrom that the prisoner entered the service previous to the act of March 2, 1837, and that his term of service expired on October 20, 1839, it was determined that the court was not invested with any legal authority over the person or property of the prisoner and could exercise no jurisdiction over him whatever. Held, that the proceedings of the court were irregular in receiving evidence after the court was cleared. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 545.)

See below, "Public sessions."

Presence of accused during trial.—In cases where the prisoner's life or liberty is in peril, he must be present during the whole of the trial and until final judgment. If absent, there is a want of jurisdiction of the person, and the court can not proceed with the trial or receive the verdict or pronounce the final judgment. A prisoner in custody can not waive anything by his absence. In the case of a naval prisoner, it is even more important that he be present at his trial by court-martial. (Weirman v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 236.)

But where the offense is trivial, and life or liberty is not in jeopardy, the rule is to be relaxed; accordingly, held, that the proceedings of a naval court-martial would not be declared invalid by reason of the absence of the accused where the offense and punishment were trivial. (Weirman v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 236.)

See note to Constitution, fifth amendment, under "V. Presence of accused at trial."

Public sessions.—The statutes regulating the course of procedure in military courts show that, in contemplation of law, these courts stand on the same footing as other judicial tribunals of the country. Their sittings, for example, are free to the attendance of the public, like those of other courts, and, as if to guard against improper secrecy in the case of courts-martial held in the Army, the statute expressly provides that no proceedings or trials in such courts shall be carried on except between the hours of 8 in the morning and 3 in the afternoon, unless in cases which in the opinion of the officer appointing the court require immediate example. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 137, 141.)

That a court-martial trying a petty officer of the Navy permitted the judge advocate to be present for a short time during a closed session of the court, in violation of the act of July 27, 1892 (27 Stat., 277), though a disregard of the defendant's legal rights, was nevertheless an error in procedure only, and was not, therefore, a ground for a writ of habeas corpus. (Ex parte Tucker, 212 Fed. Rep., 569. NOTE.—The act cited was entitled "An act to amend the Articles of War, and for other purposes," and did not relate to naval courts-martial. Similar provisions for the Navy was then contained in Navy regulations since embodied in "Naval Courts and Boards," and not in any statute.)

See above, "Evidence after court cleared."

Defense of insanity.—That a defendant on trial for desertion before a court-martial was shown to have been in a "haze" or "stupor" at the time in question, held insufficient under a plea of not guilty to raise the issue of insanity which would deprive the court of jurisdiction under regulations contained in the Army manual for courts-martial. (U. S. v. Hunt, 254 Fed. Rep., 365.)

"Irresistible impulse" is not a defense to crime where accused had mental capacity to distinguish between right and wrong, and to know that the particular act charged was wrong. (C. M. O. 24, 1914.)

If the court-martial is of opinion that accused is insane during his trial, its duty is to suspend proceedings and inform the convening authority of its opinion in order that, if the circumstances warrant, a board of medical survey may be ordered. When, instead of doing this, the court proceeds with the trial and records findings on the charges and specifications, it is the duty of the convening authority not to accept the court's findings; and the record should be returned to the court in order that such findings may be revoked, as there has been no legal trial, the accused has not been placed in jeopardy, and the status of his case is the same as though he had never been arraigned. (C.M.O. 24, 1914.)

Absence of member as affecting rank of majority.—An officer of the Navy was tried by a general court-martial composed of 13 members, six of whom were junior in rank to the accused and seven of them, including the president, were his seniors. After the trial commenced, one of the members who was senior to the accused became sick, and the court proceeded in his absence, more than one-half of the remaining members, exclusive of the president, being junior to the accused. The absent member later returned, but was not permitted by the court to resume his seat as a member. The accused was sentenced to be dismissed, which sentence was duly executed. Held, that the court was organized and commenced its proceedings in strict conformity with the Articles for the Government of the Navy (art. 39, A. G. N.,) and had complete jurisdiction; and that under the said articles (art. 45, A. G. N.,) it was required to continue its sessions notwithstanding the absence of any member so long as five remained. The court, therefore, had complete jurisdiction while the member in question was absent. It is doubtful whether the court had lawful authority to exclude him on his return, but such action did not invalidate the proceedings. The provision requiring a majority to be senior in rank to the accused is confined to the organization of the court, and does not extend to its subsequent proceedings. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 98; see arts. 46 and 47, A. G. N., and notes thereto.)

Court reduced below minimum.—See note to article 46, A. G. N.

Errors of procedure not fatal.—See note to article 53, A. G. N., and see notes above under this article.

Evidence before courts-martial.—See note to article 42, A. G. N.

Art. 46. [Absence of members.] No member of a general court-martial shall, after the proceedings are begun, absent himself therefrom, except in case of sickness, or of an order to go on duty from a superior officer, on pain of being cashiered.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 16, v. 12, p. 604.)

Court reduced below minimum.—If during the pendency of a trial before a court martial composed of five members, one of its members fall sick and be thereby disabled from sitting with the court for several days, the remaining four members may adjourn the court from day to day until he is able to attend with them again to complete the trial. Of course, the court would not consent to wait too long on account of the absence of a member; if the delay became inconveniently protracted, they would not fail to report it to the proper authority; or if death ensued, to consider the commission or warrant as at an end. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 17.)

Effect of unauthorized absence.—The provision which forbids a member to absent himself except in case of sickness or in obedience to orders is one for the regulation of the conduct of the members themselves, and personally subjects them to censure; but it has no bearing upon the question of the jurisdiction of the court or the legality of its proceedings. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 98.)

A member of the court may willfully absent himself and be tried and cashiered for it, without in the least affecting the legality of the proceedings of the court. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 98.)

The Articles for the Government of the Navy (art. 45, A. G. N.) makes the trial valid if five members assemble. It is contemplated that members may be ordered elsewhere. The provision for this penalty shows that it was anticipated members might be absent for other causes, upon which the law, instead of declaring the proceedings void in such case, make them valid and punishes the offending absentee (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 98.)

The cause of the absence, as distinguished from the absence itself, does not in any way affect the question of legality or jurisdiction. It certainly might when the absent member is called upon to justify his own acts, but not as between the accused and the law. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 98.)

A member absent on account of sickness was not permitted by the court, upon his return, to resume his seat. This was error on the part of the court, but it does not follow from this that the court lost jurisdiction over the accused and that their subsequent proceedings were void. They may have acted irregularly or illegally toward their colleague without rendering their subsequent acts as to the accused void. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 98.)

Absence at revision of proceedings.—It makes no difference whether the absence of a member or members happens pending the original proceedings or on the meeting for revision. In either contingency it is one and the same court with unbroken continuity of existence and unimpaired capacity as to the same subject matter. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 338.)

Where a general court-martial duly organized by order of the Secretary of War was, after reporting, recalled by him to reassemble to revise its sentence and on reassembling two of the original members were absent (for whatever cause), but a legal quorum of the court still remained, held that the absence of two members at the reassembling of the court did not impair its jurisdiction or otherwise affect its power to review the sentence; and that it still was the same continuous and competent court as when it first assembled under the order of the Secretary. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 338.)

The law makes provision as to the number of officers to be ordered on a general court-martial, but none as to the number who must actually attend and participate in its proceedings beyond a fixed minimum. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 338.)

See note to article 53, A. G. N., as to proceedings in revision.

Art. 47. [Return of absent member; witness recalled.] Whenever any member of a court-martial, from any legal cause, is absent from the court after the commencement of a case, all the witnesses who have been examined during his absence must, when he is ready to resume his seat, be recalled by the court, and the recorded testimony of each witness so examined must be read over to him, and such witness must acknowledge the same to be correct and be subject to such further examination as the said member may require. Without a compliance with this rule, and an entry thereof upon the record, a member who shall have been absent during the examination of a witness shall not be allowed to sit again in that particular case.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 17, v. 12, p. 605.)

Member absent at commencement of proceedings.—Where a general court-martial has been ordered by the Secretary of the Navy and the names of officers and supernumeraries to compose it are set forth in the warrant, and, by reason of nonattendance of one of the officers on the first day a supernumerary takes his place and the court thus organized proceeds to business, the absent member can not properly thereafter be added to the court upon his arrival unless the case on trial has been disposed of, if at all. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 698, construing articles of April 23, 1800, 2 Stat., 51. In this case the order convening the court provided that it was to consist of seven members named therein and three supernumeraries also named therein or any five or more of them.)

There is nothing in the acts of Congress on this subject nor in any of the analogies of the law in relation to civil tribunals, which authorizes a newly arrived member to be superadded at all to a court which has been once legally organized. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 698.)

The 39th article of the Rules and Regulations for the Government of the Navy (act Apr. 23, 1800, 2 Stat., 51), seems to contemplate the unity and immutability of a general court-martial which shall have been once constituted and shall have commenced its session. The members whose absence is therein spoken of are the members who shall have qualified as members of the court, not those who shall merely have been named in the warrant as members. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 698. The article referred to contained the same provisions as articles 45 and 46 of section 1624, R. S.)

Importance of members hearing testimony.—The rule that witnesses should be ex-

"Cashiered" and "dismissed" distinguished.—In Great Britain it seems that a distinction is recognized to exist between these terms, the one "cashiered," including an incapacity for future service. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 286.)

Where an article of war under which an accused was tried prescribed as the punishment of his offense that he shall be "dismissed from service," the sentence that he be dismissed from the service, instead of that he be cashiered, was conformable to law, and in such case the distinction between the two terms is immaterial. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 286.)

amined in the presence of the judge is one that can not be safely departed from. The judgment which we form upon testimony is greatly dependent upon the conduct of the witness during the examination and upon the manner in which that testimony is delivered. It is the right of an accused person that the evidence in his case should be given in the presence of all his judges; and it is much more important to secure the correct administration of public justice in this regard than to enforce punishment in any particular cases. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 414.)

Could not resume seat in absence of legislation.—As to whether a member of a naval court-martial who participated in the proceedings of the same at the commencement of its sitting, but who, from sickness, had been unable to attend during the trial of the whole case, which was concluded in his absence, could afterwards, on recovering his health, resume his seat again as a member of the court for the next trial without a new precept issued, should be decided according to the settled practice in such cases. As the practice has been to regard the member thus situated as disqualified, the executive department should be governed by the precedents so established. Certainly he could not be permitted to take his seat in a case already pending. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 7.)

It is irregular for a member of a court-martial who has been absent during a portion of the trial, and who did not hear the witnesses testify, to take part in sentencing the accused. In this case the sentence was pronounced by five officers, one of whom had been absent from the court several days during the trial and during the examination of witnesses. The record of the examination of these witnesses was read to him and his judgment was consequently founded upon the testimony of witnesses who had not been examined in his presence. If he was thus disqualified to sit in judgment upon the accused, there was no competent tribunal to award sentence against him: Held, that the officer was disqualified to pronounce judgment in this case; and that the sentence was illegal and void; that the accused is entitled to be restored to his rights as if such sentence had not been pronounced or approved. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 414.)

Error of court in excluding member on return.—In practice it is unusual for members who have not heard the whole trial to participate in giving judgment; but there is no law to prohibit their doing so, or to compel them if they refuse. It is true that not having heard a portion of the witnesses testify, so as to judge of their credibility from their appearance and manner of testifying, a member who had been absent on account of sickness was without some of the means of proper judgment. The case might have turned upon the credibility of a witness examined when he was absent. The appearance and manner of the witness might have concluded that question. No mere subsequent reading of the evidence can supply full means of knowledge in this respect. However, held, that it was error for the court to exclude such member from resuming his seat, as the court is nowhere clothed with power to expel a fellow member; and that whether or not the absent member shall act upon his return must depend upon his own views of propriety and not upon those of the court. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 98; see note to art. 46, A. G. N.)

Consent of accused.—Where the question was raised as to the right of a member to resume his seat after being absent during a portion of the trial, it was considered so far doubtful as to induce the accused to tender his consent to waive all question as to this point, and the member was accordingly not permitted by the court to resume his seat. Held, that this action of the accused could neither confer power upon the member to resume his seat, nor affect the jurisdiction or authority of the court to proceed without him. These depended upon the law and not upon the act of the accused. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 98, 102.)

Irregularities not fatal.—The absence of a member of the court during the trial of the accused, and the erroneous action of the remaining members in excluding him upon his return, if presented to the President as the ground of a new trial, might or might not have been worthy of consideration in that relation. It was a mere incidental irregularity in form, wholly independent of the merits of the case, and might then have been cured. But after the sentence of dismissal has been confirmed and executed, it is too late for the accused to raise the question of such irregularity, just as it is then too late for the Government to take lawful steps in the premises for the further investigation of the merits, which, if the question had been made prior to the discharge of the court and the approval of its sentence, might have been done. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 98.)

Art. 48. [Suspension of pay.] Whenever a court-martial sentences an officer to be suspended, it may suspend his pay and emoluments for the whole or any part of the time of his suspension.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 18, v. 12, p. 605.)

When sentence effective.—The effect of a sentence of a court-martial suspending from the service for three years "from this day," upon half pay, a lieutenant of the Marine Corps, and ordering a reprimand by the Secretary of the Navy, is to suspend half the officer's pay from the date of the confirmation of the sentence, forward, during the term of three years. Until the confirmation he is entitled to receive full pay as before trial. The authority of a naval court-martial to affect by its sentence the pay of an officer subject to its jurisdiction is conferred by the act of April 23, 1800, article 40 (2 Stat., 51; art. 48, sec. 1624, R. S.). The limitation imposed by this article is clear, and accurately defined. The power of a court to suspend the pay and emoluments of an officer does not extend beyond the time of his suspension from service. It is incident to that suspension from service, and can only be coextensive in point of time with the suspension. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 323; see art. 53, A. G. N., as to confirmation of sentence.)

Suspension with pay.—A sentence of suspension, merely, by a naval court-martial does not deprive the party of pay and emoluments. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 200.)

Officers and enlisted men in the naval service do not incur any forfeiture or loss of pay by confinement or suspension from duty under sentence of a court-martial unless the forfeiture or loss be imposed by the sentence. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 175.)

See note to article 54, A. G. N., as to remission of part of sentence.

Forfeiture of allowances.—When an officer in the Army is suspended from duty he is not entitled to allowances. In this case the officer was sentenced to be suspended from rank and duty for 12 years, and "to forfeit one-half of his monthly pay every month for the same period." (Swain v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553.)

Extra pay on discharge.—Where a volunteer officer in the military service of the United States was sentenced by a court-martial to suspension from rank and pay for a certain period, before the expiration of which he was mustered out of the service and discharged, held that the sentence did not work a forfeiture of the three months' extra pay provided by the act of March 3, 1865, section 4 (13 Stat., 497), for volunteer officers upon being mustered out of the service, but merely deprived the officer, during his continuance in service and while it remained in force, of his regular current pay. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 16.)

Suspension; continuing punishment; effect of promotion.—See note to article 54, A. G. N.

Art. 49. [Prohibited punishments.] In no case shall punishment by flogging, or by branding, marking, or tattooing on the body be adjudged by any court-martial or be inflicted upon any person in the Navy.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 8, v. 12, p. 603. 6 June, 1872, c. 316, s. 2, v. 17, p. 261.)

See note to article 30, A. G. N., as to restriction upon use of irons; and see note to | article 63, A. G. N., as to cruel and unusual punishments.

Art. 50. [Sentences, how determined.] No person shall be sentenced by a court-martial to suffer death, except by the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present, and in the cases where such punishment is expressly provided in these articles. All other sentences may be determined by a majority of votes.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 19, v. 12, p. 605.)

Art. 51. [Adequate punishment; recommendation to mercy.] It shall be the duty of a court-martial, in all cases of conviction, to adjudge a punishment adequate to the nature of the offense; but the members thereof may recommend the person convicted as deserving of clemency, and state, on the record, the reasons for so doing.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 21, v. 12, p. 605.)

Art. 52. [Authentication of judgment.] The judgment of every court-martial shall be authenticated by the signature of the president, and of every member who may be present when said judgment is pronounced, and also of the judge-advocate.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 22, v. 12, p. 605.)

Death of member before signing record.—The death of one of the members of a general court-martial after sentence had been imposed but before he had appended his signature to the sentence as required by article 52, A. G. N., does not render the sentence void. It is sufficiently authenticated if attested by the other members of the court. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 550.)

This provision concerning authentication is embraced in the British naval laws from which many of ours have been borrowed. The British article is as follows: "If the prisoner be found guilty of a breach of any of the articles of war established by law, the court shall consider and determine the punishment proper to be inflicted in accordance therewith. The judge advocate shall draw up the sentence accordingly, being careful to specify therein the charge, or substance of it; and the same shall be signed by every member of the court, by way of attestation, notwithstanding any difference of opinion there may have been among the members." (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 550.)

The purpose of the British and American articles is doubtless the same. They are intended to direct the officers of the court to sign the sentence, notwithstanding they may not have concurred in the decision, in order that the sentence may be known with certainty to have been correctly recorded. The article orders officers, under military discipline, to sign the sentence. It does not say that the fact that such sentence has been pronounced must be taken as nonexistent, however clearly it can be proved, if they or some of them are not in a position to sign as directed. It was not the intention that in a case like the present the trial and sentence should go for naught. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 550.)

Record should contain all the evidence.—As no sentence of a naval court-martial can, under the Articles for the Government of the Navy, be carried into execution until confirmed by the commander of the fleet or by the officer ordering the court or in certain cases by the President of the United States (act Apr. 23, 1800, 2 Stat., 45), it is essential that the record should contain all the evidence; and in order to a confirmation such evidence should sustain, in the opinion of the superior officer, the finding of the court. The mere statement by the court of the inferences which it drew from the evidence, unaccompanied by the evidence itself, was a serious defect in the record, and the commanding officer was correct in not approving the judgment of the court. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 545; compare note to Art. 53, A. G. N., under "Approval of sentence and not of whole proceedings required.")

Responsibility of court and judge advocate.—The court and judge advocate are required by law to keep a true record of the proceedings. This is not made the duty of any other officer or servant of the Government. The responsibility and the power both belong to these officers and not to any other. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 23, 27.)

Record must show jurisdictional facts.—A court-martial organized under the laws of the United States is a court of special and limited jurisdiction. It is called into existence for a special purpose and to perform a particular duty. When the object of its creation has been accomplished it is dissolved. To give effect to its sentence it must appear affirmatively and unequivocally that the court was legally constituted; that it had jurisdiction; that all the statutory regulations governing its proceedings had been complied with; and that its sentence was conformable to law. There are no presumptions in its favor so far as these matters are concerned. It is not sufficient that jurisdiction may be inferred argumentatively from its averments. Their authority is statutory and the statute under which they proceed must be followed throughout. The facts necessary to show their jurisdiction and that their sentences were conformable to law must be stated positively; and it is not enough that they may be inferred argumentatively. (Runkle v. U. S., 122 U. S., 543, 555.)

Omission of record to show jurisdictional facts.—Where the due convocation of a court-martial with jurisdiction to try offenses of the class in question is established on the face of its record, the existence of a particular fact not so shown, but acted upon by the court-martial and necessary to its jurisdiction over the particular case, may be proven in support of its judgment upon a collateral attack. Such evidence does not change the court-martial record, but simply meets the collateral attack by showing that at the time of trial the basis existed for the exertion by the court of the authority conferred upon it. General expressions found in some of the reported cases to the effect that, wherever a fact upon which the jurisdiction of a court of limited jurisdiction depends is questioned, it must appear in the record that such fact was established, should be limited in accordance with this ruling. (Givens v. Zerbst, 255 U. S. 11, 20, affirming ex parte Givins, 262 Fed. Rep., 702.)

The complete right to collaterally assail the existence of every fact which was essential to the exercise by a court-martial of its authority, whether appearing on the face of the record or not, is wholly incompatible with the conception that, when a collateral attack is made, the face of the record is conclusive. Such expressions as to the face of the record contemplate, not the record assailed by the collateral attack, but the record established as the result of the proof heard on such attack. (Givens v. Zerbst, 255 U. S., 11, 20, affirming ex parte Givins, 262 Fed. Rep., 702.)

In a habeas corpus proceeding evidence was admissible to prove the military status of the relator at the time of his trial and conviction by an Army court-martial, where the record of the court-martial was silent on the subject beyond showing that he was charged as a captain in the Army. (Givens v. Zerbst, 255 U. S. 11, affirming ex parte Givins, 262 Fed. Rep., 702.)

It is not necessary that every fact essential to the jurisdiction of a court-martial and the competency and qualifications of its members should be set out in the record in each case, but with respect to formal matters relating to the creation of the court, such as a recital that an order of the War Department was "by direction of the President," or the designation of the rank and official position of officers, regularity will be presumed. (McRae v. Henkes, 273 Fed. Rep., 108.)

That an order convening a court-martial was not signed personally by the department commander, but by a staff officer by his "command," and that the department of which he was in command did not appear below his personal signature, held not to render it invalid; the objection related to a matter of form and not of substance. (McRae v. Henkes, 273 Fed. Rep., 108.)

That the record of the court-martial did not show that the retired officers who served as members had been regularly detailed to active duty with their consent or as otherwise provided by statute did not render the judgment and sentence void and subject to collateral attack. Indeed, such facts could not appropriately be made a part of the record no more than facts showing that the members of the court had been commissioned as officers. (McRae v. Henkes, 273 Fed. Rep., 108.)

Although it was necessary that each member of the court be fully competent to sit, the order convening the court and appointing the detail, and the resulting service and action taken by those detailed, raise the presumption that its members were competent and possessed all the necessary qualifications entitling them to sit as such. (McRae v. Henkes, 273 Fed. Rep., 108, reversing ex parte Henkes, 267 Fed. Rep., 276.)

Where the record of a trial before a court-martial is defective, in failing to show who was the originator or signer of the charges against the accused, and who is to be treated legally as the accuser or prosecutor, evidence aliunde is admissible to supply the information when the proceedings are attacked years later as null and void on the ground that the commanding general was legally incompetent to convene the court, because he had preferred the charges. In such case sworn statements of officers may be admitted in order not to impeach the validity of the proceedings, but to supply facts which the record fails to disclose. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 106.)

For other cases, see notes to article 38, A. G. N., under "Evidence of convening authority's power"; article 40, A. G. N., under "Judge advocate not sworn"; and article 43, A. G. N., under "Waiver of objection by the accused."

Correction of record.—See above under "Omission of record to show jurisdictional facts"; and see below under "Conclusiveness of record."

The Secretary of War is without authority to correct, amend, or to take any action inconsistent with the record of a court-martial duly convened upon a proper and sufficient charge. This power is inherent in a court-martial; but such correction or amendment can be made only when the court-martial is in session, and when at least five of the members of the court who acted upon the trial are present, and then in the presence of the judge advocate. After the court has been dissolved, and the sentence approved and executed, such amendments or corrections can not be made. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 23.)

Conclusiveness of record.—The record is that which the court certifies to have transpired on the trial and embodies the action of the court. The fact that the court, in due and legal form, announces that it did so and so, or that so and so transpired, makes that record and the fact, and no one except the court itself can lawfully alter that record. If it were to be held otherwise, there is not a record filed in the department that could not be subject to attack by ex parte affidavits, and that, too, at a time when the officers of the court might be dead or scattered to the ends of the earth and unable to defend the solemn certificates which they made; and all the judgments of courts-martial as filed and acted on would be open to perpetual contradiction on subsequent assertions of interested parties which it would be impossible to meet or disprove. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 23, 28.)

In this case the record was in every respect regular on its face. But after the sentence was carried into execution, the accused filed an affidavit of himself and also one made by one of the members of the court-martial, stating that a certain witness testified at the trial, whereas the record did not show that the person named in the affidavits was used as a witness in the case. It was contended by the accused that the reviewing authority never had jurisdiction to approve and execute the sentence, because he never had the whole record before him; and that his action was accordingly void. Held, that the record of a court of competent jurisdiction is, as against collateral attack, conclusive of its own verity; that this is settled and accepted law; and that the same doctrine as to conclusiveness is also applicable to courts-martial. (23 Op. Atty. Gen., 23.)

See above, under "Omission of record to show jurisdictional facts," and "Correction of record."

Copies of records; rights of public; evidence in other cases.—See note to section 882, Revised Statutes; and note to article 34, A. G. N.

Public justice and private right require that the Secretary of the Navy and his subordinates shall not withhold their testimony in regard to the contents of the record of a court-martial, after the proceedings have been consummated by the action of the proper revisory authority, when required to give it by the summons of a State court. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 137.)

When the proceedings of a naval court-martial are at an end, through the action of the competent revisory power, the contents of the records of such proceedings are not State secrets; nor are the records of the courts to be regarded as the minutes of official, confidential transactions, within the meaning of the rule as to "privileged communications." (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 137.)

Any person having an interest in the record of a naval court-martial on file in the Navy Department is entitled to have an exemplified copy of it after the proceedings are consummated by the action of the proper revisory authority. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 137.)

Art. 53. [Confirmation of sentence.] No sentence of a court-martial, extending to the loss of life, or to the dismissal of a commissioned or warrant officer, shall be carried into execution until confirmed by the President. All other sentences of a general court-martial may be carried into execution on confirmation of the commander of the fleet or officer ordering the court.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 19, v. 12, p. 605.)

"The Secretary of the Navy may set aside the proceedings or remit or mitigate, in whole or in part, the sentence imposed by any naval court-martial convened by his order or by that of any officer of the Navy or

The many instances in which court-martial records might be made available for the purposes of justice clearly show that any rule by which the right to inspect and receive copies of the records of the proceedings of military tribunals would be limited and restricted would operate to affect disastrously the administration of justice in cases in which the liberty, happiness, and life of the individual are often involved, and the safety of the State itself may be concerned. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 137.)

The records of courts-martial should be regarded as standing upon the same footing, so far as the parties affected and the community at large are concerned, as the records of the ordinary tribunals of civil and criminal jurisdiction. The legislation of Congress shows that it was intended to guard against improper secrecy in the cases of courts-martial. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 137.)

The head or an officer of a department may properly have the custody of records of courts-martial, but such custody does not involve any right of exclusive control over the documents, nor does it imply any right to withhold the contents of them. Such records, it is plain, must be deposited and remain somewhere. They can not stay in the possession of the courts-martial, because they have no existence after the trials. They are then dissolved sine die. The most appropriate place of custody is undoubtedly the archives of the department charged with the administration of the branch of the military service in which the courts were respectively convened. With respect to the records of naval courts-martial on file in the department, the Secretary of the Navy or the officer of the department in whose peculiar care they may be placed stands in relatively the same attitude as the clerk or prothonotary of a civil court with respect to the records of cases instituted and determined in the court of which he is an officer. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 137, 143.)

A paper which must be kept on file in a designated office and which can not be removed therefrom pertains to that office and so becomes official within the meaning of section 882, Revised Statutes. (Cohn v. U. S., 258 Fed. Rep., 355.)

If the departments at Washington can be compelled to produce in any part of the country the original of any documents or papers they may have on file, the greatest embarrassment and confusion to the department would be the consequence. (Cohn v. U. S., 258 Fed. Rep., 355.)

Marine Corps." (Act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 9, 35 Stat., 621.)
The Judge Advocate General of the Navy "shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, receive, revise, and have recorded the proceedings of all courts-martial * * * in the naval service." (Act June 8, 1880, 21 Stat., 164.)

"Such finding and sentence shall be subject to review by the convening authority, and by the Secretary of the Navy, as in the cases of other courts-martial." (Act Apr. 9, 1906, sec. 3, 34 Stat., 104-105, relating to courts-martial for the trial of midshipmen at the Naval Academy.)

Sentence inoperative until confirmed.—

Under the laws of the United States, the sentence of a court-martial in case of death or dismissal is not perfected until it shall have received the approbation of the President. Without his sanction it is no more a perfect sentence than a bill which has passed both houses of the National Legislature but which has not yet received the approbation of the President is an act of Congress. In both cases his approbation is necessary to consummate the measure. (1 Op. Att'y. Gen., 233, 241.)

According both to plain law and universal practice, the sentences of naval courts-martial are incomplete and can not lawfully be carried into effect until they have received the approval or confirmation of some revisory power. (5 Op. Att'y. Gen., 508, 511.)

Without the confirmation of the sentence by the statutory reviewing authority it was a vain thing. (10 Op. Att'y. Gen., 64.)

Execution of sentence prior to confirmation.—If at the time that the act was done by the War Department of actually dismissing the officer, the sentence had not been confirmed by the President, it does not admit of doubt that the sentence and thus the act done could be confirmed at a subsequent period by him, and this upon the well-settled principle that a subsequent ratification is equal to a prior command. Whether or not in the interval that ensued between the informal dismissal of the officer and the act done by the President which operated to confirm the sentence the officer is to be considered as having been an officer of the Army, not decided. (16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 298.)

An officer was convicted by court-martial and sentenced to dismissal. The sentence not having been approved by the President, the Secretary of the Navy addressed a letter to the officer purporting to dismiss him from the naval service, not pursuant to the sentence of the court but because of facts disclosed by the record. Held, that such letter was an attempted dismissal of the officer otherwise than pursuant to the confirmed sentence of a court-martial, and that such power of dismissal did not exist in the President on that date. (16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 312.)

Pursuant to the Attorney General's opinion above noted (16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 312), the Secretary of the Navy addressed a letter to the officer 11 years after his supposed dismissal, declaring the order of dismissal to be illegal and void, and revoking and annulling same by direction of the President of the United States. The name of the officer was thereupon restored to the Navy Register in the original relative position held by him and to which he was entitled by virtue of his commission. Held, that the order of the President did not operate to restore the said officer to the Navy; he was always there, although by error there was an omission of his name in the register and a failure for some years to recognize him as an officer of the Navy. The only rule that can be adopted is to treat him as having always been nominally, what he always was actually and really, an officer of the United States. If positions have been arranged in regard to the rank of other officers upon the theory that he was not an officer, those positions should, whenever possible, be altered so as to rectify the error committed by treating him as out of the service. Where an officer is illegally dropped he can only find his place again in the grade from which he was dropped, as it would not be in the power of the President alone to give him the rank of a higher grade. It is not necessary to consider in this case to what extent it would be possible to rectify such an error so far as higher grades are concerned. (17 Op. Att'y. Gen., 21, 22, 24; see also act of Mar. 3, 1883, 22 stat., 530, "for the relief of Edward Bellows," the officer in whose case this opinion was rendered; and compare note to art. 36, A. G. N., under "Illegal dismissal revoked.")

Until the President has acted in the manner required by the articles of war, a sentence by Army court-martial of dismissal of a commissioned officer from service in time of peace is inoperative. Before then it is interlocutory and inchoate only. Accordingly, there being no sufficient evidence that the action of the court-martial which dismissed Maj. Runkle from the Army was approved by the President it follows that he was never legally cashiered or dismissed from the Army. (Runkle v. U. S., 122 U. S., 543, 547, 559.)

Approval of sentence and not of whole proceedings required.—Under the articles of war it is the approval of the sentence and not of the whole proceedings that is the prerequisite to carrying the sentence into execution. (Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 384; compare note to art. 52, A. G. N., under "Record should contain all the evidence"; and see note below as to form of President's action.)

Effect of approval or disapproval.—In the case of a court-martial sentence of death or dismissal, the President's disapproval annihilates it; the case stands as if there had been no trial, and is just as open to an order for a court-martial as it was in the first instance. (1 Op. Att'y. Gen., 233, 242; see note below as to new trials.)

Where a soldier was tried by court-martial for theft and desertion, and having been convicted of both charges was sentenced by the court, but the proceedings, findings, and sentence were afterwards disapproved by the reviewing officer and the prisoner ordered to be released from confinement and restored to duty: Held, that the action of the reviewing officer was in effect an acquittal by the court; that the accused is in legal contemplation innocent of the charges mentioned; and that there is no authority for withholding his pay on account of the alleged desertion. (13 Op. Att'y. Gen., 459. In this case, disapproval was for the reason that the court allowed so much of the examination of the only witness for the prosecution to be conducted by means of leading questions as to destroy the value of the testimony. See note to art. 8, A. G. N., under "Effect of disapproval; desertion;" and see below under "Court-martial bar to trial in civil court.")

After the final sentence of the law is pronounced by the superior officers, the charge has passed conclusively into an offense beyond dispute, for the judgment of a court-martial is conclusive in its effect as to the truth of the charge and as a judicial decree is a bar to further proceeding. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 106, 108.)

For other cases, see below, under "Irregularities and false defects."

Disapproval of findings in part; effect on sentence.—Where the sentence is rendered on findings of guilty of several charges with specifications thereunder, and the President, as the reviewing authority, has disapproved of the findings of guilty of some of the specifications, but approved the findings of guilty of a specification or specifications under each of the charges and of the charges, the President does not think proper to remand the case to the court-martial for revision, or to mitigate the sentence, or to pardon the accused, but approves the sentence, the judgment so rendered can not be disturbed on the ground that the disapproval of some of the specifications vitiated the sentence. The analogies of the criminal law bear out the procedure under military law. It can not be assumed that if the court-martial had acquitted on the disapproved findings, the sentence would have been less severe, and that the punishment was therefore increased by the action of the President. (Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 385.)

It has been repeatedly ruled by the Judge Advocates General of the Army that a duly approved finding of guilty on one of several charges, a conviction upon which requires or authorizes the sentence adjudged, will give validity and effect to such sentence, although the similar findings on all the other charges are disapproved as not warranted by the testimony. (Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 386.)

Reconsideration of reviewing authority's action.—Where several midshipmen had been dismissed by the sentence of a naval court-martial, which was approved by the President, who very shortly thereafter reconsidered his approval and announced his determination to annul his approval and restore the dismissed officers, but was prevented from doing so because of his sudden death a few days afterwards, held that it is within the competency and power of the present Executive to restore them to their former rank in the Navy, provided it can be done without increasing that class of officers beyond the number limited by law. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 259. This opinion was expressly confined to the case presented and "its particular circumstances," and thus excludes all idea of introducing any new doctrine. See 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 369, 370.)

It can not be assumed, as a general proposition, either that the President has a power unlimited as to time or circumstances to restore an officer who has been dismissed from the public service, or that he is in all cases precluded from so doing from the instant he signs his approval of a sentence of dismissal. It is not necessary on this occasion to attempt to discuss or define the extreme limits which restrain his power, on the one hand, or, on the other hand, to fix the limits within which it may be his right and duty to reconsider and annul executive acts. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 259.)

A sentence of dismissal from the naval service, approved by the President, can not be annulled. The officer dismissed can be restored to the Navy only by a new nomination by the President, confirmation of the Senate, and all the requisites to constitute an original appointment to office. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 274.)

An officer of marines was tried by court-martial and sentenced to be cashiered; the sentence was commuted to suspension for a limited period; thereafter the accused was appointed a lieutenant in the Army. Held, that his case can not, after the lapse of 16 years, be examined with reference to whether the court-martial by which he was tried was legally organized and competent to try him. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 384.)

After the sentence of a court-martial dismissing an officer has been approved and acted on by the President, it can not be revised except for suggestion of absolute nullity in the proceedings as being absolutely void ab initio. The decision of the President in cases of this sort is that of the ultimate judge provided by the Constitution and laws. Like that of any other court in the last resort of law, it is final as to the subject matter. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 369.)

After the trial and conviction of a commissioned or warrant officer of the Navy by a court-martial having jurisdiction of the case, and the approval by the President of the sentence dismissing him from the service, and such sentence has been carried into execution, the President can not reconsider his approval and revoke the sentence of the court. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 19.)

Undoubtedly the President, in passing upon the sentence of a court-martial and giving to it the approval without which it can not be executed, acts judicially. The whole proceeding from its inception is judicial. The trial, finding, and sentence are the solemn acts of a court organized and conducted under the authority and according to the prescribed forms of law. It sits to pass upon the most sacred questions of human rights that are ever placed on trial in a court of justice—rights which in the very nature of things can neither be exposed to danger nor entitled to protection from the uncontrolled will of any man but which must be adjudged according to law. And the act of the officer who reviews the proceedings of the court, whether he be the commander of the fleet or the President, and without whose approval the sentence can not be executed, is as much a part of this judgment according to law as is the trial or the sentence. When the President, then, performs this duty of approving the sentence of a court-martial dismissing an officer, his act has all the solemnity and significance of the judgment of a court of law. As it has to be performed under the same sanctions, so it draws with it the same consequences. One of these consequences is that where a judgment has been regularly entered in a case properly within the judicial cognizance, from which no appeal has been provided or taken, and it has been followed by execution, it is final and conclusive upon the party against whom it is entered. And this effect attaches to the action of the President in approving the sentence of a court-martial dismissing an officer after that approval has been consummated by actual dismissal. (11 Op. Att'y. Gen., 19, 21; see also Runkle v. U. S., 122 U. S., 543, 557.)

No man would assert the power of the President to reverse his judicial decision afterwards to the prejudice of the accused. But why should that judgment be any less permanent because it establishes his guilt? It must be accepted as final and conclusive in the one case as in the other, because it is the judgment which the law authorizes to settle the rights in controversy, from which no appeal has been given. (11 Op. Att'y. Gen., 19, 21, 22.)

Courts-martial are judicial tribunals constituted by statutory authority and organized in pursuance of statutory regulations for the administration of a great and important department of jurisprudence—the law military. They are, therefore, in the strictest sense courts of justice, having jurisdiction of a large and in some respects distinct community of our fellow citizens, and taking judicial cognizance of the duties and obligations which the citizen assumes when he enters, by enlistment or otherwise, into the military service of the country. Their judgments in cases committed for the consideration and determination are as final, conclusive, and authoritative as those of any judicial tribunal of the country. After the sentence has been approved and carried into effect, there is no revisory power by which it can be rescinded, annulled, or modified. It forever stands as the judgment of a court. (11 Op. Att'y. Gen., 137.)

When the sentence of a court-martial dismissing a commissioned officer has been lawfully confirmed and executed, the proceedings in the case are no longer subject to review by the President; they have passed beyond his control and are at an end. (15 Op. Att'y. Gen., 290.)

A commander in the Navy was tried and sentenced to dismissal from service by a naval court-martial. The record of the proceedings and sentence was submitted to the President, who, on June 5, 1874, approved the same. On June 9, 1874, the Secretary of the Navy addressed a letter to the officer, then in Boston, informing him of the approval of the sentence, and stating that from said date (June 9, 1874) he would "cease to be an officer of the Navy." On June 12, 1874, the Secretary addressed another letter to the officer, asking him to return the letter of dismissal. On December 8, 1874, the Secretary addressed a third letter to the officer, stating that the sentence of the court-martial "was, on the 9th day of June, 1874, mitigated to suspension from rank, and so forth, to date from that day." Held, (1) that the letter of the Secretary of the Navy of December 8 is satisfactory proof not only of the mitigation of the sentence by the President, but that it was mitigated by him on the 9th of June; (2) that the letter of dismissal in execution of the sentence, forwarded by the Secretary on the 9th of June (it being manifest that the complete execution of the sentence by means of that letter could not take place on that day), was then revocable; and the mitigation of the sentence was in effect a revocation of the letter; and (3) that it was competent to the President under the circumstances to mitigate the sentence when he did. (15 Op. Att'y. Gen., 463; see Quackenbush v. U. S., 177 U. S., 20.)

Where the sentence of a legally constituted court-martial in a case within its jurisdiction has been approved by the reviewing authority and carried into execution, it can not afterwards be revised and annulled, there being no fatal irregularity in its proceedings nor illegality in its sentence. The proceedings are then at an end, and the action thus had upon the sentence is, in contemplation of law, final. (17 Op. Att'y. Gen., 297.)

If the sentence of a court-martial dismissing a commissioned officer of the Army has been legally approved by the President, the subsequent disapproval of the sentence by his successor would be a nullity and could not have the effect of restoring the officer to his position. (Runkle v. U. S., 122 U. S., 543, 558.)

For other cases, see below, under "Irregularities and fatal defects."

Relation of reviewing authority to court analogous to judge and jury.

Courts-martial exhibit many points of analogy with juries, the appointing power having something of the same relation to the former that the judge ad nisi prius has to the latter, inasmuch as the court-martial, like the jury, finds all of the facts, and pronounces a sentence thereon which has to undergo the legal supervision of a superior authority. Questions have arisen where it was convenient to reason from this analogy; however, it is analogy only, and leaves unchanged the substantial nature of things. (7 Op. Att'y. Gen., 338, 340.)

The reviewing authority, whose confirmation of the sentence is required before it becomes operative, occupies toward the court-martial and its proceedings a relation similar to that which the judge in a civil court occupies to a jury. (10 Op. Att'y. Gen., 64.)

The verdict of a jury bears a close analogy to the judgment of a court-martial. The sentence pronounced on that verdict by the court bears a like analogy to the confirmation of the officer who ordered the court. (19 Op. Att'y. Gen., 106, 107.)

While a court-martial can not be altogether likened to a civil court, in which the guilt of the accused is to be pronounced by a jury under the supervision of the judge, and the penalty is to be fixed by the judge within the prescribed limits, it is true that a court-martial acts only in response to the call of a superior authority, and the result of its deliberations is somewhat in the nature of a recommendation to that authority; is without effect unless approved by it; and until then is interlocutory and inchoate only. (In re Brodie, 128 Fed. Rep., 665, 668.)

The superior authority which orders a court-martial, and to which its conclusion must be submitted for approval or disapproval, is spoken of as the reviewing authority. Its action being indispensable to a final conclusion or judgment, the reviewing authority is an essential component of the original tribunal and is not entirely a court of errors. (In re Brodie, 128 Fed. Rep., 665, 668.)

See note below, under "Reconvening of court for revision."

"Officer ordering the court;" President and Secretary of the Navy.—The sentence must be confirmed by the President, if he ordered the court; or by the Secretary of the Navy, if he was the officer who ordered it. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 309.)

Under the phrase, "the officer ordering the court" in the articles of April 23, 1800 (2 Stat., 51), the President and Secretary of the Navy alone were included; because by said articles they were the only officers authorized to order a naval court-martial at home. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 309.)

Where a general court-martial was convened by the Secretary of the Navy, he was the "officer" ordering the court within the meaning of the Articles for the Government of the Navy providing for the execution of sentences on confirmation of the officer ordering the court; the approval of the Secretary of the Navy was that confirmation. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 323.)

The Secretary of the Navy has power to approve the sentence of a court-martial convened by him where the sentence of the court does not extend to loss of life or to the dismissal of a commissioned or warrant officer. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 508.)

The Secretary of the Navy is an "officer" within the meaning of the act of April 23, 1800, article 41 (2 Stat., 51), providing that sentences of courts-martial in certain cases may be carried into execution "on confirmation of the commander of the fleet, or officer ordering the court." (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 508.)

To say that the term "officer" as here used is to be understood as meaning only a naval officer having command of a squadron is a construction not only narrow and arbitrary, but such as would defeat the declared purpose of this provision of law. The Secretary of the Navy is in fact and law an "officer" and in the act establishing the Navy Department (1 Stat., 553), he is denominated the "chief officer" of that department. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 508.)

Where a court-martial for the trial of an officer of the Army was convened by the President, he was the reviewing authority and the court of last resort. (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 385.)

Mitigating circumstances considered by reviewing authority.—In exercising the revisory power over sentences of courts-martial, the President may consider the provocation, if any, which led to the offense and all the facts and circumstances which properly bear upon the justice, injustice, severity, or leniency of the sentence. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 286.)

Provocation, according to its nature and degree, and according to the nature of the act committed in consequence of it, may justify or excuse that act or may be inadequate to either purpose. English writers on military law confirm the idea that extenuating circumstances may be properly considered by the officer to whom is intrusted the power of supervising the sentence of a court-martial. It is indeed the right of the accused that all the circumstances of his case should be reviewed by the authority which decides finally on his case. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 286.)

See note to article 52, A. G. N., under "Record should contain all the evidence."

Personal action of reviewing authority required.—The action of the President as to the confirmation of sentences in cases where such action is required by the articles of war is judicial in its character and in this respect differs from the administrative action considered in cases holding that the action of the head of a department is in legal contemplation the action of the President. The law implies that he is himself to consider the proceedings laid before him, and decide personally whether they ought to be carried into effect. Such a power he can not delegate. His personal judgment is required, as much so as it would have been in passing on the case if he had been one of the members of the court-martial itself. He may call others to his assistance in making his examinations and in informing himself as to what ought to be done; but his judgment when pronounced must be his own judgment and not that of another. And this because he is the person, and the only person, to whom has been committed the important judicial power of finally determining upon his examination of the whole proceedings of a court-martial whether an officer holding a commission in the Army shall be dismissed from service as a punishment for an offense. (Runkle v. U. S., 122 U. S., 543, 557.)

Form of President's action; personal signature not necessary.—It is not necessary that the President should attach his sign manual to the approval of a sentence rendered by a court-martial in time of peace cashing a commissioned officer in order to make the sentence effectual. It is sufficient for this purpose if his approval of the sentence be signified through and attested by the Secretary of War in a statement signed by the latter. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 290.)

A statement made and signed by the Secretary of War announcing the approval by the President of a court-martial sentence is sufficient authentication of the act of the President, without an express averment therein that it is made by direction of the President, the presumption being always that such direction was given. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 290; for decision of the Supreme Court in this case, see Runkle v. U. S., noted below.)

Where an Army officer was sentenced to dismissal from the service, and the sentence, without having been approved by the President, was carried into effect under orders of the War Department, held that the subsequent recognition by the President of the vacancy thus occasioned, by making an appointment during a recess of the Senate or a nomination to that body (followed by the issuance of a commission with the consent of the Senate) of a person to fill the place of such officer, operates as a confirmation by him of the sentence and orders. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 298; compare 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 463, 466.)

Whether a sentence of court-martial has been confirmed by the President is to be determined by evidence, no specific form for this act having been provided by statute. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 298.)

A paymaster in the Navy was sentenced by court-martial, inter alia, to be dismissed. The following letter was addressed to him by the Secretary of the Navy: "In consequence of the facts appearing upon the record of the naval general court-martial before which you were tried * * *, you are dismissed from the naval service, and will from this date cease to be regarded as an officer in the United States Navy." Held, that this letter does not profess in direct terms nor inferentially to be the act of approval of the sentence of the court-martial; it is founded upon facts disclosed by the record, and does not state the act which the Secretary does to be the act of approval of the sentence. Its fair construction is that it is a dismissal from the service by reason of disclosures made by the record, and such power of dismissal, independently of court-martial, did not then exist, by virtue of article 36, A. G. N. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 312; see also, 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 21, 22; and see note above, under "Execution of sentence prior to confirmation.")

Notice by the Secretary of the Navy of the approval by the President of a sentence dismissing a midshipman in 1868 was sufficient evidence both of approval and promulgation. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 550.)

Where a paymaster in the Navy was sentenced to dismissal by court-martial, and it distinctly appeared by the order of the Secretary of the Navy that the President approved the finding of the court and directed the sentence to be carried into effect, held that the officer was legally dismissed from the naval service. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 43, affirming 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 290.)

Where the approval of the proceedings, findings, and sentence of a court-martial by the President is attested by an entry on the record signed by the Secretary of War, this is sufficient evidence of such approval. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 397. For decision of Court of Claims in this case, see Armstrong v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 387.)

The President's approval must be authenticated in a way to show, otherwise than argumentatively, that it is the result of his own judgment, and not a mere departmental order which may or may not have attracted his attention; and the fact that the order was his own must not be left to inference only. Not decided what the precise form of an order of the President approving the proceedings and sentence of a court-martial should be, or that his own signature should be affixed thereto. (Runkle v. U. S., 122 U. S., 543.)

In this case the following order was issued by the Secretary of War: "The findings and sentence are approved. In view of the unanimous recommendation by the members of the court that accused shall receive executive clemency on account of his gallant services during the war, and of his former good character, and in consideration of evidence, by affidavits presented to the War Department since his trial, showing that accused is now, and was at the time when his offense was committed, suffering under great infirmity in consequence of wounds received in battle, and credible representations having been made that he would be utterly unable to pay the fine imposed, the President is pleased to remit all of the sentence, except so much thereof as directs cashiering, which will be duly executed." This action is divided into two parts, one relating to the approval of the proceedings and sentence, and the other to the executive clemency which was invoked and exercised. The personal action of the President is nowhere mentioned, except in the remission of a part of the sentence. There is nothing which can have the effect of an affirmative statement that the whole proceeding had been laid before the President for action or that he personally approved the sentence. So far as it relates to approval of the sentence, it indicates on its face departmental action only. What follows does not clearly show the contrary. Under the circumstances, it can not be said that it positively and distinctly appears that the proceedings of the court-martial have ever in fact been approved or confirmed in whole or in part by the President of the United States. (Runkle v. U. S., 122 U. S., 543, 547, 559, holding that the officer in this case was never legally cashiered or dismissed from the Army.)

The decision of the President confirming or disproving the sentence of a general court-martial in time of peace, extending to the loss of life or the dismissal of a commissioned officer, is a judicial act to be done by him personally, and is not an official act presumptively his; but it need not be attested by his sign manual in order to be effectual. (U. S. v. Page, 137 U. S., 673, citing 2 Op. Atty. Gen., 67; 7 Op. Atty. Gen., 473; 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 290; and distinguishing Runkle v. U. S., 122 U. S., 543.)

The following action, signed by the Secretary of War, held to constitute sufficient evidence of approval by the President:

"In conformity with the 65th of the Rules and Articles of War, the proceedings of the general court-martial to the foregoing case have been forwarded to the Secretary of War, and by him submitted to the President.

"The proceedings and findings upon the second charge and specification, and upon the third charge under its second and third specifications, are approved.

"With regard to the other findings the remarks noted by Major General Hancock, who convened the court, are concurred in as follows: * * *

"The sentence is approved.

"Second Lieut. Frank A. Page (retired) accordingly ceases to be an officer of the Army from the date of this order." (U. S. v. Page, 137 U. S., 673.)

The only possible conclusion to be drawn from the action signed by the Secretary of War in this case is that the approval was by the President, in whom alone reposed authority to act. Where the record discloses that the proceedings have been laid before the President for his orders in the case, the orders subsequently issued thereon are presumed to be his and not those of the Secretary, by whom they are authenticated; and this must be the result where the approval follows the submission in the same order. (U. S. v. Page, 137 U. S., 673.)

In Runkle v. United States (above noted) the record failed to show the vital fact of the submission of the proceedings to the President. The inference that the President had personally acted could be properly drawn from the substantive fact of the submission of the proceedings to him, if that appeared, but presumption could not supply that fact, and then a presumption upon that presumption be availed of to make out that the approval was the President's personal action. This would leave the fact that the order was the President's to inference only. (U. S. v. Page, 137 U. S., 673.)

Reference to the case of Runkle v. United States (above noted) shows that the circumstances were so exceptional as to render it hardly a safe precedent in any other. (U. S. v. Fletcher, 148 U. S., 84, 90.)

The proceedings, findings, and sentence of a military court-martial being transmitted to the Secretary of War, that officer wrote upon the record the following order, dating it from the "War Department," and signing it with his name as "Secretary of War": "In conformity with the 65th of the Rules and Articles of War, the proceedings of the general court-martial in the foregoing case have been forwarded to the Secretary of War for the action of the President. The proceedings, findings, and sentence are approved, and the sentence will be duly executed." Held, that this was a sufficient authentication of the judgment of the President and that the order was not null and void on the ground that it did not appear that the President personally approved the proceedings and directed the execution of the sentence. (U. S. v. Fletcher, 148 U. S., 84; Ide v. U. S., 150 U. S. 517.)

While the action of the President in respect of the proceedings and sentences of courts-martial is judicial, such action need not be evidenced under his own hand. There is nothing to indicate that the Secretary of War assumed to confirm or disapprove or issue orders in the case, and as his indorsement showed that he was proceeding under article 65, and that he had received the record for the purpose of being acted upon by the President, the approval and the direction for the execution of the sentence was manifestly the acts of the President. The presumption is that the Secretary and the President performed the duties devolved upon them respectively. While it is not said in this case that the proceedings were submitted to the President, from the statement that they had been forwarded to the Secretary of War for the action of the President followed by an approval which could only emanate from the President, the conclusion follows that the action taken was the action of the President. (U. S. v. Fletcher, 148 U. S., 84; Ide v. U. S., 150 U. S., 517.)

The approval by the President sufficiently appears where the record shows that the sentence was submitted to the President, and his approval appears over his signature at the foot of a brief in the case, prepared in the Navy Department; and the Secretary of the Navy writes to the accused that the President has approved the sentence. It is difficult to see how the personal approval of the President could appear more clearly than in this case. (Bishop v. U. S., 197 U. S., 334.)

Action by convening authority absent from his command.—See note to article 38, A. G. N., under "Convening authority outside his command."

Form of disapproval by convening authority.—A paymaster in the Navy was sentenced, inter alia, to be dismissed upon a charge substantially of embezzlement. The convening authority forwarded the record of proceedings to the Navy Department with the following indorsement: "Respectfully forwarded, with the remark that the finding of the court is not sustained by the evidence, which fails to show that the accused received from the bank the amount of money he is charged with having lost." Held, that this indorsement can not be deemed to be a disapproval of the finding and sentence of the court; such disapproval should be distinctly expressed. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 312; see also 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 21, 22.)

Power of Secretary of the Navy over sentences of courts-martial.—See note above, under "Officer ordering the court; President and Secretary of the Navy." See also note to article 32, A. G. N.

The act of June 8, 1880, which created the office of Judge Advocate General of the Navy, provided that "under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy" the Judge Advocate General shall "receive, revise, and have recorded the proceedings of all courts-martial," etc.; and prior to the act of February 16, 1909 (quoted above, under this article), it appears to have been the practice of the Secretary of the Navy, without any express statutory authority, actually to set aside the proceedings of courts-martial and to remit or mitigate any sentence imposed by such courts if such action seemed to him to be warranted after a careful review of the record of proceedings. In 1908 the Secretary recognized the desirability of specific legislation on this subject, and he strongly advocated the enactment of legislation previously recommended. The result was the passage of the act of February 16, 1909 (quoted above). (U. S. ex rel. Harris v. Daniels, MacDonald, et al., U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, Jan. 6, 1922, 279 Fed. Rep., 844.) See act of Apr. 9, 1906, sec. 3, quoted above under this article, which recognized the Secretary's authority to review courts-martial.

Section 9 of the act of February 16, 1909 (quoted above under this article), makes the sentences of any naval courts-martial in a sense conditional upon the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, who is given power to set aside the proceedings and to remit or mitigate, in whole or in part, the sentence imposed. We are not now called upon to consider all possible questions and difficulties which might arise under this provision. (U. S. ex rel. Harris v. Daniels, MacDonald, et al., U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, Jan. 6, 1922, 279 Fed. Rep., 844.)

Under the Articles for the Government of the Navy of July 17, 1862 (12 Stat., 600), neither the President nor the Secretary of the Navy had lawful authority to approve or disapprove the sentence of dismissal in the case of an acting master's mate, who was not a commissioned or warrant officer, but the approval and confirmation of the commander of the fleet, being the officer who ordered the court, was all that was required to give validity to the execution of the sentence. The sentence in such a case having in fact been approved by the Secretary of the Navy, his approval was a nullity, and no occasion is presented for a review of the Secretary's action by the President with a view of setting aside the Secretary's order, after the sentence had been approved by the commander of the fleet who ordered the court and carried into execution. (11 Op. Att'y. Gen., 251.)

That no one can lawfully act as reviewing authority unless expressly authorized by statute, see note to article 38, A. G. N., under "Statutory authority necessary to convene courts."

Action by officer not empowered to confirm sentence.—While an officer convening a court-martial may not have the power to confirm and execute the sentence, he has still absolute power to disapprove and annul it. (16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 312, 314.)

It is undoubtedly the proper practice for the convening authority, in transmitting the proceedings to the authority having the power to execute the sentence, to subscribe a formal approval of the same, if he does not disapprove of it; but the failure to state such approval can not be construed as a disapproval. (16 Op. Att'y. Gen., 312, 314.)

Under the Articles for the Government of the Navy, the rear admiral convening the court was not obliged to confirm the sentence of dismissal. As the sentence in this case extended to dismissal from the service, no confirmation was necessary by the convening authority, whose duty was discharged by forwarding the papers to the President. (Bishop v. U. S., 197 U. S., 334, 341.)

Action of Judge Advocate General.—Section 1199, Revised Statutes, making it the duty of the Judge Advocate General of the Army to "receive, revise, and cause to be recorded the proceedings of all courts-martial," does not confer authority upon that officer to reverse the proceedings of courts-martial. (Ex parte Mason, 256 Fed. Rep., 384, 387.)

Applying the rule, "noscitur a sociis," the word "revise" is to be read in connection with the words that precede and follow it, and, thus read, the duty it imposes is analogous to the duty of receiving and recording the proceedings. The language employed is more appropriate to indicate the discharge of clerical duties than the power to affirm, reverse, or modify the proceedings of courts-martial. (Ex parte Mason, 256 Fed. Rep., 384, 387.)

It is not intended to intimate that it is not the province and the duty of the Judge Advocate General to revise the proceedings of courts-martial so far as may be necessary to rectify errors of form, and to point out errors of substance which, in his judgment, should be corrected by the proper authorities; nor is it doubted that, as to all such topics as are within the purview of his official scrutiny, his opinion is entitled to that respectful consideration which is due to the dignity and importance of the position which he holds. (Ex parte Mason, 256 Fed. Rep., 384, 387.)

See act of June 8, 1880, quoted above, under this article, as to duties of Judge Advocate General of the Navy.

Reconvening of court for revision of proceedings and sentence.—The President may direct a naval court-martial to reconsider their judgment in cases where his previous sanction is necessary for the execution of such judgment; as to his power in other cases, no opinion expressed. (4 Op. Att'y. Gen., 19.)

In military courts-martial, the power of the commander by whom they have been convened to direct them, in the event of disapproval, to revise their sentence and reconsider the proceedings, has never been doubted; and it is rested solely upon the ground that the sentences of such courts are not to be put in execution until approved by that commander. (4 Op. Att'y. Gen., 19.)

The revival of a sentence by the same court which pronounced it is not, properly speaking, an appeal, which always implies the review by one court of judicature of the sentence of another. It is no more than the reconsideration of the case by the same tribunal on a remittal and recommendation of the commander, who is authorized to approve or suspend its sentences. (1 Op. Att'y. Gen., 296.)

Where an officer of the Army was brought to trial before a court-martial for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, and he pleaded in bar of trial that he had been tried on the same facts in a State court upon the charge of manslaughter, and his plea in bar was sustained by the court-martial, whose judgment was properly disapproved by the commanding general; but the latter omitted to order a revival by the court: Held, that it would be clearly too late for his successor to order such a revival if the court had in the meantime been dissolved; and if not dissolved, the Attorney General would nevertheless be strongly inclined to think it too late to order a revival by the same court after a lapse of two years from the date of the original proceedings; but an examination of precedents may disclose that they have settled the practice the other way. (3 Op. Att'y. Gen., 749.)

It is in the power of the Secretary or other authority appointing a court-martial to order the case back for revision, both in the Army and Navy. But this must be done before the court has actually been dissolved, or before it has adjourned without day, which is to all practical purposes the dissolution of a court-martial. (6 Op. Att'y. Gen., 200.)

Where a court-martial, having passed sentence, adjourned without day, no question exists as to the legality of an order subsequently issued by the Secretary of War, who convened the court, ordering it to reassemble to revise its sentence, it being presumed that such adjournment was the act of the court only, which had no lawful power to terminate its own existence, and which adjourned without day to await the action of the department. If there had been some order of the Secretary of War, in whatever form of words, to operate as a dissolution of the court, then it would be necessary to say that it could not be convened anew as the same court, and of course could not take up the proceedings for reconsideration. But the present appears to have been the case of a court, not then dissolved by the appointing power, and of course subject to be assembled for revising its record, as it was by the order of the department. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 338.)

The power of the Secretary of War, or the Secretary of the Navy, or other lawful authority, to send back a case to the court-martial for revisal, is called a singularity in jurisprudence. On the other hand, its apparent singularity arises from not duly regarding the nature of a court-martial and its relation to the approving power. Unless the sentence of a court-martial has been approved or disapproved, it still remains sub judice. In fact, the analogy of a court-martial is that of a jury in the trial of a civil case, the approving power in the former occupying the relation of the judge in the latter. The judge remands the case to the jury for further consideration. The verdict must be accepted by the judge and judgment rendered accordingly, before the verdict can have its complete execution and effect, whether of conviction or acquittal. So in the corresponding case it must be with the proceedings of a court-martial as respects the approving power. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 200, 206.)

Revisal by a court-martial is not a case of new trial. A new trial is a rehearing of the case. A court-martial on revisal does not rehear the case; it only reconsiders the record for the purpose of correcting or modifying any conclusions thereon. The true analogy of such a revisal, to take an example from the practice of civil courts, is the case of a jury sent out by the court to reconsider its verdict. Such is the whole current of authorities as well in the United States as in Great Britain. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 200.)

If the jury, through mistake or evident partiality, deliver an improper or an informal or insensible verdict, they may be directed by the court to reconsider it and remanded for that purpose; but it is unheard of that after the dismissal of the jury and the adjournment of the court without day the judge shall at a subsequent time reassemble the jurors and call upon them to revise their verdict. This doctrine, which is reasonable in itself, must be applied to the question of revisal by courts-martial. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 200.)

It is doubtful if the approving power in this country may send a court-martial back for revision any number of times. By law in England before the Revolution it was enacted that a revisal shall be ordered only once, and it is the general rule that English statutes passed before the Revolution and in amendment of the common law are to be assumed as part of the common law of the colonies. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 200, 203, 204.)

The power of revisal is one which involves much contingent delay and consequent hardship to the officer on trial, and therefore is not one to be favored, or at least not to be maintained in violation of any principle of general right and justice appertaining to the government of the Army or Navy. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 200, 208.)

Where the sentence of a court-martial was returned by the Secretary of the Navy for revision, and a new and more severe sentence substituted by the court, which latter sentence was mitigated by the President, and it was thereafter contended, on behalf of the accused, that the proceedings in revision were null and void and that the first sentence only should be executed: Held, that if the proceedings in revision were void, then all which went before is void; because the first sentence of the court has never been approved, and it is too late now to do it, the President having in the meantime remitted and pardoned so much of the second sentence as remained unexecuted. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 200, 203.)

The officer convening a naval court-martial has authority to send back to the court the record of its proceedings in any trial, with the finding and sentence, for the reconsideration of such court as to revision of the sentence; and the court is authorized to take up the case and revise it, notwithstanding that it has in the meantime proceeded with another trial, and notwithstanding that one member of the court who participated in the original sentence had been detached during the succeeding trial and resumed his seat to participate in the revision of the original sentence; the substituted member, who took his place during the second case, withdrawing and not participating in the revision of the original sentence. (In re Reed, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11636.)

Where, pursuant to regulations, a general court-martial is duly ordered, the officer clothed with the reviewing authority may, before it is dissolved, direct it to reconsider its proceedings and sentence; and if it, upon being reconvened, renders a more severe sentence, which he approves, such sentence can not be collaterally impeached for mere errors or irregularities, if any such were committed by the court while acting within the sphere of its authority. (Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S., 13.)

A naval court-martial which has returned its proceedings to the Secretary of the Navy and been adjourned by him until further order may be reconvened by him to reconsider those proceedings. (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167.)

The action of the President in twice returning the proceedings of a court-martial convened by him, urging a more severe sentence, was authorized by law; and a sentence made after such action and in consequence of it was valid. (Swain v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553, 564.)

As to absence of members on revision, see note to article 46, A. G. N.

Court reconvening of its own motion for revision of sentence.—Courts-martial have power to reconsider any judgment and sentence rendered by them, during the term or sitting, and to change the judgment and sentence, even to death, where the former imposed only imprisonment. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 296.)

In this case the court sentenced the accused to confinement at hard labor with a ball and chain attached to his leg for the remaining term of his enlistment, etc.; and having adjourned until the ensuing day, at the suggestion of one of the members of the court the sentence in the case was reconsidered, and after due deliberation the court substituted the sentence that he, the accused, "be shot to death." (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 296.)

The term of a court-martial continues from the time of its assemblage until its adjournment sine die. A general court-martial convened for general purposes, that is, for the trial of such prisoners as may be brought before it, continues a court with full powers while it has any business to do, of which it alone is the judge; and while it does so continue a court, its power of judicial deliberation and decision over all the subjects which may have been brought before it is as full on the last day of its sittings as on any preceding day. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 296.)

According to the authorities on military law, the court is not dissolved even by its own adjournment sine die; but can be finally dissolved only by the authority of the officer who called it, being, until such dissolution, subject to be reconvened by his order to reconsider the opinion they have expressed. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 296.)

Dismissal; acting master's mate.—An acting master's mate is not a warrant officer of the Navy. A sentence dismissing him from the service by a court-martial convened by the commander of a fleet may be lawfully executed on the confirmation of the officer ordering the court. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 251.)

Reduction of officer to rating of seaman.—It is deemed advisable, as a matter of policy, although not specifically required by statute, to submit to the President for confirmation the sentence of a general court-martial reducing a warrant officer to the rating of ordinary seaman (now seaman, second class), inasmuch as such sentence deprives the accused of his position as a warrant officer in the Navy. (Navy Dig., 1916, p. 517; C. M. O. 11-1916; C. M. O. 185-1919; see art. 9, A. G. N.)

Promulgation of sentence.—The promulgation of the sentence of a court-martial does not affect the validity of the sentence, which becomes final and operative when approved by proper authority. (Lyon v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 30.)

The promulgation of the sentence of a court-martial is for the information of the public, and particularly for the information of the military arm of the Government. (Lyon v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 30.)

If promulgation were essential, the lapse of time after approval would not operate either to nullify or modify the sentence, but would relate back and make effective such proceedings. (Lyon v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 30.)

Judgment of court-martial as to law and facts.—The court which hears the witnesses is best qualified to scrutinize and balance their testimony, possessing as it does the advantage of personal contact and observation so essential in reaching a just conclusion from lengthy and conflicting statements. (18 Op. Atty. Gen., 113, 119.)

It is improper for the revising authority to make any decision in regard to the effect of a certain act of Congress in cases where the record is defective. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 545. In this case the question was presented as to the effect of the law contained in sec. 1422, R. S., as applied to one who enlisted prior to the date thereof, and who was charged with disobedience of orders committed after the date his enlistment would have expired except for said act. See note to sec. 1422.)

When charges have been referred to a general court-martial which they have jurisdiction to try, the questions of what finding should be had upon them, whether the accused should be found guilty and sentenced to punishment, or whether for want of satisfactory proof or by reason of special circumstances attending it he is entitled by law to an acquittal and exemption from punishment, are questions to be disposed of by the court according to their judgment, acting under the solemn sanction of their oaths and obligations. In this respect their power is full. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 410, 412.)

In the absence of any such error of the court in the admission or rejection of testimony as would work or was liable to work injustice to the accused, there is no reason on these grounds to disturb the findings of the court. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 589.)

Of questions not depending upon the construction of statutes, but upon unwritten military law or usage, within the jurisdiction of courts-martial, military or naval officers, from their training and experience in the service, are more competent judges than the courts of common law. (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167, 178.)

See below, under "Jurisdiction of civil courts"; and see note to article 42, A. G. N., under "Admissibility of evidence; decision of court-martial."

Objections to charges and specifications.—An objection to the charges and specifications on technical grounds should be promptly taken by the accused, and comes too late after he proceeded to trial without objection and permitted the court to enter on an investigation into all the different specifications and himself brought forward his defense as to each of them. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 589, 595.)

Irregularities and fatal defects.—It is a vain conceit that because the proceedings are irregular, and fatally irregular (if the exception be taken in proper time), therefore the judgment once suffered to be entered up is void. There are many things in the summoning and constitution of juries and in the conduct of a trial that make the verdict void; yet if advantage be not taken of them by motion in arrest of judgment, no writ of error lies even where there is a competent court of errors. And it is very proper it should be so; the repose of society, the putting an end to controversy and litigation, are more desirable than mere accuracy of procedure, or even the justice of a particular case, not to mention that acquiescence implies consent, and consent cures error. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 170.)

Commodore Barron was tried by a competent court-martial whose sentence was approved by the President. After the lapse of 35 years it is impossible for the executive department to look into the particulars of the trial, on an allegation that it was irregular. If there were irregularities in the trial, they should have been alleged before the sentence was confirmed. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 170. In this case the question was attempted to be raised whether the fact that witnesses were sworn by the judge advocate and not by the president of the court, there being no objection at the time, vitiated the proceedings.)

If a contrary precedent were set, the Navy Department and the office of the Attorney General would be turned into a permanent court of errors, to try over all the cases disposed of since the foundation of the Government. And if the present Secretary of the Navy can set aside a judgment of his predecessors, why shall not any of his successors for 50 years to come set aside his? (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 170.)

Even though it appear that the proceedings of a naval court-martial were exceedingly irregular, and the sentence peculiarly harsh and severe, after the sentence of dismissal has been pronounced, approved, and carried into effect there is no means of reviewing it; the judgment is thereafter irreversible, but the effect of the judgment may be removed in the exercise of the appointing power. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 274.)

Where an officer was dismissed from the service pursuant to the sentence of a court-martial, which sentence was null and void because the court was illegally constituted, held that as it was competent to the President to perform this act independently of the sentence, it will be necessary, in order to restore him to his rights, to nominate him to the Senate with the condition that he shall take rank from the date of his former commission. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 414; see also Brown v. Root, 18 App. D. C., 239; compare U. S. v. Brown, 206 U. S., 240.)

After the sentence of an officer of the Army by a court having jurisdiction has been approved and executed by one President, it can not be revised by his successor. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 506.)

In the consideration of all questions of this class, the distinction to be remembered is that of things void and things voidable; null for want of jurisdiction, or erroneous only, for misjudgment of a tribunal having competent jurisdiction to hear and determine the case. If the court had not lawful cognizance of the matter, its sentence is void, it gives no right, it bars no right, it binds nobody, and all concerned in executing such a sentence are trespassers. If the court has jurisdiction, it may rightfully decide every question which occurs in the case, and the errors and irregularities, if any exist, are to be corrected by some direct proceeding before the same court to set them aside, or in an appellate court. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 506.)

If the court erroneously overruled a plea in bar of trial based on the statute of limitations, it would be an erroneous decision only, not a void judgment, and the error would be subject to be reviewed and corrected only by the commanding general. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 506.)

Where an officer of the Navy was tried by court-martial and sentenced to dismissal, which sentence was approved by the President of the United States and duly carried into effect by the Secretary of the Navy, held that the dismissal is a consummated fact, whether the sentence was lawful or not, and if the party be restored to the service it can only be by reappointment to the Senate and reappointment. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 98.)

In the present stage of the case, no question on the proceedings of the court can be raised save that of nullity of the sentence for want of jurisdiction. Such a question is one of pure and strict legal right in the consideration of which no collateral element can by possibility enter, whether of regard or of disregard for the dismissed officer. It must be dealt with in the same spirit as the solution of a problem of arithmetic or algebra. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 98.)

There is a multitude of irregularities in the proceedings of courts, whether martial or others, which a party may avail himself of to his advantage at the proper time. Where the accused did not see fit to make any question of this nature at the proper time, it is too late for him to do so after the sentence has been duly confirmed and executed. (7 Op. Atty. Gen., 98.)

It is well settled that it is beyond the power of the President to annul or revoke the sentence of a court-martial which has been approved and executed under a former President, unless the record should show that from some cause the proceedings are absolutely null and void. The rule is not confined to cases in which by the articles of war the sentence of the court is required to be approved by the President. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 64.)

If any irregularities occurred in the proceedings of the court-martial, it was the right and duty of the accused to have taken exception to them before they were approved and confirmed by the commanding officer. Having neglected to do so, he has no redress except by an appeal to the executive clemency. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 64.)

The accused being a soldier in the United States service, and therefore amenable to a court-martial, and the court having been convened by the proper authority and composed of the proper officers, duly qualified to act, and therefore being lawfully constituted and having undoubted jurisdiction of the case, it is impossible that any subsequent irregularities could render their action a nullity when it was confirmed without objection by the commanding officer and carried into execution by the President of the United States. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 64.)

The sentence of a military commission in a case in which it was without jurisdiction was null and void; the moneys and effects of the accused, seized by officers of the Government in execution of so much of the sentence as imposed a fine of $10,000, should be restored to the accused, unless they have been covered into the Treasury of the United States and are thus beyond the control of the executive. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 128.)

There must be jurisdiction to give the judgment rendered as well as to hear and determine the cause. If a magistrate having authority to fine for assault and battery should sentence the offender to be imprisoned in the penitentiary or to suffer the punishment prescribed for homicide, his judgement would be as much a nullity as if the preliminary jurisdiction to hear and determine had not existed. Every act of a court beyond its jurisdiction is void. (Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S., 13, 23.)

Where there is no law authorizing the court-martial, or where the statutory conditions as to the constitution or jurisdiction of the court are not observed, there is no tribunal authorized by law to render the judgment. In such case the sentence of the court is absolutely void. (Keyes v. U. S., 109 U. S., 336, 340.)

It is not always very easy to determine what matters go to the jurisdiction of a court, so as to make its action when erroneous a nullity; but the general rule is that when the court has jurisdiction by law of the offense charged and of the party who is charged, its judgments are not nullities. (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 390.)

An erroneous designation of the place for executing a sentence of imprisonment imposed by a court-martial does not go to the jurisdiction to sentence, and does not entitle the accused to his discharge on habeas corpus; but he should be retained in custody for a new designation. (Givens v. Zerbst, 255 U. S., 11, affirming ex parte Givins, 262 Fed. Rep., 702.)

Presence of the judge advocate in closed court: See note to article 45, A. G. N.

For other cases, see below under "Jurisdiction of civil courts"; and see notes to Articles 38, 39, 40, 42, 46, 47, and 52, A. G. N.

New trial.—The President of the United States has the power to order a new trial before a court-martial where, in his opinion, the court erred on the first trial in excluding proper testimony and where the party accused desired such new trial. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 233.)

The plea of autre fois acquit, or convict, is the privilege of the accused, which he may use or waive at pleasure; if he does not choose to use it, courts-martial will not take notice of it so as to bar a trial. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 233.)

Where the proceedings of a naval court-martial were irregular and void, because the judge advocate was not sworn, the accused may be legally and constitutionally put upon another trial; but not before the same officers who constituted the first court. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 396; compare note to art. 40, A. G. N.)

He has not been tried by a tribunal legally competent to try and punish him. In our civil tribunals, if a party be convicted upon an insufficient indictment and judgment be arrested, the accused may be again put upon his trial; and this is not considered as an infraction of that injunction of the Constitution which forbids that any person be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 396.)

There can not be a new trial at the instance of the Government, although there may be a new trial by court-martial on application of the party. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 200, 205.)

See note to Constitution, fifth amendment, under "II. Protection against double jeopardy."

Court-martial bar to trial in civil court.—

Where the accused was indicted in a civil court of the United States, duly arrested and brought into court to answer said indictment; whereupon, before his arraignment, at the request of the Department of Justice he was delivered to the military authorities to be dealt with in accordance with military law; and upon his trial by Army court-martial he was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for 15 years, but the reviewing authority took the following action: "The sentence is disapproved. Private Block will be released from confinement and restored to duty"; and he was thereafter arraigned in the civil court upon the pending indictment and pleaded former acquittal, setting forth the proceedings which had been had by the court-martial and the action of the reviewing authority above quoted: Held, that the plea sets forth a good defense and that the proceedings before the court-martial constitute a bar to his prosecution in the civil courts of the United States upon a charge based upon the same act. (U. S. v. Block, 262 Fed. Rep., 205. See note above, under "Effect of approval or disapproval.")

The judgment of a court-martial having jurisdiction to try an officer or soldier for a crime is entitled to the same finality and conclusiveness as to the issues involved as the judgment of a civil court in cases within its jurisdiction is entitled to. (Grafton v. U. S., 206 U. S., 333, holding that a civil court of the Philippine Islands did not have jurisdiction to try a soldier for an offense for which he had previously been tried by Army court-martial.)

See note to Constitution, fifth amendment, under "II. Protection against double jeopardy."

Jurisdiction of Congress to review courts-martial.—The Attorney General ought not to express an official opinion to the Committee on Military Affairs on the question whether Congress has power to review the sentence of a general court-martial. It is for Congress itself to consider and decide upon the extent of its power over a matter of this description; and it would hardly be deemed to be within the legitimate scope of the duties of the Attorney General, who is a subordinate officer of the executive department, to attempt to mark out the limits of the legislative power. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 499.)

See note to Constitution, Article I, section 7, clause 2, under "Veto of bill authorizing restoration of dismissed officer," and "Veto of bill to annul the finding and sentence of a court-martial."

Competency as witness after conviction by court-martial.—Conviction of a military offense by court-martial does not make a witness incompetent to testify in the civil courts in a criminal prosecution. (Reed v. U. S., 252 Fed. Rep., 21.)

Jurisdiction of civil courts.—The power to hear and determine a cause is jurisdiction. There is a distinction between jurisdiction and its exercise. When it appears on the return to a writ of habeas corpus that a petitioner is held for trial by a naval court-martial for offenses charged to have been committed while in the naval service, the only questions to be determined by the civil court are, whether the court-martial has jurisdiction to try the petitioner for the offenses charged, and is it proceeding regularly in the exercise of that jurisdiction. (In re Bogart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1596.)

A court-martial is a lawful tribunal, existing under the Constitution and acts of Congress, and is supreme while acting within the sphere of its jurisdiction. (In re Bogart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1596.)

A former conviction and the statute of limitations are matters of defense on the merits, which must be investigated in the exercise of jurisdiction, and not facts upon which the jurisdiction to hear and determine the charge depends. These matters can not be inquired into on a petition for discharge on habeas corpus. (In re Bogart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1596.)

Civil courts have no jurisdiction to interfere with the military tribunals while proceeding regularly in the exercise of their jurisdiction to try parties accused of desertion from the Army. (In re White, 17 Fed. Rep., 723.)

Courts-martial are lawful tribunals, existing by the same authority as civil courts of the United States, having the same plenary jurisdiction in offenses by the law military as the latter courts have in controversies within their cognizance; and in their special and more limited sphere are entitled to as untrammelled exercise of their powers. (In re Davison, 21 Fed. Rep., 618.)

Provided a court-martial has jurisdiction to hear and determine and to render the particular judgment or sentence imposed, however erroneous the proceedings may be, they can not be reviewed collaterally by the civil courts upon habeas corpus. (In re Davison, 21 Fed. Rep., 618.)

The military courts have jurisdiction to try all military offenses committed by parties enlisted in the military service of the United States, among which is the offense of desertion. The civil courts have no authority to review, control, or in any manner interfere with the action of the military tribunals while regularly engaged in the exercise of their appropriate jurisdiction. (In re Zimmerman, 30 Fed. Rep., 176.)

In habeas corpus proceedings to review the sentence of a naval court-martial, the only questions which can be inquired into are as to the jurisdiction of the court over the person of the accused and the offense charged, and whether it acted within the scope of its lawful powers. (In re Crain, 84 Fed. Rep., 788.)

It has been repeatedly held that where the charge against a person tried in a military court is within the jurisdiction of the court, and is authorized by Army or Navy regulations, that the manner of setting out the offense is a matter of pleading rather than of jurisdiction; that it is for the court having such jurisdiction to decide upon the validity of the pleadings necessary to bring that charge before the court; that the only question before the civil court is whether or not the military court had the right to try and determine the case; that the jurisdiction of the trial court can not depend upon its decision on the merits of the case, but upon the court's right to hear and decide it; that where a military or naval tribunal has the right to try the cause, even though a civil court had the concurrent right, the latter can not enter upon the consideration of the evidence adduced before the court-martial or of the question whether the accused was guilty of the offense over which the military court has jurisdiction; that if the military court had jurisdiction to impose sentence authorized by the regulations of the Army or Navy, the civil court can not pass upon the severity of such sentence; that errors in law, however numerous, committed by the trial court in a cause within its jurisdiction, can be revised only by appeal or writ of error in the court exercising supervisory jurisdiction; that it is only where the trial court is without jurisdiction of the person or the cause, and the party is subjected to illegal imprisonment, that a writ of habeas corpus may be invoked and the party discharged from imprisonment; that civil courts are not courts of error to review the proceedings and sentence of a court-martial where such court-martial has jurisdiction of the offense and of the person of the accused, has complied with the statutory requirements governing the proceedings of the court, and acts within the scope of its lawful powers. (Ex parte Dickey, 204 Fed. Rep., 322, 325.)

The fact that power, wherever lodged, may be abused, furnishes no solid objection against its exercise, and no just inference against its existence. (In re Bogart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,596.)

The Secretary of the Navy is the final reviewing authority provided by law to act upon records of courts-martial in cases which do not extend to the loss of life or to the dismissal of a commissioned or warrant officer; and where he approved a sentence of imprisonment imposed upon an enlisted man by a court-martial convened by the commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet, who had also approved such sentence, the sentence could not be revised by the civil courts. (Ex parte Dickey, 204 Fed. Rep., 322, 326.)

The powers conferred on Congress by the Constitution to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, and the power to create certain Federal courts, are independent of each other, and hence the determination of naval courts-martial within their jurisdiction are not reviewable by the civil courts. (Ex parte Dickey, 204 Fed. Rep., 322.)

Civil courts have no appellate jurisdiction to review the proceedings of courts-martial; and will not interfere with the judgments of courts-martial in habeas corpus proceedings if it appears that they have jurisdiction of the person and subject matter. Errors of procedure in military courts can be corrected only by the proper military authorities. (Ex parte Tucker, 212 Fed. Rep., 569.)

A civil court has no power to interfere with the conduct of a court-martial except where that court has exceeded its jurisdiction, and if it originally had jurisdiction it must be shown that at some point in the proceedings, under its governing law, it lost such jurisdiction. (U. S. v. Hunt, 254 Fed. Rep., 365.)

The suing out and service of a writ of habeas corpus by an Army officer after his trial by court-martial but before the service upon him of the order promulgating the sentence, involving dismissal, held, not to oust the court-martial of jurisdiction nor to affect the validity of the order subsequently served. (U. S. v. Barry, 260 Fed. Rep., 291.)

Where the offense charged is trivial, and the punishment is likewise trivial, a civil court should not be called upon to examine the legality of the sentence of a court-martial; and when so called upon is not required by substantial justice to apply a stricter rule than that which prevails in ordinary criminal cases. (Weirman v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cls., 236.)

Undoubtedly errors are committed by courts-martial which a civil tribunal would regard as sufficient ground for a reversal of their judgments if it were sitting as an appellate court. But there is always this radical difference between an appellate court sitting for the correction of errors and a civil court into which the record of a court-martial is collateral—in the former there is not a failure of justice; the appellate court may reverse a judgment or prescribe another or award a new trial; in the latter the court must either give full effect to the sentence or pronounce it wholly void. (Swaim v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 217; affirmed, 165 U. S., 553.)

Where a court-martial had not jurisdiction over the subject matter, or having jurisdiction has failed to observe the rules prescribed by the statute for its exercise, all of the parties to such illegal trial are trespassers upon a party aggrieved by it, and he may recover damages from them on a proper suit in a civil court by the verdict of a jury. (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65, 81.)

If a court-martial has no jurisdiction over the subject matter of the charge it has been convened to try, or shall inflict a punishment forbidden by law, though its sentence shall be approved by the officers having a revisory power over it, civil courts may, on an action by a party aggrieved by it, inquire into the want of the court's jurisdiction and give him redress. (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65, 82.)

Persons belonging to the Army and Navy are not subject to illegal or irresponsible courts-martial when the law for convening them and directing their proceedings of organization and for trial have been disregarded. In such cases everything which may be done is void, not voidable but void; and civil courts have never failed upon a proper suit to give a party redress who has been injured by a void process or void judgment. (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65, 81.)

It is only where a court has no jurisdiction over the subject matter, or having such jurisdiction is bound to adopt certain rules in its proceedings from which it deviates, whereby the proceedings are rendered coram non iudice, that an action will lie against the officer who executes its judgment. (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65.)

When we speak of proceedings in a cause, or for the organization of the court and for trials, we do not mean mere irregularity in practice on the trial or any mistaken rulings in respect to evidence or law, but of a disregard of the essentials required by the statute under which the court has been convened to try and to punish an offender for an imputed violation of the law. (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65, 81.)

The law is that an officer executing the process of a court which has acted without jurisdiction over the subject matter becomes a trespasser, it being better for the peace of society and its interests of every kind that the responsibility of determining whether the court has or has not jurisdiction should be upon the officer than that a void writ should be executed. But a United States marshal is not answerable for his mere ministerial execution of a sentence which a naval court-martial has passed in a case within its jurisdiction, which the Secretary of the Navy has approved, and which the President of the United States, as constitutional commander in chief, has directed the marshal to execute by receiving the prisoner from the naval officer then having him in custody to transfer him to the penitentiary in accordance with the sentence which the court had passed upon him. (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65, 80.)

An acquittal of the commanding officer by a court-martial, when tried for the same acts, by order of the Government, is not admissible evidence in a civil suit by an enlisted man against the commanding officer for damages, as the parties are not the same, although it would be a bar to subsequent indictment in courts of common law for the same offense, the parties then being the same. (Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 89. See note to art. 24, A. G. N.)

If the enlistment of a person in the Navy was void, then there is no right to discipline him at any period of his service, even though he was undertaking to escape it. If his enlistment was void, which means that he was never in the service, then any act by any person claiming to be in authority over him, whereby any of the natural rights of the alleged enlisted man were denied him, as, for instance, if he had been imprisoned for an hour or a day or a week, because of some infraction of the rules, will support a civil action for damages in his favor against the particular individuals who were responsible for such punishment. No rule of law can be cited that will ever protect a public officer from the consequences of any act which he may imagine he is performing as a public officer, but which involves an exercise of authority by him as to some person over whom he is absolutely without authority. (Ex parte Rock, 171 Fed. Rep., 240, 242.)

With the sentences of courts-martial which have been convened regularly, and have proceeded legally, and by which punishments are directed, not forbidden by law, or which are according to the laws and customs of the sea, civil courts have nothing to do, nor are they in any way alterable by them. If it were otherwise, the civil courts would virtually administer the rules and articles of war, irrespective of those to whom the duty and obligation has been confided by the laws of the United States, from whose decisions no appeal or jurisdiction of any kind has been given to the civil magistrate or civil courts. (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65, 82.)

When the sentence of a naval court-martial in a case within its jurisdiction, and in which it has proceeded regularly, is confirmed by the proper authority, it becomes final and must be executed unless the President pardons the offender. It is in the nature of an appeal to the officer ordering the court, who is made by law the arbiter of the legality and propriety of the court's sentence. When confirmed it is altogether beyond the jurisdiction or inquiry of any civil tribunal whatever, unless it shall be in a case in which the court had not jurisdiction over the subject matter or charge, or one in which, having jurisdiction over the subject matter, it has failed to observe the rules prescribed by the statute for its exercise. (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65, 81.)

Congress has power under the Constitution to provide for the trial and punishment of military and naval offenses in the manner then and now practised by civilized nations; and the power to do so is given without any connection between it and the third article of the Constitution defining the judicial power of the United States. The two powers are entirely independent of each other. (Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How., 65, 79.)

Whatever was done by the court-martial that it could do under any circumstances, we must presume was properly done. If error was committed in the rightful exercise of authority, the civil courts can not correct it. (Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S., 13, 23.)

The court-martial had jurisdiction over the person and the case. It is the organism provided by law and clothed with the duty of administering justice in this class of cases. Having had such jurisdiction, its proceedings can not be collaterally impeached for any mere error or irregularity, if there were such committed within the sphere of its authority. Its judgment when approved as required rest on the same basis and are surrounded by the same considerations which give conclusiveness to the judgments of other legal tribunals, including as well the lowest as the highest, under like circumstances. The exercise of discretion within authorized limits can not be assigned for error and made the subject of review by an appellate court. (Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S., 13, 23.)

Whether or not the Supreme Court has jurisdiction to issue a writ of habeas corpus in the case of an enlisted man of the Army serving sentence of general court-martial, not decided; but held that, if a writ may issue, there can be no discharge under it if the court-martial had jurisdiction to try the offender for the offense with which he was charged, and the sentence was one which the court could, under the law, pronounce. (Ex parte Mason, 105 U. S., 696, 697.)

Where a court-martial has cognizance of the charges made, and has jurisdiction of the person of the accused, its sentence is valid when questioned collaterally, although irregularities or errors are alleged to have occurred in its proceedings in that the prosecutor was a member of the court and a witness on the trial. No opinion expressed as to the propriety of such proceedings. (Keyes v. U. S., 109 U. S., 336.)

Courts-martial form no part of the judicial system of the United States, and their proceedings within the limits of their jurisdiction can not be controlled or revised by the civil courts. (Kurtz v. Moffitt, 115 U. S., 487, 500.)

The Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized the general rule that the acts of a court-martial within the scope of its jurisdiction and duty can not be controlled or reviewed in the civil courts by writ of prohibition or otherwise. (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167, 177.)

Whether the supreme court of the District of Columbia has power to issue a writ of prohibition to a court-martial, quaere. (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167.)

A writ of prohibition does not lie to the Secretary of the Navy convening a naval court-martial. Being an executive officer and not a member of the court-martial sought to be prohibited, it is quite clear that his acts can not be the subject of a writ of prohibition. (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167.)

A writ of prohibition does not lie to a court-martial to correct mistakes in the decision of questions of law or of fact within its jurisdiction. (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167.)

A court-martial is regarded as one of those inferior courts of limited jurisdiction whose judgment may be questioned collaterally. (Runkle v. U. S., 122 U. S., 543, 556, citing Wise v. Withers, 3 Cranch, 331, and ex parte Watkins, 3 Pet., 193, 207.)

Civil courts may inquire, under a writ of habeas corpus, into the jurisdiction of the court-martial over the party condemned, but can not inquire into or correct errors in its proceedings. (In re Grimley, 137 U. S., 147, 150.)

The single inquiry, the test, is jurisdiction. That being established, the habeas corpus must be denied and the petitioner remanded; that wanting, it must be sustained and the petitioner discharged. (In re Grimley, 137 U. S., 147, 150.)

The decision and sentence of a court-martial having jurisdiction of the person accused and of the offense charged, and acting within the scope of its lawful powers, can not be reviewed or set aside by writ of habeas corpus. (Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S., 109.)

When a court-martial has jurisdiction of the person accused and the offense charged, and acts within the scope of its lawful powers, its proceedings and sentence can not be set aside by the civil courts. If, as has been strenuously urged, the officer was harshly dealt with in this case, and a sentence of undue severity was finally imposed, the remedy must be found elsewhere than in the courts of law. (Swaim v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553, 566.)

In this case it was urged that the charge was not established by the facts, and that the sentence should be held void by a civil court in an action by the accused for the pay of his office. If this position were well taken it would throw upon the civil courts the duty of considering all the evidence adduced before courts-martial and of determining whether the accused was guilty of conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline in violation of the articles of war. But this is the very matter that falls within the province of courts-martial and in respect to which their conclusions can not be controlled or reviewed by the civil courts. Of questions not depending upon the construction of statutes, but upon unwritten military law or usage within the jurisdiction of courts-martial, military or naval officers from their training and experience in the service are more competent judges than the courts of common law. (Swaim v. U. S., 165 U. S., 553, 561, citing Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 178, and U. S. v. Fletcher, 148 U. S., 84.)

Courts-martial are lawful tribunals, with authority to finally determine any case over which they have jurisdiction, and their proceedings, when confirmed as provided, are not open to review by the civil tribunals, except for the purpose of ascertaining whether the military court had jurisdiction of the person and subject matter and whether, though having such jurisdiction, it had exceeded its powers in the sentence pronounced. (Carter v. Roberts, 177 U. S., 496.)

Where jurisdiction over the person is conceded, any inquiry into the innocence or guilt of the accused, on the ground that the evidence affirmatively showed that no crime whatever had been committed, is not permissible. (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 381.)

The question whether a person on trial before a civil court upon a criminal charge is thereby twice put in jeopardy for the same offense has been held to be a question for determination by the court, whose decision can not be reviewed on habeas corpus. It is difficult to see why the sentences of courts-martial, courts authorized by law in the enforcement of a system of government for a separate community recognized by the Constitution, are not within the rule. Its application would seem to be essential to the maintenance of that discipline which renders the Army efficient in war and morally progressive in peace, and which is secured by the military code and the decisions of military courts. (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 387-390.)

"We must not be understood by anything we have said as intending in the slightest degree to impair the salutary rule that the sentences of courts-martial, when affirmed by the military tribunal of last resort, can not be revised by the civil courts save only when void because of an absolute want of power, and not merely voidable because of the defective exercise of power possessed." (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 401.)

The proceedings of the court-martial were conducted with a substantial, if not a literal, conformity to the law, and we must presume, at least, that there was sufficient evidence to support the sentence. (Bishop v. U. S., 197 U. S., 334, 342.)

Civil courts are not courts of error to review sentences of legally organized courts-martial having jurisdiction of the person of the accused and of the offense. (Mullan v. U. S., 212 U. S., 516.)

What is due process of law depends upon the circumstances. To those in the military or naval service of the United States, military law is due process; and the decision of a military tribunal acting within the scope of its lawful powers can not be reviewed or set aside by the courts. (Reaves v. Ainsworth, 219 U. S., 296, relating to examining boards for promotion.)

The judgment of a court-martial is open to collateral attack for want of jurisdiction, and to sustain such a judgment it must appear that the facts essential to the jurisdiction existed when the jurisdiction was exercised. (Givens v. Zerbst, 255 U. S., 11, affirming ex parte Givins, 262 Fed. Rep., 702.)

For other cases, see note to Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 14; and note to section 753, Revised Statutes.

Art. 54. [Remission and mitigation of sentence.] Every officer who is authorized to convene a general court-martial shall have power, on revision of its proceedings, to remit or mitigate, but not to commute, the sentence of any such court which he is authorized to approve and confirm.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 20, v. 12, p. 605.)

"The Secretary of the Navy may set aside the proceedings or remit or mitigate, in whole or in part, the sentence imposed by any naval court-martial convened by his order or by that of any officer of the Navy or Marine Corps." (Act Feb. 16, 1909, sec. 9, 35 Stat., 621.)

Officers authorized to convene general courts-martial.—See article 38, A. G. N., and note thereto; see also note to article 53, A. G. N., under "Officer ordering the court; President and Secretary of the Navy."

Power of Secretary of the Navy.—See note to article 53, A. G. N., under "Power of Secretary of the Navy over sentences of courts-martial"; and see note to article 32, A. G. N.

Implied remission of sentence.—The honorable discharge of an officer after he has been sentenced by court-martial to forfeit a month's pay and the sentence has been approved does not remit the sentence or entitle him to recover the pay forfeited, whether or not the sentence had been promulgated prior to his discharge. (Lyon v. U. S., 48 Ct. Cls., 30.)

It would seem that a sentence of suspension from rank and pay for a definite period, or loss of numbers, would be remitted by the permanent promotion of the accused to a higher grade while still undergoing such sentence, as the sentence operates only upon his rank and pay in the grade held by him when it was adjudged. But the temporary promotion of an officer to a higher grade while under sentence would not have such effect. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 419, 424-426, explaining and modifying 4 Op. Atty. Gen., 8.)

Where an officer lost numbers pursuant to the sentence of a court-martial, and subsequently was advanced by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to the next higher grade and to his original relative position on the list, because of "eminent and conspicuous conduct in battle," held that this restoration to his former relative position had the effect of putting an end to the punishment, and a pardon subsequently issued by the President did not operate to advance the officer to a higher relative position than that which he had occupied prior to the sentence of the court. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 606.)

See cases noted under Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 1, under "III. Power to pardon offenses against the United States," subheading, "Constructive pardon."

Reconsideration of action mitigating sentence.—Where the President on March 3, 1869, reviewed the proceedings of a court martial on appeal by the accused, and thereupon issued an order to the Secretary of War as follows: "Let the disabilities be removed and an honorable discharge granted"; and on March 13, 1869, the foregoing order was rescinded by the President; held, that the said order being executory and in its nature revoca-ble, and having remained unexecuted at the time of its rescission, was completely annulled thereby. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 436.)

Where a sentence as mitigated was put in execution by a former administration, by which all questions in the premises must be presumed to have then been fully considered, advised that this action be now treated as a final determination of the matter as regards the status of the accused officer. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 463.)

Where the mitigation of a sentence was obtained by fraud of the accused, who was discharged from the service pursuant to the mitigated sentence, such discharge may be revoked and the accused required to resume his former status as a court-martial prisoner. (28 Op. Atty. Gen., 170.)

Sentence which officer not authorized to confirm.—This article obviously extends only to such sentences as the convening officer is authorized to approve and confirm and has no application where the punishment of dismissal is imposed. (Bishop v. U. S., 197 U. S., 334, 341.)

A lieutenant of marines on service with the Army in Mexico was sentenced to be cashiered by a court-martial held there; the general in chief, after approving the sentence, directed that it be commuted to 12 months' suspension from rank, command, and emoluments; the proceedings of the court-martial and the order of the general in chief thereunder had not been submitted to or acted upon by the President of the United States. The said officer continued in the service, in effect under suspension, until he, with other officers, was displaced by the President, not upon the above-mentioned sentence of the court, but in virtue of the act of Congress restoring the peace establishment of the Marine Corps. Held, that under the express provisions of the articles of war the commanding general in the field did not possess power to commute the sentence of cashiering, but only the power to execute the sentence or to suspend it pending determination by the President, to whom the record was in case of such suspension required to be immediately transmitted; and that, upon the facts stated, neither the sentence of cashiering nor the mitigated sentence ever took effect in this case. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 123.)

Remission of distinct part of sentence.—Where forfeiture or loss of pay is made a part of the sentence of a court-martial, in addition to confinement or suspension from duty, the former may be remitted by the proper authority, in whole or in part, without also remitting the latter. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 175.)

Form of action mitigating sentence.—An act of the President remitting part of a court-martial sentence may be authenticated in the same way in which his act confirming such sentence can be authenticated. Where partial remission is made at the time of confirmation, the two acts are in practice signified and attested together, in the same way. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 290. See note to art. 53, A. G. N., as to form of President's action confirming sentence.)

imposed is a continuing one; since it is only by the continual operation of the sentence itself that the officer is thenceforth excluded from the place in his grade to which, under the law of the service, he would otherwise be entitled by date of his commission, and made to occupy another place therein. So long as the officer is thus excluded by operation of the sentence, in other words, whilst he is still undergoing the punishment thereby imposed, the sentence may be remitted and remission of it would necessarily carry with it the restoration of the officer to his preexisting right to occupy the place in his grade corresponding with the date of his commission, he losing such opportunities for promotion as may in the meantime have occurred. (17 Op. Atty. Gen. 656.)

An officer of the Navy was sentenced "to be suspended for two years from rank and duty, on furlough pay, and to retain his present number on the list of lieutenant commanders during that time"; the sentence was approved by the Secretary of the Navy, May 3, 1889. Between May 3 and December 14, 1889, the officer lost two numbers in his grade by promotion of two officers to the grade of commander and the consequent advancement above him in the grade of lieutenant commander of two officers who had been junior to him in that grade. On December 14, 1889, the Secretary of the Navy issued the following order to the officer under suspension: "The unexecuted portion of the sentence of the general court-martial before which you were tried at the navy yard, Washington, D. C., April 15, 1889, is hereby remitted." Held, that this remission did not have the effect of advancing the officer in question ahead of the two officers who had been passed over him in the grade of lieutenant commander. While an absolute pardon might reinstate the officer sentenced, an order of the Secretary of the Navy remitting the unexecuted portion of the sentence can not produce that result. That portion of the sentence which operated to place the two officers in question above the accused had been executed before the order for remission and was therefore not affected by the terms of that order. (20 Op. Atty. Gen., 243.)

Degradation from or diminution of relative rank and position is a continuing punishment and thus subject to revision by the President. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 606.)

A lieutenant commander in the Navy was sentenced by court-martial to suspension for one year and to retain his then present number on the list of lieutenant commanders for that time. The sentence having been executed, he applied several years later to be restored to the number on said list which he thereby lost: Held, that the restoration could not be effected by the President otherwise than by pardon. The punishment imposed (loss of numbers) being a continuing one, is still subject to the pardoning power which, when exercised, would have the effect of restoring the officer to his former rank according to the date of his commission; the officer losing such opportunities for promotion as may in the meantime have occurred. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 31.)

A pardon by the President will restore an officer whose rank has been reduced by sentence of a court-martial to his former relative rank, according to the date of his commission, the officer losing such opportunities for promotion as may in the meantime have occurred. Loss of numbers is a continuing penalty, which operates from day to day so long as the officer affected is excluded from enjoying his previous status. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 547.)

Where an officer of the Army was sentenced by court-martial "to be cashiered and to be forever disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States," which sentence was duly approved and the officer dismissed, held, that the dismissal is an accomplished fact and so far the sentence is completely executed; but the disability is a continuing punishment, and in regard to that the sentence is being executed, and the latter portion of the sentence may be remitted by the pardoning power, but the former can not in any way be affected thereby. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 297.)

The promotion of an officer completely executes a sentence of loss of numbers in his grade, and a pardon issued thereafter can not restore him to his original position. (File 26261-246:1, Mar. 18, 1914; 26262-1794:1, Dec. 21, 1916; but see contra file 1208, Mar. 31, 1905. And see note above under "Implied remission of sentence.")

For other cases see note to Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 1, under "III. Power to pardon offenses against the United States"; and note to section 1441, Revised Statutes.

Action to be taken on revision of court-martial proceedings.—Officers of the naval service convening general courts-martial are not authorized to remit or mitigate the sentences imposed by such courts after having once acted thereupon. (Nav. Dig., 1916, pp. 115, 562, citing C. M. O. 17, 1910, pp. 5-6; C. M. O. 1, 1912, pp. 3-4; file 26262-1246:1, Dec. 29, 1911.)

An officer of the Army authorized to order a general court-martial has no power to pardon or mitigate the punishment adjudged by it after confirmation by him of the sentence. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 106, reversing 17 Op. Atty. Gen., 656, upon this point.)

The Constitution forbids anyone but the President to pardon those who commit such offenses. Accordingly, the articles of war should be construed as referring to the punishment adjudged by the court and as empowering the convening authority to pardon or mitigate that judgment, and not as empowering him to pardon or mitigate the punishment of an offense finally adjudged and confirmed by himself. Before he shall confirm the action of the court the article permits him to mitigate the punishment or remit it; but after the final judgment of confirmation, which is the judgment of the law, shall have conclusively established the offense and the guilt of the offender, the law gives him power neither to mitigate nor remit. It is only the punishment, and not the offense, that he may mitigate or remit. (19 Op. Atty. Gen., 106.)

See note to Constitution, Article I, section 2, clause 1, under "III. Power to pardon offenses against the United States," subheading "Power of other officers."

Discretionary action of reviewing authority.—This article shows that Congress intended that the officer who is authorized to approve and confirm the sentence of a court-martial, in revising its proceedings, should act judicially; that is, that he should exercise the discretion confided to him within the limits of the law. (11 Op. Atty. Gen., 19, 20.)

Mitigation of dismissal.—As the sentence of a naval court-martial dismissing an officer from the service can not be executed except with the approbation of the President, and as he possesses the power to revise, to pardon, and to mitigate a sentence, he may substitute a milder punishment for that decreed by the court. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 432.)

In mitigating a sentence of dismissal the President may commute it by substituting a suspension for a term of years without pay for an absolute dismissal from the service, as suspension is but an inferior degree of the same punishment. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 432.)

A dismissal is a perpetual suspension without pay, and to limit suspension without pay is to substitute an inferior degree of the same punishment; the minor is contained in the major. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 432.)

The President has ample power to mitigate the sentences of naval courts-martial by commuting sentences of dismissal from the service to suspension without pay or emoluments for a limited time. Hence an assistant surgeon in the Navy, who was sentenced to be dismissed by a naval court-martial, but whose sentence was commuted to suspension for 12 months without pay, is not entitled to pay during the period of such suspension. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 43.)

As dismissal deprives the officer of his pay forever, the suspension of his office and his pay for one year only is an inferior and milder degree of the punishment decreed by the court. Opinions of former Attorneys General are not at variance with this advice. (5 Op. Atty. Gen., 43.)

Reduction by the President of the United States of the dismissal of an officer of the Navy from the service to loss of numbers and suspension from rank and duty on one-half sea pay for five years is a mitigation of the sentence within the meaning of article 54, A. G. N. (Mullan v. U. S., 212 U. S., 516.)

Commutation of sentence.—Quaere, whether the power of mitigating a punishment includes the power of changing its species; whether it means anything more than lessening the quantity, preserving, nevertheless, the species of the punishment. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 327.)

Had the phraseology of the law been, "to remit in part, or in whole, the punishment decreed by the sentence of a court-martial," it would have restricted the President to the simple matter of mitigation, that of lessening the quantity; but a power of mitigation, in general terms, leaves the manner of performing this act of mercy to himself; and if it can be performed in no other way than by changing its species, the President has the power of adopting this form of mitigation. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 327.)

The authority of the President to mitigate the sentences of naval courts-martial, in cases where he deems the punishment unnecessarily severe, does not extend to the substitution of another punishment for that decreed by the court; he can not suspend the pay of an officer under sentence of a court-martial whose pay was not suspended by the court. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 444.)

Even though the executive may dismiss from the service without trial, or may suspend from duty by arrest, he has no power, while an officer retains his commission and is not sentenced by a court-martial to that effect, to take from him the pay which the law gives him. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 444.)

An officer of the Navy was sentenced by court-martial to be suspended from all rank and command in the Navy for and during the period of five years. The sentence did not involve loss of pay, which the court was authorized to adjudge by the Articles for the Government of the Navy. Nor did it require confirmation by the President. The President ordered that the sentence "be commuted to a suspension of six months from this date, without pay." It does not appear that this commutation of the sentence was made at the officer's request, or that the condition was accepted by the officer, who afterwards claimed pay for the period of this suspension. A pardon is a deed, to the validity of which delivery is essential, and delivery is not complete without acceptance. It is clear, then, that the President in this case did not exercise the power of pardon. Nor was his action a mitigation of the sentence under the Articles for the Government of the Navy, and the officer is entitled to pay for the period of his suspension. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 444.)

It may be conceded that there is a technical difference between the commutation of a sentence and the mitigation thereof. The first is a change of a punishment to which a person has been condemned into one less severe, substituting a less for a greater punishment by authority of law. To mitigate a sentence is to reduce or lessen the amount of the penalty or punishment. When the President otherwise confirmed the sentence from absolute discharge from the Navy to reduction in rank and duty for the period of five years on one-half sea pay, he did what in terms he undertook to do, and by the lessening of the severe penalty of dismissal from the Navy, reduced and diminished, and therefore mitigated, the sentence which he was authorized to approve and confirm against the appellant, or mitigate in his favor. (Mullan v. U. S., 212 U. S., 516.)

See note above, under "Mitigation of dismissal"; and see below, under "Mitigation of death sentence."

Power of President as reviewing authority.—The President may mitigate a sentence of a naval court-martial, under the Articles for the Government of the Navy, without invoking his power of pardon. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 327.)

The power of the President over a sentence is a power over the whole of it; and he may approve, reject, or mitigate the same at pleasure. The language of the article of war requires that, in cases extending to the dismissal of a commissioned officer, in time of peace, the whole proceedings be laid before the President "for his confirmation or disapproval, and orders on the case." The terms indicate an unlimited discretion; and when it is considered that he is by the Constitution the depository of the pardoning power, it can not be doubted that he has authority to mitigate as well as to confirm or reject the sentence of a court-martial in the exercise of the supervisory power committed to him by the articles of war. (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 286.)

The power of the President to pardon, conferred by the Constitution, is plenary; and so far as he is concerned, its repetition in the Articles for the Government of the Navy was superogatory. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 432.)

Where an officer was sentenced to dismissal from the Army, and to fine and imprisonment, the President might have exercised his constitutional power to pardon, or as the reviewing authority he might have pardoned or mitigated the punishment adjudged, except that of dismissal, although he had no power to add to the punishment. (Carter v. McLaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 387.)

Quaere, whether article 54, A. G. N., applies to the action of the president; if it be conceded that it is applicable to the President, his action in this case did in fact mitigate the previous sentence of the court-martial as approved by the Secretary of the Navy. (Mullan v. U. S., 212 U. S., 516.)

Mitigation of death sentence.—A sentence of death can not be mitigated in any other way than by changing the punishment. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 327.)

The President may so far mitigate a sentence of death pronounced by a naval court-martial as to substitute a milder punishment in its stead. This he may do under the Articles for the Government of the Navy, and without invoking his power of pardon; and since the sentence of death can be mitigated only by changing it, he has the power to substitute the milder punishment which he proposes to do. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 327.)

The power of pardoning the offense does not include the power of changing the punishment; but the power to mitigate the punishment decreed by a court-martial can not be fairly understood in any other sense than as meaning the power to substitute a milder punishment in the place of that decreed by the court-martial, in which sense it would justify the mitigation of a sentence of death to a sentence of "service and restraint for the space of one year; after which, to cause him to be drummed from the Marine Corps as a disgrace to it." (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 327.)

The exercise of the power of mitigation necessarily implies that there is substitution for a higher of an inferior punishment. A sentence of death for murder can be mitigated by substituting any punishment which the law would authorize the court to inflict for manslaughter. This is an inferior degree of the offense. The punishment substituted is not, in the nature of things, that which the court has decreed; it is one which the President substitutes. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 432, 434.)

When an officer is brought to trial and is sentenced to be punished, the executive may mitigate the severity of that punishment; but the mitigation must inflict a part of the punishment awarded by the judgment of the court, with the exception of those cases in which there is no degree, as where the whole punishment must be inflicted or no part of it can be. Such is the case with a sentence of death. (4 Op. Atty. Gen., 444.)

Art. 55. [Courts of inquiry, by whom ordered.] Courts of inquiry may be ordered by the President, the Secretary of the Navy, or the commander of a fleet or squadron.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 23, v. 12, p. 605.)

“Boards of inquiry” are to be ordered by the Secretary of the Navy in certain cases, before the dismissal of midshipmen from the Naval Academy without trial by court-martial. (Act Apr. 9, 1906, 34 Stat., 104. See note to sec. 1519, R. S.)

“Courts of inquiry may be convened by any officer of the naval service authorized by law to convene general courts-martial.” (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 586.)

See article 38, A. G. N., and note thereto, as to officers empowered to convene general courts-martial.

See section 183, Revised Statutes, as amended, and note thereto, respecting boards of investigation.

Art. 56. [Courts of inquiry, constitution of.] A court of inquiry shall consist of not more than three commissioned officers as members, and of a judge-advocate, or person officiating as such.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 23, v. 12, p. 605.)

See article 39, A. G. N., and note thereto, as to constitution of general courts-martial.

Art. 57. [Courts of inquiry, powers of.] Courts of inquiry shall have power to summon witnesses, administer oaths, and punish contempts, in the same manner as courts-martial; but they shall only state facts, and shall not give their opinion, unless expressly required so to do in the order for convening.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 23, v. 12, p. 605.)

Amendment to this article was made by act of February 16, 1909, sections 11 and 12 (35 Stat., 621, 622), relating to attendance of civilian witnesses. See note to article 42, A. G. N.

Oaths, when administered by officers of the Navy: See section 183, Revised Statutes, and laws noted thereunder.

The use of depositions before naval courts in certain cases and under certain restrictions was authorized by act of February 16, 1909, section 16 (35 Stat., 622).

Absent witness.—The court, on motion to postpone because of absent witnesses, may, as is usual in all courts, require the party making the motion to state what he expects or desires to prove, so that its materiality may be seen, and so also that the other party, if he see fit, may agree that the absent witness will so testify, and thus dispense with his attendance. In all such questions the judge advocate acts for the Government. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 335, 363.)

False swearing before court of inquiry.—See note to article 8, A. G. N., under “Scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals.”

Depositions in evidence.—See note to article 42, A. G. N.

Objects of courts of inquiry.—The object of a court of inquiry is not merely to exculpate some officer, the individual subject of the inquiry, but to ascertain facts for the information of superior authority. The subject of inquiry may be so broad and comprehensive in scope, and so general in its nature, that its relation to individuals becomes a matter of secondary consideration. It may involve matters of public welfare and of the universal good of the service, of which personal interests are but a single and not the largest element. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 335, 349.)

Analogy to grand jury.—With respect to inquiry into the conduct of an officer, with a view to determining whether to prefer charges or not, there is much resemblance between the relation of a grand jury to a traverse jury, and that of a court of inquiry to a court-martial. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 335, 347.)

Not a judicial tribunal.—A naval court of inquiry is not a judicial tribunal; it is instituted solely for the purpose of investigation, as an assistance to the President, the head of the department, or the commanding officer, in determining whether or not any further proceeding, executive or judicial, ought to be taken in relation to the subject matter of the inquiry. There is no issue joined between parties, nor parties litigant. (The W. B. Chester's Owners v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 681.)

Proceedings not a trial.—The proceedings of a board of inquest or a court of inquiry are in no sense a trial of an issue or of an accused person. These boards perform no real judicial function, but are convened only for the purpose of informing the department in a preliminary way as to the facts involved in the inquiry. (25 Op. Atty. Gen., 623; See note to art. 24, A. G. N.)

Proceedings advisory only.—The action of courts of inquiry, whether as to transactions or persons, is not decision, but advice only, for the information of the executive. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 335, 336.)

Jurisdiction of civil courts.—See note to article 6, A. G. N., as to noninterference by civil courts with a naval court of inquiry investigating a charge of homicide.

Statutes of limitation not applicable.—The statute of limitations contained in the articles of war does not apply to courts of inquiry in the Army, for the objects of a court of inquiry are not confined to investigation as preparatory to a court-martial, but extend to the legal procurement of information of any sort material to the military service, or the discipline and government of the Army, and to guide the discretion of him who orders it in regard to a matter under inquiry. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 239.)

It may happen that questions shall arise as to an offense alleged to have been committed by an officer more than two years ago, as to which he ought to be exculpated if innocent, or if guilty dismissed by the President, though not liable to be tried by court-martial. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 239.)

Art. 58. [Oaths of members and judge advocate.] The judge-advocate, or person officiating as such, shall administer to the members the following oath or affirmation: "You do swear (or affirm) well and truly to examine and inquire, according to the evidence, into the matter now before you, without partiality." After which the president shall administer to the judge-advocate, or person officiating as such, the following oath or affirmation: "You do swear (or affirm) truly to record the proceedings of this court and the evidence to be given in the case in hearing."—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 25, v. 12, pp. 605, 606.)

See article 40, A. G. N., and note thereto, as to oaths of members and judge advocate of general courts-martial.

Oaths repeated in each case.—The court must be sworn separately and so report in each distinct case. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 335, 341.)

Art. 59. [Rights of party inquired of.] The party whose conduct shall be the subject of inquiry, or his attorney, shall have the right to cross-examine all the witnesses.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 23, v. 12, p. 605.)

Whether court should be open or closed.—Courts of inquiry are, by the general military law, open or closed as the authority ordering the court may determine; and to have them open is the exception, not the rule. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 223, 229.)

Courts of inquiry are inherently closed courts, to which defendants generally, and auditors and spectators occasionally, have access by permission; not of right. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 335, 346. See note to art. 45, A. G. N., as to procedure of general courts-martial.)

Evidence; documentary.—Official letters on file, contemporaneous with or a part of the incidents to which they relate, are competent evidence in a court of inquiry, both for and against a party, as are official letters which he may have received at the termination of a particular service, the same being, however, sub-

A court of inquiry may be needed for the very purpose of ascertaining whether an alleged offense was or was not committed within two years, and so informing the mind and guiding the discretion of the executive on the very point of the legality of a court-martial. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 239.)

In the Articles for the Government of the Navy no limitation of time is expressed as to the matters liable to examination by courts of inquiry; nor in those articles is there any as to acts cognizable by court-martial. How this omission happened, whether accidentally or advisedly, does not appear. In this respect the Articles for the Government of the Navy differ from the articles of war. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 335, 347, 348.)

See articles 61 and 62, A. G. N., and notes thereto.

Proceedings and evidence.—See note to article 59, A. G. N.

Responsibility for true record.—See note to article 52, A. G. N.

ject to explanations. But neither letters of recommendation, nor of condemnation, nor certificates prepared for the occasion, nor even ex parte affidavits, are competent evidence. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 335, 336.)

Experts.—By the military as well as by the civil law, courts have authority to commission experts for the examination of all questions of mental or physical disability. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 335, 336.)

See note to article 42, A. G. N., under "Expert witnesses."

Rules of procedure.—The constitution and the course of proceeding of courts of inquiry are to be governed by the general statutes and by the common law military as received and practiced in the Army and Navy. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 335.)

Art. 60. [Proceedings; how authenticated; use in other cases.] The proceedings of courts of inquiry shall be authenticated by the signature of the president of the court and of the judge-advocate, and shall, in all cases not capital, nor extending to the dismissal of a commissioned or warrant officer, be evidence before a court-martial, provided oral testimony cannot be obtained.—(17 July, 1862, c. 204, s. 1, art. 24, v. 12, p. 605.)

Admissibility in evidence by consent of accused.—A commissioned officer of the Navy can waive the provisions of article 60, A. G. N., and allow proceedings of a court of inquiry to be evidence on a court-martial, the sentence of which may extend to his dismissal; and where, at the request of such an officer, the Secretary of the Navy convened a court-martial to try him on matter which had already been the subject of a court of inquiry, on condition that the proceedings of such court of inquiry be evidence, each party having the privilege, however, of introducing other evidence, the accused is not deprived of any substantial right, and the sentence of the court-martial is not invalidated. (Mullan v. U. S., 212 U. S., 516; see C. M. O. 46-1917, pp. 13-19, for general note on subject of admissibility in evidence before courts-martial of the proceedings of courts of inquiry, boards of investigation, and boards of inquest.)

Admissibility in civil suit.—Testimony taken before a court of inquiry can not be put in evidence on a claim against the United States for damages and loss sustained by reason of a collision between a vessel of the Navy and a private vessel, unless it be for the purpose of showing that witnesses who have testified before the civil court have sworn differently before the court of inquiry. (The W. B. Chester's Owners v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 681.)

The claimant is a stranger to the proceedings, though the subject of the investigation was the destruction of his schooner by a naval vessel. Even if allowed to be present and take part in the examination of witnesses, it was by courtesy only. The evidence was ex parte, taken by the United States for their own private use. (The W. B. Chester's Owners v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 681.)

Art. 61. [Limitation of trials; general offenses.] No person shall be tried by court-martial or otherwise punished for any offense, except as provided in the following article, which appears to have been committed more than two years before the issuing of the order for such trial or punishment, unless by reason of having absented himself, or of some other manifest impediment he shall not have been amenable to justice within that period.

This article was added to the Articles for the Government of the Navy, as article 61 thereof, by act of February 25, 1895 (28 Stat., 680).

Historical note.—By article 138 of "Orders, Regulations, and Instructions for the Administration of Law and Justice in the United States Navy," approved by the Secretary of the Navy, April 15, 1870, it was provided that "No person in the Navy shall be liable to be tried and punished by a court-martial for any offense which shall appear to have been committed three years before the issuing of the order for such trial, unless the person, by reason of having absented himself or some other manifest impediment, shall not have been amenable to justice within that time."

The "Orders, Regulations, and Instructions for the Administration of Law and Justice in the United States Navy" were issued by the Secretary of the Navy, under the authority of the President, in 1870. Section 1547 of the Revised Statutes is a legislative recognition of the regulations of 1870, and "must be understood as giving to these regulations the sanction of the law." (Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S., 167, 180.)

The said "Regulations for the Administration of Law and Justice," regulating the procedure of courts-martial, have the force of law. (Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S., 13, 22; compare note to art. 42, A. G. N., under "Character evidence.")

In the Articles for the Government of the Navy no limitation of time is expressed as to acts cognizable by courts-martial. How this omission happened, whether accidentally or advisedly, does not appear. In this respect the Articles for the Government of the Navy differ from the Articles of War. (8 Op. Atty. Gen., 335, 347, 348, Jan. 31, 1857.)

Article 61, A. G. N., was first enacted by act of February 25, 1895, before which time there was no statute of limitations for violations of the Articles for the Government of the Navy. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 521, 528.)

Desertion in time of war.—Article 61 applies to desertion from the Navy in time of war. In such case the two-year period of limitation commences to run from the date that the offender first absents himself without leave and with the intention of permanently abandoning the service. But he is amenable to trial by court-martial after the end of the term for which he enlisted, provided such trial is not barred by the statute of limitations. (Op. Atty. Gen., Feb. 27, 1922, file 26251-26615:8; see note below, under art. 62, A. G. N.)

If the offender has not been discharged or his status otherwise terminated, he may be tried after expiration of his enlistment, even though he had not in the meantime been arrested or other steps taken to enforce jurisdiction. (Op. Atty. Gen., Feb. 27, 1922, file 26251-26615:8.)

See note to section 1418, Revised Statutes, under "Detention of enlisted men after expiration of enlistment."

View that statute of limitations can not be waived.—The accused can not be tried by court-martial for an offense of more than two years' standing previous to the order summoning the court, even on his own application, unless the prosecution can show that, by reason of absence or some other manifest impediment, the accused was not amenable to justice within the time limited by the Articles of War. The limitation was not intended solely for the benefit of persons accused, but its policy had a wider scope, viz, the prompt prosecution of offenses. (1 Op. Atty. Gen., 383; affirmed, 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 265.)

This limitation can not be waived by the accused, nor can he, even with his consent, be tried by a general court-martial after the time prescribed by the Articles of War. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 239.)

The statute of limitations contained in the Articles of War is a limitation upon the jurisdiction of courts-martial, and presents an absolute bar to the trial (under certain exceptions therein stated), which can not be waived even by the accused. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 462, 463; citing 1 Op. Atty. Gen., 383 and 6 Op. Atty. Gen., 240.)

When it appears by the record that the order for trial was issued more than two years before the commission of the offense, a plea of guilty is not to be taken as an admission by the accused of the existence of an exception withdrawing his case from the limitation. It is for the prosecution to show, as a matter of fact, in some way other than by the form of the pleadings, that by reason of having absented himself, or of some other manifest impediment, the accused was not amenable to justice within the two years. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 170.)

As a matter of pleading, the plea of guilty admits the existence of the exceptions which take the case out of the general statute of limitations. However, it having been held in previous opinions of the Attorneys General that the limitation can not be waived by the accused, and no opinion being found which contradicts these, the rule thus established should be followed. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 170.)

View that statute of limitations is matter of defense.—The limitation prescribed for the trial and punishment of the offense of desertion, by the Articles of War, is matter of defense, and the tribunal having jurisdiction to try the charge of desertion is the tribunal having jurisdiction to determine whether the bar of the statute has attached or not. (In re White, 17 Fed. Rep., 723.)

A desertion having taken place, whether the statute of limitations has run against it and barred punishment is matter of defense, and must be determined by the same tribunal which tries the charge. Should the case be tried before a court-martial duly organized, and the question whether the offense was barred by the statute of limitations decided against the accused, the civil courts would have no jurisdiction by habeas corpus or otherwise over such decision of the court-martial. (In re White, 17 Fed. Rep., 723.)

The article of war does not limit or qualify the jurisdiction of a military tribunal, but prescribes a rule of procedure for the benefit of the accused, to be considered and enforced upon the trial in the exercise of a jurisdiction already conferred. The limitation is a matter of defense, which is to be entertained and determined like any other question involving an adjudication upon the merits of the case. (In re Davison, 21 Fed. Rep., 618.)

It is for the court-martial and not for a civil court of the United States to decide whether the statutory limitation can be invoked by a party accused of desertion to protect him from punishment. (In re Davison, 21 Fed. Rep., 618.)

The bar of the statute of limitations provided for in the Articles of War in the case of a party charged with desertion is a defense to be set up in the case, which the military court trying the charge has jurisdiction to determine for itself, without interference from the civil courts. It is the duty of courts-martial, in all cases within its terms, to give effect to the statute of limitations. (In re Zimmerman, 30 Fed. Rep., 176, 179.)

In the case presented it appears to the court that the prosecution is barred by the statute of limitations. An erroneous ruling by the military authorities upon this point would inflict a great wrong upon the citizen so tried and punished. However, if such wrong be inflicted, deliberately or otherwise, there is still no reviewing, controlling, or correcting power in the civil courts. Congress in such case must afford a remedy or the wrong must be endured. Had we the jurisdiction to do so, we should not hesitate to give full effect to the bar of the statute by discharging the prisoner on this ground. (In re Zimmerman, 30 Fed. Rep., 176, 179.)

A former conviction and the statute of limitations are matters of defense on the merits, which must be investigated in the exercise of jurisdiction, and not facts upon which the jurisdiction to hear and determine the charge depends. These matters can not be inquired into on a petition for discharge on habeas corpus. (In re Bogart, 3 Fed. Cas., No. 1, 596.)

See note to article 53, A. G. N., as to jurisdiction of civil courts; and see note to article 62, A. G. N.

Effect of pleading statute of limitations; admits jurisdiction.—The plea of the statute of limitations is not a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, but a plea in bar addressed to a court of competent jurisdiction. It confesses the jurisdiction of the court, and refers the matter to trial in that court to ascertain the truth of the facts and the law arising out of the facts. The plea of the statute of limitations admits the cognizance of the court to hear and determine the matters of offense. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 506, 512.)

Absence; not amenable to justice.—The words, "by reason of having absented himself," certainly do not mean absence from the State or beyond seas as those terms are ordinarily used in statutes of limitation. Nor do they mean merely absence from the company in which or locality where the offender enlisted. The absence contemplated by the article is an absence from the reach of the jurisdiction of the military authorities. To avoid the limitation of the article, it would seem to be necessary that the accused should not only be absent but that he should be where the military authorities by reasonable diligence could not make him amenable to justice. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 265.)

Absence, in order to bring the accused within the exception, must be such as to render him "not amenable to justice." (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 152, 163.)

The general significance of the word "amenable" in its modern sense as a law term is "responsible, subject to answer in a court of justice, liable to punishment." As used in the above provision it would seem to mean, within the reach and power of the military authorities to bring to trial before a court-martial; that is, in a situation where the responsibility or liability to answer for the absence can be made effective, or within the jurisdiction of a court-martial. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 152, 163.)

Unquestionably, absence in a foreign land would place the accused beyond the jurisdiction of a court-martial, and thus make him not amenable; so, it has been thought, would absence within the limits of this country, if he were where the military authorities by reasonable diligence could not discover him. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 152, 163; see also C. M. O. 27, 1913, pp. 13-18; Naval Dig., 1916, pp. 589-592.)

It would be difficult, perhaps impossible, to lay down any general rule whereby to determine in all cases under what facts and circumstances the accused may be deemed to be beyond the reach and power of the military authorities to bring him to trial, or beyond the jurisdiction of a court-martial. This is a matter which must be left in each case to the judgment of the court itself, upon the particular facts and circumstances appearing therein, subject to revision by the proper authorities. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 152, 163.)

The word "absence" in the article means absence from the jurisdiction of the military courts; that is, from the United States. (In re Davison, 4 Fed. Rep., 507; reversed on other grounds, 21 Fed. Rep., 618.)

For other cases, see note to article 62, A. G. N. "Manifest impediment."—Causes of delay in bringing an officer to trial can be arranged in three classes: First, those that are created or interposed by the act of the party; second, circumstances arising independently either of his action or that of the Government; and third, such as are controlled by the Government itself. The first class constitute manifest impediments within the meaning of the statute of limitations. It is a broad principle of law and of natural justice that no man can take advantage of his own wrong. Examples are, preventing witnesses appearing against him, or the like. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 181; compare 14 Op. Atty. Gen., 265.)

Delay occasioned by the Government itself is not a manifest impediment. The accused has a right to a trial within two years. He can not be deprived of that right at the option of those who have power to try him. The dismissal of an officer under charges, if an impediment, is created by the Government itself. It was a voluntary, indefinite suspension, if not an abandonment, on the part of the Government of the charges then pending and is clearly no manifest impediment within the meaning of the Articles of War. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 181.)

The concealment of an offense by the accused is not a "manifest impediment" to his prosecution within the meaning of the Articles of War and does not prevent the limitation from running in his favor. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 52.)

The words, "other manifest impediment," must be construed in connection with the words immediately preceding, viz, "by reason of having absented himself," and, taken together, it is apparent that the impediment intended by the article is an impediment similar in kind to absence, and that it is one which renders it impossible for a prosecution to take place. It could not be extended so far as to include concealment of the offense. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 52.)

Persons prosecuted for crime are not allowed to claim that the statute of limitations runs in their favor for and during the time they are absent from the State or beyond seas, or, in other words, beyond the jurisdiction of the court. But any concealment of the evidence of their guilt, or other like fraud on their part, while they remain in that jurisdiction, by which the prosecution is delayed until the time of the bar has run, does not deprive them of the benefit of the statute. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 265, modifying 9 Op. Atty. Gen., 181, 183.)

"Manifest impediment," as used in the Articles of War, does not mean merely want of evidence or ignorance as to the offender or offense by the military authorities, but it means something akin to absence—want of power, or a physical inability to bring the party charged to trial. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 265.)

"Other manifest impediment" means only such impediments as operate to prevent the military court from exercising its jurisdiction, as, for instance, his being continuously a prisoner in the hands of the enemy, or being imprisoned under the sentence of a civil court for a time, or the like. (In re Davison, 4 Fed. Rep., 507; reversed on other grounds, 21 Fed. Rep., 618.)

For other cases, see note to article 62, A. G. N.

In custody of civil authorities.—Where an officer charged with the commission of an offense in violation of both the State law and the Articles of War is delivered to the civil authorities for trial, the military authorities should take heed that the charges for violation of the Articles of War be put in due form and so remain suspended or adjourned merely, in order that the limitation of time provided by the Articles of War do not begin to run; and that, however much time be consumed in the civil proceedings, still, at the expiration of them, he may be duly tried by a court of his military peers. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 413, 428.)

A prosecution of an officer before a court-martial having been instituted and the party arraigned, within the two years required by law, and the accused pleading the pendency of civil proceedings arising in the matter, whereupon the proceedings of the court-martial were suspended until reassembled by an order issued after the lapse of two years, held that the statute of limitations could not then be pleaded in the case. (6 Op. Atty. Gen., 506.)

Officer dismissed and subsequently restored to the Army.—Where charges were preferred against an officer in the Army for disobedience of orders in June, 1856, and in Septem-her following, for other reasons, he was dismissed the service by the President, no court-martial having been ordered to investigate the charges against him, held that on his being restored to the Army he could not be tried on the charges pending against him at the time of his dismissal, after the lapse of two years since the commission of the alleged offense. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 181.)

The question whether an officer who has been dismissed from the service is liable to be tried by court-martial for offenses previously committed, examined; but no opinion given thereon. (9 Op. Atty. Gen., 181. See note above, under preamble to sec. 1624, R. S., as to jurisdiction of persons after discharge from the Navy, or after release from active duty in the Naval Reserve Force.)

Jurisdiction after discharge.—Under the article of war (corresponding to this article) it appears that a soldier may be arrested and tried after the expiration of his term of service for a military offense committed during such term of service, so that the order for the court-martial is issued within two years from the commission of the offense. In any view of the matter, a soldier may be held for trial after the term of his enlistment, if arrested for the offense before the expiration of the term. (In re Bird, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,428.)

The two years' limitation prescribed by the 88th article of war (similar to art. 61, A. G. N.) applies to all offenses triable and punishable by court-martial, including those which may be thus tried and punished under the act of March 2, 1863 (12 Stat., 696; see art. 14, A. G.

N.), punishing frauds upon the United States by persons in the land and naval forces; and providing that any person committing such offense who shall afterwards be discharged or dismissed shall, notwithstanding such discharge or dismissal, continue to be liable to be arrested and held for trial and sentence by a court-martial in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had not received such discharge or been dismissed. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 52.)

Article 61, A. G. N., may, with some force, be said to provide by implication, affirmatively, viz, that any person committing an offense within two years before the issuing of the order for trial may be tried therefor, whether he has left the service or not. However, it is doubtful whether the mere fixing by Congress of a general period of limitation should be taken to indicate an intention to extend the basic jurisdiction over a class not subject to it theretofore. It is possible that the attention of Congress was not at all engaged with the subject of such basic jurisdiction. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 521, 528.)

See note under preamble to section 1624, Revised Statutes, as to jurisdiction of persons discharged from the Navy, whose enlistment has expired, or who have been relieved from duty in the Naval Reserve Force; and see notes above, under "Manifest impediment," and "Desertion in time of war."

No limitation in proceedings before courts of inquiry.—See note to article 57, A. G. N.

Art. 62. [Limitation of trials; desertion in time of peace.] No person shall be tried by court-martial or otherwise punished for desertion in time of peace committed more than two years before the issuing of the order for such trial or punishment, unless he shall meanwhile have absented himself from the United States, or by reason of some other manifest impediment shall not have been amenable to justice within that period, in which case the time of his absence shall be excluded in computing the period of the limitation: Provided, That said limitation shall not begin until the end of the term for which said person was enlisted in the service.

This article was added to the Articles for the Government of the Navy, as article 62 thereof, by act of February 25, 1895 (28 Stat., 680). See historical note under article 61, A. G. N.

Whether desertion is continuing offense; when statute begins to run.—The general limitation provided by the Articles of War held applicable to the offense of desertion, no special provision being made for that offense. The limitation begins to run from the commission of the offense, except in a case where, by reason of "manifest impediment," the accused is not amenable to justice within two years from that time. In such case it begins to run from the removal of the impediment. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 152.)

Desertion is a continuing offense; an offense which may endure (that is, be continually committed) from day to day after the period of its completion. But the continuing commission thereof is limited by the obligation to serve imposed upon the deserter by his engagement. When that obligation ceases to exist, the commission of the offense necessarily terminates, and the limitation then begins to run in cases not excepted. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 152; affirmed, 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 170, 396.)

Enlistments are required to be for a specified time. By his engagement the soldier is bound for a specific term of service, the last day of which is as much fixed by the contract as the first. With the last day of the term his engagement expires, and with the expiration of his engagement the obligation to serve, thereby imposed, is at an end. This results notwithstanding that there has been an infraction of the contract by desertion or otherwise, unless the soldier, before the term is up, consents to an extension. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 152; affirmed, 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 170, 396.)

The provision in the Articles of War that a deserter shall be liable to serve for such period as necessary to make good time lost by his unauthorized absence is a penal provision, and operates only after conviction. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 152; affirmed, 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 170, 396.)

For reasons above stated, held, in the case of an enlisted soldier, that (excepting where the offender has previously surrendered himself or been apprehended, or where by reason of manifest impediment he is not amenable to justice) the limitation begins to run from the last day of the term for which he enlisted, under the general article applicable to all offenses, and in the absence of any specific enactment applicable to desertion. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 152; affirmed, 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 170, 396.)

In the case of desertion by a commissioned officer, whose engagement is an unlimited one, the limitation begins to run only from the date of apprehension or surrender. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 152, 163; affirmed, 16 Op. Atty. Gen., 170, 396.)

It would certainly be a startling proposition that there is no limitation at all upon prosecutions for the offense of desertion; that one who has once been a deserter is subject during the whole of his natural life to be brought to trial before a military court and punished for this offense, even in extreme old age. With the single exception of the crime of murder, the almost universal policy of the criminal law is to prescribe a term within which the offender shall be brought to trial. (In re Davison, 4 Fed. Rep., 507; reversed on other grounds, 21 Fed. Rep., 618.)

The whole effect of the limitation can not be taken away on the theory that the desertion may be considered for some purposes to be a continuing offense. The offense was complete for the purpose of the limitation on the day that the accused deserted and which was charged against him as the date the offense was committed. (In re Davison, 4 Fed. Rep., 507; reversed on other grounds, 21 Fed. Rep., 618.)

Were the question properly before us, we should have no difficulty in reaching the same conclusion as to the effect of the statute of limitations as that attained in the Davison case (4 Fed. Rep., 507); but that question is not properly before us; as it is exclusively a question for the tribunal having jurisdiction to try a party charged with the offense of desertion, we are not authorized to consider the question at all. (In re White, 17 Fed. Rep., 723.)

A question has arisen whether desertion is a continuing offense in such sense that the statute does not begin to run until the expiration of the term of enlistment. A continuing civil or military obligation to serve until the expiration of the term of enlistment is one thing, and a continuing criminal offense, if such there can be, which is perfected and ripe for charges and trial at the moment it is "committed" for the purpose of barring a trial and punishment under the statute of limitations, is quite another. Some, however, maintain the affirmative of the proposition, notwithstanding the language of the statute is, after the offense "appears to have been committed." Although by no means satisfied with such view, held that the question whether the trial is barred by the statute of limitations is one for determination by the court-martial. (In re Zimmerman, 30 Fed. Rep., 176, 179.)

The above cases reviewed, and held that desertion from the Navy is not a continuing offense; that it is committed and is complete at the moment the person absents himself with the requisite intent. (Op. Atty. Gen., Feb. 27, 1922, file 26251-26615:8.)

See note above, under article 61, A. G. N., as to desertion in time of war.

Trial after expiration of enlistment.—

The jurisdiction of a naval court-martial is, by the Articles for the Government of the Navy, confined to persons in the naval service, except for offenses set forth in article 14, A. G. N., and for the offense of desertion in time of peace as set forth in article 62, A. G. N. Hence, in the case of one who deserted from the Marine Corps in time of war, and whose enlistment expired while he was in desertion, held that a naval court-martial did not have jurisdiction to try him for such desertion after the date his enlistment expired; and the proceedings, findings, and sentence were accordingly disapproved. (C. M. O. 151, 1920, pp. 11, 12, case of George M. Runyan, citing 15 Op. Atty. Gen., 152, and 31 Op. Atty. Gen., 521. But see ex parte Clark, noted below.)

Opinion in case of George M. Runyan (C. M. O. 151, 1920, above noted), cited, and remarked with respect thereto: "If the effect thereof is that a man may desert, remain in hiding until the time of his enlistment expires, and then escape all responsibility, I can not agree with such a conclusion. The effect thereof upon the morale of the Army and Navy alike would be disastrous. While there is no obligation to serve after the period of enlistment it does not follow that conduct during that period may go unpunished for the reason assigned. If that were the law, it might be well urged that a court-martial has no power to imprison after the expiration of the enlistment." (Ex parte Clark, 271 Fed. Rep., 533.)

A marine deserted in Germany while detached for service with the Army; subsequently, and shortly after his term of enlistment would have expired, the French authorities surrendered him to the American Army at Paris; he was then delivered by the military authorities to the custody of the commandant of the navy yard at New York, and a naval court-martial was convened to try him for desertion. Held, first, that the naval court-martial had jurisdiction of the desertion committed by said marine in violation of the Articles of War [see sec. 1621, R. S., and note thereto]; second, that there is no merit in the contention that the naval authorities are without jurisdiction because his term of enlistment had expired. (Ex parte Clark, 271 Fed. Rep., 533.)

A deserter from the Army who has never been discharged from the service is still subject to the jurisdiction of a military tribunal, notwithstanding that his period of enlistment has expired; and while he may plead the statute of limitations as a defense to a prosecution for desertion, a civil court will not interfere with such a prosecution by a military tribunal before that court has acted on and decided the case. As he has not been discharged from the Army, he is subject to the jurisdiction of a military tribunal. (In re Cadwallader, 127 Fed. Rep., 881.)

An enlisted man continues in the naval service after the expiration of his enlistment until there has been some act, such as a discharge, to terminate the status created by his contract of enlistment; and while so in the service he may be tried by court-martial for offenses committed during his period of enlistment, whether or not he has in the meantime been arrested or other steps taken to enforce the jurisdiction. (Op. Atty. Gen., Feb. 27, 1922, file 26251-26615:8; see note to art. 61, A. G. N., under "Desertion in time of war.")

A man enlisted in the Navy January 4, 1908, for a term of four years; his enlistment expired on January 3, 1912; in the meantime, he was declared a deserter on March 7, 1908; he surrendered to the naval authorities on September 20, 1913; the Bureau of Navigation directed removal of the mark of desertion from his record, October 8, 1913; he was tried by summary court-martial for absence without leave on October 20, 1913; was sentenced to solitary confinement for 30 days and extra police duties for 60 days; which said sentence was duly approved and executed. (20 Comp. Dec., 751.)

By an act approved January 29, 1813 (2 Stat., 796), it was provided that deserters from the Army should be liable to make good time lost by absence in desertion, "and that such soldier shall and may be tried by a court-martial and punished although the term of his enlistment may have elapsed previous to his being apprehended or tried." It may well be doubted whether, in the absence of this enactment, a soldier was triable by a court-martial organized after the expiration of his term of enlistment, for any offense committed during his term; but that act was designed for the punishment of the offense of desertion, although the term of enlistment may have elapsed previous to the apprehension and trial of the offender. But said act of 1813 was not intended to repeal the article of war limiting the time for trial of offenses, and to make a deserter liable to be tried at any time after the expiration of his enlistment; the limitation imposed by that article still remained. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 462.)

Trial void if in violation of statute of limitation.—A man deserted from the Army on October 2, 1865; his enlistment would have expired on August 21, 1868; he was apprehended April 13, 1871. By act of April 10, 1806, article 88 (2 Stat., 369), it was declared that "no person shall be liable to be tried and punished by a general court-martial for any offense which shall appear to have been committed within two years before the issuing of the order for such trial, unless," etc. Said article of war applied to desertion as well as to other offenses. The accused in this case did not come within the exceptions contained in said article. Held, that the court-martial was without jurisdiction. (13 Op. Atty. Gen., 462.)

Where a soldier enlisted on August 16, 1870, deserted from the Army on September 19, 1870, but in about one year afterwards reenlisted under an alias in another regiment and an order was issued on March 11, 1873, for his trial by court-martial for desertion, for which offense he was thereupon tried by the court, convicted, and sentenced to punishment, held that the prosecution was barred by the two years' limitation prescribed by the Articles of War, and that consequently the conviction and sentence are void. (14 Op. Atty. Gen., 265.)

See note to article 61, A. G. N., under "View that statute of limitations is matter of defense."

Statute of limitations matter of defense.—The judgment of a court-martial, regularly organized, convicting and sentencing a soldier for desertion, which judgment has been confirmed as provided in the Articles of War, is not subject to review by a civil court in habeas corpus proceedings on the ground that the prosecution was barred by limitation under the 103d article of war, such defense being one to the merits, to be determined by the court-martial, and not affecting its jurisdiction. (Ex parte Townsend, 133 Fed. Rep., 74; see note to art. 61, A. G. N.)

Absence.—See note to article 61, A. G. N.

Absence without leave is not per se sufficient to prevent the limitation from running. (15 Op. Atty. Gen., 152.)

The exception from the limitation contained in the 103d article of war does not produce any effect where the limitation itself would not otherwise run. Hence, absence without leave during the term of enlistment, in the case of a deserter, is unimportant, inasmuch as the offense of desertion, being a continuing one during such term, the limitation would not otherwise begin to run until the expiration thereof. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 170.)

Where the absence of the deserter continues after his term of service has expired, no presumption of law arises that he was not amenable to justice during such absence, and that his case is accordingly within the exception. The facts must be shown by evidence submitted at the trial. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 170. Compare cases noted under art. 61, A. G. N., and under this article, as to statute of limitations being matter of defense.)

Manifest impediment.—See note to article 61, A. G. N.

It is apparent that, as relator had deserted and could not be found during the period of his desertion, there was such a "manifest impediment" in the way of bringing him to justice as would justify excluding the period of his desertion from any computation of time within which a prosecution must be begun. (Ex parte Clark, 271 Fed. Rep., 533; see also C. M. O. 27, 1913, pp. 13-18; Naval Dig., 1916, pp. 589-592.)

Art. 63. [Limitation of punishments; time of peace.] Whenever, by any of the Articles for the Government of the Navy of the United States, the punishment on conviction of an offense is left to the discretion of the court-martial, the punishment therefor shall not, in time of peace, be in excess of a limit which the President may prescribe.

This article was added to the Articles for the Government of the Navy, as article 63 thereof, by act of February 27, 1895 (28 Stat., 689).

Where no limitation prescribed by the President.—Where the Articles of War provided that the punishment shall not, in time of peace, be in excess of a limit which the President may prescribe, and the President, in prescribing limitations of punishment, made same applicable in terms to enlisted men only, held that the sentence of a court-martial in the case of a commissioned officer, which was approved by the President, was valid, notwithstanding objection that such sentence was in excess of the limit which had been prescribed by the President; that the limitations so prescribed were applicable to enlisted men only; and that it is evident that a limit on discretion in punishment, to be imposed by the President, can have only such operation as he may affirmatively prescribe. (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 382.)

Punishment for repeated offense.—Every successive disobedience of orders is a fresh offense and subjects the offender to additional punishment. It has been settled in a penal prosecution that a like act when prohibited, if distinctly repeated even on the same day, constitutes a second offense and incurs an additional penalty. (Wilkes v. Dinsman, 7 How., 89, 128.)

Single sentence for all offenses.—The rule is established by military usage that the sentence of a court-martial shall be in every case an entirety; that is, that there shall be but a single sentence covering all the convictions and all the charges and specifications upon which the accused is found guilty, however separate and distinct may be the different offenses found, and however different may be the punishments called for by the offenses. Where, then, there is a conviction of several offenses, the sentence is warranted to the extent that such offenses are punishable, even where the offenses are in violation of the same article. Cumulative sentences are not cumulative punishments, and a single sentence for several offenses in excess of that prescribed for one offense may be authorized by statute; (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S., 365, 393, 394; see also notes to arts. 14, 22, and 53, A. G. N.)

Sentences cumulative.—The customary military law and the Army Regulations unite in requiring that different sentences to imprisonment, imposed by separate courts-martial upon the same offender for distinct offenses, be regarded as cumulative and be executed consecutively, one upon the expiration of another, in the order of their imposition. (Kirkman v. McClaughry, 160 Fed. Rep., 436.)

Cruel and unusual punishments.—See article 49, A. G. N., as to prohibited punishments; and see note to Constitution, eighth amendment.

A sentence of dismissal in the case of an officer of the Marine Corps is not illegal, nor in conflict with the provision of the Constitution which declares that cruel and unusual punishments shall not be inflicted, although under the circumstances severe and harsh, it appearing that the milder punishment of reprimand or suspension would have fully satisfied the most rigorous demands of justice. (3 Op. Atty. Gen., 631.)

The words, "such other punishment as a court-martial shall adjudge," are to be limited by the custom of the service, and authorize only such punishments as are usual. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 158.)

It is certainly hard to mark the line where usual and proper punishments end and unusual and cruel ones begin; and the sentence pronounced under an authority so broad and general ought to be so far out of proportion to the offense committed as to shock the sense of justice before it is arrested as contrary to usage. If it bear a general relation to the crime, and be not entirely outside the circle of naval punishments, any interference with it on that ground could hardly be justified. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 158.)

Section 16 of an act approved July 17, 1862 (12 Stat., 596), provided that any contractor for supplies for the Army or Navy found guilty by court-martial of fraud or willful neglect of duty "shall be punished by fine and imprisonment, or such other punishment as the court-martial shall adjudge"; and that any person contracting to furnish such supplies "shall be deemed and taken as a part of the land or naval forces of the United States, for which he shall contract to furnish said supplies, and be subject to the rules and regulations for the government of the land and naval forces of the United States." A contractor was sentenced by a naval general court-martial under this section to "be hereafter excluded from any further deliveries, either on contract or open purchase, for naval supplies." Held, that such sentence was unwarranted by the usage of the service, and was therefore illegal. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 528. See note under preamble to section 1624, R. S., as to contractors not being amenable to court-martial.)

The discretion given the court-martial in the matter of inflicting punishment upon conviction is to be understood as controlled by the custom of the service and limited to the imposition of that kind of punishment only which has become usual. A sentence of incapacity or disability does not fall within the range of discretionary punishments allowable by the usage of the service, and is not within the power of a court-martial except where expressly authorized by law. (12 Op. Atty. Gen., 528.)

Not decided whether the confinement of the accused for a long term in a prison of narrow cells and limited appliances for comfort would be a punishment which the law regards as cruel and unusual, and forbidden by the Constitution, because the suggestion as to the character of the prison is unsupported by anything in the record, and no point of the kind was made at the argument in this court. (Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S., 109, 116.)

Imprisonment until payment of fine.—The sentence of a court-martial that the accused "be imprisoned in such place as the honorable Secretary of the Navy may designate for the term of two years; to lose all pay which may become due him during such confinement, except the sum of ten dollars per month, this loss amounting to one thousand nine hundred and sixty-six dollars; to be fined in the sum of five hundred dollars, which fine must be paid before or at the end of the term of confinement; to be detained in confinement without pay until such fine be paid, and at the expiration of term of confinement to be dishonorably discharged from the naval service of the United States," which sentence was adjudged by the court on revision of its original sentence in the case, held not illegal. (In re Reed, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11636; affirmed, ex parte Reed, 100 U. S., 13.)

Imprisonment beyond term of enlistment.—The President having fixed a term of 10 years as the maximum of imprisonment in cases prosecuted under the 62d article of war (corresponding to art. 22, A. G. N.), as authorized by Congress, a court-martial on convicting a soldier of conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline in violation of such article had jurisdiction to sentence accused to a term of five years' imprisonment, though such term extended beyond the term of military service for which he had enlisted. (In re Stubbs, 133 Fed. Rep., 1012; see note to preamble of sec. 1624, R. S., under "Where jurisdiction attached prior to discharge.")

Place of imprisonment designated by reviewing authority.—There is nothing in the character of a court-martial which inherently precludes committing to the reviewing authority the determination of the character of imprisonment to be imposed within the prescribed limits. There is no statute which prevents the adoption of a rule or regulation committing the matter to the reviewing authority for determination of the place of imprisonment. (In re Brodie, 128 Fed. Rep., 665, 668.)

Where the judgment of a court-martial directed the kind and duration of his imprisonment, the place of his confinement may be later designated by the War Department and such designation on the commitment papers will be presumed to have been lawfully made. (Ex parte Givins, 262 Fed. Rep., 702; affirmed, Givens v. Zerbst, 255 U. S., 11.)

Regulations as to imprisonment; effect of footnote.—A manual issued by the Secretary of War providing in a footnote that in certain cases the words "in such place as the reviewing authority may direct," were to be used in the sentence of a court-martial with reference to the place of confinement, operated to qualify Army Regulations issued by the Secretary of War with the approval of the President. A footnote to a rule or regulation is not less authoritative than the principal text, where there is a single authorship. Accordingly, where the sentence in a proper case is in the form above quoted, such sentence is conclusive and not open to collateral attack. (In re Brodie, 128 Fed. Rep., 665.)

Stoppage of pay.—The amount of the reward paid for the apprehension of a deserter who, upon trial by a court-martial for desertion, has been convicted only of the offense of absence without leave, can not lawfully be stopped against his pay in a case where the sentence of the court does not impose such stoppage.

Stoppage of pay against a soldier is unauthorized unless made in execution of the sentence of a court-martial or in pursuance of a statute or in conformity to a regulation having the force of law. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 474; see notes to secs. 1556 and 1569, R. S.)

Certainty required.—A sentence which declares "all pay and allowances now due or that may hereafter become due," to be forfeited, except certain amounts specially named fixes the amount of pay forfeited sufficiently within the intent of the Navy Regulations of 1870 (sec. 248), requiring that sentences including forfeiture of pay "fix the amount of the pay so forfeited, stating it in dollars and cents." (Williams v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 306.)

Judgments, whether of civil or military tribunals, should embrace the highest degree of certainty, "certainty to a certain intent in every particular." It is a sound maxim of the law that "that is sufficiently certain which can be made certain." The sum to be forfeited, although not fixed by the sentence, could be determined with accuracy by reference to other reliable data. To hold that the sentence was void for uncertainty, because the amount is not stated on the face of the sentence, would be a technical requirement not warranted. The objection being matter of form only, it does not vitiate the sentence as a judicial finding. (Williams v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cls., 306.)

"Cashiered" and "dismissed" construed.—See note to article 46, A. G. N.

Dismissal mandatory.—See act of April 9, 1906, section 5 (34 Stat., 105), as to certain offenses of neglect of duty by officers of the Naval Academy.

Coast Guard; limitation of punishments.—"Whenever, in time of war, the Coast Guard operates as a part of the Navy in accordance with law, the personnel of that service shall be subject to the laws prescribed for the government of the Navy: Provided, That in the initiation, prosecution, and completion of disciplinary action, including remission and mitigation of punishments for any offense committed by any officer or enlisted man of the Coast Guard, the jurisdiction shall hereafter depend upon and be in accordance with the laws and regulations of the department having jurisdiction of the person of such offender at the various stages of such action: Provided further, That any punishment imposed and executed in accordance with the provisions of this section shall not exceed that to which the offender was liable at the time of the commission of his offense." (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 600.)

For other cases see notes to articles 7, 8, 14, and 48, A. G. N.

Perjury.—As to punishment for, see article 42, A. G. N.

Limitations of punishment prescribed by the President, as modified from time to time, are published in "Naval Courts and Boards," issued by the Navy Department, office of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy.

1764. Extra services.

Sec. 1754. [Preference of persons disabled in military or naval service.] Persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty, shall be preferred for appointments to civil offices, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such offices.—(3 Mar., 1865, Res. No. 27, s. 1, v. 13, p. 571.)

See laws and decisions noted under section 416, Revised Statutes, subheading, "Honorably discharged soldiers or sailors."

Sec. 1755. [Recommendation for employment in private industries.] In grateful recognition of the services, sacrifices, and sufferings of persons honorably discharged from the military and naval service of the country, by reason of wounds, disease, or the expiration of terms of enlistment, it is respectfully recommended to bankers, merchants, manufacturers, mechanics, farmers, and persons engaged in industrial pursuits, to give them the preference for appointments to remunerative situations and employments.—(3 Mar., 1865, Res. No. 27, s. 2, v. 13, p. 571.)

Sec. 1757. [Oath of office.] Whenever any person who is not rendered ineligible to office by the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution is elected or appointed to any office of honor or trust under the Government of the United States, and is not able, on account of his participation in the late rebellion, to take the oath prescribed in the preceding section, he shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, take and subscribe in lieu of that oath the following oath: "I, A B, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same, that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter. So help me God."—(11 July, 1868, c. 139, v. 15, p. 85. 15 Feb., 1871, c. 53, v. 16, p. 412.)

Amendment to this section was made by act of May 13, 1884, section 2 (23 Stat., 22), as follows: "Section seventeen hundred and fifty-six of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and hereafter the oath to be taken by any person elected or appointed to any office of honor or profit either in the civil, military, or naval service, except the President of the United States, shall be as prescribed in section seventeen hundred and fifty-seven of the Revised Statutes. But this repeal shall not affect the oaths prescribed by existing statutes in relation to the performance of duties in special or particular subordinate offices and employments."

As to special oath prescribed for employees in the postal service, and which is also required by law to be taken by Navy mail clerks and assistant Navy mail clerks, see sections 391 and 392, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto.

As to oath of allegiance required to be taken by enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, see notes to sections 1418 and 1609, Revised Statutes.

As to commencement of pay of officers appointed to the Navy, see section 1560 and note to section 1383, Revised Statutes.

As to oath of allegiance required to be taken by persons prosecuting claims, see sections 3478 and 3479, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1758. [Who may administer oath.] The oath of office required by either of the two preceding sections may be taken before any officer who is authorized either by the laws of the United States, or by the local municipal law, to administer oaths, in the State, Territory, or District where such oath may be administered.—(6 Aug., 1861, c. 64, s. 2, v. 12, p. 326. 18 April, 1876, c. 66, v. 19, p. 34.)

See note to section 416, Revised Statutes, under "Oath of office"; see also sections 183 and 392, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Sec. 1759. [Custody of oath.]—The oath of office taken by any person pursuant to the requirements of section seventeen hundred and fifty-six, or of section seventeen hundred and fifty-seven, shall be delivered in by him to be preserved among the files of the House of Congress, Department, or court to which the office in respect to which the oath is made may appertain.—(2 July, 1862, c. 128, v. 12, p. 502.)

Section 1756, Revised Statutes, referred to in this section, was repealed by act of May 13, 1884; quoted above, under section 1757.

Sec. 1760. [Unauthorized office; no salary for.] No money shall be paid from the Treasury to any person acting or assuming to act as an officer, civil, military, or naval, as salary, in any office when the office is not authorized by some previously existing law, unless such office is subsequently sanctioned by law.—(9 Feb., 1863, c. 25, s. 2, v. 12, p. 646.)

Sec. 1761. [Salaries; recess appointments.] No money shall be paid from the Treasury, as salary, to any person appointed during the recess of the Senate, to fill a vacancy in any existing office, if the vacancy existed while the Senate was in session and was by law required to be filled by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, until such appointee has been confirmed by the Senate. (9 Feb., 1863, c. 25, s. 2, v. 12, p. 646.)

See note to Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 3.

Sec. 1763. [Double salaries.] No person who holds an office, the salary or annual compensation attached to which amounts to the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars, shall receive compensation for discharging the duties of any other office, unless expressly authorized by law.—(31 Aug., 1852, c. 108, s. 18, v. 10, p. 100. 20 June, 1874, c. 328, v. 18, p. 109.—Talbot's Case, 10 C. Cls. 426.)

Other laws on the same general subject as this section and sections 1764 and 1765, set forth below, are the following:

Act June 20, 1874, section 3 (18 Stat., 109):
"No civil officer of the Government shall hereafter receive any compensation or perquisites, directly or indirectly, from the Treasury or property of the United States beyond his salary or compensation allowed by law: Provided, That this shall not be construed to prevent the employment and payment by the Department of Justice of district attorneys as now allowed by law for the performance of services not covered by their salaries or fees."

Act July 31, 1894, section 2 (28 Stat., 205): "No person who holds an office the salary or annual compensation attached to which amounts to the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars shall be appointed to or hold any other office to which compensation is attached unless specially heretofore or hereafter specially authorized thereto by law; but this shall not apply to retired officers of the Army or Navy whenever they may be elected to public office or whenever the President shall appoint them to office by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Act June 3, 1896, section 7 (29 Stat., 235): "That section two of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-five, and for other purposes, approved July thirty-first, eighteen hundred and ninety-four, shall not be so construed as to prevent the employment of any retired officer of the Army or Navy to do work under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army in connection with the improvement of rivers and harbors of the United States, or the payment by the proper officer of the Treasury of any amounts agreed upon as compensation for such employment."

Act August 1, 1914, section 12 (38 Stat., 680): "It shall not be lawful to pay to any person, employed in the service of the United States under any general or lump sum appropriation, any sum additional to the regular compensation received for or attached to any employment held prior to an appointment or designation as acting for or instead of an occupant of any other office or employment. This provision shall not be construed as prohibiting regular and permanent appointments by promotion from lower to higher grades of employments."

Act May 10, 1916, section 6 (39 Stat., 120), as reenacted with amendments by act August 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 582): "That unless otherwise specially authorized by law, no money appropriated by this or any other act shall be available for payment to any person receiving more than one salary when the combined amount of said salaries exceeds the sum of $2,000 per annum, but this shall not apply to retired officers or enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, or to officers and enlisted men of the Organized Militia and Naval Militia in the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia: Provided, That no such retired officer, officer, or enlisted man shall be denied or deprived of any of his pay, salary, or compensation as such, or of any other salary or compensation for services heretofore rendered, by reason of any decision or construction of said section six."

Act March 3, 1917 (39 Stat., 1106): Restricts payments to Government officers by private parties.

See section 1440, Revised Statutes, as to appointment of Navy officers in the diplomatic or consular service; section 1860, Revised Statutes, as to naval personnel holding civil offices in territories; and act June 10, 1896 (29 Stat., 361), as to officers of the Navy or Marine Corps holding employment with contractors furnishing naval supplies or war material to the Government.

See sections 170 and 182, Revised Statutes, and notes thereto, restricting extra compensation to clerks and officers in the executive departments.

See note to section 1765, Revised Statutes, for interpretation of sections 1763-1765, Revised Statutes, and laws above quoted.

Sec. 1764 [Extra services.] No allowance or compensation shall be made to any officer or clerk, by reason of the discharge of duties which belong to any other officer or clerk in the same or any other Department; and no allowance or compensation shall be made for any extra services whatever, which any officer or clerk may be required to perform, unless expressly authorized by law.—(26 Aug., 1842, c. 202, s. 12, v. 5, p. 525.)

See later enactments quoted above, under section 1763, Revised Statutes; and see decisions noted below, under section 1765.

Sec. 1765. [Extra allowances.] No officer in any branch of the public service, or any other person whose salary, pay, or emoluments are fixed by law or regulations, shall receive any additional pay, extra allowance, or compensation, in any form whatever, for the disbursement of public money, or for any other service of duty whatever, unless the same is authorized by law, and the appropriation therefor explicitly states that it is for such additional pay, extra allowance, or compensation.—(3 Mar., 1839, c. 82, s. 3, v. 5, p. 349. 23 Aug., 1842, c. 183, s. 2, v. 5, p. 510. 1 May, 1876, c. 88, v. 19, p. 45.)

See other enactments quoted above, under section 1763, Revised Statutes.

Cash rewards to civil employees of Navy Department are authorized by act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat., 718.)

Legality of officers accepting civil appointments.—The legality of a retired officer of the Navy accepting civil office is a question which must be determined by such officer upon his own responsibility; as the Government does not become interested in the matter until an office has actually been accepted contrary to law. (File 9736-15, Mar. 28, 1910; 9736-18, June 25, 1910; 21 Op. Atty. Gen., 510. See note to sec. 1440, R. S.)

Interpretation of sections 1763-1765, Revised Statutes.—Taking these sections all together, held, that the purpose of the legislation was to prevent a person holding any office or appointment, for which the law provides a definite compensation by way of salary or otherwise, which is intended to cover all the services which, as such officer, he may be called upon to render, from receiving extra compensation, additional allowances, or pay for other services which may be required of him either by act of Congress or by order of the head of his department, or in any other mode, added to or connected with the regular duties of the place which he holds; but these sections have no application to the case of two distinct offices, places, or employments, each of which has its own duties and its own compensation, which offices may both be held by one person at the same time. In the latter case, he is in the eye of the law two officers, or holds two places or appointments, the functions of which are separate and distinct, and, according to all the decisions, he is in such case entitled to recover the two compensations. In the former case, he performs the added duties under his appointment to a single place, and the statute has provided that he shall receive no additional compensation for that class of duties unless it is so provided by special legislation. (U. S. v. Saunders, 120 U. S., 126; see also Mullett v. U. S., 150 U. S., 566; but see act July 31, 1894, quoted above under sec. 1763, R. S.)

The legislature contemplated duties imposed by superior authority upon the officer as a part of his duty, and which the superior authority had in the emergency a right to impose, and the officer was bound to obey, although they were extra and additional to what had previously been required. But this legislation can by no fair interpretation be held to embrace an employment which has no affinity or connection, either in its character or by law or usage, with the line of his official duty, and where the service to be performed is of a different character and for a different place, and the amount of compensation regulated by law. (Converse v. U. S., 21 How., 463.)

A receiver of public moneys in Kansas, who had been appointed agent for the sale of Indian trust lands under a treaty with an Indian tribe, was entitled to commissions on such sales in addition to the full compensation as receiver allowed him by law. While the exact amount of his compensation was not fixed, it was clearly inferred that such compensation as the law implies where labor is performed by one at the request of another, that is to say, a reasonable compensation, would be paid. (U. S. v. Brindle, 110 U. S., 688.)

The case of United States v. Brindle, in which an Indian agent received large additional compensation for services connected with the sale of lands belonging to the Indians of his agency, was upon the ground that these additional services were performed for the benefit of the Indians, and the statute implied the payment of reasonable compensation for such services. (U. S. v. Saunders, 120 U. S., 126.)

A retired officer of the Army appointed by the Secretary of the Interior as supervisor of the erection of the Pension Bureau building was entitled to compensation for such services in addition to his pay. Sections 1764 and 1765, Revised Statutes, do not preclude an officer from receiving compensation other than his salary for services rendered the Government in an employment which has no affinity or connection with his official duty. (Meigs v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 497.)

The only difference between this case and those decided by the Supreme Court (Converse v. U. S. and U. S. v. Brindle, above cited) is that in each of the latter cases the party held an office with active duties to be performed, while the present claimant held one with no such duties, but this does not appear to affect the result. The point in each of them was, whether the party was entitled to compensation for services rendered in an employment which had no affinity or connection with the line of his official duty; and the Supreme Court held that he was. This disposes of the objections raised against the claimant's demand in this case. (Meigs v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cls., 497.)

A retired Army officer may be employed by the War Department to supervise work, where he could not have been assigned to that duty by order of the Secretary of War, and sections 1763, 1764, and 1765, Revised Statutes, relating to double pay, do not apply to such a case. (Yates v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cls., 296.)

An officer who has been appointed to and is fully invested with two distinct offices may receive the compensation appropriated for each. Sections 1763-1765, Revised Statutes, do not apply to such a case. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 7.)

The construction which has been given to these sections, especially in the case of Converse v. United States (above noted), is that the intent and effect of them are to forbid officers holding one office from receiving compensation for the discharge of duties belonging to another, or additional pay, extra allowance, or compensation for such other services or duties, when they hold the commission of but a single office, and by virtue of that office, or in addition to the duties thereof, have assigned to them the duties of another office. According to that decision, however, if an officer holds two distinct commissions, and thus two distinct offices, he may receive a salary for each. The evil intended to be guarded against by these statutes was not so much plurality of offices as it was additional pay or compensation to an officer holding but one office for performing additional duties or the duties properly belonging to another. If he actually holds two commissions, and does the duties of two distinct offices, he may receive the salary which has been appropriated to each office. Sections

1763-1765 are condensations from statutes which were in existence at the time this decision was made and in conformity with it. (16 Op. Atty. Gen., 7; see also 12 Op. Atty. Gen., 459.)

Holding two incompatible offices.—It has been regarded as settled since the decision of the Supreme Court in United States v. Saunders (above noted) that a person may hold two offices and receive the salaries of both, notwithstanding the provisions of the Revised Statutes, provided they are distinct, each having its own duties and compensation, and are not incompatible. In this case the offices are distinct, and each has its own duties and compensation. The only question presented, therefore, is whether they are incompatible. (Crosthwaite v. U. S., 30 Ct. Cls., 300.)

Two offices are incompatible when a performance of the duties of the one will prevent or conflict with a performance of the duties of the other, or when the holding of the two offices is contrary to the policy of the law. (Crosthwaite v. U. S., 30 Ct. Cls., 300.)

The duties of an examiner in the Department of Justice and of special assistant attorneys appointed to assist in the prosecution of criminal business are distinct and different and are not incompatible. (Crosthwaite v. U. S., 30 Ct. Cls., 300.)

Where two incompatible offices are held by the same person, to which are attached different salaries, he is not entitled to the compensation of both, but is entitled to the larger of the two. (Webster v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 25; Winchell v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 30.)

The offices of engineer in the Navy and paymaster are incompatible. (Webster v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 25.)

A cadet engineer in the Navy is not entitled to the salary of a draftsman in the Hydrographic Office in addition to his own, though he hold both offices. The office of draftsman in the Hydrographic Office is incompatible with that of cadet engineer. The Secretary of the Navy may detail a cadet engineer for service in the Hydrographic Office, but the detail will not entitle the officer to additional pay. (Winchell v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 30.)

The duties or nonduties of a retired officer are not incompatible with the duties of a chief clerk in an executive department. The duties of an officer beyond seas would be incompatible with those of a retired officer liable to be called at any time into active service. Congress have recognized the distinction by providing that a retired officer shall not receive his pay as such while holding a diplomatic or consular office beyond seas, but have left the right of a retired officer to hold a civil office within the country unimpaired. (Geddes v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 446.)

Incompatibility exists where the nature and duty of the two offices are such as to render it improper, from considerations of public policy, for one incumbent to hold both. It does not necessarily arise when the incumbent places himself for the time being in a position where it may be impossible for him to discharge the duties of both offices. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 238, citing cases.)

A retired officer of the Army is not prohibited by law from holding an office in an executive department, nor from receiving the salary thereof in addition to his retired pay. (Collins v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 22. But see below as to interpretation of act of July 31, 1894.)

An assistant medical referee, appointed under Revised Statutes, section 4776, is not entitled, in addition to his salary, to the fees of an examining surgeon, while serving on an examining board under section 4775, Revised Statutes, as the duties of the two positions are not compatible; neither are they distinct offices. Payment for both services is, therefore, prohibited by Revised Statutes, sections 1763-1765. (Graham v. U. S., 29 Ct. Cls., 404.)

"Office," defined.—See note to Constitution, Article II, section 2, clause 2.

"An office is a public station, or employment, conferred by the appointment of government. The term embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties. * * * A Government office is different from a Government contract. The latter from its nature is necessarily limited in its duration and specific in its objects. The terms agreed upon define the rights and obligations of both parties, and neither may depart from them without the assent of the other." (U. S. v. Hartwell, 6 Wall., 385, 393; see also U. S. v. Germaine, 99 U. S., 508; Auffmordt v. Hedden, 137 U. S., 310, 327.)

Civil surgeons appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions, under section 4777 of the Revised Statutes, are not officers of the United States. (U. S. v. Germaine, 99 U. S., 508.)

An acting paymaster, appointed by the senior officer present, is not an officer. He is not appointed as required by the Constitution, takes no oath of office, and gives no bond as paymaster. He is appointed to discharge the duties of an office which he does not hold, that of paymaster, and he is therefore prohibited from receiving compensation by sections 1763 and 1765, Revised Statutes. (Webster v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cls., 25; see note to secs. 1381 and 1564, R. S.)

A midshipman appointed as acting master may hold such office in addition to his regular naval rank, acting masters not forming part of the regular and permanent Navy; and if appointed acting master, he is entitled to receive the pay of that grade. (10 Op. Atty. Gen., 111.)

An internal-revenue collector is undoubtedly an officer in a branch of the public service, with a salary fixed by law. (Landram v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls., 74.)

"A deputy collector of internal revenue, not being an employee of the Government (i. e., not in privity with it so as to be able to maintain an action for his pay), does not come within the provisions of the Revised Statutes, sections 1763, 1764, prohibiting officers and employees of the Government from receiving dual or extra compensation." (Landram v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls., 74.)

A special deputy marshal is not a public officer within the constitutional limitation as to appointment. (17 Op. Atty. Gen., 684.)

The offices referred to in the above sections of the Revised Statutes are officers under the Government of the United States, and an office under the government of the District of Colum-bias is not included therein. (Donovan v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cls., 120.)

The payment of Navy and privateer pensions under the orders of the Secretary of the Navy does not constitute the person paying them an officer of the United States; and if the person thus disbursing public money at the same time holds the office of Navy agent he can not be allowed any extra pay or emolument for making such disbursement. (Browne v. U. S., 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,036.)

Interpretation of act approved July 31, 1894.—See note to section 1763, Revised Statutes, for text of said act.

Only officers of the United States were in the mind of Congress in 1894 when enacting the provision as to holding of two offices. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 184, 188.)

It would seem that the word "office" in the act of 1894 is to be presumed, in the absence of indications to the contrary, to embrace only what are called constitutional officers, i. e., those referred to in Article II, section 2, clause 2 of the Constitution. Under this construction, a circuit judge of the United States appointed as a commissioner under a convention with Great Britain is entitled to compensation additional to that of his salary, as the commissionership was established by treaty and was not an office "established by law" within the meaning of the Constitution. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 184.)

The legal definitions of a public office have been many and various. The idea seems to prevail that it is an employment to exercise some delegated part of the sovereign power; and the Supreme Court appears to attach importance to the idea of "tenure, duration, emolument, and duties," and suggests that the last should be continuing or permanent, not occasional or temporary. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 184.)

As for the popular language, it seems clear that a person employed solely as a sworn judge of a joint international commission would not be spoken of as an officer of either country, although, under a treaty requiring it, selected and sent to his post by one of them. (22 Op. Atty. Gen., 184.)

A general appraiser detailed by the Secretary of the Treasury, without additional compensation, as "an expert to represent the United States in the international commission for the conversion of the present Chinese tariff into specific rates," was not appointed to another office under the Government or engaged in other incompatible Government service. (24 Op. Atty. Gen., 12.)

An office is defined to be "a public charge or employment," and he who performs the duties of the office is an officer. If employed on the part of the United States, he is an officer of the United States. Although an office is an "employment," it does not follow that every employment is an office. A man may certainly be employed under a contract, express or implied, to do an act or perform a service, without becoming an officer. But if a duty be a continuing one, it seems very difficult to distinguish such a charge or employment from an office, or the person who performs the duties from an officer. (U. S. v. Maurice, 2 Brock., 96, quoted in 24 Op. Atty. Gen., 12.)

An appointment as special assistant to a United States attorney to aid in a certain case or set of cases is not an appointment to an office within the meaning of the act of 1894, as the essential element of "duration" is lacking. The attorney for the Court of Private Land Claims, receiving an annual salary of $3,500, may, therefore, be allowed additional compensation as special assistant to a United States attorney for New Mexico. (2 Comp. Dec., 271.)

A chief of division in the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury at a salary of more than $2,500 per annum may be paid compensation as a member of a commission appointed under the act of February 20, 1895, to select a site for a public building, service upon such commission not involving the holding of an office within the meaning of the act of 1894. (2 Comp. Dec., 467.)

The Secretary of the Navy is not precluded by the act of July 31, 1894, section 2, from employing a retired officer under the act of February 19, 1897, to supervise the completion of certain tables of planets. The said act of 1897 read as follows: "For services of a competent mathematician to supervise the completion of the tables of the planets, two thousand five hundred dollars, to be immediately available." This provision did not create an office, nor did it contemplate any of the formalities in the selection of such an employee as to distinguish his employment as an office. There is no permanency to the term; there is no requirement that the person employed shall either take an official oath or receive a commission. (21 Op. Atty. Gen., 507. See 2 Comp. Dec., 271, to the effect that "it does not follow that everyone who takes the oath of office is an officer"; in the latter case the special assistant to the United States attorney was required by law to take an oath.)

A retired officer of the Navy on active duty in time of war is entitled to an additional salary as meteorologist, to which position he was appointed by the Secretary of the Navy with salary payable from the appropriation "National defense," which appropriation was to be expended at the discretion of the President. The action of the Secretary of the Navy was the action of the President, and the power granted the latter by the appropriation for the national defense was intended to be the most adequate and comprehensive, reposing the largest discretion in the President, not subject to review. (Hayden v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 39.)

The chief clerk of the Department of Agriculture, at a salary of $2,500 a year, was appointed a captain of Infantry on the retired list of the Army under authority of a special act of Congress approved June 6, 1900 (31 Stat., 554): Held, that his appointment as a retired officer having been specially authorized by Congress while he was holding an office with a salary attached thereto of $2,500 per annum, the act of July 31, 1894, did not apply; and that a retired officer does not receive "compensation as an officer or employee of the Government" within the meaning of the following enactment of March 3, 1885 (23 Stat., 356, sec. 2): "That no part of the money herein or hereafter appropriated for the Department of Agriculture shall be paid to any person, as additional salary or compensation, receiving at the same time other compensation as an officer or employee of the Government." (Geddes v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 428.)

There must be "compensation" received before there can be "additional compensation" prohibited; as a matter of fact, the pay of a retired officer is not compensation. (Geddes v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 428.) The pay of a retired officer appointed under a special act of Congress "is not given as compensation for discharging the duties of any office during the period for which it is to be paid, but rather as a bounty, and in the nature of a pension, for services to his country previously performed. (Collins v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cls., 22, 40.) The pay of an officer on the retired list is "an honorable form of pension." (Fletcher v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cls., 541, 563.)

It is well settled that an officer's reduced retired pay is but an honorary form of pension to be paid him when, having reached a certain age, it is presumed that he is no longer well fitted to render active service to the Government. (Geddes v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cls., 428. But see 11 Comp. Dec., 422, and 29 Op. Atty. Gen., 397, 407, where this reasoning of the Court of Claims is not concurred in.)

The provision in the act of July 31, 1894, excepting from its operation retired officers of the Army and Navy, in certain specified cases, necessarily implies that such retired officers are included in the remaining portion of the enactment relating to offices having "annual salary or compensation attached thereto." (11 Comp. Dec., 422.)

A retired officer of the Army, whose retired pay was $2,625 per annum, can not hold the position of clerk in the Treasury Department at $1,400 per annum, as the holding of both offices is forbidden by the act of 1894. (11 Comp. Dec., 422.)

A retired officer of the Marine Corps, whose pay as such is $1,980 per annum, can accept the position of cashier in the subtreasury at Philadelphia, Pa., at a salary of $2,500 per annum, and continue to receive the aforementioned retired pay. (Comp. Dec., Sept. 26, 1910, file 26254-539, case of Capt. John G. Muir, U. S. M. C., following Geddes v. U. S., above noted, and not citing 11 Comp. Dec., 422.)

A retired officer of the Navy whose retired pay amounts to $2,500 per annum is within the prohibition of section 2 of the act of July 31, 1894, and is ineligible to hold office as clerk of class 3 under the United States Civil Service Commission. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 503.)

It is clear, both on principle and according to the authorities, that a retired officer of the Navy holds an office with a salary or annual compensation attached, within the meaning of the enactment of 1894, even if the express language of the exception be not considered; this conclusion is rendered irresistible by the provision to that act excepting retired officers of the Army or Navy in certain cases. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 503.)

A notary public in the District of Columbia is an officer of the Government within the meaning of the act of July 31, 1894; and if he accepts an office, the salary of which is $2,500, he is precluded by the statute from receiving any compensation for services rendered as notary to the Government. (Pack v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cls., 414.)

The position of clerk of class 3 under the United States Civil Service Commission, the appointment thereto being authorized by the President, is an office within the meaning of the act of 1894. (29 Op. Atty. Gen., 503.)

Where appointment to two certain offices is claimed, and to so hold would involve a construction that the appointment was invalid under the act of 1894, the court must adopt the view that a legal appointment was contemplated, and hence that the claimant was not appointed to two offices. (McMath v. U. S., 51 Ct. Cls., 356; affirmed, 248 U. S., 151.)

A retired naval officer whose compensation as such amounts to $2,500 per annum is ineligible to appointment as a commercial attaché under the provisions of the act of July 16, 1914 (38 Stat., 500), making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government. (30 Op. Atty. Gen., 298.)

Additional compensation allowed medical officer of the Navy.—A medical officer in the Navy is entitled to compensation from appropriations under the control of the Department of Justice for professional services rendered by him to United States prisoners in a United States jail. (Comp. Dec., May 15, 1912, 45 MS. Comp. Dec., 300, following 18 Comp. Dec., 156; see note to sec. 1368, R. S., under "Medical attendance to persons not in the Navy.")

Additional compensation not allowed naval officer detailed to War Department.—Where a naval constructor was detailed by the Secretary of the Navy to perform duty under the War Department, in inspecting a vessel chartered as an Army transport, the officer is not burdened with services not incident to his office; the duties required of him were of the general nature performed by him in the Navy. Additional compensation for such inspection service is prohibited by section 1765, Revised Statutes. (Stocker v. U. S., 39 Ct. Cls., 300; see notes to secs. 1404 and 1437, R. S.)

For other cases, see note to section 1440, Revised Statutes, as to appointment of Navy officers in the diplomatic or consular service; section 1860, Revised Statutes, as to naval personnel holding civil offices in territories; act June 10, 1896 (29 Stat., 361), as to officers of the Navy holding employment with private contractors; sections 170 and 182, Revised Statutes, as to clerks and officers in executive departments; and act March 4, 1909, sec. 113, 35 Stat., 1109, as to officers acting as attorneys for claimants, etc., in matters in which the United States is interested.

Sec. 1766. [Officer in arrears; withholding pay.] No money shall be paid to any person for his compensation who is in arrears to the United States, until he has accounted for and paid into the Treasury all sums for which he may be liable. In all cases where the pay or salary of any person is withheld in pursuance of this section, the accounting officers of the Treasury, if required to do so by the party, his agent or attorney, shall report forthwith to the Solicitor of the Treasury the balance due; and the Solicitor shall, within sixty days thereafter, order suit to be commenced against such delinquent and his sureties.—(25 Jan., 1828, c. 2, v. 4, p. 246. 20 May, 1836, c. 77, v. 5, p. 31.)

Persons to whom applicable.—Section 1766, Revised Statutes, does not apply to an ordinary clerk, who is a judgment debtor of the United States under judgment for a debt growing out of transactions wholly foreign to his employment, and having nothing to do with any advance of public money or any accounting therefor. In such case this section does not require the head of the department to withhold the salary of the clerk. Whether or not the Government has the right, on general principles, to do so, independently of section 1766, not decided. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 77; see note to sec. 236, R. S.)

This section does not apply to mere indebtedness, but clearly applies to one who has received Government moneys to be disbursed or covered into the Treasury; to persons who are in a relation of trust to the Government and have in their hands sums or balances of public funds for which they are bound to render accounts and to turn the balances into the Treasury. They would naturally be in "arrears" and be in a position to have a "balance due" found by the accounting officers. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 77.)

The clause, "until he has accounted for and paid into the Treasury all sums for which he may be liable," is conclusive upon the point. This language is not appropriate to mere indebtedness. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 77.)

The provision that suit shall be commenced against the delinquent "and his sureties" indicates that Congress was not regarding mere debtors but the class of persons who had sureties for the performance of their contracts or their other duties, chiefly, of course, the receipt and disbursement of public moneys. (26 Op. Atty. Gen., 77.)

For other cases, see note to section 236, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 1773. [Commissions.] The President is authorized to make out and deliver, after the adjournment of the Senate, commissions for all officers whose appointments have been advised and consented to by the Senate.—(2 Mar., 1867, c. 154, s. 6, v. 14, p. 431.)

The commissions of all officers under the direction and control of the Secretary of the Navy shall be made out and recorded in the Navy Department, and the department seal affixed thereto, any laws to the contrary notwithstanding; but such seal shall not be affixed to any such commission before the same shall have been signed by the President of the United States. (Act Mar. 28, 1896, 29 Stat., 75.)

See note to Constitution, Article II, section 3, under "II. Duty to commission officers."

Sec. 1774. [Recess appointments; accounting officers notified.] Whenever the President, without the advice and consent of the Senate, designates, authorizes, or employs any person to perform the duties of any office, he shall forthwith notify the Secretary of the Treasury thereof, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon communicate such notice, to all the proper accounting and disbursing officers of his Department.—(2 Mar., 1867, c. 154, s. 8, v. 14, p. 431.)

Sec. 1778. [Oaths or acknowledgments; before whom taken.] In all cases in which, under the laws of the United States, oaths or acknowledgments may now be taken or made before any justice of the peace of any State or Territory, or in the District of Columbia, they may hereafter be also taken or made by or before any notary public duly appointed in any State, district, or Territory, or any of the commissioners of the circuit courts, and, when certified under the hand and official seal of such notary or commissioner, shall have the same force and effect as if taken or made by or before such justice of the peace.—(16

Sept., 1850, c. 52, v. 9, p. 458. 29 July, 1854, c. 159, s. 1, v. 10, p. 315. 22 June, 1874, c. 390, s. 20, v. 18, p. 186. 15 Aug., 1876, c. 304, v. 19, p. 206.)

Act of May 28, 1896, section 19 (29 Stat., 184), amended by act March 2, 1901 (31 Stat., 956), provided for the appointment of United States commissioners by the district court of each judicial district, who shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as commissioners of the circuit courts.

Act of March 3, 1911, section 289 (36 Stat., 1167), abolished circuit courts.

As to acknowledgment of deeds in Guam and Samoa, see act of June 28, 1906 (34 Stat., 552).

As to administration of oaths to expense accounts by chief clerks of the various executive departments or clerks designated by them for the purpose, see act of August 24, 1912, section 8 (37 Stat., 487).

See section 183, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Sec. 1779. [Newspapers, books, etc.; restriction upon purchase.] No executive officer, other than the heads of Departments, shall apply more than thirty dollars, annually, out of the contingent fund under his control, to pay for newspapers, pamphlets, periodicals, or other books or prints not necessary for the business of his office.—(3 Mar., 1839, c. 82, s. 3, v. 5, p. 349.)

See sections 192 and 193, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Expenditures for law books, books of reference, and periodicals are prohibited, unless specifically authorized by the appropriation. (Act Mar. 15, 1898, sec. 3, 30 Stat., 316.)

Sec. 1784. [Contributions, presents, etc., to superiors.] No officer, clerk, or employé in the United States Government employ shall at any time solicit contributions from other officers, clerks, or employés in the Government service for a gift or present to those in a superior official position; nor shall any such officials or clerical superiors receive any gift or present offered or presented to them as a contribution from persons in Government employ receiving a less salary than themselves; nor shall any officer or clerk make any donation as a gift or present to any official superior. Every person who violates this section shall be summarily discharged from the Government employ.—(1 Feb., 1870, c. 11, v. 16, p. 63.)

“Superior official” construed.—It is considered that an officer superior in rank is a superior official within the intent of the section 1784, Revised Statutes, and the Navy Regulations on the same subject. Accordingly, officers of the Corps of Civil Engineers in the Navy could not legally present a testimonial to another member of that corps of higher rank in the Navy, notwithstanding that the latter's duty did not place him over and in charge of those contributing. (File 26806-33, Nov. 9, 1909; Naval Dig., 1916, pp. 621, 622.)

TITLE XXIII.

THE TERRITORIES.

Sec. 1860. [Voting and holding office in the Territories.] * * * Third. No officer, soldier, seaman, mariner, or other person in the Army or Navy, or attached to the troops in the service of the United States, shall be allowed to vote in any Territory, by reason of being on service therein, unless such Territory is, and has been for the period of six months, his permanent domicile.—(25 Jan., 1867, c. 15, v. 14, p. 379.)

Fourth. No person belonging to the Army or Navy shall be elected to or hold any civil office or appointment in any Territory, except officers of the Army on the retired list.

The fourth clause of this section was expressly amended and reenacted to read as above by act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 567), the amendment consisting in the addition, at the end of said clause, of the words "except officers of the Army on the retired list." The first and second clauses of this section are omitted, as having no application to the Navy.

See sections 1440, 1763-1765, Revised Statutes, and laws noted thereunder, as to restrictions upon civil employment by officers of the Navy.

Virgin Islands.—The Virgin Islands of the United States are neither organized nor incorporated territory, and therefore section 1860, Revised Statutes, does not preclude the President from nominating a naval officer for the position of judge therein. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 118.)

Section 1860 applies only to organized territories, and is not applicable to a mere possession, such as the Virgin Islands, for which there has been no organic act. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 118. Prior to this opinion the act of Mar. 3, 1917, 39 Stat., 1132, had been enacted, establishing a temporary government for the Virgin Islands.)

Philippine Islands.—A mere contribution by the Philippine Government to the performance of certain military functions, and intrusting the funds to an officer of the United States Army, who is held to military responsibility therefor by court-martial, does not make that officer a civil officer of the Philippine Government and amenable to trial in the civil courts for falsification of his accounts as a public official. (Carrington v. U. S., 208 U. S., 1.)

An office commonly requires something more than a single transitory act to call it into being. (Carrington v. U. S., 208 U. S., 1.)

The fact that an officer of the United States Army, intrusted with money by the Philippine Government to be expended in connection with his military command, signs his account, "Disbursing Officer," instead of by his military title, does not make him a civil officer of the Philippine Government. (Carrington v. U. S., 208 U. S., 1.)

Porto Rico.—This section applies to Porto Rico, which has been held to be a "territory" under its terms. (File 9736-18, June 25, 1910, citing file 1831-8, Apr. 18, 1917; 5381-1, Aug. 30, 1907; 11 Comp. Dec., 336, 339.)

A naval surgeon can not be appointed to the position of health officer of Culebra, Porto Rico. (File 1831-8, Apr. 18, 1907.)

An officer of the Marine Corps can not accept an appointment as a member of the military staff of the Governor of Porto Rico. (File 5381-1, Aug. 30, 1907.)

Hawaiian Islands.—This section has been held inapplicable to the Hawaiian Islands. (File 9736-18, June 25, 1910, citing Matter of Loucks, 13 Hawaii, 17.)

Mayor of city.—Section 1860 does not prohibit a retired officer of the Navy from accepting an office as mayor of the city in one of the States if duly elected thereto; in such case, however, a retired officer would be subject to recall to naval duty if the exigencies of the service should require in time of war. (File 5650-00, Sept. 21, 1900.)

TITLE XXV.

CITIZENSHIP.

Sec. 1996. [Rights as citizens forfeited for desertion, &c.] All persons who deserted the military or naval service of the United States and did not return thereto or report themselves to a provost-marshal within sixty days after the issuance of the proclamation by the President, dated the 11th day of March, 1865, are deemed to have voluntarily relinquished and forfeited their rights of citizenship, as well as their right to become citizens; and such deserters shall be forever incapable of holding any office of trust or profit under the United States, or of exercising any rights of citizens thereof.—(3 Mar., 1865, c. 79, s. 21, v. 13, p. 490.)

See section 1998, Revised Statutes, and note thereto.

Sec. 1998. [Desertion in time of war; penalties and forfeitures.] That every person who hereafter deserts the military or naval service of the United States, or who, being duly enrolled, departs the jurisdiction of the district in which he is enrolled, or goes beyond the limits of the United States, with intent to avoid any draft into the military or naval service, lawfully ordered, shall be liable to all the penalties and forfeitures of section nineteen hundred and ninety-six of the Revised Statutes of the United States: Provided, That the provisions of this section and said section nineteen hundred and ninety-six shall not apply to any person hereafter deserting the military or naval service of the United States in time of peace: And provided further, That the loss of rights of citizenship heretofore imposed by law upon deserters from the military or naval service may be mitigated or remitted by the President where the offense was committed in time of peace and where the exercise of such clemency will not be prejudicial to the public interests: And provided further, That the provisions of section eleven hundred and eighteen of the Revised Statutes of the United States that no deserter from the military service of the United States shall be enlisted or mustered into the military service, and the provisions of section two of the Act of Congress approved August first, eighteen hundred and ninety-four, entitled 'An Act to regulate enlistments in the Army of the United States,' shall not be construed to preclude the reenlistment or muster into the Army of any person who has deserted, or may hereafter desert, from the military service of the United States in time of peace, or of any soldier whose service during his last preceding term of enlistment has not been honest and faithful, whenever the reenlistment or muster into the military service of such person or soldier shall, in view of the good conduct of such person or soldier subsequent to such desertion or service, be authorized by the Secretary of War.

This section was expressly amended and reenacted to read as above by act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 356), which also reenacted with amendments sections 1420 and 1624, article 19, of the Revised Statutes, relating to the enlistment of deserters in the Navy. As originally enacted, sections 1998 read as follows: "Every person who hereafter deserts the military or naval service of the United States, or who, being duly enrolled, departs the jurisdiction of the district in which he is enrolled, or goes beyond the limits of the United States, with intent to avoid any draft into the military or naval service, lawfully ordered, shall be liable to all the penalties and forfeitures of section nineteen hundred and ninety-six."—(3 Mar., 1865, c. 79, s. 21, v. 13, p. 490.)

dental to qualifications for service in the Navy, but in effect and by express avowal constituting punishment for offenses, which, as such, would of course be wiped out by an unconditional pardon. (31 Op. Atty. Gen., 225; for other cases, see note to Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, clause 1, and see note to sec. 1441, R. S.)

Penalties attach only upon conviction.—Section 1998, Revised Statutes, is not void as a bill of attainder, because it contemplates trial by court-martial to enforce this penalty, as well as the other penalties for desertion. (Gotcheus v. Matheson, 58 Barb. (N. Y.), 153, 61 N. Y., 425; see also State v. Symonds, 57 Me., 148; Holt v. Holt, 59 Me., 464; Severance v. Healy, 50 N. H., 448; Huber v. Reily, 53 Pa. St., 112; McCafferty v. Guyer, 59 Pa. St., 110; Kurtz v. Moffitt, 115 U. S., 501.)

For other cases, see note to Constitution, Article I, section 9, clause 3. See also note to to Constitution, Article I, section 8, clause 4.

TITLE XXVI.

THE ELECTIVE FRANCHISE.

Sec. 2003. [Interference with elections; Army and Navy Officers.] No officer of the Army or Navy of the United States shall prescribe or fix, or attempt to prescribe or fix, by proclamation, order, or otherwise, the qualifications of voters in any State, or in any manner interfere with the freedom of any election in any State, or with the exercise of the free right of suffrage in any State.— (25 Feb., 1865, c. 52, s. 1, v. 13, p. 437.)

See Criminal Code, act March 4, 1909, sections 22-26 (35 Stat., 1092, 1093).

TITLE XXIX.

IMMIGRATION.

Sec. 2163. [Examination of vessels.] The President is empowered, in such way and at such time as he may judge proper, to direct the vessels of the United States, and the masters and commanders thereof, to examine all vessels navigated or owned in whole or in part by citizens of the United States, and registered, enrolled, or licensed under the laws thereof, whenever, in the judgment of such master or commanding officer, reasonable cause exists to believe that such vessel has on board any subjects of China, Japan, or other oriental country, known as "coolies;" and, upon sufficient proof that such vessel is employed in violation of the preceding provisions, to cause her to be carried, with her officers and crew, into any port or district within the United States, and delivered to the marshal of such district, to be held and disposed of according to law.—(19 Feb., 1862, c. 27, s. 6, v. 12, p. 341.)

TITLE XXXII.

THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Sec.

- 2293. Affidavits; naval personnel; before whom made.
- 2300. Minors, privileges of.
- 2304. Soldiers' and sailors' homestead.
- 2305. Credit for time in military and naval service.
- 2308. Service in Navy equivalent to residence.
- 2309. Entry by agent; requirements.
- 2393. Military or other reservations.

Sec.

- 2458. Lands for supplying timber to the Navy.
- 2459. Selection of live-oak and red-cedar tracts.
- 2460. Protection of timber in Florida.
- 2461. Cutting or destroying timber reserved for Navy.
- 2462. Forfeiture of vessels.
- 2463. Clearance of vessels; timber cut by consent of Navy Department.

Sec. 2293. [Affidavits; naval personnel; before whom made.] In case of any person desirous of availing himself of the benefits of this chapter; but who, by reason of actual service in the military or naval service of the United States, is unable to do the personal preliminary acts at the district land-office which the preceding sections require; and whose family, or some member thereof, is residing on the land which he desires to enter, and upon which a bona-fide improvement and settlement have been made, such person may make the affidavit required by law before the officer commanding in the branch of the service in which the party is engaged, which affidavit shall be as binding in law, and with like penalties, as if taken before the register or receiver; and upon such affidavit being filed with the register by the wife or other representative of the party, the same shall become effective from the date of such filing, provided the application and affidavit are accompanied by the fee and commissions as required by law.—(21 Mar., 1864, c. 38, s. 4, v. 13, p. 35.)

The words "this chapter" in the above section refer to chapter 5, "Homesteads," of Title XXXII, "The Public Lands."

Amendment to this section was made by act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 391), as follows: "That during the continuance of the present war with Germany, and until his discharge from service, any man serving in the armed forces of the United States, who, prior to the beginning of his services was a settler, an applicant, or entryman under the land laws of the United States, or who has, prior to enlistment, filed a contest, with the view of exercising preference right of entry therefor, may make any affidavit required by law or regulation of the department, affecting such application, entry, or contest, or necessary to the making of entry in the case of the successful termination of such contest awarding him preference right of entry, before his commanding officer as provided in section twenty-two hundred and ninety-three of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which affidavits shall be as binding in law and with like penalties as if taken before the Register of the United States Land Office."

Amendment to this section was also made by the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of March 8, 1918, section 501 (40 Stat., 448), which act, however, by section 603 thereof (40 Stat., 449) was to remain in force only until the termination of the war and for six months thereafter.

Sec. 2300. [Minors, privileges of.] No person who has served, or may hereafter serve, for a period not less than fourteen days in the Army or Navy of the United States, either regular or volunteer, under the laws thereof, during the existence of an actual war, domestic or foreign, shall be deprived of the benefits of this chapter on account of not having attained the age of twenty-one years.—(20 May, 1862, c. 75, s. 6, v. 12, p. 393.)

The words "this chapter" in the above section refer to chapter 5, "Homesteads," of Title XXXII, "The Public Lands."

By act of August 31, 1918, section 8 (40 Stat., 957), it was provided "That any person, under the age of twenty-one, who has served or shall hereafter serve in the Army of the United States during the present emergency, shall be entitled to the same rights under the homestead and other land and mineral entry laws, general or special, as those over twenty-one years of age now possess under said laws: Provided, That any requirements as to establishment of residence within a limited time shall be suspended as to entry by such person until six months after his discharge from military service: Provided further, That applications for entry may be verified before any officer in the United States, or any foreign country, authorized to administer oaths by the laws of the State or Territory in which the land may be situated."

Sec. 2304. [Soldiers' and sailors' homesteads.] Every private soldier and officer who has served in the Army of the United States during the recent rebellion for ninety days, and who was honorably discharged and has remained loyal to the Government, including the troops mustered into the service of the United States by virtue of the third section of an act approved February thirteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, and every seaman, marine, and officer who has served in the Navy of the United States or in the Marine Corps during the rebellion for ninety days, and who was honorably discharged and has remained loyal to the Government, and every private soldier and officer who has served in the Army of the United States during the Spanish war, or who has served, is serving, or shall have served in the said Army during the suppression of the insurrection in the Philippines for ninety days, and who was or shall be honorably discharged; and every seaman, marine, and officer who has served in the Navy of the United States or in the Marine Corps during the Spanish war, or who has served, is serving, or shall have served in the said forces during the suppression of the insurrection in the Philippines for ninety days, and who was or shall be honorably discharged, shall, on compliance with the provisions of this chapter, as hereinafter modified, be entitled to enter upon and receive patents for a quantity of public lands not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, or one quarter section, to be taken in compact form, according to legal subdivisions, including the alternate reserved sections of public lands along the line of any railroad or other public work not otherwise reserved or appropriated, and other lands subject to entry under the homestead laws of the United States; but such homestead settler shall be allowed six months after locating his homestead and filing his declaratory statement within which to make his entry and commence his settlement and improvement.

This section was expressly amended and re-enacted to read as above by act of March 1, 1901 (31 Stat., 847).

By act of February 25, 1919 (40 Stat., 1161), it was provided "That subject to the conditions therein expressed, as to length of service and honorable discharge, the provisions of sections twenty-three hundred and four and twenty-three hundred and five, Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be applicable in all cases of military and naval service rendered in connection with the Mexican border operations or during the war with Germany and its allies as defined by public resolution numbered thirty-two, approved August twenty-ninth, nineteen hundred and sixteen (Thirty-ninth Statutes at Large, page six hundred and seventy-one), and the Act approved July twenty-eighth, nineteen hundred and seventeen (Fortieth Statutes at Large, page two hundred and forty-eight." (See note to sec. 2308, R. S.)

By joint resolution of February 14, 1920 (41 Stat., 434-435), it was provided "That hereafter, for the period of two years following the passage of this Act, on the opening of public or Indian lands to entry, or the restoration to entry of public lands theretofore withdrawn from entry, such opening or restoration shall, in the order therefor, provide for a period of not less than sixty days before the general opening of such lands to disposal in which officers, soldiers, sailors, or marines who have served in the Army or Navy of the United States in the war with Germany and been honorably separated or discharged therefrom or placed in the Regular Army or Naval Reserve shall have a preferred right of entry under the homestead or desert land laws, if qualified thereunder, except as against prior existing valid settlement rights and as against preference rights conferred by existing laws or equitable claims subject to allowance and confirmation: Provided, That the rights and benefits conferred by this Act shall not extend to any person who, having been drafted for service under the provisions of the Selective Service Act, shall have refused to render such service or to wear the uniform of such service of the United States.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make any and all regulations necessary to carry into full force and effect the provisions hereof."

Sec. 2305. [Credit for time in military and naval service.] The time which the homestead settler has served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps shall be deducted from the time heretofore required to perfect title, or if discharged on account of wounds received or disability incurred in the line of duty, then the term of enlistment shall be deducted from the time heretofore required to perfect title, without reference to the length of time he may have served; but no patent shall issue to any homestead settler who has not resided upon, improved, and cultivated his homestead for a period of at least one year after he shall have commenced his improvements: Provided, That in every case in which a settler on the public land of the United States under the homestead laws died while actually engaged in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States as private soldier, officer, seamen, or marine, during the war with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, his widow, if unmarried, or in the case of her death or marriage, then his minor orphan children or his or their legal representatives, may proceed forthwith to make final proof upon the land so held by the deceased soldier and settler, and that the death of such soldier while so engaged in the service of the United States shall in the administration of the homestead laws, be construed to be equivalent to a performance of all requirements as to residence and cultivation for the full period of five years, and shall entitle his widow, if unmarried, or in case of her death or marriage, then his minor orphan children or his or their legal representatives, to make final proof upon and receive Government patent for said land; and that upon proof produced to the officers of the proper local land office by the widow, if unmarried, or in case of her death or marriage, then his minor orphan children or his or their legal representatives, that the applicant for patent is the widow, if unmarried, or in case of her death or marriage, his orphan children or his or their legal representatives, and that such soldier, sailor, or marine died while in the service of the United States as hereinbefore described, the patent for such land shall issue.

This section was expressly amended and re-enacted to read as above by act of March 1, 1901 (31 Stat., 847).

See note to section 2304, Revised Statutes.

Sec. 2308. [Service in Navy equivalent to residence.] Where a party at the date of his entry of a tract of land under the homestead laws, or subsequently thereto, was actually enlisted and employed in the Army or Navy of the United States, his services therein shall, in the administration of such homestead laws, be construed to be equivalent, to all intents and purposes, to a residence for the same length of time upon the tract so entered. And if his entry has been canceled by reason of his absence from such tract while in the military or naval service of the United States, and such tract has not been disposed of, his entry shall be restored; but if such tract has been disposed of, the party may enter another tract subject to entry under the homestead laws, and his right to a patent therefor may be determined by the proofs touching his residence and cultivation of the first tract and his absence therefrom in such service.—(8 June, 1872, c. 338, s. 4, v. 17, p. 333.)
